1. BIOGRAPHY

In India before the Muslim rule, Rajah Bheem settled a Qasbah in District Muzaffarnagar on his name "Thana Bheem". Then came the Muslims who settled here and called it "Muhammad Pur" but this name could not be popular but the name was changed to "Thana Bhawan" from Thana Bheem. The Muslims were prosperous, powerful and educated.

The forefathers of Maulana Ashraf Ali Thanwi settled centuries ago in Thana Bhawan. On his fatherside they came from Thanesar, District Karnal and were Farooqi by descent. On his motherside they migrated from Jhanjhana to Thana Bhawan and were Alavi by descent.

His father Mr. Abdul Haq was a rich man, educated in Persian, knew Qur'an very well and was very clever in understanding people.

His mother was also an intelligent and saintly lady. His maternal uncle Pir Ji Imdad Ali sahib Rh. was a saint. He followed the advice of Majzoob Hafiz Ghulam Murtaza and went to Hyderabad, Deccan and later became Mureed of Mirza Sardar Beg Sahib Rah.

His maternal grandfather Mir Nagahat Ali sahib Rah. knew Persian very well and was mureed of a deputy of Maulana Shah Niaz Ahmad Barelvi and was friendly with Hafiz Ghulam Murtaza.

His great grandfather was Sultan Shahabuddin Ali "Farrukh Shah Kabuli" in whose progeny were Shaikh Mujaddid Alf-Thani, Shaikh Jalaluddin Thanesari, Shaikh Fariduddin Ganj-Shakar to mention a few.

According to a Derwish's prophecy he was born on 5 Rabius Thani 1280 A.H., Wednesday Fajr time. His date of birth is "Karam Azeem" which is nice.

His mother died in his childhood at five and his father looked after him with great care, discipline and affection and trained him well. He did not allow him sweets from the mosque after Tarawih's end in Ramadhan but bought for him from the shop so that he may not be greedy. He was reprimanded for saying that Maulana Rafiuddin, Muhtamim No. 1, Darul Uloom, Deoband was not much educated and told not to use the language against his elders.

He did not play with children. He knew the games but was not interested. In his games he used to copy the prayers with congregation. There was a expert blind Hafiz sahib who knew Quran very well. He used to read Nafl Quran in Namaz for him and told him he would decieve him in Quran in this verse. When he came there he recited Allah as if he was going to Ruku. He laughed and then started again the Niyyat for prayer.

At the age of 12-13, he used to pray Tahajjud and recite Zikr. His aunty used to say it is too early for you to do that but he was disciple of Maulana Fateh Mohammad sahib Rah., how could he leave them.

He used to vomit if he saw any man topless. He could not sleep in a room with strong smell. He could not eat food leftover by someone. He was a man of principle that his first wife used to say he would have been born in a king's family.

Maulana Shaikh Mohammad sahib Thanwi Rah. who was Haji Imdadullah's co-mureed examined him and said he will be in my place after me.

He saw a dream in his childhood that a cage with two pigeons was placed in a big house. When evening came they asked him to lighten the cage and he said you light yourself. They rubbed their beaks and the light resulted enlightening the whole cage. His material uncle Wajid Ali Rah. said the pigeons were soul and self, and rubbing the beak meant that Allah will enlighten by Himself your soul and self.

His earlier education was in Meerut where he learnt earlier books of Persian and memorized the holy Quran. Then he returned to Thana Bhawan where he read Arabic elementary books and Persian advanced books with Maulana Fateh Mohammad sahib, then from his uncle Wajid Ali sahib Rah. advanced books of Persian. Then he went to Deoband when he mastered this language with Manfa-at Ali sahib Rah. At 18 he wrote a Mathnavi "zeero-bam"

He entered Deoband in 1295 A.H. and graduated after 5 years in 1301 A.H. at 19-20 years of age and mastered Arabic and Religion.

In his student life he was aloof from fellow students and relatives and spent his time in books and his special teacher Maulana Hohammed Yaqoob sat in his company and listened to him carefully, a thing that is becoming less and less available now.

His teachers were becoming aware of his abilities. Thus when Maulana Rasheed Ahmad Gangohi came to examine the students on the graduation list his teacher Shaikhul Hind Maulana Mahmood Hasan praised him of his intelligence and presence of mind. The examiner asked difficult questions and was quite satisfied with their replies.

He was well versed in intellectual knowledge and logic and used to argue with others.

In 1300 A.H. he heard that prize distribution and graduation ceremony was going to be in full colour. He took his fellow students and went to Maulana Mohammed Yaqoob sahib Rah. and said we heard that we were going to be graduated and given certificates although don't deserve it. Please cancel it. This will bring a shame to the institution that such unworthy students were issued with certificates.

He said you are wrong. Infront of your teachers you don't feel anything and this is what you should feel Wher you go outside you will realize your worth. You will be there and nobody will be there to oppose you.

He was good looking and had a melodious voice and used to recite Quran wonderfully. He learnt "Tajweed" (recitation of Quran) from Qari Mohammed Abdullah Muhajir Makki in Mecca who was famous over Arabic Qaris as well.

Now was the time for pracitce. For 14 years he served Madrasa (Faize Aam) in Kanpur, taught, wrote, gave sermons, wrote fatwa. His teacher's prophecy came true. "You will be there and no body will be there to oppose you." He taught high level books there.

The Madressa authorities asked him to collect funds for the organization but he refused and resigned, and did not take back his resignation.

He went to see Hazrat Maulana Shah Fazlur Rahman sahib Rah. and met the Qutbul Alam. On his return he was stopped in Kanpur and requested to teach at in Jameul Uloom in Masjidal-Jamiya Patkapur. He thought of taking up Hakim Medicine but could not continue it and left in favour of teaching in Kanpur on his Shaikh's advice. But later he left for Thana Bhawan on Haji Imdadullah's advice and blessings.

He was very fond of students and learned scholars more so than Sufis. He did not allow students to go to other people's homes for eating. He did not ask for private works from students nor rebuke them on their mistakes. All complaints must be brought to the authorities concerned, who may reprimand them or bring about some reformatory steps.

In the 14 years of teaching at Kanpur he produced the following scholars who spend the knowledge of education throughout India:

1. Molvi M. Ishaq sahib Bardanwi Rah. who was the successor of Maulana Thanwi Rah. in Kanpur and who founded Madressa Aaliya in Calcutta.

2. Molvi Ahmed Ali sahib Rah. who specialized in Fiqh and made public his knowledge in Fatehpur and Barabanki.

3. Molvi Fazle Haq sahib Rah. of Allahabad wrote "Mishnat But Takveer" showed his mastery over Philosophy and taught at Qannauj.

4. Molvi Hakim Mohammad Mustafa sahib Bijnauri was an authority on Arabic literature and logic. He used to write down points from Maulana Thanwi's sermons and then rewrite it like the original. He wrote an explanation of Maulana Thanwi's "Al-Intibahatul Mufeedah" which is remarkable.

5. Molvi Syed Ishaq Ali sahib Kanpuri who was Professor of Arabic at Allahabad University.

6. Molvi Zafar Ahmad sahib Usmani Rah. who was nephew of Maulana Thanwi. he wrote " Aylaassunan " 11 volumes in Fiqh and Hadith.

His principles of education included the following:

1. The teacher should struggle to make easy the lessons before his students

2. Difficult problems may first be introduced in very simple language and when clear the technical terms may be used now.

3. Do not give lecture more than necessary to prove your virtue.

4. The course (syllabus) should be taught first and then comes lectures, argumentation easily.

5. The student should do the following : (1) He should prepare the lecture ahead (2) When the teacher explains then do not proceed without understanding it. (3) Himself tell its meaning after understanding once.

Read some past lessons every day.

He was Mureed of Hazrat Haji Imdadullah Muhajir Makki Rah. but visited other saints as well. He visited Maulana Shah Fazlur Rahman Ganj Muradabadi Rah. who told him his secrets. When I prostrate it appears as if Allah has kissed me. The pleasures of paradise are true, Kauthar is true but Namaz is superb. I will pray Namaz in Qabr also and pray for it.

He had to go to Pili Bheet in a function where he met Shah Mohammed Sher Khan sahib Rah. He asked him to pray for love of Allah in his heart. The Shah asked him to rub his hands and after he has done so he asked if he felt some warmth. He said yes. The Shah said keep rubbing your heart and you will feel the warmth of love.

Sufi Shah Sulaiman sahib Lajpur Rah. was a famous saint. He had met him several times.Once he was travelling from Randeer to Surat and the Sufi was travelling the other way around. They met on a bridge. The Sufi was crying in a mosque in Randeer and said what the Hakimul Ummah did with his eyes.

Maulana Ghulam Mohammad sahib Dinpuri Rah. advised his mureeds to follow him in controversial matters.

Maulana Taj Mohammed sahib Rah. wrote to his mureed that Maulana Ashraf Ali is on the right path, his love is Allah's love.

Shaikhul Hind Maulana Mahmood Hasan used to call him with respectable names despite the difference in politics.

Qutbul Irshad Maulana Rasheed Ahmad Gangohi is a well known figure. He asked him first to make him his mureed. He used to like his lectures and activities and said it would be better when some people who used to say Allah were to gather there. This happened later on.

Maulana Gangohi's Khalifah, Maulana Khalil Ahmad sahib Rah. said I love him when he did not know it. He liked his sermons. In addition, he met Maulana Abdul Hai Farangi Mahli Rah.,Maulana Mohammed Naeem Farangi Mahli Rah., Maulana Khalil Pasha Makki and became friendly with them.

His first Hajj and first meeting with his mentor Hazrat Haji Imdadullah Muhajir Makki sahib Rah. was very interesting indeed. Once Maulana Gangohi Rah. came to Deoband and asked him to accept him as his mureed but he did not like it during student life. When Maulana Gangohi Rah. went for Hajj in 1299A.H. he sent a letter through him to Hazrat Haji sahib to recommend him to accept him as his mureed. To this Haji sahib replied I accept you as my mureed. He was 19 years of age then. Haji sahib wrote to his father to bring him along when you come for Hajj. Haji sahib told him to stay six months with him but his father wanted to return early. Haji sahib told him to go now and we will see later on. Father's obedience comes first. At the age of 20 he returned to India as a Haji.

His second Hajj and that was with six months stay with Shaikh. Haji sahib advised him not to rush in a peculiar situation in India to come and go to Thana Bhawan when fed up with Kanpur. Haji sahib looked into his heart and said no wonder he has outranked Rasheed (Gangohi Rah.) and Qasim (Rah.).

He stayed in Kanpur until 1315 A.H. Then he moved to Thana Bhawan. He became a mentor himself and Maulana Gangohi Rah. sent some of his disciples to him. Maulana Noorul Hasan Kakorvi son of Mohsin Kakorvi saw a dream once. The holy Prophet (Salam) was sick and Maulana Thanwi's looking after him. He was curing the Prophet's Ummah. Another saint or doctor was sitting in a distance, he was Imam Mehdi alaihis-salam, who would be the next Mujaddid after him.

His disciples came from all corners of India, Africa, Britain and he satisfied them all. Thana Bhawan was declared a full-fledged railway station because of the influx of people there.

M. Atiqullah of Bengal saw in vision that he was talking to the holy Prophet (Sal-am) staying close to him and the Prophet (Sal-am) was replying him. There were other learned scholars too but Maulana Thanwi was the closest to the prophet(Sal-am).

Abdul Mannan Dehelvi saw in his dreams that the holy Prophet (Sal-am) was standing with Maulana Thanwi's books in his hands in the bookshop.

In Dacca, Bangladesh a saint saw in his dreams the holy Prophet (Sal-am) saying salam to Maulana Thanwi sahib. He said I do not know him. He was replied c/o Mr. Zafar Ahmad. When he was told he said "Wa alaikum Salamo Ya Nabiyyollah" and recited Durood Sharif all day.

Now we come to his sickness and death. He was born on 1280 A.H. in Thana Bhawan worked there since 1315 A.H. and died there in 1362 A.H. Some five years before his death his stomach and liver started mal functioning. Sometimes diarrhoea, sometimes constipation. His hunger was gone. He asked on Monday after Maghrib his younger wife that have I given you too your monthly allowance was replied yes. Then he said to his wife I am going today. She asked where ? He said don't you know. Then he was unconscious for more than an hour and breath was loud. People saw from his right hand middle finger a light coming and disappearing with breath. He wrote Shariah and Tariqah with this finger. Finally he died in the night between 16 and 17 Rajab 1362 A.H. or night of July 19 and 20, 1943 A.D. Inna lillahe wa inna ilaihe rajeoon ! People started coming to Thana Bhawan. Special trains came from Saharanpur and other cities. A deputy saw in his dreams that he was saying I have been given the rank of martyrdom.

II. The Khanqah or Residence

1. Location. Located in Thana Bhawan, Dist. Muzaffarnagar, U.P., India. This Khanqah has a mosque, library, guest house, etc. Some times ago three deputies of Hazrat Mian Ji Noor Mohammed sahib's Rah. used to live there:

1. Hazrat Haji Mohammed Imdadullah Rah. 2. Hazrat Hafiz Mohammed Dahmin sahib martyr Rah. and 3. Hazrat Maulana Shaikh Mohammed sahib Rah.

During Ghadar mutiny, Haji sahib migrated to Mecca, Hazrat Hafiz Dhamin was martyred and Molvi Shaikh Mohammed died. The Khanqah lay vacant for somtime. After long time Hazrat Thanwi settled there with the advice of Hazrat Haji sahib and stayed till near 60 years. In this period people came there in large numbers. In this period Maulana Thanwi wrote nearly 1000 books on Islam which is still read by many. His deputies are in many places spreading the message.

2. Schedule or Notice. On the door was this notice so as to avoid inconvenience to me or to others:

1. From morning till 12 noon there are numerous miscellaneous works which require being alone. Meeting or talking with someone will disturb.

2. Three people are exempt from the above: a new comer who just wants to shake hands ; someone who is leaving and wants to shake hands thirdly someone in urgent need. They should tell the nature of their meeting in the first instance.

3. From 12 noon till Zuhr prayer is time for my prayers and sleep. Please excuse me.

4. After Zuhr till Asr prayer is general meeting where everyone can come and talk, ask for Taweez (except on Friday).

5. After Asr follow rules 1&2.

6. Sorry after Isha, except in emergencies.

(Notice by Ahqar Ashraf Ali)

3. Khanqah Activities. After Fajr prayer some people used to read recitals in the mosque, some students used to read Quran and some used to do loud recitals. After sunrise the Madressah used to begin and different class of students used to read their lessons. Young students used to read Quran loudly. The Madressah (school) used to finish at 10:30 A.M. and till Zuhr prayer it was quiet there in the Khanqah. After Zuhr call for prayer people used to assemble with ablution. After prayer the Madressah used to start again and you could hear the students reading loud. The Madressah used to end with Asr call to prayer. For practical training of prayers many a young students became Imam and led prayers (loudly) to their groups. After this these students used to go home. After Asr prayer some people used to sit in circles and finish "Khatm Khajgan". After that a person used to read the prayers loud and others used to say Ameen. After that till Maghrib it was again quiet there. Some places were lit then and people used to eat their dinner after Maghrib. Some student used to read his lesson some others used to read Tasbeeh.

After Isha prayer everybody used to go to his place and no body used to talk with each other. It was announced that the door is being closed and it was closed then. The door used to open after Fajr call to prayers.

The guests were looked after well. Every new comer used to inform of his arrival to the Manager, Molvi Shabheer Ali. Ordinary visitors may go upto Maulana Thanwi, shake hands, come back, do not stay long, but may do so in after Zuhr meeting. Do not present a gift in the first meeting. Do not sit too formally or too informally. Accept your mistakes and promise not to repeat them. A Mulla Ji used to come in the afternoon and evening and bring cheap foods. There was a tea shop outside the Khanqah. The Manager used to give blankets etc. on request to be returned on departure - Every four five days the laundry man used to come for clothes. A barber used to come too. You could acquire from your seniors in the Khanqah whatever you needed. But don't go to Maulana sahib

Do not talk with each other unnesessarily or visit anyone in the village for which prior permission was needed from Hazrat.

III. Life History

4. Expenditure. All his income was divided in three portions. One portion to his first wife, one to his second wife and one to him. He said when he gets a lot of money it worries him and he divides it into his two wives.In the end he did not keep anything to him. All that came was used in buying things and then divided into two wives or given in charity.

He was fond of buying work of property, one piece of land, one garden, a house.Once he said if he has a lakh Rupees he could buy all Thana Bhawan land and make it Darus Salam.

He had a library with his own books mostly, he sent it to Madressah Saharanpur and declared it a Wakf property. Other books he used to send to Deoband, Saharanpur and other Madressahs. He published many books from money received from others as well as his own source such as Aylaus Sunan, Bawadirun Nawadir, Heelae Najiza, etc.

Among his wealth he used to give Zakah and 1/4th Nafl Sadaqah. People used to send their money for distribution to poor and needy. He spent a lot of money for them.

He used to give loan to many as well. Some didn't pay around as excuse he left much money.

His tomb was made of mud and his death data is " Qutub Zaman Hakimul Ummat Molvi Ashraf Ali" 1362 A.H.

5. The Will

'. I request my friends to pray for the forgiveness of my major and minor sins, intentional and by the way.

2. Because of my bad manners people have been hurt. I ask them to please forgive me. Allah will forgive them. I pray for their welfare and well being in the hereafter. Forgiveness carry virtue.

3. I forgive all others who have done wrong to me in the hope of forgiveness of my sins and mistakes.

4. I ask my friends in particular and Muslims in general to teach knowledge and education to their children as it is obligatory, either through books or through company of a learned scholar or shaikh. Do not ignore this request.

5. I ask the students not to be proud of their education. Its usefulness depends on company of a shaikh and ahlullah.

6. My Madressah is special. I like it to continue. Training of manners and morals is given here and this will Insha-Allah prosper.

7. For the benefit of world and religion keep in mind the following:

1. Do not act under the influence of anger or sexual excitement. 2. Do not rush. 3. Do not act without advice. 4. Stop backbiting. 5. Do not talk too much, do not make too many friends secret knowers. 6. Do not eat unless hungry 7. Do not have sex without need for it. 8. Do not take loan as a habit. 9. Do not be extravagant. 10. Do not collect unnecessary things 11. Do not be harsh. Be patient and friendly 12. Do not show in food, dress and in everything. 13. Do not go to rich people or mix with them too much. 14. Dealings should be clean. This is more important than prayers. 15. Be careful and exact in translating your thoughts. 16. Do not take medicine without Doctor's prescription. 17. Keep your tongue under control. 18. Be honest. Do not stick to your opinion. 19. Do not increase too much relationship. 20. Do not interfere in the worldly affairs of others.

8. Everyday recite Surah Yaseen or Qul Huwallah Ahad 3 times and send me the reward.

9. Do not put your heart in the world. Be prepared for death. Ask for forgiveness of sins in day and night. Be exempt from people's right.

10. Pray for death on Islam and consider it a great blessing.

11. Do not gather together for sending me benefaction. If by chance people gather then read Quran, give Sadaqae-Nafilah and pray for me. Do not treat like Tabarrukat my things.

6. Daily Routine of Benefaction. Whatever I recite daily I send its reward to the holy Prophet (Sal-am) all the Prophets, saints, good Muslims, ordinary Muslim men and women, living, dead or those yet to be born. Living people also receiv the reward. At the tomb I read Surah Ikhlas, twelve times, Al Hakumuthakathur, Iza zulzilat, Qul Yaayyohal Kafiroon, Qu Aoozu birabbil Falaq, Qul Aoozu birabbin Nas, Surah Mulk and Surah Yaseen. Place the back towards Qibla so as face th dead. Do not raise hands.

7. Distinguishing Leadership. Maulana Thanwi stands ou a prominent figure in the Ummah among the Mujtahids, leader of Shariah and Tariqah. He had all the virtual and real virtues, apparent and hidden deeds of the distinguished leadership. He was a learned scholar, Haji, Hafiz, Qari, Mujaddid, Qutbul Irshad, commentator of the Quran, Muhaddith, Faqeeh, Imam of Tasawwuf, lecturer, writer, etc. His publications became famous in his lifetime. He removed the excesses and shortcomings in all the five branches of the religion and established moderation in them as a Mujaddid and doctor of the soul.

In the present day troubles neither Muslim beliefs were right nor worship nor dealings, nor morals and many new sects arose, western education spread atheism. Local customs and "Rasm" were incorporated as religion. Dealings were full of usury, bribery and injustice in inheritance, lack of Hijaab, and way of life as in Christianity and Judaism. The satan, Iblis was ashamed of them. Leaders wanted postions. Sufi became people of the show. Religions and worldly institutions were amoral. The true meaning of Shariah, Sunnah and Tariqah was forgotten among the Muslims.

Look at the above and the propagation of faith by Mujaddid Thanwi how he single handed brought about the reform. His publications in all the branches of religion vouch for him being a Mujaddid (renovator of Islam). He stayed away from politics and worked whole heartedly for Islam. He stayed away from Tahreeke Khaleefah, partition of India, and worked for Islam.

I ask you to read his works and decide for yourself.

IV. Personality and Habits.

8. Features. Age 65 years, wheat-coloured, prominent face, equally cut hairs on the head, beard round full, whiteness or grayish colour prominent on head and beard, eye-brows meeting, double-bodied, medium length, face rounded, serious slow in movement, sajdah mark on forehead, eyes moving downwards, serious, strong, influential.

9. Life Style of the holy Prophet (Sal-am). For someone to revive the teachings of the Prophet (Sal-am) and for someone to be a Mujaddid it is suitable that all his life should follow "Laqad kana lakum fi Rasoolillahe uswatun hasanah" the prophet (sal-am). All his habits, dealings, morals, way of life, every foot-step should be on the straight path of following the Sunnah. This is apparent in his real work of propagation of faith and training programme. Some examples are given from his Ashrafus Sawanih to show his life style. This has given a loving touch to his life.

10. Following the holy Prophet (Sal-am). One day I thought how much we talk about following the Sunnah and how much we actually follow. I examined myself for three days to see how much we follow as a matter of habit, how much after education and how much we miss. After this the road was clear.

After this examination he gave a sermon "Al-ghalibo littalib" which describes the deeds and teachings of the holy prophet (sal-am) and pointed out in chapter 8 of his book "Hayatul Muslimin"or Islamic Renaissance and said reading it will benefit the people.

It is good deeds, prosperity for the world and the hereafter and Allah has declared in Quran to love one who follows the Sunnah.

11. Disposition. He was simple. Shariah had become his habit. He was sensitive and did not like anything abnormal for himself or for others.

Crowd tired him. But did not like total loneliness either. When a task came he would like to do it and be free at heart again. Anybody who talked non-sense annoyed him. When free he would read Tasbih but not waste time.

When anything important came to mind he would write it down and do it when free. I want to keep myself available for Zikrullah when the opportunity arises. I do not keep anyone waiting for long nor want anyone to keep me in suspense. Do my work and inform me as soon as possible.

Small children please him very much. He used to joke with them and consider them pleasing things.

He did not keep precious things for his use. Simple and essential things were his order.

He used to accept gifts but if it was expensive he give it free to someone or accept a cheap price for that. He preferred people to ask him what gift to give him. Money would be used in every occasion.

I do not want to keep things that I do not use. Unnecessary looking after, watching these, carrying them do not please me. Useless talk annoy me but jokes do not, especially when the speaker also considers them useless.

When I start something I do not feel happy until I finish it. Sometimes I write books all night long. I want to keep my heart free for Zikrullah and do not talk too much. Some people keep on talking and talking which I do not like (Ashrafus Sawanih).

Neither I do twisted talk now understand them, my brain works like that from childhood.

I understand what I understand and leave out too difficult things.

If somebody was careless or sloppy in some thing he was annoyed and told him about it. If somebody did not accept his mistake and went round about way, this changed my mood to that of anger.

He did not like too lengthy letters. He did not like more than one topic in a letter. He would prefer separate letters for different topics.

12. Habits. From childhood I remained neat and clean and did everything at its time and properly. I kept in mind not to annoy anyone and not to displease anyone. I used to examine my actions and deeds from the beginning.

I continued all my life the relationship I developed with friends and relations due to differences in ranks.

He used to go himself to the person concerned in case of special need, so that he may not have to discontinue whatever he was doing.

I do not take money in left hand and shoe in the right hand.

He used to tie one side of hankerchief to clean the nose. Too much food was burden on him. He said I could ask for more if I needed.

When I walk on the way I leave the better side for others and think of the same for animals.

He said walk together or behind a distance but not just behind.

I do not interfere in others job, if he wants to ask he can ask. But if I am too kind, I tell him politely.

Do not insist to feed someone without hunger.

When I am sick I appoint a Hakeem or doctor and follow his advice, and tell others to ask the Hakeem for any prescription or medicine they think I should take.

I save small blessings of Allah, pieces of papers, thread etc. and it gives me pleasure to be able to use them later on.

Large portions of what please me I do not discard small portions thereof. It frightens me.

I take loan from someone who could refuse not from someone who has my property or one who is going to recieve some money.

I don't borrow something from otners and if so, return it promptly after use. According to Hadith, the essence of morals is not to trouble anyone.

13. Etiquette of Accepting Gifts. I do not accept gift from a stranger in the first meeting. I say it depends on mutual love and it takes time. I tell sincere friends not to give soon and in large amounts. I do not like to collect useless and unnecessary things.

If I ask for something, I pay for it, and tell him not to give if troublesome.

I do not give loan more than what I can give and spare.

If somebody deposits anything, I write down quantity, money, date, name, full address for my memory in the purse.

If I write anymore for my work I send them return envelopes.

14. Family Life

He had two wives and no children. He had two houses, I treat them equally in all matters. No body complained about it. Presents were divided into three equall halves, two to the wives and and one for himself for daily use and this sum was later divided into two for the two houses. It is very rare that they ask for more.

When I go to the house, I knock at the door and say Salam thinking some strange woman might be there, I am kind to them and listen to them carefully. If they are doing something in which I can participate, then I participate. I keep in mind their moral and actions reform. I keep my things separately. I keep a thing from where I take it and tell others the same. If a meal comes in pots and utensils from elsewhere, I return it promptly after use to avoid inconvenience.

After eating at home I say have it removed, I don't say remove it. I do not say directly to the maid.

I treated the relatives of two wives kindly and stayed at their houses one day each. After Asr I go to both houses for a whole.

I time the amount of time stayed in one house and stay equally in the other house. I do not talk of one house in the other house. Thanks to Allah they are friendly to each other.

No matter how much I like a guest to stay, I do not insist about staying, and tell him where he wished and where he felt comfortable.

15. Treatment of Servants. I pay salary to servants with respect. Put it in front of them. Do not throw over them.

When I have to go out with servant in the morning, I keep occupied in something until the servant is ready to go with me.

I do not ask too heavey a thing to be carried by servants and explain them fully what I want and let them explain to me what I want. I keep everyday life simple and brief.

I do most of my work myself and do not depend on servants or wife and do not have to wait for anyone. I like my freedom and theirs.

This is a simple thing but is the root of all good dealings, good way of life, and comfort and happiness that you are not a source of trouble to anybody. This is the outcome of all Tasawwuf and Sulook.

I write a book "Adabul Maashirat" for this purpose when I say it neglected by educated people. These little things make life happy. Unfortunately those have been taken away from our life and make it troublesome.

16. Childhood Activities. My religious interest developed in childhood. At the age of 12-13 when I was reading elementary books I used to pray at night "Tahajjud" and read recitals. Ladies used to say in winter, what is you age? Why are you doing so much struggle? I had this habit of Tahajjud from my earlier teacher Maulana Fateh Mohammed Sahib Rah..

I was fond of lecturing from childhood. When I went to buy something and there was a mosque in the way or it was not time of prayer I used to go to the pulpit, give sermon and come out.

17. Rights and Dealings. I go to death or marriage occasions to people. At time of death I give lecture, if feasible, on the patience and for bearance of the occasion. At time of marriage I give lecture on the blessings of Nikah and against worldly ceremonies on the occasion.

At the time of visiting sick people, I read Quran and blow on them and pray for their health.

I reply letters every day. If somebody seeks advice, I give advice but do not mind if advice is not followed.

I do not go to ceremonies of death or marriage. If I know of this after going there, I get out of it, and do not care for the displeasure of the host. At a later date I talk about or give lecture against it.

If somebody invited for meals, he would accept it and especially of known persons.

He would advise against going to extremes in obtaining "Tabarrukat". He rarely asked for anything and would pay for it. He would ignore minor mistakes of his friends.

He would ignore or forgive if somebody tried to harm him or hurt him. People rebuked him and gave "fatwa" of "Kufr" but he said nothing. During political unrest papers wrote against him, threatened to kill him but he kept on preaching what he thought was right. He said I will sacrifice my life for it if necessary.

He did not publish his articles in newspapers. They were published in "An-Noor" for his Khanqah, published every month from Molvi Shabeer Ahmad Sahib.

18. Time Conciousness. I want to make use of my time from the childhood and that is why so much work has been done. My teacher Shaikhul Hind Maulana Mahmood Hasan came to thana Bhawan and I looked after him but when the time of writing came I said Hazrat I write at this time, if you permit I will come back again. He said go and write, don't waste your time. I did not feel like writing much and returned earlier. He was surprised. I said I take care of the time and wrote a few lines for punctuality.

I am nothing but I get angry over those who talk after Fajr. This is the time of Zikrullah. Do not waste it.

He said, do everything with discipline. It is helpful to you and to others too.

18. Self Criticism. He was always self-critical and watching out for his self and perpetually making progress. One may not know it but it takes "salik" to high progress. Such a man is called "Qalandar". He does not care so much for his superogatory prayers but looks out for his heart's activities. For instance any event took place soon his heart acted according to patience or thankfulness or servitude etc. This is a well-known hidden action which took him high up in the scale. These events take place all the time and all the time he is progressing and is superior to a person who does a lot of Nafl prayers but ignores his heart's actions. It is strange that people do not find fault with themselves. With the right mind sins are sins even virtues appear as sins. I do not trust my prayers, fastings and every action, even faith. Who would be more sincere than companions of the Prophet (Sal-am). There is a Hadith that 70 Badri companions doubted hypocrisy in them.

I am not a pious person but am not lousy in my reform. Every time I want to make progress. I am not content.

Once he used to say sermons a lot. He said I find any worthy of reform thing in me I say a sermon about it. Sermon "Al-Ghazab" (anger) is an example. This brings about the reform easily.

When someone rebukes me I do not mind. But when someone praises me I am stunned. It is Allah's forgiveness and covering up otherwise why praise me.

If a person has 99 vices and 1 virtue, I look at his virtue. Those who are my disciples if they have 99 virtues and 1 vice, I criticize the vice. I look at myself also and seek forgiveness.

By way of "Mamoolat" things came to me that were done by earlier saints and I am not starter but confident of its success.

I am short of deeds but am not careless about my reform. I am not content with my present situation. Salvation does not depend upon deeds but Allah's mercy but it is the right of Allah upon His servants to do good and to avoid evil. Therefore, I am very sorry for my shortcommings and always think of my reform.

I do not give sermon on requested topics. Whatever I need I say and it helps me as well as others.

19. Respect for Religious Authorities. I am not a Derwish like the Pirjis. I am a simple student. Ask me about the Qur'an and Hadith and this makes a real Derwish. Scholars are much needed as they are the backbone of religion. Scholars are more needed than Sufis otherwise no one would know the religious ordinances and limits. I love Derwishs more and respect Ulama more. Sufis are like elder brothers and Fuqaha are like father in respect. Allah also treats the Sufis like a younger son and Fuqaha like the elder son who is assigned most important jobs. Fuqaha have done a great service to Islam. They have derived rules and regulations and paved the way till the end of the world. Sufis and Fuqaha are the two wonderful groups of Islam.

In Fiqh, I try to find simple solution of our problems, because "Al-deeno ysrun" (religion is easy).

I hate worldliness in religion.

In trouble I follow simple rules to be thankful to Allah and not complicated rules which may lead to pride.

In my personal matters I do not give weight to my personal piety but to Shariah and consult others. Thanks to Allah, I keep Shariah above the intellect and intellect above the habits.

I give weight to normality and treat everyone according to his rank. When several books come I keep Hadith above, then Fiqh, then Tasawwuf, then other books. Similarly first Arabi, then Persian, then Urdu. I do not keep anything on top of Arabic books.

20. Special Features. He said that "salik" should bring out changes in his condition but gradually so. Not abruptly so that people may think he is a saint. Really it was not easy to recognize him.

Once he said to his deputy Khaja sahib it is not right to disclose one condition but I say this to you on the condition that you do not disclose it in my life. At first it was clear from Shariah that how did the Prophet (Sal-am) with the fear of Allah, knowledge of hereafter, so much fear in his heart talk and laugh with his companions how he sat with the wives. Do his household duties, how did he eat, how did he lie down but now it is clear intellectually that it is possible to combine the two.

I did not work hard in studies but respected and loved the teachers very much and thats how I got what I got.

Many people thought that he know in his heart what people wanted. He said no. Allah puts the things to talk in his heart and he talks without knowing anything else. People are satisfied.

Look at his kindness. He said I do not wish to see my enemy in trouble even. I do not consider myself superior to Muslims or even disbelievers in the life they might become good Muslims later on. I do not aspire for ranks in the hereafter. It would be a great mercy of Allah if I find a place where paradise people put their shoes and this is because I can not bear the punishment of hell.

I hate the deeds not the doer.

Neither can we depend on knowledge, nor deeds, nor present situation all can change. It is worth worrying for. Do not be proud of your good situation, do not hate other's poor situation. Who knows you may fail later on and he may improve later on.

I do not find any virtue of knowledge or deeds in me. I am full of evil. Allah has kindly covered them up. If somebody praises me I am astonished, if somebody rebukes me I am not surprised. Secondly, he may not know the truth and is mistaken and forgiven. Thirdly, I have been praying for a long time, that O Allah! do not punish anyone because of me if I do not forgive anyone what would I gain from someone going to hell. But this does not include my property as they will take it.

21. Allah's Blessings. They were plenty and helpful and he was thankful for them. Look We helped you there and We helped you there. No voice comes and this is like this that We have been kind to you, We have helped you.

I wish my friends may not interfere in my treatment of people as this comes to be true later on by the virtues of my heart (Ashrafus Sawanih).

Thanks to Allah, I do not consider anyone my helper. I am all alone in the world except Allah. I am alone and my Allah is with me. People look at their servants, I don't. I do not want to make anyone my friend and don't care if somebody leaves me. I find myself alone in my life before death and no one to help me.

The easy tricks that Allah puts in my heart for self-reforms are due to people who care for them, nothing to do with me. Allah wants his servants to benefit so he is taking work from a worthless person. What can mother boast that she feeds the baby but Allah has produced from flesh and blood milk. If she does not feed the baby it will dry away. If Shaikh does not speak nothing will come to him. How can he boast?

I have no knowledge, no virtue but belief of ignorance with which Allah helps. I am full of mistakes, Allah has taken people's reform work from me.

Allah has put the correct things in my mind by which people come out of darkness and see the way. If someone sees with his eyes he will see the way. If somebody does not lift his feet, goes backwards, or close the eyes what is the fault of light there. Allah says, "Haza basairo minnrabbikum wa hudanaw wa rahmat" where first thing is eyes, second thing is the way and the final thing is the stage.

I do not care if any body is pleased with me but Allah's pleasure is important. A Muslim should work for the pleasure of Allah and this is everything.

I look after myself more than others. I criticize myself. This is Allah's mercy.

Tasawwuf was dead for centuries. People were going in dark rooms whether the head is broken or the legs are broken. Now thanks to Allah, the way is clear. People want it the same way but how can reform stop? Allah's will is supreme. For centuries the way has been cleared. If there will be a need Allah will raise another Mujaddid. But in the fourteenth century a "pir" was needed like me.

22. Shaikh's Blessings. He was Mureed of Hazrat Shaikhul Arab wal Ajam Haji Shah Mohammed Imdadullah sahib Thanwi Muhajir Makki Rah. He was serving a large part of the Muslim world then. His Zikr produced a situation in his heart. People may not notice it but I felt it (Ashrafus Savanih).

He always said all his virtues were from Haji sahib. Look at me before meeting him and after meeting him, a world of change. I was a student and teacher before and now but new ideas began to pour in now. This is all Shaikh's blessings.

When I was with Haji sahib I thought everybody should finish "Ziaul Quloob" Azkar and Ashghal. I once told him. He laughed. The chemist has lot of medicines and you use what you need. On a dinner table there are a lot of food, you eat what you like, not that you eat everything. I learnt this thing from Shaikh too.

Specially I learnt "Tauheed" from Shaikh whose result is servitude and he transferred it to Mureed's chest and he spread it East and West by his propagation of faith.

I am only angry for reform not far good. This is Haji sahib's blessing (Anfase Isa).

Once somebody was reading "Tarbiyyatur Salik" and people and Hazrat was moved and he said I am amazed. The answers are beyond my capabilities. You ask these questions to other Shaikhs then you will appreciate their worth. Thanks to Allah for centuries Tasawwuf has been preserved. This is Allah's blessings and Shaikh's blessings.

V. The Mujaddis's Meetings

23. A Glimpse. He was appointed by Allah to do the task of reform of his people. Hidden teaching and training was peculiar to him. He recognized the pulse of his followers.

When he talked about hidden situations he could fill their hearts with pleasure or seizure of soul. He went on normality and served people from hopelessness and pride. Some went to his Majlis with pride, he was emptied. Some went to his Majlis with hopelessness and he recieved glad teachings. When he wanted to empty the salik with evils and vices a scene of sorrow and grief was there. The people cried and felt sorry for themselves. When he wanted to fill the person with the love of Allah he gave glad tidings one after the other. He kept his Mureed light and easy and busy in work. He used to save them from worries. He was so influencial that everybody used to think that he is describing their condition.

He used to weigh the feelings of people and put words in such a way that they could cry. This is the blessing of Allah, whom He gives.

24. Impressions. His impressions were powerful and ever lasting. He used to say, "If you want to be saint, Qutb, Ghaus go somewhere else, if you want to be a human being come here". It is difficult to be noble and human, sainthood comes in a day. Forget about mistakes. Did Hazrat get angry by one's losing Tahajjud, Azkar, recitals, etc.? If they were left with an excuse he never got angry.

But if someone talked against principle, talked thoughtless, leftout rights of others, dealings were lousy and uncoordinated or annoy someone, then Hazrat changed his mood, took care of him in strong language and did the reform. He used to say do not hurt anybody, and this in all Tasawwuf.

Two things were checked in disciples. In his actions and deeds he does not hurt anybody. He understands the objective so that his actions are coordinated.

First improve your dealings then every Muslim is a Dervish like the companies of the holy Prophet (Sal-am), every Muslim is a saint like the campanions, every Muslim is a lover like the companions, etc.

25. Mujaddid's Policy. May Allah increase the ranks of Hazrat. He has explained the objectives very clearly. He wanted to create the companion's spirit and did create to some extent. For the attainment of nobility and humanity he pointed towards soul's cleanliness, hidden progress and for worldly life he pointed towards Shariah and Sunnah.

In his training were included Shariah's rules fulfillment, following the Sunnah of the holy Prophet (Sal-am), avoiding the self and satan and care for cleanliness of the apparent and the hidden - nothing else. If you get these you got everything.

Don't be decieved by the statement that Shariah and Tariqah are two different things

He said Allah told us the secret of this servitude in everyday life, do this, don't do that, we like this, we don't like this, this is Halal, this is Haram,this is clean, this is unclean. If you want my blessings my love then follow the holy Prophet (Sal-am), we will love you. What more do you want.

He said religious apparent is Shariah, its hidden is Tariqah, they both have their rules and regulations and we are required to follow both of them.

Along with these are rights of people, rights of parents, wife and children, relatives, friends, etc. - these are also obligatory. No matter how much you perform the Nawafils of Tasawwuf you cannot please Allah without these. By displeasing his servants you can't please Allah.

Once he explained all the stages of the hidden and Tariqah and explained the ways of the Derwishes and finally said the upshot is that obligatory deeds are fulfilled, all the rules and regulations of Allah are fulfilled, rights and duties of the people are fulfilled - if it is Derweshi then it is everything otherwise nothing.

During the above if situations arise then good, if not then no loss of the hereafter.

You learn humility, you obtain His pleasure by fulfilling his rights and duties, then you will get everything. But if you approach worship from the selfish way, the self keeps you away from the objective, keeps you occupied in pleasures, the satan decieves you. When he finds you fixed on pleasures, away from the objectives, he is sure to decieve you whenever he wants and leave you of the world nor the religion.

It is the task of the Shaikh to protect you from satanic ways and keep you on the straight path of religion. Take the right path, worship simple and straight, obey the rules, situations are temporary, if He pleases He may give you but these are tempo.ary. Allah! Allah! self and satan opposed but this Muslim prayed anyway. Many oppositions come but he is praying he is trust worthy. In this world nobody can bow to Allah in prostration except a Muslim. No much or how much the opposition external and internal, he is there in prostration to his Maker. Look you have this prostration, don't look if you have pleasure or not. Following the rules will produce love one day soon. Because you obey Allah, follow the Prophet (Sal-am) love will come soon one day.

Some people asked for "Bait" or to be made "mureed", he wrote them his policy on the subject.

1. I am a dry student. I am devoid of Milad Shari Urs, Gyaurhween, Fatiha, Sama or Qawwali etc., and want to keep my friends on this way too.

2. I have no miracles nor "tasarruf" but inform others of Allah's and Rasool's ordinances.

3. I do not hide anything from my friends. I do not force anyone on anything. I am pleased with somebody following religion and displeased with someone against Islam.

4. I do not believe in giving trouble to anyone, even by words. I do not recommend anyone

5. Do not hurt anybody, either physical or property-wise or take anything without right or by virtue of respect, back-biting, put someone to worry, bad dealings or if any mistake happens then do not be ashamed of an apology. He took this point seriously.

26. The Nature of Khanqah. Saints who established spiritual paths wanted self-reform according to the will of Allah and human being may become truly human being.

"Saliks" tell the hidden dirty tricks of their self and satan to the Shaikh and they tell the cure according to the person. To purify from vices and to bring them on to virtues. They suggest struggles, "Muraqabah", recitals, some they increase fear some they increase mercy and all of them have purification of self and pleasure of Allah. This was the true nature of Khanqah.

Gradually there came unworthy people and they could not distinguish right from wrong and obligatory from preferred. They knew not the difference between Sunnah and innovation (Bid'ah). People lost the need for Shariah and Sunnah.

Maulana Thanwi's Shaikh Hazrat Haji sahib was Imam, Mujtahid of Tasawwuf (Mysticism) he revived the dead Tasawwuf. He reformed all the paths and united them in one path. The purpose of all of them was to obey the perfect human being (Mohammad Sal-am) and seek Allah's pleasure and the source is the obligatory deeds. Struggles, Azkar, Ashghal are not the objects nor the Tariqah themselves. These are means to come on Tariqah and means of perfection. They are useful in the attainment of the objectives.

27. A Declaration. I say it publicly and explain the true nature of religion and clarify the principles and subsidiaries of Islam. This is urgently needed now. People are involved in thousands of misunderstandings and many robbers are against the way. We have to defeat them. They have defeated Allah's creatures. Allah give them guidance. Amen.

28. The Reform of Khanqah. For the training of the hidden as a means were developed some cures, the Khanqah people thought them the objects. Worshipping Shaikh, worshipping tombs, chilla, muraqabah, dreams, miracles some non-Sunnah recitals was all that was in the Khanqah for centuries. He stopped them completely. What is a mixture of religion and non-religion you have given it the rank of obligatory, you do these "rasm" and consider them the highest achievement. Selfish situations you regard as spiritual situations. Miracles were talked about.

Hazrat stopped all the customs of Khanqah and revived them. We have situations, ranks, miracles but they have materialism. We have spiritualism and its progress depends upon following the Shariah and the straight path, the path of those whom you have favoured.

The ups and downs of Shariah and Tariqah were corrected, and Hazrat brought the salik to the Prophet (Sal-am). Where can you get a better training than there.

VI. The Revival of Series

29. The Revival. He stopped the innovations of the Shariah as well as Tariqah and revived for four series Chishtiyyah, Naqshbandiyyah, Suhavvvardiyah and Qadriyyah and explained Tariqah is Shariah and Sunnah, all opposed to them is nonsense. He used to do "Bait" in all the four series as did Hazrat Haji sahib Rah.

The purpose of all the series was to reform the people, struggles for the purification of self so that their heart's condition may be right, piety may develop which is the source of Allah's pleasure and relationship with Allah. The means employed were within the limits of Shariah and Sunnah which was the task of the Prophet (Sal-am). These are preserved in Hadith books. As time passed by people followed innovations and left the straight path. The Khanqah became a source of mischief but some truthful people survived in every series. The people of different series were not coordinated and they begin to think that Shariah and Tariqah are two different things.

Our Hazrat was Mujaddid of this time. He explained the Tariqah, and made it subsidary to the following of Shariah. The false motions of superiority developed in the series were removed. He said Chishtiyyah and Naqshbandiyyah are different names, their reality is one, they are Allah's party and Allah's party is going to succeed. And the mind of some of one series is more like the other of other series. The Shaikh should find out the mind of his "mureed" and treat him accordingly.

Chishtiyyah is cleaning first "takhliyyah" and Naqshbandiyyah is enlightening first "tahhiyyah". Train the "mureed" on his mind. Khaja Moinuddin Chishti and Hazrat Bahauddin Naqshbandi are one, their object is one, only the training programme is different. One who insults any one of them will be devoid of the blessings of both of them.

30. Training Programme. He was Imam of Tasawwuf and Mujaddid of Tariqah. He made such training programme that every class of seeker could easily follow them and succeed by knowing the object.

He said I train in morals, deeds are corrected automatically. So he used to teach this fact to the seeker in the first instance.

He did not hurry in "Bait". One sided liking is not enough but by long sitting and lengthy correspondence mutual liking develops. Hand in hand does not do you good but sincere following the shaikh does you good.

He used to ask the purpose of "Bait" in the first instance and unless he has clear understanding he was not allowed to do "Bait".

Ask questions by letter not verbally.

After "Bait" read his "Qasdus Sabeel", "Bahishti Zewar" (English translation:Heavenly Ornaments) and lectures until understood.

The seeker was advised to examine his daily life and keep an eye on self how his desires work with people in good and evil, and what difficulty he faces in following Shariah and Sunnah.

He said a Muslim daily deals with Shariah, Sunnah and Tariqah: or rights, limits and protection of limits.

Rights as in Shariah.

Limits as in following Sunnah.

Protection of limits as in all of Tariqah.

These three fulfillments raises a Muslim to servitude.

The job of a Shaikh in Tariqah is to purify the self of the seeker. For this he suggests means. The seeker should tell his condition and follow him.

Those who want reform, I examine their minor weaknesses also and correct them. I do not ignore them or their mistakes. But for others, I do not look at their weakness, and look at their good points.

He used to meet everyone very politely and simply but no body could exceed the limit.

There were some basic principles understanding them cleared the path of Tariqah:

1. Keep religion above your world.

2. Keep Shariah above your intellect.

3. Do not be lazy in what is under your control, and do not worry about things beyond your control.

4. Salik should leave "tajweez" (choosing for himself) and accept "tajweez" (choosing what Allah wants for him).

5. Situations should be considered good but not the object of Tareeqah.

6. Keep intellect above your habits, and Shariah above your intellect.

He was not much interested in dreams, if he thought any meaning he would tell it or be quiet about it.

He used to write his reply in the same letter so that the question and answer remain together and no confusion may result in understanding.

These letters (without names) were published monthly in "An-Noor". This was called "Tarbiyyatus Salik" which was later published as a book. This was a Mujaddid's way of training others. Before him a shaikh used to tell alone his disciple something and this teaching was from chest to chest.

For seeker's training he wrote "Aadabul Ma-ashirat", Safaii ma-amilaat", "Irshadul Hayem", "Huquuqul Islam" for humanizing them. He established chapter in "Hayatul Muslimeen", "Taleemuddin", "Bahishti Zewar" etc.

He gave sermons on way of life as in " Huqooqul Ma-asturat ", "Khairil Irshad fi Huqooqul Ibad ", "Hurumatul Hudood ", "Huqooqi Ahle Bait ", etc.

These relationships of obligatory things is a vast field, at each foot step there is apparent and hidden deeds and signs of humanity to look for.

Why neglect the things of importance. People's rights are more important than recitals. Leaving former would lead to punishment. Leaving later will do you no harm, it is " Mustahab ". Those who leave the important and do the unimportant are always failing in Tariqah you did the recital in the night. Light is coming in the heart. In the morning light is leaving, you do not care about that. They consider recitals as signs of closeness but not rights of people, not to harm any body. What is said about it ?

Do you think the Prophets were raised to do what you consider un-important. Repent their being common is sign of their greatness and obligatory deeds are the objects. If you want to be human come here, if you want to be saint, Qutb, Ghaws go somewhere else.

He reformed every walk of life. He taught the theory of servitudes life, humanity and gave practical training in each branch.

Look my trainees are in government service, scholars, sufis, teahcers, doctors, engineers, businessmen, barristers, poor people, rich people - hold them fast and follow their example. They are all doing their work and nothing stops them from religion. How easy and practicable is your religion.

He used to examine his seekers with careful scrutiny. He used to check their mistakes. If somebody was careless he was reprimanded. If somebody misused a position of authority he was punished. He used to get angry on irresponsible talks and they were not left until they talked right.

He punished in various ways. Some he asked to leave the meeting. Some he stopped writing to him for a time. Some he stopped talking for a while. Some serious mistake went for loss of relationship. Some he fined a sum of money. He said when I punish somebody I pray for him and at that time I seek forgiveness of Allah from my sins. Everybody who was punished felt his anger and rebukes enlighten the heart despite the embarassment.

31. Caution. His political reforms were not for ordinary Shaikhs but those who have escaped Nafs (self) and who are in full control of protection of limits.

You will find Shariah and Tariqah in the meetings of Hazrat Thanwi not in a Khanqah. You will find it in his training in his sermons and table-talks. Fulfil the duties of every action in life, this is Shariah. Do it according to the holy Prophet's (sal-am) life example. This is Sunnah. Now your busy life is religious.

Time consciousness is taught here. This is in Quran. The Prophet (sal-am) has acted accordingly. Religious and worldly reform is dependant upon it. These are all for your happiness. Come out of ignorance, come out of darkness, and make religion your object, this is what you have been created for.

32. Some Statements of Training. Thanks to Allah, He has given me easy methods for the training of the hidden and the diagnosis is usually correct, whatever is diagnosed comes true and is beneficial.

He said we teach only humanity, some think sainthood is important but I consider humanity and manhood important. Look ablution is less important than prayers (Salah) but there is no Salah without ablution (Wudu). I make Wudu, our job is humility.

It is obligatory to be human not saint. If he is not human he will hurt and harm others. If he is not saint he will go to hell where them is harm to yourself not to others. Therefore, I try to make you a human being not saint. I object one Muslim harming other Muslim. Live within limits and you are free otherwise.

I do not look which reciter is in congregation and who is not but do take notice who is hurting others and who is not. One who wants to do "Bait" with me I suggest some books to read first and this is very useful. If somebody says he has read them, then I ask what changes did you bring about in yourself as a result of reading them. This is more beneficial than years of struggles. I put people to work from the first day. If you have worry you will find the way. I put worry on the seeker.

I tell students not to be proud of education, its usefulness depends upon company of Ahlullah (siants) and their kindness towards you.

Those who are my disciples I want them to improve their morals. It is essential to improve your morals. People don't look for the improvement of their morals but become serious about recitals.

I prefer love over high opinion as the former lasts and the latter disappears soon.

Judge yourself according to this principle. When you look good in your eyes, you are bad in the eyes of Allah. By any virtue, by any educational qualification if you think you are beautiful, then you are really ugly.

Some people have no attraction for any saint. I have made a way for them also. This is Allah's way, no student can fail here. Learn the simple religion by reading "Bahishti Zewar" or from a teacher, and pray and fast simply. If you feel any disease in you cure it yourself according to your understanding and avoid the usual sins and repent from the rest. And pray Allah that I understand and cure the rest. If I can't understand, then reform me by Your mercy. This is enough for salvation. And this is all that is required.

The Tariqah has been clarified because of my frankness and rudeness. Every one knows the object and the way. I would have allowed everyone for deputyship but some religious or professional position is useful in Tariqah for the benefit of others.

Some people asked me what is meant by liking a Shariah. The sign of liking is that on any statement or action of Shariah the seeker may not develop any objection or doubt. If it does then he should tell himself that after all he is a human being and Allah can forgive his sins and do not oppose him in his heart.

Allah is Hakim (ruler) and Hakeem (full of mercy). As a ruler He can do what He wants. As a Hakeem He is kind and merciful, even if we don't understand his kindness. This saves me from a lot of trouble.

I have received hard and harsh conditions but have succeeded in the end. Thanks to Allah. A seeker has any amount of trouble, I have no problem in his cure and such tricks come to mind that he gets out of them easily, especially in the treatment of "waswasa".

33. The Training Book (Tarbiyyatus Salik). Human life is full of activities from self and devil and there are problems at every step, and they influence the apparent and the hidden deeds, even if you don't realize it in every day busy life.

Those who want to live sensibly, those who think of nobility of self, or those who learn religious knowledge and use them correctly in their daily dealings, or those who enter Tariqah and develop relationship, with a Shaikh they feel the danger of self and satan very much. These two reduce the greatness and love for religion which sometimes destroys the faith.

These people referred to Shaikh Mujaddid Thanwi for protection from Self and Satan and presented their "waswasa" for cure. They presented their problems in apparent and hidden deeds and asked for their solution and salvation. He sent them prescriptions which cured them and they were a satisfied self. These questions and answers were compiled together in a remarkable book, "Tarbiyyatus Salik" which was based on the situations of Ulema, Sufis. English-educated persons, businessmen and office workers, etc. For example :

Some wrote that despite being Muslim, they are worried in Allah's existence and the Hereafter. How to satisfy these? Some wrote that there were many doubts about Islam's truth. What to do? Some wrote the worrying things between truth and falsehood. Some wrote that prayer, recitals have a lot of other thoughts. It becomes hard to complete the prayer. Some wrote at the time of prayer dirty ideas creep into the head. How to get rid of them?

Some wrote prayer is legal bowing and prostration. I don't even remember how many Raka'ah I prayed. How to control this? Some wrote ages have past praying Allah but no avail. They are not accepted. Some wrote we don't know if our worship is accepted. How to satisfy ourselves? Some wrote all our prayers are habitual, showy. What is the use of prayers like these? Some asked how to attain the soul of prayers. Some wrote, we treat others rudely. Is this pride? If so, what is the cure? Some wrote backbiting is hard to avoid. How to avoid this? Some wrote we are involved in evil eye. How to avoid this evil of world and the Hereafter? Some enquired about malice, some about the perils of tongue and how to escape them? Some found a lack of patience, thankfulness, humility, love and asked how to develop these. Some wrote about their family life, home problems, evils of dealing and way of life and asked for means of controlling them. Some wrote dirty stories and requirements of self, some wrote the carelessness of the events of the hereafter, some wrote total involvement in the worldly affairs and asked how to check these. Some informed of the lightning, good dreams etc. Some asked to obtain love of Allah and pleasure of Allah? Some asked the details of travels towards Allah and travel in Allah.

The Mujaddid replied to all of them and the cure was 100%. For centuries the way has been cleared. Tariqah is free from self and devil.

Circumstances (Nature of Tariqah). A seeker asked what do we obtain from saints and what is the procedure?

Mujaddid's Reply. Some deeds are to do, both apparent and hidden and some deeds are to be avoided both apparent and hidden. In both kinds there are some theoritical and practical mistakes. Shaikh tells you there cure. To follow the diagnosis and cure is the job of the "mureed" or seeker. And to assist this they prescribe some recitals. This explains the object and its procedure both.

He replied to a seeker that thanks to Allah we know the object which is Allah's pleasure. Now is Tareeq's knowledge and practice. So Tareeq is one following of rules and regulations, apparent and hidden and two things help it, one Zikr as much as possible (recital), and two company of the saints or Shaikh as much as possible. If that is not possible then stories of saints. Two things are harmful in Tareeq, sins and wasting time in useless things.One thing is conditional for success: information of circumstances. Now it depends on you how long you take.

Circumstances. Now I think Allah in my heart and this makes me very pleased. The question is with my short comings in deeds could this be a blessing from Allah or my self has cooked up this story?

Mujaddid's Reply. Existence of both possibilities in the heart is very good sign. Faith is between fear and hope (Hadith). Congratulations!

Circumstances. I am getting away from prayers. Once or twice I miss the prayer time.

Mujaddid's Reply. At first it is difficult, gradually it becomes easy to pray on time. Fix a fine when you miss a prayer, a fine not too small and not too big. And pray Nafl (optional) prayers every time this happen.

Circumstances. A seeker wrote I wish I may not have doubts.

Mujaddid's Reply. You may wish tomorrow that you may not have fever.

It was written earlier that without intention coming of doubts is harmless.

Circumstances. One seeker said I am frightened of death although this is the source of meeting Allah. Sufis love death.

Mujaddid's Reply. Non-sense, some Sufis fear death. This is due to weakness of heart. Some Sufis are not frightened and this is a gift from Allah and strength of heart contributes to it.

The good results are not to be obtained on doing too much but according to strength. Six Raka-ah of a sick and weak person are equal to 600 Raka-ah of a strong person, for example. Allah rewards according to one's strength.

Circumstances. I have poor strength and can't do anything.

Mujaddid's Reply. What ever you can do combined with sadness of not doing much will not let you down.

Circumstances. I am trying for something but I can't get it. I want Zikr of Allah in my heart so that I can't forget Him even if I try to do so and passage of other than Allah in my heart becomes impossible.

Mujaddid's Reply. Even I do not have this. In the case I shall not be free but without control.

Circumstances. I fear death.

Mujaddid's Reply. Lady Aisha says in Hadith, we all used to fear death, and the holy Prophet (Sal-am) did not rebuff it is obvious. This is not bad.

Circumstances. A seeker wrote he has been having bad dreams for one & a half (1½) months and wrote one such dreams and the last dream.

Mujaddid's Reply. Dreams are not influencial things no matter how bad they are. This is no fault of yours and no weakness nor any hidden disease requiring cure.

Circumstances. A student wrote when God has given you qualification how can you ignore them and consider yourself devoid of them and humbler than others and less in rank.

Mujaddid's Reply. You may consider yourself more perfect but not better or acceptable to Allah and do not consider others rejected and away from Allah's mercy. May be he has a good deed which is better than all your deeds or you have an evil worst than all his evils or those may happen in the future. Keep the possibilities in mind and this will be a cure of pride.

Circumstances. A seeker wrote despite repeatedly thinking of prayers, my prayer has lot of other thought (waswasa).

Mujaddid's Reply. A person is responsible for what is within his limits, and he is responsible for not bringing an idea (other than Salah) and if some idea comes change it and turn to Salah towards an acceptable thing. Such as towards Allah, Allah is watching me, I am standing in front of Allah and giving account of my deeds, this is my last Salah and may be I die now. Kabah is in front of me and light is coming from it towards me, the better I pray more light will come, think of the words of Salah along with their meanings or think of your Shaikh. Gradually perfection will result, if not, no harm done.

Circumstances. A rich man has atheistic ideas. He described them in detail and said I value your intelect highly, if you say that Allah`s presence can be explained intelectually, then I will not bother to know them and believe you.

Mujaddid`s Reply. By God. Allah`s existence is proven by much intelectual reasoning that any great philosopher can be ignored or silenced and there is no doubt about that.

Circumstances. I am suffering from a disease for sometime and that is sometimes I find no trace of other ideas (Waswasa) in the heart but sometimes so much so that even an atheist may not have such notions. I feel like committing suicide to clean myself of the dirty person I am. Therefore, please help me.

Mujaddid's Reply. I will surely pray for you but this is not a bad thing. The companies of the holy Prophet (Sal-am) used to get such ideas that they would rather burn to death than say it and the Prophet (Sal-am) said this was sign of faith. If you are not going to be pleased about them, don't be sad.

Circumstances. On the tongue there is Zikrullah and nothing in the heart. Thanks to Allah, there is no effect on the deeds. But if appears that heart is devoid of love.

Mujaddid's Reply. Which love you are worrying about: love by belief or physical love. If latter, there is no harm done. If former there is no grief over its loss. You are sad, it means it is there. He wrote the situation is not as it ought to be. The reply was it will be a day of mourning when you think the situation is as it ought to be the prophets said we could not worship you as we ought to have done. This is their situation and this is excellent.

Circumstances. At the moment of evil eye it comes to me what good is a sin that has no benefit for me.

Mujaddid's Reply. Quite useful and beneficial thought and deed.

Circumstances. A seeker said he likes to watch beautiful woman. He was asked whether it is in his control or beyond control. He said within control but to escape it appears difficult.

Mujaddid's Reply. What difficulty? Does it stop your breath or cause any disease or trouble?

Circumstances. A seeker wrote he is very soft and kind. He can't refuce anyone and this leads to deeds against the Shariah.

Mujaddid's Reply. Being difficult doesn't mean it is beyond your control. Do it where according to Shariah and not otherwise even if it hurts. Have patience.

Circumstances. I fulfill the recitals but heart is the same.

Mujaddid's Reply. It is a blessing that you get to eat twice with energy and strength as usual even if there is no increase.

Circumstances. Whatever recitals I do is a matter of habit.

Mujaddid`s Reply. Is the habit of a good thing not a blessing?

Circumstances. A student wrote of his worries and evil eye that he wanted to see every beautiful thing so much so that he casts his eye down and they get up to see it as it is beyond control. Please give a simple cure.

Mujaddid`s Reply. Read carefully. You are rewarded on things beyond your control but not on sins which are under your control nor is a prayer for them. Their is able praying that that man may eat this thing and may not eat that things you need courage to stop it. Suppose your elder is there will you do it then? If you can do it still, you are hopeless. If then you do it willingly and it is all your fault and all with in your control.

Circumstances. After Salah and recital it come to me that you can`t be saint, just do the obligatory things as Salvation is on mercy.

Mujaddid`s Reply. Think that deeds are not only for salvation but Allah`s right on this servents, and salvation is a blessing in itself.

Circumstances. I have ill thoughts.

Mujaddid`s Reply. Sit down somewhere alone and think that Allah has forbidden ill thoughts against anyone. How will you bear His punishment? Now repent and pray that Allah may clean your heart and ask for forgiveness and raising of ranks for the other person. Do it three times a day and if it doesn't, go meet the person and apologize him and ask him to pray for you that it disappears.

Circumstances. I have a disease, when someone hurts me I do not sit until I take the revenge.

Mujaddid's Reply. Not sitting is not sin, it is a trouble which goes by struggle and is rewarding. It is thus good. By struggling a few times it becomes habit and trouble goes.

Circumstances. I do not consider myself greater than anybody but do not want to be insulted or humiliated by anything. I do not wear dirty clothes that those who may see me will consider inferior.

Mujaddid's Reply. Shariah orders the same. It does not suit a Muslim to humiliate himself. This is the usual thing. In extreme cases he considers humiliation more dear than respect. But this is beyond control. Do not wish for it. If it happens do not try to remove it.

Circumstances. Some body wrote that I read many recitals but I do not give a raise in salary despite good work. What to do?

Mujaddid's Reply. In all situations within control do the things with prayers and in cases no situation arises then prayers alone, and if still unsuccesful then patience. More than that I do not know.

Circumstances. I "Mureed" wrote I do not find pleasure in Salah, recitals or reading Quran or worldly affairs in that I do not have time.

Mujaddid's Reply. Do however you do even imperfect. This is how perfection comes one day. If someone with a bad hand writing stops writing and practising he would never learn the good way. Don't leave imperfect deeds. To strenghten foundation you do not worry for beauty of the house but fill in everything. Similarly in perfect deeds are foundation for perfect building. With more struggle there is more reward. Mere reading books doesn't help. Proper understanding and correct orientations is needed on whom Allah has His mercy.

Circumstances. A person wrote I do not find full pleasure in Salah but yes in Zikr.

Mujaddid's Reply. Zikr is one-sided and Salah has many aspects therefore there is no peace. Pray like this : keep your attention towards one side. At the time of Qiyam do not think of Qaumah and so on. Have full concentration in a "ruku" or part of prayer. There will be peace because no body will disturb you until Salam but Zikr can be broken any time by any body. I tried this method myself and it works.

Circumstances. A person wrote I am concerned about the marriage of my daughters. If with beard they are very poor. If well-to-do, then no beard. Several relations have been turned away because of that. Everybody says beard is very difficult.

Mujaddid's Reply. It is really difficult. I think that full religiousness is not to be found in bearded people. One shaves the beard, one is irreligious in other ways so what will you do with beard alone. Look at two things: (1) no doubt in Islamic believes. (2) respectful of elders and saints, and kind hearted to fulfill his duties and with some wealth. Then with increasing relationship no matter his beard will also grow.

34. The Deputies. A complete list of Deputies was published in the life time of the Mujaddid. He divided his Khalifa into two categories::

(1) Majazeene Bait wa Talqeen (2) Majazeen-Talqeen c/o company. Many of them have passed away, only a few are still living.

35. The Shajarah.

A complete list of the Saintly love upto the Holy Prophet (Sal-am).

It is a good thing to read and to have the family tree ["Shajarah"] of your preceptor or Shaikh. This helps to develop a special relationship, affection and love for the preceptors of the Tariqah and the holy Prophet (Sal-am). This has, therefore, been in the practices of saints and their disciples of Islam. Reading after Fajr (morning prayer) or even once a week is good enough, after which recite Surah Al-Ikhlas three times and pray Allah to bless their souls This will strengthem your own soul and faith and so will a similar recitation of Surah Al-Ikhlas and following prayer for your relatives and Muslim ancestors. This is an obligatory right of love which they appreciate and like, and which will be helpful to you as well in your salvation and in seeking Allah's pleasure.

VII. The Mujaddid's Standard of Knowledge.

35. The Mujadid's Contribution. He was the present day Mujaddid, Mujtahid, and he realized the increasing sickness among Muslims in all walks of life and he diagnosed the reason for increasing apathy towards religion and then spent all his life towards Muslim prosperity and reform. Allah helped him and from all corners of the country Muslim awakening was apparent. Now came the Islamic literature in Urdu, previously they were in Persian and Arabic.

The Muajddid's books are in Tafsir, Ahadith, Fiqh, and Tasawwuf and Malfoozat and sermons in thousands are available. The critics realized that he was Mujaddid, Mujatahid and Hujjatallah fil Ardh. For centuries his works remain in force and valid.

There is no Muslim religious field in which he has not written and he said that all essential work has been done. For centuries the way has been paved. Future generation will benefit from my publications, Malfoozat (table talks) and sermons. These are the blessings of my Shaikh Hazrat Haji Imddadullah sahib Rah.

Some Special Publications. He has published nearly 1000 books and all of them are important and useful in various respects which are described below. They shall serve to give essential religious knowledge. Some books should be studied by a teacher lesson by lesson. Some should be read in the beginning : the four volumes of Ashrafus Sawanih.

This book deals with the life history of the Mujaddid but especially Vol. 2 is his missionary (tablighi) work and guidance for the people, just as he wrote Tafseere Bayanul Quran and Kaleede Mathnavi in Urdu, and Takashuf, Bawadirun Nawadir in Urdu, he also wrote many books in simpler language for Muslim children and ladies.

An illustrious example is Bahishti Zewar and Bahishti Gawhar (Heavenly Ornaments in English, Saeed International (Regd.), E-9 Jangpura Extension, New Delhi 110014, India) in which he has summarized Quran and Hadith. In every day Muslim life there is nothing which is not described there. This is like a complete encyclopoedia of Islam. There was no other book which deals with the requirements of ladies in Urdu in such a nice way. It deals with beliefs, faith, worship, dealings, way of life, morals, etc., as well as useful advices, household craft, prayers and "taweez" for many diseases, etc. The details will be clear on reading the book in Urdu or English.

Besides these voluminous books, there are other smaller books in Urdu which you should study. I shall present later on a number of books especially written for acquiring the essential knowledge of Shariah and Tariqah by reading which everybody can reform his or her life according to Sunnah and escape from all evils. In his life time, some elders published extracts from his teachings which are especially useful, namely, Anfase Isa, Kamalate Ashrafia, Ar-Rafiq, Ashraful Masail, etc. He himself published a work like that called Bawadirun Nawadir. In his last meeting with Allama Syed Sulaiman Nadvi he told the Allama to publish extracts from his works. He was sure of the authenticity of his works and being published by an Allama like Sulaiman this would be even more useful. He has 2½ years with his Shaikh and this was a polite way of asking him to think and do his own reform this way.

Maulana Abdul Bari sahib Rah. (deputy of Maulana Thanwi) published such extracts : Tajdeede Deene Kamil, Tajdeede Taleem wa Tableegh, Tajdeede Maashiyyat, etc. I wish this would have been the policy of other learned deputies as well to publish extracts of their Shaikh and point out towards his books along with their publications. His sermons would have bear simplified and explained. His "Malfoozat" (table talk) likewise treated so that light would have come to all the aspects of life and good change would have resulted. These topics include guidance in all walks of life and answer to questions of Islam is there.

Wrongs of faith and beliefs, wrongs of worship, "Rasm" local customs and evils of innovation, un-Islamic way of life, morals with selfishness are all treated very well in these books.

Concerning Tafseere Bayanul Quran. Once he said the entire work is from Allah and I wrote what was revealed to me except one or two places which I have marked. This commentary was written with open heart. Its value will be recognized by those who read some 20 commentaries. At hard places where difference of opinion happens, the issue has been solved by adding a few words in paranthesis. This is blessing of Allah.

Nashrut Teeb which is a brief but complete book on Sunnah (of the holy Prophet Sal-am) said where it will be read will be blessed all the way

Taleemud Deen which includes beliefs, worship, dealings, way of life, morals and Tasawwuf from Quran and Hadith is a complete work in itself for someone to study.

Statement concerning Hayatul Muslemin. I feel strongly in my heart that this book may bring about my salvation. I consider this my life's work and life's achievement. People do not appreciate it because it is in Urdu. Those who teach Hadith may appreciate it. By addition of a word or two many difficult problems have been solved. This gives a list of deeds for bringing about Islamic renaissance, Muslim revival and awakening. I used to write and then make it easier, sometimes several times. Somebody praised Bahishti Zewar for being easy. He said it has "Masail" (Fiqh) which is easy to make easy. Here is explanation of Hadith which solves all the problems. If somebody has doubt he should read it carefully and all the worries will be gone. I thought to read it once but left it because of crowd. It has cure of all that Muslims are suffering from now.

Al-Yamma fis Sam. A student asked in a letter the recital by which worship may increase and sins may go away. He replied worship and sins are both within your control in which recital has nothing to do. Now the procedure. The procedure for something in your control is nothing but to use your control or means. To make it easy you need struggle, which is opposition of self. By practising it, it become easy. I wrote everything. Now Shaikh has two functions : (1) Diagnosis of the diseases and (2) Some means of struggles to cure the disease.

It was Ramadhan when I wrote Qasdus Sabeel and it gave me much pleasure. Take these books for study and you will be guided: e.g. Qasdus Sabeel, Taleemuddin, Tarbiyyatus Salik, etc.

My books will spread despite efforts to the contrary. This is what is happening now.

36. Golden Advice. Someone may not be my mureed but he takes my book, studies them, he will also succeed. If a seeker has no likemen for any Shaikh but follows Quran and Sunnah and prays for his success and cure to Allah will also succeed.

37. A Review of Mujaddid's Knowledge by Syed Sulaiman Nadvi

A brief review can not possibly summarize all his qualifications and virtues of his knowledge. He is translator of Quran, Its recitor, its commentator, explanator of its rules and regulations, replier of its doubts. He is Muhaddith (authority on Hadith), explanator of Hadith. He is Faqih (Jurisprudent), replied to thousands of Fiqh problems, solved new questions, giver of Fatwa about new thnigs. He gave sermons, compiler of Sunnah sermons. He was lecturer, hundreds of his lectures and sermons have been published. He was Sufi, clarified the secrets of Tariqah. He stopped fighting between Shariah and Tariqah and made them one. In his Majlis religion, knowledge, wisdom were taught : These are in book form in Malfoozatr, preserved for the posterity. He was Shaikh with thousands of Mureeds who presented their circumstances and received Mujaddid's reply to their satisfaction. The compilation is Tarbiyyatus Salik. He wrote several books on saints and auliya. He clarified Chishtiyyah and explained its policies. His deputies wrote several extracts of his work, which is separate. He was a reformer, he corrected innovations, wrote several books on purification of customs and modernism. He was a doctor of the Ummah. He wrote Hayatul Muslemin (Islamic Renaissance, Adam publishers,). Every religious need was fulfilled.

His books spread throughout India and were translated in English, Bengali, Gujrati and Sindhi: (and Hindi).

He has published nearly 1000 books. This century's Mujaddid special features included writing, press, publication, etc. These are his miracles. His published pages exceed his life days. Other people with this miracle are Imam Jareer Tabri, Hafiz Khatib Baghdadi, Imam Razi, Hafiz Ibne Jozi, Hafiz Suyuti. In India such men are Maulana Abul Hasanat, Abdul Hai Farangi Mahli, Nawab Siddiq Hasan Khan, and the last of them Maulana Mujaddid Ashraf Ali Thanwi.

Classification of Publications. Most of his publications are in Urdu prose. The following are in Arabic:

(9) Mutashibihatul Quran litaraweeh. Similar places in Quran discussed.

(10) Adabul Quran, Mistakes rectified.

2. Translation and Commentary.

(1) Translation - Simple, easy, accurate, correct language, free of doubts, explanatory words in paranthesis, are its peculiarities. A great service to Islam.

(2) Tafseere Bayanul Qur'an. This is a complete Quranic commentary in 12 volumes, completed in 2½ years with the follwing features : simple, accurate, correct language, under "Faidah" the correct interpretation in agreement with the earlier ones, doubts removed, Fiqh and grammar discussed, keeping in front all the commentaries one is preferred with reasons, mostly dependant upon Aaloosi Baghdadi Hanafi's Roohul Ma-ani written in the middle of 13th century which gives summaries of earlier commentators and their researches in one, as well as Sufi interpretations and points of Tasawwuf.

Tafseer was written for Ulema (scholars) as well as general public.

(3). The translations of Shah Abdul Qadir sahib Rah. and Shah Rafiuddin sahib Rah. were quite sufficient but later on Sir Syed Ahmad Khan and Deputy Nazir Ahmed published translations that were misleading and wrong and contrary to earlier commentaries. He wrote a correction to their works and called it "Islahe Tarjumae Dehlvia"

(4) "Islahe Tarjumae Hairat" was written as a correction to Mirza Hairat is translation which was probably done by somebody else as Hairat knew no Arabic. At first he objected to Nazir Ahmad's translation. Later he examined his own translation which was corrected by Maulana Thanwi.

(5) "At-Taqseer fit Tafsir ". Some people wrote margins of Quran with their political ideas which was corrcted in this book.

(6) "Al-Hadi lil Hairan fi Wadi Tafsilil Bayan ". A person wrote in several volumes "Tafseelil Bayan fi Maqasidil Quran". He was from Lahore. He asked Maulana Thanwi to correct his work and he corrected in above book.

(7) " Taqrir badil Banat fi Tafsire badil Ayat " was notes on commentary written by certain ladies of Maulana Thanwi's family who read translation of Quran from him. It was never published.

(8) " Rafil Naba fi Nafil Ma " describes the commentary of the verse describing the advantages of heaven. This is in reply to a question.

(9) " Ahsanul Athath ..." is another book on three verses of Surah Baqarah.

(10) " Aamale Qurani " describes medical properties of certain verses tried by saints.

(11) " Khawase Furqani " also " Aathare Tibyani " to stop illegal Taweez Gandey and being people close to Quran and Hadith.

3. Sciences of Quran.

Discussions on this subject are to be found in his other publications, sermons, malfoozat, etc, but the following are note worthy.

(1) Sabaqul Ghayat fi Nasqsil Ayat ". This 156 pages book written in 2½ months deals with the connexions between verses and chapters of Quran from the beginning to the end of Quran. It is based on Imam Razi's Tafsire Kabir and Mufti Abul Saeed Baghdadi's (died 951 A.H.) book as in the preface. Maulana Thanwi's additions are there also as " Qalal Miskeen". This shows his Quranic interest.

In commentary Al Bayan also connexions are purposefully dealt with.

(2) " Ashraful Bayan lema fi uloomil Hadith wal Quran " is derived from several sermons by a devotee. If done in detail several parts could have been made.

(3) " Dabayilil Quran ala Masailin Na'man ". He was very much interested in Fiqh of Imamal Azam Abu Hanifah Rah. It was assigned to Mufti Mohammed Shafi Rah. to complete it who completed it in 4 volumes after his death.

Maulana Abdul Bari Sahib Rah. used to say when any Fiqh discussion took place and Maulana pointed out the Fiqh Hanafi connexion everybody was surprised for throwing light on the issue. He used to praise Mufti Sahib for writing exactly as he heard Maulana's lectures.

(4) " Tasweeril Muqattat ". This is briefly discussed in Tafseere Baidhawi. It has been simplified in Arabic and described in detail here.

(5) " Masailus Sulook ". Commentary of the verses of Quran from which tasawwuf is derived.

(6) " Taeedul Haqiqah ". As above Maulana Nadvi saw a manuscript in Bhawalpur which was expanded by Maulana.

4. Uloomul Hadith.

He was probably Hafizul Hadith as evidenced by his lectures and publications and thousands of pages in which are mentioned numerous Hadith, interpretations, solution of their difficult meanings, their points, and all lectures with references of Hadith and Hadith books, etc.

His publications on Fiqh, Fatawa, rules and regulations are all based on Hadith. References to Hadith and their reasoning in support of a claim are all evidences.

He compiled all the Hadith on Tasawwuf in full detail. This was not done by others. Abdullah binul Mubarak (deseased 181 A.H.) compiled a book " Kitabuz Zuhd War Raqaq " but this is not available. It is assumed that this would have been like Ibne Abid Dunya's work on ill effects of the world.

The traditions usually used by Sufis are weak and even wrong so the people of Hadith formed an opinion that Tasawwuf is not proven by Ahadith of the holy Prophet (Sal-am), and for centuries this objection was held true. To disprove this Imam Ibne Abi Hamzai Undulusi (died 699 A.H.) wrote Bahjatun Nufoos from Sahih Bukhari in which he pointed out towards Sulook and Tasawwuf as well. Maulana Thanwi wrote two books : Haqiqatut Tariqah and At-Tasharruf in this respect.

(1). "Haqiqatut Tariqah." This was written in 1327 A.H. In this 330 Ahadith are mentioned in Tasawwuf in ten chapters : morals, Ahwal, Ashghal, teachings, signs, virtues, habits, customs, rules, statements, reform, etc. Educated people should read it.

(2) "At-Tasharruf". This work is in four parts and discusses the Hadith from Tasawwuf and their authenticity. In Part I mostly Imam Ghazali's Ahyaul Uloom is discussed and some other sources are mentioned, written in 1341 A.H. In part II first chapter of Mathnavi Maulana Roomi and Kaleede Mathnavi according to traditions, especially from Al-Maqasidul Hasanah by Imam Sakhavi and was written in 1349 A.H. Part III and IV is from Hafiz Allama Suyuti's Jameae Sagheer, rules and regulations of Sulook. Part III is from Ahadith according to letter A and was completed in 1350 A.H. and Part IV is from B-Z and completed in Muharram 1353 A.H.

(3) "Jameul Athar". Some fanatic Ahle-Hadith objected that Imam Abu Hanifah's Fiqh has very few Hadith to support them. This is not supported by Muhaddithin and Shawafeh although Imam Mohammed's Muatta and Athar Qadhi Abu Yusuf's Al-Athar and Masnade Abi Hanifah by Khawarizni and Imam Tahavi were used to reply others. This was not adequate. So Maulana Mohammed bin Ali Zaheer Ahsan Shawq wrote "Atharus Sunan" in 2 volumes, the second volume published in 1221 A.H. Maulana Anwar Kashmiri wrote a poem in its praise. The author died and left his work imcomplete.

(4) "Ahyas Sunan". Maulana Thanwi wrote a work on Fiqh but unfortunately the manuscript was lost.

(5) "Jameul Athar". It was again revised but only upto Kibus Salah.

(6) "Tabeul Athar". This was an appendix to Jameul Athar.

(7). Revival of "Ahyaus Sunan". Maulana Mohammad Hasan sahib Sambhali was appointed to help Maulana Thanwi who worked upto Kitabul Hajj. Two volumes were published and Maulana Zafar Ahmad Thanwi was appointed to do the job.

(8) "Al-Istidrak." Worked by Maulana Zafar Ahmad Thanwi and based on Ahyaus Sunan.

(9) "Aylaus Sunan". This is the new name for Ahyaus Sunan and is a compilation of Hanafi Ahadith. It was published in 18 volumes in Arabic.

(10) "Al-Khutabul Mathoora". The sermons of the holy Prophet (Sal-am) and Khulafae Rashedin were compiled and re-arranged for mosques in Islam. This was to avoid other sermons opposed to the idea.

(11) "Khutbatul Ahkam". 50 sermons are arranged here in which Quran, Hadith, Athar were compiled in beliefs, deeds, morals etc.

(12) "Munajate Maqbool". This is a brief compilation of prayers from Quran and Hadith for the general Muslim people. This is shorter and more useful than "Hisne Haseen" and "Hizbe Azam" of Mulla Ali Qari. Now available in English translated by Maulana M. Abdullah, Ph.D.

5. Uloomul Fiqh.

He served Fiqh and Fatawa for nearly 60 years. His teacher Maulana Mohammad Yaqoob sahib Rah. asked him to write fatawa while he was still a student. He replied to thousands of Masail and wrote many fatawa in smaller volumes. His voluminious work was "Imdadul Fatawa" and its "Tatimma". He wrote "Hawadithul Fatawa on new and modern problems which can not be found in older books of fatawa.

"Bahishti Zewar", now translated in English by Mr. Saroha and Maulana M. Abdullah, Ph.D. specially for ladies, but also useful for men, gives a complete knowledge of Islam.

"Tarjeehur Rajeh". This was the practice of companions of the Prophet (Sal-am), his followers and their followers. Any mistake pointed out by others was corrected and rewritten in Fiqh.

"Fatawa Ashrafia" in 3 Volumes on Fiqh.

"Bahishti Gauhar" for men, Friday, Eidain, congregation rules and regulations.

He also wrote on Hijab (Purdah), interest, bank, cinema, film, radio and other problems, sometimes repeatedly.

6. Ilme Kalam.

Several books were written on Ilme Kalam, beliefs, monotheism and modern problems and translated by others. Islam and Scinece was a translation of Allama Jasari's "Al-Husoonul Hameedia" written in the time of Sultan Abdul Hameed Khan in Syria. This work is authentic. It has been corrected and translated in English by Maulana M. Abdullah, Ph.D. and published as "Darwin and Evolution from the Point of View of a Muslim Scientist" by Dini Book Depot, 4160 Urdu Bazar, Jama Masjid, Delhi 6, India.

"Al-Masahihul Aqliyya lil Ahkamin Naqhiyyah" in three Volumes deals with the intellectual reasoning behind Salah, Zakah (Vol.I), fasting, eidain, sadqae fitr, Qurbani, Hajj, Nikah, divorce, slavery (Vol.II), and buying and selling, dealings, hudood obligation, punishment of tomb, etc. (Vol.IV).

"Al-Intibahatul Mufeedah" useful for modern educated people. Now translated into English : The Scientific and Logical Background of Islam by M. Abdullah, Ph.D., Dini Book Depot, Delhi.

"Ashraful Jawab" is a similar reply from Sermons and malfoozat.

7. Ilme Sulook and Tasawwuf.

This is the name for the soul of Shariah in which sincerity of faith and actions of heart are discussed. Some of the earlier books by Sufis are : Risalae Qaisheria by Imam Qaisheri, Quwwatul Quloob by Abu Talib Makki, Al-Lama' by Abun Nasr bin Ali Siraj Al-Toosi, Kitabus Sidq by Abu Saeed Khazzaz, Futoohul Ghaib by Shaikh Suhrawardy, Naneetatut Talibeen by Shaikh Abdul Qadir Jeelani. Among later Sufis are books by Imam Sha'rani. In India jog was deceiving true Tasawwuf.

The real thing, sincerity in religion, asking for Allah's pleasure, coming close, deeds and morals of heart, stages (muqamat), cleanliness of heart and acquiring of virtues was forgotten. Maulana Thanwi's efforts brought it close to the original aim and objectives again and he wrote so much and said so much that darkness was removed and light brought to the subject for future generations to come.

The ignorant Sufis said that Shariah and Tariqah are two different things and this influenced the general public and even some specialists. The Maulana derived the principles of Tariqah from Quran and Hadith and wrote several books described earlier some of them are Takashuf, Masailus Sulook, Tasharruf, etc.

Especially Mathnavi Maulana Roomi, if misunderstood, could lead to trouble. The elders of the Khanqah were fond of it, particularly Haji Imdadullah sahib Rah. He used to teach special people. He asked Maulana Ahmed Hasan Kahpuri sahib Rah. to write an explanatory margin to it, which was published. It can be said that a better explanation was not written after Maulana Bahrul Uloom's explanation of the Mathnavi.

Maulana Thanwi wrote a "Kaleede Mathnavi" which deals with rules and regulations of Sulook, teachings of Tariqah, support from Quran and Hadith for the Mathnavi that even a beginner can benefit from it.

He wrote a work "Irfane Hafiz" in such a nice way that all thorns were separated from this flower. It was very succesful too.

Tarbiyyatus Slaik is a book of 1272 pages, the like of which has never been written before.

Malfoozat of the saints were written in the past. Those of Khawja Moinuddin Chishty Rah., Qutbuddin Bakhtiar Kaki Rah., Nizamuddin Dehlvi Rah., etc. but they were very short.

Maulana Thanwi's malfoozat were written in some 60 volumes and many magazines, and each one was examined by him before publication. They contain stories of saints, serious jokes, Quran and Hadith, Fiqh, Sulook, elder's stories, guidance for seekers, points of morality, self-purification, etc. These satisfy the mind and the heart both.

8. Reformations.

His reformatory books were many. He reformed children, ladies, student, men, scholars, meetings, madressas, Khanqah, customs of death and marriage, and every day life of Muslims. Any where you look, there are reformrs.

In this connexion, his sermons are very important. In the past Hazrat Abdul Qadir Jeelani's few sermons are available and that's all. Maulana Thanwi's sermons were written while they were delivered from city to city and shown to Maulana and published, Muslim's benefitted from them. These contained Islamic rules and regulations, stoppage of innovations, facts and figures, interesting topics etc.

Normally lecturers used to talk about Islamic worship, but Maulana also talked about morals, dealings, practical daily life as well in his sermon. He kept this in mind in his training of Sulook and Tariqah as well, which was forgotten for centuries.

Hayatul Muslemin (Islamic Renaissance, now published in English translation by M. Abdullah, Ph.D., Adam Publishers, Delhi) is a complete programme based on Quran and Hadith and tried several times to simplify it. He said he considers this book as a mercy of Allah for his salvation.

Other books like this are Islahur Rusoom, Safai Mamlat, Islahe ummat, Islahe Ihqilabe Ummat. They all want Muslim reform of morality, way of life, collective life and the straight path is opened which is the guidance. (Ma-athire Hakimul Ummat, Karachi).

38. Public Lectures. He used to read Khubae Mathoora first, then a verse from Quran or Hadith and then explain it for hours. Sometimes to a crowd of several thousands. Among the listeners were all sorts of people, scholars, sufis, friends and foes, special and ordinary public, English educated, judges, barristers, businessmen, office workers, city people, villagers, old, young, children. His lecture was so sweet that every body used to think he is describing my situation.

When he addressed Ulema then he would mention learned points but even the general public used to enjoy it. When he addressed Sufis he mentioned difficult facts but gradually simplified them for the general public. He used to look at the hearts of people and bring their objectives and doubts, and reply them. He used to put Shariah above the intellect and briefly and in detail, with stories, poems, etc. convey the message in the hearts of people. English educated people and innovators (Biddati) both understood him and followed his advice.

He said I do not lecture on topics proposed by others nor investigate the situation of people, but depend on Allah and begin. Allah puts in my heart what to say and I say it, hoping that the people need it. Some people call it Clairvaynce but it is not. I simply intend that I say what is useful to them and Allah knows everything. This is a blessing from Allah.

He used to say that I don't give lectures on appointed topics but what ever comes to my heart from Allah at the time I speak. You read his sermons and see how deep look he has casted in every branch of religion and reformed them and renovated them. He has very ably told the wrongs of them. For instance Western philosophy was creating atheism and bringing them away from Islamic principles. They were creating doubts about the hereafter. Muslims were oriented towards more or less in worship. Innovations and customs were included in religion. In rules of Shariah and Sunnah doubts were created.

Similarly in dealings Allah's limits were broken. For selfish reasons every Haram was made Halal and vice versa. This ruined the business life and the household life. Muslim way of life was westernized and nobility disappeared. Morals were gone. Physical pleasure ruined the life. Mutual dealings were full of hypocricy, show, deceit, and the like. He reformed these vices in his sermons. I have reminded a few things so that you examine your life and take full advantage of his reforms. More than 350 of his lectures are published and some have been written and not published as well. He said I am not responsible for publications in my name after my death.

His lectures produced the understanding of religion, firmed the beliefs, removed atheism, cleared doubts, removed devils etc. Sometimes he would say I can swear by Allah if you hold fast the rope of Allah, you will again prosper and rule the whole world. Sometimes he would say if we are confident and sure of holding to truth and Islam, we shall succeed. Concerning good morals he would say Allah's mercy is such a thing that people have left their kingdoms. Habit of a good moral is better than the world and what is in it. Sometimes he would say listen to me, preserve my lectures, may be a time will come when nobody will be there to tell you these things and these things will be sufficient for your guidance. Sometimes he would say this love of Allah you will get by going to Ahlullah (saints) and by following them. Thus follow Shariah, do recitals (Allah, Allah) and sometimes go to saints and in their absence read the books they tell you to read. You will become Allah's lover and beloved. No need to be "Mureed", just follow them which is the soul of being mureed. This is all the secret, I proclaim.

English educated people ask what is the connexion between religion and progress. They have seen non-Muslims have also witnessed for centuries Muslims were religious and they made progress. As they left their religion they went down. The companions of the Prophet (Sal-am) did not depend on their efforts but they depended on Allah's victory and mercy and this was their greatest weapon. By the pleasure of Allah and by unity you will be successful again. Muslim unity is also important.

Lets consider sins. In the first place leave all small, big sins that you can. Secondly, consider sin a sin and Haram (forbidden). Before you go to bed examine all the day's sins and repent especially those concerning income. Say Allah I am sorry. Please forgive me and help me avoid sins. This way at the time of death you will have only one day's sins unrepented from instead of months and years of sins.

There are sins of two types, one which you can leave easily and presents no problem in leaving such as wearing silk for men, shaving beard etc. The other type is difficult like Haram employment, usury, ladies and purdah, etc., leave them gradually. Every night repent from them and ask Allah's forgiveness. Even if unsuccessful, you will be sinner for a day. Repentance wipes out earlier sins. This is not a teaching of sin but of avoiding sin and an easy way for this has been made.

In one sermon he said don't be hopeless of Allah's mercy. Be sincere in your efforts and continue working He will reward you according to your hopes. Don't worry about the past and the future. If you think of past just repent again and forget about it. Don't worry about the future also. Hope for the best. Salvation takes place on small things but punishment takes place on bigger things. What if you consider a big thing as a small thing.

In one sermon he said the programme which removes the curtain from the heart includes the following : (1) reading Islamic books especially Heavenly Ornaments, (2) asking rules and regulations from scholars, (3) going to saints (ahlullah), if not then (4) reading their stories and statements (malfoozat), (5) saying Zikrullah a little bit, these will clean your heart of the vices and talk to yourself as follows : you have to leave this world one day. Death is coming. The wealth and property will leave you have. Wife and children will leave you. Allah will deal with you. If you have more good deeds you will be forgiven. If you have more bad deeds you will be sent to Hell which is unbearable. Think of your end and do something about it now. This life is very precious. After death you will say give me a chance I will do good deeds but of no use then. Therefore, consider this life worthwhile and work for your salvation now.

Some of his sermons that are based on the following topics:

1. Seerah of the Prophet (Sal-am) : An-Noor, Al-Haboor, Mooradul Farsakhi.

2. Preference of the Hereafter : Nafiul Haraj, Al-bab, Tarjeehul Akhirah.

3. Tasawwuf : Awwalul Aamal, Al-Ghadhab, Akhiral Aamal.

4. Religious Knowledge : Miftahul Khair, Talabul Ilm, Fadhlul Azeem.

5. Tabligh : Adabut Tabligh, Dawah ilallah (propagation of faith).

6. Customs : Tijarate Akhirat, Al-Baqi, Adhalul Tahiliyya.

7. Way of Life : Huqooqul Bait, Huqooqul Maashirat, Manaza'atul Hava.

8. Hidden Training : Rahatul Quloob.

9. Islamic Civilization : Takmeelul Islam, Al-Izzat, Millate Ibrahim.

10. Worship : Al-Ibadah, Khairul Hayat, Alfazul Quran.

11. Beliefs : Tariqun Najat, Shartal Imam, Atharul Ibadah.

12. Dealings : Asbabul Fitnah, Asbabul Ghaflah, Khairul

Irshad.

13. Women : Islahun Nisa, Tafseeluzikr, Al-Iffah.

14. Shariah : Al-Ittifaq, Al-Mubah, Islamut Tahqeeq.

15. Hereafter : As sooqo liahlish Shauq, Shauqil Liqa, Rajaul Liqa.

All these sermons (and others) need to be translated in Arabic and English now.

VIII. Some Special Topics.

39. Islamic Renaissance. There are 5 parts of religion. First is belief in which Muslims did not bring about a change. Some ideas reached innovation. Correction to this change has made them against true Ulema. Some modern educated people have even thought of a change in true meaning which brought them the Fatwa of Kufr (atheism). This they called prejudice. But if you are honest you will agree with the Fatwa of Kufr.

Second part is worship. Some left Salah, some left fasting. Some left Nikah and divorce rules and kept women without marriage or after divorce. This is the change have which is bad.

Remaining parts are dealings, way of life, morals where most of the changes have taken place. They thought it not religion but worldly matter and prepared their own programme of action in opposition to Allah's rules and regulations. They oppose the true Ulema. Your one surprised is what respects he is Ummati of the Prophet (Sal-am) that he makes this claim.

Muslims, what are you waiting for? Death is coming for sure but what can you do then?

This is the time about which the holy Prophet (Sal-am) said general public is like camel, you won't find anyone worthy of a ride. Otherwise his time was good.

40. Way of Life. The general public think that beliefs and worship are Islam, ulema also regard dealings as part of the religion and Mashaikh also regard morals as part of Islam but most neglected is the fifthpart way of life. This causes Muslim unity which intellectuals need to learn.

Allah says "O you who believe when you are asked to give way you give way, and when you are asked to stand up then stand up. Don't enter other people's homes without permission. How much people's comfort is considered. When eating together do not eat two dates at a time unless you asked the permission of other guests." This is a small thing but is bad manners and is therefore forbidden. One who eats raw onion or garlic stay away from the crowd. Guest may not stay too long with the host that he is tired of him.

Don't humiliate others. If somebody is eating you eat and do not withdraw your hands because may be he has to eat and also withdraws his hands. Some people don't like to accept anything in a crowd or give in a crowd. Don't embarrass them.

Once Jabir Rah. went to the Prophet's (Sal-am) house and knocked. He asked "Who is he" He said, I. He did not like it. Be precise so as other person understands. Hazrat Anas Rah. said no one was more dear to the companions than the prophet (Sal-am) but they did not stand for him, because he did not like it. Don't insist in service.

If two people are intentionally sitting together don't go and sit in between them except by permission. Don't do a thing others don't like. When sneezing the prophet (Sal-am) used to cover his nose with cloth or hand to make less noise. Don't raise your voice too much. Hazrat Jabir Rad. said when we used to come to the prophet (Sal-am) we used to sit where we found place.

According to Hazrat Abbas Rad., Hazrat Anas Rad., and Hazrat Saeed binul Musaiyb Rad. it is narrated don't sit too much near a patient except that whose sitting pleases him.

Hazrat Ibne Abbas Rad. gave the same reason for Friday bath. In the beginning of Islam most poor labourers used to work hard and perspiration smell came from their clothes, so Friday bath was made compulsory, later on it was made Sunnah. Don't wear smelly clothes. The prophet (Sal-am) rose from the bed slowly, wore his shoes quietly, opened the door quietly, and went out quietly on the right of Bara-at as Aisha Rad. was sleeping.

In Sahih Muslim, there is a Hadith, some people were guests of the prophet (Sal-am) who used to come down after Isha and lie down. The prophet (Sal-am) used to come late. He used to say salam so quietly that if people were sleep they would not get up, if they were awake they would listen and reply. Similarly don't say to someone eating or teaching which means if somebody is doing something necessary, don't attract his attention elsewhere.

Do not hurt, trouble, embarrass, worry others. The Prophet (Sal-am) forced the companion to correct behaviour if done wrong. A companion brought some gift and entered the prophet's (Sal-am) house without permission and salam. He asked him to go out and come back with permission and salam. In belief, worship if you do wrong you harm yourself which is less bad than hurting others in way of life. In Surah Furqan way of life is preceded with beliefs and Salah for some reason. Two women were described to the prophet (Sal-am). One prayed lot of Nafl but harmed her neighbours. Other did not harm her neighbours but prayed less. He called the former of hell and latter of paradise.

41. Taqlid and Ijtehad. Taqlid means we follow the Hadith of the holy Prophet (Sal-am) on the commentary given by Imam al-Azam Abu Hanifah because he is the top in the knowledge of Hadith and Fiqh which nobody can deny. The whole Muslim nation recognizes him as Faqiul Ummah. How can this be "shirk" in prophethood? The object is Hadith and Imam Abu Hanifah is a source in its understanding. One who claims to act on Hadith without a source follows his own (poor) intellect. One who follows an Imam follows the understanding of his intellect and piety. Surely the followers of the companions and their followers were better in knowledge of Hadith, piety, fear of Allah, religious mindedness than others. Whose following the Hadith is more perfect?

They say we present a Hadith and you don't follow it because Abu Hanifah says to the contrary. This shows you don't follow the Hadith but Imam sahib. The reply is this. Where there is difference of opinion, there are different Hadith. If we don't follow your Hadith, we follow another Hadith, which you don't follow. The same objection applies to you also. If depends on a person's taste to consider a Hadith superior to another. One is superior according to you and another is superior according to Imam sahib and we follow the taste of Imam sahib. How can you say we follow Hadith and you don't? This is prejudice. If following Hadith means following all the Hadith then you also don't do that because of differences, and we are followers of Hadith as well.

Another thing, Masails from Quran and Hadith are few, most of them are from Ijtehad. Ahle Hadith also give Fatwa from Hanafi books (or that of another Imam). Then in most Masail you are also Muqallid. In other words to do Taqlid is alright, to take its name is shirk and illegal. If they say we use Ahadith all the time, we will ask them questions in dealings, marriage, nusookh, shafa, rahin and ask them to reply from Sahih Hadith. They can't. Either they will follow an Imam or say there is no reply. The latter is wrong because Allah has said to have completed His religion. Then they have to follow Qiyas. A Qiyas which is contrary to principles of Shariah, without foundation in Hadith is illegal. This is not that Qiyas mentined in Hadith.

42. Wisdom of Durood Sharif. The Prophet (Sal-am) has been very kind to his Ummah (followers). He propagated the religion, thought of ways of improvement, prayed all night long for them, felt sorry for their ills. He was kind and source of kindness as well. There is no one like him. We should pray for him. On occasions we must pray for him. This is what good nature demands of us.

He was beloved of Allah and Allah wants to bless him. If you make this request it will surely be granted and it will be a source of closeness for the beggar.

Durood Sharif is also an indication of servitude to Allah, that he also needs His blessings.

Durood is a special blessing for the Prophet (Sal-am) in which no other is partner. Don't look at wealth of others, look at this special feature of the Prophet. Nobody shares these words as Syedna wa Maulana in Durood.

Some people have strong influence of Tauheed (monotheism). Somebody saw the Prophet (Sal-am) in his dream and said please forgive me the love of Allah does not keep me close to you. He said love of Allah is also my love as I am the source. Similar thing happened to an Ansari lady while awake with the Prophet (Sal-am). The more Durood Sharif is recited, the closer you get to Allah.

Don't recite Durood Sharif to tell the buyer niceness of the clothes, or night watch-man for keeping awake, or a big person is coming and to tell others to stand up. These are Makroohe Tahremi or Haram. It should be done according to Shrariah.

43. Visiting the Prophet's Tomb (Sal-am).

According to Hazrat Ibne Umar (in Daraqtani) the Prophet (Sal-am) said one who visits my tomb is essential on him my intercession. In Tibrani the Prophet (Sal-am) said one who came to visit me, without any other need, it is his right that I be his intercessor on the Day of Judgement.

I have written a "salam" for this occasion in Urdu which is given below:

سلام — از ڈاکٹر محمد عبداللہ طالب

زائر و عرض کرو تم مرے آقا کو سلام
میری جانب سے میرے قبلہ و کعبہ کو سلام
حسن جسکا ہے مرے حسن تصور سے حسیں
والہانہ مرا اس حسن سراپا کو سلام
جنکی تعلیم سے پاتے ہیں شفا دل کے مریض
پیکر علم و عمل، رشک مسیحا کو سلام
جس طرف سے بھی وہ گذرے ہیں جہاں بھی جب بھی
اس گلی کوچے کو وادی بطحا کو سلام
سب کے احسان و انعام ہیں اس عاصی پر
جملہ احباب شہنشاہ مدینہ کو سلام
میرے محبوب نے دیکھا ہے محبت سے جنھیں
سلسلے وار بزرگوں کو ائمہ کو سلام
قرب صوری بھی عطا کر میرے اللہ مجھے
میری جاں اہل حرم اہل مدینہ کو سلام
کیا عجب ہے کہ بہت جلد ہی طالب پہنچے
ہدیہ قلب لئے جان تمنا کو سلام
(وصل اللہ علی النبی)
حسن اخلاق نبی کا یہ ہے اک گلدستہ
کیا عجب اس کی مہک باغ جناں تک پہنچے۔
عارفی آستاں جنکا ہے مقام محمود
کاش یہ ہدیہ اخلاص وہاں تک پہنچے۔

44. Vision of the Prophet (Sal-am) in Dream. It is a great consolation to see the Prophet (Sal-am) in dream for someone who has not seem him in life. This is a gift from Allah, you don't earn it. But reciting Durood Sharif and following the Sunnah help. Thousands have did with this wish. Seeing without obedience is not much. Not seeing with obedience is great as in the case of Ovais Qarni Rah.

According to Abu Hurairah Rah., who saw me in dreams actually saw me, because satan can not appear in my shape (Bukhari, Muslim).

According to Abu Qatadah Rad. the Prophet (Sal-am) said whosoever saw me in dreams actually saw me (Bukhari, Muslim). If it is different from what we know of the prophet (Sal-am) then it is the fault of the mirror (man dreaming) or it is a likening of the face and it need not to be exact (Razni, Noori).

According to Abu Hurairah Rah. who would see me in dream will also see me in life and satan can not be my face Bukhari, Muslim). He will die on faith. He will be closer to the Prophet (Sal-am) in the meaning. If the Prophet (Sal-am) said something which is according to Shariah, it is emphatic on him to do so, if not then fault of the dreamer.

45. Night of Qadr and Ascension.

An important event in Ramadhan is right of Qadr in the odd nights of the last ten days or at least in 27th night at least. Pray, read Quran, do Zikrullah, read prayers from Munajate Maqbool (now translated into English). Pray some part of the night, if not all of it.

There is difference of opinion in moon. Could this mean two Qadr nights, on 27 and both. No, off course not- there is no day and night in Heaven. This division is below.

Concerning ascension (Mercy) Allah has described one night. He took Mohammed (Sal-am) from Mecca to Jerusalem and does not say about Heavens. This is because there is no day and night on Heaven. This does not mean He did not take him up

You pray Qadr according to date of your city and don't worry. Allah will reward you on your dates. This is not difficult for Allah.

46. Gradual Reform.

Hazrat Wahab Rah. asked Hazrat Jabir about Qabeela Bani

Thaqif. He said they say we will not pay Zakah and will not fight Jihad. The Prophet (Sal-am) when these become Muslims they will pay Zakah and have Jihad. No need to argue with them. Accept the "Bait" as they say now. (Abu Daood). Gradual reform is the practice of some saints as supported by above.

47. "Waswasa" is the work of the Devil.

Hazrat Ibne Abbas Rad. says we said to the Prophet (Sal-am) sometimes we have such evil ideas (Waswasa) that we prefer to burn and die than say it. He said congratulations it is confined to this much (Abu Daood). Do not be sad over evil ideas. Be happy, Satan can't see you glad, he will quit. It saves from bigger apparent and hidden sins. When you are happy your attention is diverted from evil ideas and they will be gone.

48. Propagation of faith and deed is Essential.

In one sermon the Mujaddid said why don't you consider evil the bad deeds? Why do you make good (records with them)? The prophet (Sal-am)said whoever sees evil deeds let him remove it by his hands, or tongue or his heart. Why don't we put a stop to them. You are as happy with them as with those with perfect faith. As if Allah has allowed you to waive sins and ignore them.

Ordering towards good in certain of Allah's orders. Special ordering is on everyone. And public ordering is for Ulema and for others to provide their expenses for the sermon. Parents, husband, masters should order their younger ones.

Stopping the evil is obligatory for obligatory deeds and preferred for preferred deeds. If you are not powerful enough then consider it bad from your heart. Otherwise with tongue, otherwise with hand. Rules of Tableegh (propagation) are as follows:

1. You must have full knowledge of Shariah about the deeds you are to say.

2. Be sincere. Consider the person advised superior to yourself at the moment.

3. Be kind.

4. Do not wait for the results. Consider Tableegh as the objective.

5. Sermon should be general. Do not address anyone by name.

6. The lecturer may teach the orders of Allah alone.

It is sad that we don't preach our friends, wife and children when we see something wrong about them. Allah has ordered these in the Quran.

49. Nature of "Tawassul"

Tawassul means closeness. Closeness comes from Shaikh in general so obtain his Waseelah. Waseelah means praying to Allah that you may accept my prayers because of this or that saint. Ibne Taymyya opposes it for dead persons. We don't follow him. Stay away from extremes.

IX. Table Talks or "Malfoozat"

The Mujaddids Malfoozat are contained in some 60 volumes. A selection of Malfoozat from "Ma-Atherie Hakimal Ummat" follows:-

(1) Shariah and Tariqah. Follow the Shariah in its entirety. Some rules are apparent as Salah, fasting, Hajj, Zakah etc. and Nikah (marriage), divorce, rights of husbands and wives, swearing, Kaffarah, etc., and dealings such as solicitorship, witness, will etc. and like Salam, talking, food, guests, hosts, etc. - these are called Fiqh.

And some rules are hidden such as fearing Allah, loving Allah, remembering Allah, loss of worldly love, be pleased with Allah and His destiny, be not greedy, pray with open mind, be sincere, do not be proud, control anger etc. - these are called Sulook.

(2) Relationship (Nisbat) and Stage (Muqam). One, excess of Zikr very little time is wasted. Two, worship all the time, no sin done. These are what is required and for this all the struggles and cures are invented. In this gradually develop stage which becomes like a physical nature. Though rarely it is opposed, but with the effort the opposition is gone. This is beyond control but depends upon means that are within limits. And this perfection is relationship. On this relationship comes another relationship from Allah i.e. closeness and pleasure. A combination of the two is really stage and relationship.

(3) Signs of relationship With Allah. One limited thing is travel towards Allah. Then comes the umlimited things travel in Allah. Travel towards Allah is cure of diseases, Zikr and recital or cleaning and enlightening rules are known, self is reformed, bad morals are gone, good morals and Zikr enlighten the heart. Good deeds are habit. Deeds and worship are easy. Relationship and stage is achieved. Travel towards Allah is finished. Now travel in Allah begins and knowledge of Allah increases. This is unlimited.

(4) It is Blessing that I did not achieve anything. Maulana Gangohi Rah. says after life's effort you find out you have achieved nothing, then everything has been achieved. If stages are achieved and you think you have not travelled this humility, servitude is everything.

(5) Object and Way. Some things are to be done and some things are to be avoided. Mistakes occur in both. A Shaikh understands it and tells their cure. Following the prescription is the task of the seeker. And they help with Zikr and recital. This explains the object and the way.

This is big deed to think that you have no deeds.

The nature of Tasawwuf is knowledge with deeds and the deeds are the same as told by the holy Prophet (Sal-am) and which is within your control. Everything else is extra. If you get them and Shaikh approves of them then O.K. Thank Allah for the source. If not given or lost after being given then don't worry. Its no good for you, no matter what.

(6) Rights and Duties. Don't neglect your rights and duties. This is sin, which is robbery for the object.

(7) Greed is wrong in the Way. Somebody wants to cry, somebody wants miracles, somebody thinks paradise is the object and wants it but remember greed is wrong in the way. Serve Allah, your Master and be context. Follow His orders and commandments.

(8) Hadith. If you have right of a servant ask him to forgive you or pay him. for Allah's right Salah is missed, so repent and start reading them, similarly fasting. One who repents is free of sins without any spots.

(9) Nature of Struggle. This is opposing your self. If you want to talk, keep quiet, but also fulfill missing rights of others. Pleasure of Allah is great and it will be in paradise so we ask for the source also. Pleasure is greater than paradise and its source is also very great, Zikrullah. The purpose of all deeds is Zikrullah.

Desires are of three kinds (1) bad ones or against shariah. Oppose them all the time (2) good ones like praying, fasting, clothes, food (essential). Don't oppose them, do them. (3) Permissible ones, seduce them. Consult your Shaikh. Opposing them will reduce bad ones too. It follows that when you fall in love with your wife, it will not be opposed. It is the right one.

(10) Perfection is not in your control and you are not responsible for that. Seeking and trying is in your control, so do it. If you are still imperfect, you will be counted among the perfect ones. The hardship incurred will raise your ranks as in Hadith. One who reads Quran and finds it hard for him. There will be two rewards.

(11) Work even if it is haphazard. To work, start work and keep on doing it. Haphazardness is even better than not doing it at all. Start work and inform the Shaikh. Insha Allah you will have strength and desire to work.

(12) Reform of Natural Weakness. Natural weakness don't change but action is in your control. By acting it becomes weak and opposition helps.

(13) Intellectual Faith. These are the things to be there always. Other situation change. When they are there it is good. When they are gone no harm done.

(14) Blessings of following the Sunnah. In Haji sahib's series it is by "Jazb" (absorption). If you follow the beloved of Allah you will also become beloved of Allah and absorption follows. Quran says, say if you love Allah then follow me, Allah will love you.

(15) To be proud of a blessing is pride but to consider it a gift from Allah and keep in mind your incompetence is thankfulness.

(16) Pride and too much Humility. Pride develops among some workers. They pray and hate those who don't and consider them inferior. Because of pride many a worshippers have failed. Examples are Satan and Balam Baaur.

Too much humility means we pray and disregard our prayers. Don't say we pray and there is no peace (Khusoo) or we do zikrullah and there is no lightening. Say had you not allowed us, we could not have prayed or did Zikr.

(17) Shaikh should also Reform Himself. Mashaikh should appoint someone to advice to him in personal matters as they look on all sides of an issue. If you don't find one then consult your youngers in this respect. Non-Shaikh should always consult a Shaikh.

(18) Struggle Beyond your control. Tayammum is a substitute for ablution and carries the same reward. Similarly struggle beyond your control carry the same reward and even more. Continue working and pray that they are gone as prayer is Sunnah. When they are gone thank Allah in obligation and continue working even now.

(19) Cure for Worry and Trouble. Make yourself ready for the trouble and worry to continue. Doo'dua' (prayer) for cure. Think of the reward in the hereafter. This is the best cure. You want to continue trying and you don't want the cure.

(20) Concerning Grief. Natural grief is short timed but earned grief is longer which you think about and this thinking is within your control. Natural grief is beyond your control and consoling is for three days in Shariah. This grief causes sympathy and comes from crying of the heart and mercy of the heart which is useful in religion as well as the world. Allah wants to give you that mercy by this method.

(21) Perfect Sulook. Leave the things beyond your control and do what is within means. This is full or half Sulook at least. Nothing is easier than Tasawwuf.

(22) Sins Ruin you. Sins are very dangerous and must be avoided. This is very sad moment when he is unfaithful to Allah and is dark at heart. You can't do a good thing after some sins. His youngers revolt against him as well as animals become untrained. A small sin leads to bigger sins and that to atheism. Repent when you sin, say Allahumagh firli and proceed.

(23) Visiting the Prophet (Sal-am) in Dreams. Recitals for this purpose are no good. More likely is following the Sunnah of the Prophet (sal-am) and reading Durood Sharif.

(24) Worry. Pay attention to Allah, not to worries. They will disappear.

(25) Sick person. Sick person should not start recital until fully recovered. But he can help it in mind whichever is easy.

(26) In the Company of Shaikh. The advantages are:

1. Malfoozat are summary of researches and facts. He knows his condition by them.

2. Learn lessons from their behaviour.

3. Desire for deeds increase.

4. Learn his mistakes.

5. Finds out his capabilities:. It is therefore better than reading books.

(27) How Does the Company of Shaikh work? They repeat the good things. You will miss once or twice but for how long ? Reform will come eventually. When you sit there and develop relationship, they will pray for you. Their prayer is a sign of Allah's mercy upon you. The good time has come. Your deeds are increased by their blessing.

(28) "Tawassul" This means that O Allah! This person is a saint and loving saints you have promised mercy. Al-Mar-o maa man ahabb: a man will be with one he loves. Thus I ask you that mercy.

In Tawassul he shows his love for saints and asks for mercy and reward. Hadith is full of support for this love.

(29) Worship and Frieds. Someone may not like talking to friends, he wants to finish the talk and pray Salah and do Zikr and remember Allah, he is good and his relationship with friends is also good. If on the after hand, he wants to find Salah quickly and talk to friends, omits recitals, only Fardh, no Sunnah salah then he is bad and his relationship with friends is also bad.

(30) Respect for Allah's Name. When Allah's name is taken say Jalla Jalalahu or Taala, once in a meeting at least, preferably every time if possible. Similarly recite Durood Sharif once or more after the Prophet's name (Sal-am).

(31) Jannat or Paradise. A believer will be given such a kingdom in paradise thay you will see it a great blessing and a great kingdom. I have prepared such a blessing for my good servants which the eye has not seen, the ear has not heard, nor has it entered the heart of man to conceive of them. This is by His mercy and result of magnificant deeds. Mercy of Allah is close to those who do good deeds.

(32) Angels at the time of death. You will see them then. They give glad tidings to the believer and he is pleased to meet Allah. To the atheist they warn and he is afraid of death.

(33) Reading Qur'an. Imagine that Allah has asked him to read Qur'an to Him. How nicely will you read then? Think that He wants you to read quickly, how quickly will you read them?

(34) Reward for Ladies. If ladies have patience, they can have more reward than men. This is because small deeds of weak people increase in rank with the deeds of strong people.

(35) Worship. Neither consider your worship such as to be proud of nor consider them useless.

(36) Make Shariah your leader even you get the world or not, you get the position or not, you hear praise or rebuke. A man does not become bad by others calling him bad or good by others calling him good. If you are good in the sight of Allah, the whole world calls you bad, atheist, it doesn't matter. If you are bad in the sight of Allah, if the whole world calls you saint, Qutb it doesn't matter.

(37) Disease and Reward. With excuse of disease you get full reward. If a person can't pray standing and prays sitting he gets full reward. If a man can not make ablution and does tyammum (dry ablution) he gets full reward. What is the order of Shariah at a time is complete and perfect for that occasion.

(38) Waswasa at the time of death is meaningless. Why do we people worry about devil so much. If your intellect is there you will oppose him and not follow him at all. If not, then you are excused by Allah's mercy. A pious Faqih is 1000 times stronger than a mere worshipper on the devil.

(39) Sunnah and Travel. You can leave Sunnah except Fajr when travelling but if you are safe then pray.

(40) A Sad Event should be Talked About. Do not totally control a sad event as this hurts the person concerned. In the beginning talk about it to a religious friend within the limits of Shariah as the Prophet (sal-am) wept on the death of his son Ibrahim Red. and said we are sad to lose you O Ibrahim.

(41) Permanent Pleasure after Death. One's loneliness is finished after death and a Muslim's soul goes out to meet the Prophet (sal-am) and meet his relatives. There will be happiness all the time, the like of which has not been seen in the world.

(42) "Shirk" (Polytheism). If you believe that a saint can do a thing whether Allah wants it or not and does not require Allah's permission, this is "shirk" (polytheism) and Kufr (Atheism). If you believe that the saint requires Allah's permission but it is granted when he wants it is a big lie and small shirk.

(43) Leaving Customs. Leave customs, follow Sunnah even if rebuked as if you love Allah you should not worry. If the worldly brotherhood says you bad, the religious brotherhood of Ulema, Mashaikh and good Muslims will call you good. Allah will be pleased with you and His Prophet (sal-am) will be pleased with you.

(44) Flower Bouquet on Tombs of Saints. It is in bad taste if they are not smelling them. If they are smelling, then they will be pleased with the flowers and perfumes of paradise rather than your flowers so don`t do that.

(45) If you can`t fulfill the Right of others. If this is because of an excuse, then don't worry, Allah will fulfill the rights and duties of others. The person will not be held responsible for them.

(46) Ablution. You have ablution unless you can swear its broken. Consider your clothes clean unless you are sure of dirt on them. Pray sitting or lying if you can't stand. If you can't wash the clothes or have a friend wash them for you, then pray in the same clothes.

(47). Friends and Relatives. If your friends and relatives don't love you, be happy that Allah has removed others from your heart.

(48). Your Condition and Fear. It is a delicate thing worth fearing don't be proud of yourself or hate somebody. May be you become worst later on and he improves.

(49). Allah's Anger. When Allah is angry you see a wrong thing as right and wrong superstition appear as facts.

(50). Repentance. The general public may repent and feel sorry for leaving out a good deed. But a "salik" may not do it too much. Just repent, feel sorry and do not worry about the past as to why I did wrong as this becomes a curtain. Cry out, repent and proceed with your work.

(51). Leader of People. Man should try to his best, if still fails be patient, do not leave efforts and deeds, we are not responsible for the results. If a sick man is dying and you are hopeless but you still treat him with doctor. Similar is the case of the nation if you are a leader or doctor you will not leave it for want of results but will continue to cure it.

(52). Deputy of the Prophet (Sal-am). A Prophet's (Sal-am) perfect deputy will be a person with full likeness of the Prophet (Sal-am) though details will be different, clean dealings and purity, checking and control of followers, way of life simple, kindness on His creatures, etc. If not these, then he would not be a perfect deputy.

(53). Worries. Those troubles that increase the worry are due to sins. And those which increase the relationship with Allah, move His pleasure then that is for increasing ranks and test for Allah's love, and is only apparently trouble.

(54). Humility. Events happen when all the means fail and the servants says in humility, O Allah" this work will be completed if you complete it alone. I have failed.

(55). Lessening Trouble. The following will help:

1. Remember your sins.

2. It is a test of faith, whether I have faith or not.

3. Remember the rewards of troubles.

4. Servitude takes over and claim, pride disappears. Your true nature is revealed that you should not make any big claims.

5. Allah's greatness is revealed and your humility is made obvious.

(56). Crying is not contrary to Patience. Patience becomes easy by crying as it removes the pressure.

(57). Repentance. Shaikh Akbar Rah. has written cry on a sin and repent. Don't try to remember it again. The object is to remember Allah not sins. The purpose of remembering sins is to remember Allah. When you have done that don't remember sin. If it comes by itself then repent again and read Inna lillahi wa inna ilaihe rajeoon. (We belong to Allah and to Him we have to return) just as when a trouble is remembered again.

(58). Easy Death. If you want easy death then love Allah and obey Him. Most people naturally fear death. This is no sin. But try to avoid it at the time of death. Try to develop love of meeting Allah. This way you will not feel any pain and this comes by excess of Zikr, obedience and avoiding sin.

(59). Salah of Repentance. If a sin happens, pray two Raka-ah Salah of repentance, then repent. The advantages are:

1. Good things remove bad things.

2. After Salah you will have presence of mind which is required for repentance.

3. Sin is forgiven by repentance and this two Raka-ah is extra bonus. The Satan will regret it and stop sins.

(60). Interest and Misery. Taking interest increases misery until he can not spend on his body.

(61). Stop Extravagance. Before spending think if it is harmful, if no harm done don't spend: Otherwise consult someone suitable and follow his advice.

(62). Repaying Loan. Hazrat Haji sahib Rah. used to tell for this purpose after night prayer 1100 times Ya Mughni with Durood Sharif 11 times in the beginning and end.

(63). Perfume. On Friday and Eidain using perfume that we look good to Allah is worship. He will be rewarded.

(64). Salah and Zikr. If you pray with the intention of servitude, do Zikr with the intention of developing love of Allah it will have its effect, even if you are much interested or less interested or have "Waswasa" or not.

(65). Worship and Friends. Worship is not only praying but also talking to friends and to be kind to them.

(66). Azan and Zikr. If call to prayer (Azan) takes place during your Zikr, reply to the call and postpone the Zikr. This will enlighten the Zikr.

(67). Zikr and Struggle. Pleasure in Zikr is a blessing, if not there is another blessing, struggle. Struggle is not pleasant but more useful.

(68). Self-Reform. Everyone should look after himself and self reform. This is the disease in general public and specialists that they are after reforming others but do not care about themselves. This is foolish.

(69). Zikr and Ablution. It is better to make Wudu before Zikr but if your ablution breaks easily then make Tyammum. Do not touch Quran or pray with this Tyammum.

(70). Worries and Paradise. We are born for worries. It will end in paradise. Forget about its ending now.

(71). Hadith on Jihad. When because of weakness a believer heart begins to tremble in Jihad and he continues the Jihad his sins are forgiven just like a dry date branch sheds its leaves. You are forgiven for something beyond your control.

(72). Cure of Bad Manners. They can all be cured by thinking and by waiting. Ask if it is permissible in Shariah. Don't hurry to do it.

(73). Hadith on Beggars. If a beggar sticks to you and you have three times given your excuse, then tell him harshly to move on. There is a limit for good manners and you are not required to be kind after this limit.

(74). Heart. Heart's longing and desire are bad and punishable, those that are with intention. Otherwise "Waswasa" of adultery, Kufr and Shirk are all harmless.

(75). Useless Talk. A salik should get up and leave a meeting where this is the talk. Don't think of breaking his heart. Think of breaking your religion. If you cannot leave, then start a permissible talk there and then. Useless talk leads to sin and puts off the light of the heart and the desire to good deeds.

(76). Back-biting. There is a wonderful cure. Inform the person concerned of your evil action and after a short while you will stop back-biting.

(77). Lies. Do not quote somebody without enquiry or research. If you are a habitual liar tell the people this thing before you say something. This will stop lying.

(78). Giving for Allah. Who gave for Allah and stopped giving for Allah, he completed his faith. Generosity should be for Allah. Misery should be for Allah. Then they are alright, otherwise both are bad. These morals are natural, their proper use makes them good or bad.

(79). Pride. It is part of polytheism and I hate it more than adultery, alcohol etc. Allah is great and when you think so, you are a polytheist. Greatness is special for Allah. If unintentionally you think of someone inferior to you and yourself more perfect it is forgiveable. But if in your talking and behaviour you say it is pride. The cure is to please him and show respect to him.

(80). Showing off. Experts say don't try to hide your deeds. One who does that has his eyes on Allah's creatures not on Allah. He should think it is a gift from Allah and say I could not have done them without His help. He won't be proud and won't be showing off to people.

(81). When Angry. Do the following :

1. I am a sinner, if Allah gets angry with me where will I go.

2. If I forgive him, Allah will forgive me.

3. Get busy in somthing, Read a book

4. Change places.

5. Recite "Aoozo Billah" a lot

6. Drink (cold) water.

7. Make abulution.

(82). Beggars. They are our helpers. They carry our charity into the hereafter. So don`t hate them. Be kind to them.

(83). Rewards. Deeds are rewards themselves. So why do you ask for rewards on rewards, we could not have worshipped Allah without Allah`s help and rewards.

(84). Wealth. Being wealthy is not contrary to religion. To make into source of sin is. Some are better off wealthy. Allah knows who will be close to them by wealth and who by poverty, and he treats them accordingly.

(85). Being a Guest. Observe the following rules.

1. Inform the host of your likes and dislikes before hand. Do not say on the dinner table.

2. Wash the hands of the host first and bring food to him first.

3. Let the guest feel free to eat what he wants.

4. Host should start eating first.

5. The host should not stare the guests.

(86). Dead Saint. There is difference of opinion whether they listen to you. It is not proven that they pray for you. You can do "dua" by their "tawassul".

(87). Berzakh. After death, the soul gets another body (although there is some connexion left with the original body). If a man is eaten by a lion or burnt in a fine, the events of the here after (Barzakh only) will take place with the second body.

(88). Self and "Waswasa". Self gives much trouble if you don`t know the facts. Waswasa is the trouble of satan and self. If they come let them come. You ignore them and continue your business with Allah. You will succed.

(89). Nisbat or Relationship with Allah. Leave sins, adopt being alone and talk less you will soon have Nisbat, even if you do Zikr less.

(90). Love of Allah. Follow these points:

1. Do deeds to develop love of Allah.

2. Do Zikrullah with presnece of mind.

3. Join the company of saints (ahlullah).

(91). Evil Eye. Some people think if you see a woman once the desirve will go away. This is wrong. The desirve sits deep in the heart. Thinking of her and enjoying in imagination is worst. According to Hadith, evil eye is arrow among the arrows of satan.

(92). Etiquette and Tasawwuf. A sufi should keep in mind the apparent and the hidden manners. Present your self to people with politeness, humility and good manners. And hidden etiquette is to be with Allah in all your time, events and dealings. This is what intellect tells us also.

(93). Big Mistakes in Tariqah. These are:

1. Not accepting your mistakes and faults.

2. Raising objection to your shaikh.

(94). Companinship of saints is dignatory. A Molvi sahib was talking of what is suitable and what is unsuitable. The Mujadded said I regard and give Fatwa that companionship of saints (ahlulah) is oblagatory in this day and age as this the only way of protection of faith. No magic can play after that.

(95). Light in the Heart. This in on the face of one who prays. One who does not pray his apparant and hidden are both blackened. Blackening of heart is this that he no longer hates usery, lies, keeping someone's land, dressing up like Christians, etc.

(96). Don't worry for things beyond your Control. This state of mind and heart that your fancy if you had gotten it you would have become proud and it is not good for you. This dryness and "waswasa" that you dislike is no harm done. In deeds under your control do not disobey Allah no matter what and don't worry for deeds beyond your control. Be humble.

(97). "Waswasa". A salik should not hate himself for waswasa. It is not his fault. The devil is putting them in your heart. You will be rewarded because you dislike them.

(98). Cure for Diseases of the self. When Allah wants the good of someone finds him incapable of struggle within his means he cures the diseases of self by giving him a sickness or appoints an enemy for him who hurts him (someone believes him, someone disbelives him) which on patience raises his standard towards Allah. Certainly with present difficulties, these are easy things to come. He receives position but love of position is gone.

(99). Salah and worries when any accident come to the prophet (Sal-am), he used to rush to the prayers so as to feel pleasure by talking to Allah. This lessens the grief. Try it.

(100). "Dua" (prayer). Ask every one to say a word of prayer for you. You don't know on whose tungue is acceptance and mercy for you.

(101). Sadness and Progress. There is more progress by sadness then by struggles.

(102). Death on Friday. One who dies on Friday, the angel dose not ask him for accounts untill the day of judgement. Don't delay burial for Friday prayer Hurry up.

(103). Signs of a Shaikh. He should be:

1. Follower of Shariah in full.

2. Increase in the love of Allah and decrease in worldly love happens in his company.

3. Listens to diseases and sins carefully, prescribes cure for them which improve him.

4. By following him your condition improves day by day.

(104). Worldly Goods. In general reduce your worldly goods. Keep what is essential. This is obligatory. One that is not essential but keeping that gives you comfort. You can keep that also if without that there is difficulty. One that pleases you but is not necessary, you can keep that also. One that you keep to be called superior to someone, for show, for becoming great in other's eyes, don't keep them. Ladies who wear silk, jewelleries, precious clothes are alright, but not for show. That is sin.

(105). Giving Loan. When you give loan write it down and make two witnesses, this is His kindness that He does not want loss of our money. How would He like to destroy our lives or sent us to Hell unless and until you enter there willingly. What will Allah gain to punish you if you are thankful and faithful.

(106). No Bismillah on Haram Food. Don't do Zikrullah where not suitable. It is Kufr to say Bismillah on Haram food.

(107). Grief and Light of Soul. Grief causes trouble to self but soul is enlightened, because this is unintentional struggle. In Hadith there is good news for grief and trouble but you are required to pray for them. Pray and be patient.

(108). Happiness of Soul. Happiness does not depend upon the present state of affair of a rich man but on the soul and this comes from relationship with Allah: With religion even if the world is less, it is pleasant. If you see a worldly person happy it is either due to his share of religious life or a hoax. If you investigate his inner life you will find troubles and worries and punishment. Allah deprives of happiness those Muslims who leave their religion.

(109). Haram Food. Don't eat Haram (illegal) food nor give it to your children or animals. Put it somewhere the animals can come and eat it. Children become naughty by this food.

(110). Haram Food and Medicine. In the beginning among Hanafiyya it was not allowed. Later on it was allowed for medicinal purpose.

(111). Hadith on Eyes. On the Day of Judgement every eye shall be crying except:

1. Which did not have evil look.

2. Which guarded in the way of Allah.

3. Which wept by the fear of Allah and tears came out even a fly's head worth.

(112). Purpose of Intellect. Ask your intellect to trust Allah, obey Allah and follow the revelation (Wahy).

(113). Night of Qadr. One who prays Isha and Fajr with congregation will recieve Qadr blessing too. According to Ibnul Musayqib one who reads Isha with congregation will recieve Qadr rewards too. How nice.

(114). Insulting Ulema (scholars). Those who insult and rebukē Ulema their face is turned away from Kabah. You can see it.

(115). Burial near Saints. It is desirable and was desirable among good Muslims in the past also. When air of mercy comes from Allah to a saint it does reach those nearby as well.

(116). You and Sin. A believer fears his sins even small. An atheist does not even if it is great and does not repent unlike the believer. Great or small sin, repent right away.

(117). Struggle and the Way. Think, contemplate, do "dua", try, try before Allah, be humble, remove pride then the way will be cleared for Allah. In "dua" (prayer) Allah likes you to ask Him by insisting.

(118). Preference and Permission. Some people always go for preference, it is not good. If needed follow permission. Allah loves His permission as well as His preferences..

(119). Perfect Faith. For this you should be a Muslim all the way, like Quran and Hadith, act on Mustahab (preferred) as on obligatories of Islam.

(120). Greed. It is the source of all the troubles. This is mother of diseases. It causes fighting, court cases, etc. By greed one takes over other person's property.

Adultery is greed for pleasure. Theft is greed. Pride is greed. Pride is the root of all bad manners.

(121). Ladies and Zikrullah. Ladies should do Zikrullah besides Salah and fasting. This keeps their heart in touch with Allah and makes prayers easy. They should do Zikrullah as it effects them more because of Purdah.

(122). Murder. If you don't speak a Muslim for a year, then you have the sin of his murder on you (Hadith).

(123). Action Deeds. According to Hadith our deeds are presented to Allah on Monday and Thursday, to Prophets and parents on Friday. Parents means ancestors all the way. They are pleased by the good deeds and their faces light up, and they are saddened by sins and bad deeds. So protect them from your bad deeds.

(124). Saints (Ahlullah). In the company of saints at least you begin to notice your mistakes and sins. This is a good start.

(125). Tahajjud or Night Prayer. Hadith : Allah is very pleased with someone who leaves his wife and warm bed and prays Tahajjud.

(126). Women. Hadith : You stay away from Muslim ladies, your women will remain safe and pious. You respect your father, your children will respect you.

(127). Respect your wives. One, because they are confined to you as a wife and this is not right to hurt them. Second, because of religion, you are Muslim they are Muslim, you work for Islam, they work for Islam. No body knows who is greater. So don't humiliate them. Allah accepts broken hearted deeds and raises their ranks. They are free from "waswasa" of other men, unlikemen.

(129). Repentance. This will bring forth all the needs, religions and worldly both.

(130). Haram Employment. Try to find a Halal employment, then leave the Haram job. Don't leave it without finding one. In the mean time do Taubah, Istighfar (Repentance) every day. You will be saved from all of trouble this way.

(131). Good Deed and Sin. Hadith : Ayesha (R.A.A) don't disregard any small good deeds as every deed has the ability of forgiveness. Don't ignore a sin (big or small) as it can lead to punishment.

(132). Permission to Enter. Take permission to enter, knock or call for it, before you enter your house. Your ladies may be unpresentable or a stranger lady may be there from the neighbourhood.

(133). Giving of Reward. By giving the giver does not lose his share. The recievers all get the reward as well. One teacher can teach many students at a time and his knowledge is not deminished. A lamp can light up many lamps without any loss of its own (134). Saving Muslims. Hadith : Protect others from your tongue and hands. If praying and a man is falling in a well, break the Salah and save him.

(135). The Mujaddid said I wanted to write a book in which to mension all the masails in which Muslims are involved and if it is permissible in any of the four madhahibs(Hanafi, Shafai, Maleki, Hambali) to allow them. I asked Maulana Gangohi Rah. and he allowed me to write it. I could not write this book, but some masails have come in "Hawadithul Fatawa" which I have written. Maulana Gangohi Rah. was strong Hanafi but he was even more kinder to the Muslim public.

FOREWORD

Hazrat Maulana Ashraf Ali Thanwy (R.A.) was indeed a very prolific writer on all aspects and topics of Islam. Among a very large section of the Muslims of the Indian subcontinent, he is looked upon as a mujaddid—a renovator of the deen, who had tremendous influence upon the lives and thoughts of millions.

This book Khutubaatul Ahkaam is an anthology of collected Friday sermons written and compiled by him and in very much in use among Indian, Pakistani, Bangladeshi, Afghani and Burmese Muslims, as well as Muslims in the Western World. This translation is a humble effort to put over in English what Hazrat Thanwy endeavours to convey in a very eloquent and classical Arabic of a very high quality.

It is hoped that many Imams of Mosques will be able to derive adequate benefit from this humble work Insha Allah. May Allah continue to fill Hazrat Thanwy's Qabr with noor and blessings. Ameen

THE EXCELLENCE OF ACQUIRING KNOWLEDGE AND THE OBLIGATORY DUTY OF ACQUIRING IT

All praises be to Allah, the Most Noble One. He Who had created man and granted honour to him, and taught him the means of expression through speech and taught man that which he did not know. Glory be to Him, whose favours are uncountable, not by the tongue nor by the pen. We bear witness that there is none worthy of worship except Allah alone, Who was no partner or associate and we bear witness that Sayeduna Muhammad ﷺ is His servant and messenger, who was granted the ability of comprehensive speech, excellent wisdom and excellent attributes and character. May Allah's choicest blessings descend upon him, his family and his companions, who are as shining stars upon the path of his ummat. After this, O muslims, know that the acquisition of the necessary knowledge of the laws of Islam is among the major obligations upon every muslim. Hence, every muslim is commanded to acquire it and to teach it to others. In this regard Rasulullah ﷺ is reported to have said:

1. "Convey (my teachings to others) from me even if it be a mere verse." (Bukhary)
2. He also said: "Whosoever walks in a path wherein he seeks to acquire knowledge, for him will Allah make easy the path leading towards paradise." (Muslim)
3. And Rasulullah ﷺ also said: 'Whosoever Allah wishes to favour with His bounty, to him He grants the deep understanding of the deen." (Bukhary, Muslim)
4. He also said: "Verily the Ulama are the heirs of the prophets. The prophets did not leave behind wealth to be inherited. They only left knowledge to be inherited. So whoever takes it has taken a major share of goodness."
   (Ahmad, Tirmithi, Abu Dawood, Ibn Majah, Daarmy)
5. And he said: "To seek knowledge is a duty encumbent upon every Muslim." (Ibn Majah)

اَلْخُطْبَةُ الْاُوْلٰى فِیْ فَضْلِ الْعِلْمِ وَوُجُوْبِهٖ

بِسْمِ اللّٰهِ الرَّحْمٰنِ الرَّحِيْمِ

اَلْحَمْدُ لِلّٰهِ الْاَكْرَمِ ۔ الَّذِیْ خَلَقَ الْاِنْسَانَ وَكَرَّمَ ۔ وَعَلَّمَهٗ مِنَ الْبَيَانِ مَالَمْ يَعْلَمْ ۔ فَسُبْحَانَ الَّذِیْ لَا يُحْصٰى امْتِنَانُهٗ بِاللِّسَانِ وَلَا بِالْقَلَمِ ۔ وَنَشْهَدُ اَنْ لَّآ اِلٰهَ اِلَّا اللّٰهُ وَحْدَهٗ لَا شَرِيْكَ لَهٗ وَنَشْهَدُ اَنَّ سَيِّدَنَا وَمَوْلَانَا مُحَمَّدًا عَبْدُهٗ وَرَسُوْلُهُ الَّذِیْ اُوْتِیَ جَوَامِعَ الْكَلِمِ ۔ وَكَرَائِمَ الْحِكَمِ ۔ وَمَكَارِمَ الشِّيَمِ ۔ صَلَّى اللّٰهُ عَلَيْهِ وَسَلَّمَ وَعَلٰى اٰلِهٖ وَاَصْحَابِهٖ نُجُوْمِ الطَّرِيْقِ الْاَمَمِ ۔ اَمَّا بَعْدُ فَاِنَّ عِلْمَ الشَّرَائِعِ وَالْاَحْكَامِ ۔ هُوَ اَعْظَمُ فَرَائِضِ الْاِسْلَامِ ۔ وَمِنْ ثَمَّ اُمِرَ بِهٖ وَحُضَّ عَلَيْهِ تَعْلِيْمًا وَّتَعَلُّمًا

فَقَدْ قَالَ رَسُوْلُ اللّٰهِ صَلَّى اللّٰهُ عَلَيْهِ وَسَلَّمَ بَلِّغُوْا عَنِّیْ وَلَوْ اٰيَةً ۔

وَقَالَ عَلَيْهِ الصَّلٰوةُ وَالسَّلَامُ مَنْ سَلَكَ طَرِيْقًا يَلْتَمِسُ فِيْهِ عِلْمًا سَهَّلَ اللّٰهُ لَهٗ بِهٖ طَرِيْقًا اِلَى الْجَنَّةِ ۔

وَقَالَ عَلَيْهِ الصَّلٰوةُ وَالسَّلَامُ مَنْ يُّرِدِ اللّٰهُ بِهٖ خَيْرًا يُّفَقِّهْهُ فِی الدِّيْنِ ۔

وَقَالَ عَلَيْهِ الصَّلٰوةُ وَالسَّلَامُ اِنَّ الْعُلَمَآءَ وَرَثَةُ الْاَنْبِيَآءِ ۔ وَاِنَّ الْاَنْبِيَآءَ لَمْ يُوَرِّثُوْا دِيْنَارًا وَّلَا دِرْهَمًا ۔ وَاِنَّمَا وَرَّثُوا الْعِلْمَ فَمَنْ اَخَذَهٗ اَخَذَ بِحَظٍّ وَّافِرٍ ۔

وَقَالَ عَلَيْهِ الصَّلٰوةُ وَالسَّلَامُ طَلَبُ الْعِلْمِ فَرِيْضَةٌ عَلٰى كُلِّ مُسْلِمٍ

6. Rasulullah ﷺ also said: "When anyone to whom knowledge has been granted is asked about it and refuses to answer, then on the day of qiyamat he shall be made to be garlanded with a garland of fire."

7. And Rasulullah ﷺ said: "Whosoever seeks knowledge through which he seeks the pleasure of Allah and uses that knowledge with the aim of acquiring some worldly needs, such a person will not even smell the fragrance of paradise on the day of qiyamah." (Ahmad, Abu Dawood, Ibn Majah)

8. And Rasulullah ﷺ said: "Learn the laws pertaining to inheritance and the Quran and teach it to people for verily I shall be taken away from this world." (Tirmithi)

I seek refuge in Allah from the accursed Shaytaan.

Allah says in the Quran: "Is he who worships Allah earnestly during the hours of the night, prostrating himself before Him or standing in worship, and takes heed of the hereafter, while placing his hope in the mercy of the Lord. Is this person like him who does not? Say: "Are those endowed with knowledge the equal of those without knowledge? It is only those endowed with understanding, who receive admonition." (Surah 34)

٧ وَقَالَ عَلَيْهِ الصَّلٰوةُ وَالسَّلَامُ مَنْ تَعَلَّمَ عِلْمًا مِّمَّا يُبْتَغٰى بِهٖ وَجْهُ اللّٰهِ لَا يَتَعَلَّمُهٗ اِلَّا لِيُصِيْبَ بِهٖ عَرَضًا مِّنَ الدُّنْيَا لَمْ يَجِدْ عَرْفَ الْجَنَّةِ يَوْمَ الْقِيَامَةِ يَعْنِىْ رِيْحَهَا ۔

٨ وَقَالَ عَلَيْهِ الصَّلٰوةُ وَالسَّلَامُ تَعَلَّمُوا الْفَرَائِضَ وَالْقُرْاٰنَ وَعَلِّمُوا النَّاسَ فَاِنِّىْ مَقْبُوْضٌ ۔

اَعُوْذُ بِاللّٰهِ مِنَ الشَّيْطٰنِ الرَّجِيْمِ ۔

اَمَّنْ هُوَ قَانِتٌ اٰنَآءَ الَّيْلِ سَاجِدًا وَّقَآئِمًا يَّحْذَرُ الْاٰخِرَةَ وَيَرْجُوْا رَحْمَةَ رَبِّهٖ قُلْ هَلْ يَسْتَوِى الَّذِيْنَ يَعْلَمُوْنَ وَالَّذِيْنَ لَا يَعْلَمُوْنَ اِنَّمَا يَتَذَكَّرُ اُولُوا الْاَلْبَابِ ○

CORRECTING OF BELIEFS

All praises be to Allah, the All-Knower, the Aware, Who brought to perfection the Universal system of nature without any helper. Glory be to Allah, Whose wisdom is overwhelming and His knowledge is great and Whose favours are extended to everything, small or big.We bear witness that there is none worthy of worship except Allah alone, without any partner or associate in creation, not even to the extent of the creation of a spot on a date or the skin covering it. And we bear witness that Sayeduna Muhammad ﷺ is Allah's servant and messenger, who guided us aright through an enlightened book, and who invited us towards Allah through warnings and glad tidings. May Allah's choicest blessings be upon him and upon his offspring and his companion for as long as the stars shall continue to travel in their orbits. After this, O brothers, know that the synopsis of the beliefs of the Ahlis sunnah wal jamaah is contained in the two kalimahs of Shahaadah and these kalimahs are one of the fundamental principles of Islam.

The meaning of the first kalimah is that Allah, the Most Exalted is the creator of this world. He is the One, the Unique, the Eternal, the Ever living, the Powerful, the All-knowing, the Hearer, the All-seeing, the Thankful, the Intender, the Recorder of all fate, Who is fully aware of everything. No one and nothing is like Him and nothing lies outside His knowledge or His power. He is the Creator and the Granter of sustenance, the Granter of life and of death. To Him belongs the most beautiful names and He is the Mighty and the Wise.

And the meaning of the second part of the kalimah is that Muhammad ﷺ is his servant and messenger and that he is most truthful in all the news and information that he brought and also in the laws. It also means that the Quran, which he brought is the Word of Allah. All the books revealed to previous prophets, all the previous prophets and the angels of Allah are the truth and that the ascension of Rasulullah ﷺ to the heavens is the truth and so is the miracles of the owliyaa.

اَلْخُطْبَةُ الثَّانِيَةُ فِيْ تَصْحِيْحِ الْعَقَائِدِ

بِسْمِ اللّٰهِ الرَّحْمٰنِ الرَّحِيْمِ

اَلْحَمْدُ لِلّٰهِ الْعَلِيْمِ الْخَبِيْرِ ۔ اَلْمُتْقِنِ نِظَامَ الْعَالَمِ بِلَا مُعِيْنٍ وَّنَصِيْرٍ ۔ سُبْحَانَ اللّٰهِ الَّذِيْ حِكْمَتُهٗ بَالِغَةٌ وَّعِلْمُهٗ عَزِيْزٌ ۔ وَنِعَمُهٗ وَاصِلَةٌ اِلٰى كُلِّ صَغِيْرٍ وَّكَبِيْرٍ ۔ وَنَشْهَدُ اَنْ لَّآ اِلٰهَ اِلَّا اللّٰهُ وَحْدَهٗ لَا شَرِيْكَ لَهٗ فِيْ نَقِيْرٍ وَّلَا قِطْمِيْرٍ ۔ وَنَشْهَدُ اَنَّ سَيِّدَنَا وَمَوْلَانَا مُحَمَّدًا عَبْدُهٗ وَرَسُوْلُهُ الَّذِيْ هَدَانَا بِكِتَابٍ مُّنِيْرٍ ۔ وَدَعَانَآ اِلَى اللّٰهِ بِالْاِنْذَارِ وَالتَّبْشِيْرِ ۔ صَلَّى اللّٰهُ عَلَيْهِ وَعَلٰٓى اٰلِهٖ وَصَحْبِهٖ مَا دَامَتِ الْكَوَاكِبُ تَسِيْرُ ۔ اَمَّا بَعْدُ فَاِنَّ تَرْجَمَةَ عَقِيْدَةِ اَهْلِ السُّنَّةِ فِيْ كَلِمَتَيِ الشَّهَادَةِ الَّتِيْ هِيَ اِحْدٰى مَبَانِي الْاِسْلَامِ

And all the companions of Rasulullah ﷺ are men of justice and the most excellent of them are those four rightly—guided Califs in the same manner that they succeeded each other to the office of khilafat...And the questioning in the grave by the angels is also true. The rising from the grave is true and so also is the weighing of the deeds of men on the scales on the day of qiyaamah. The Book of deeds is true and calling of men to account on the day of qiyamah is true. And so also the arrival of the successful ones at the howz is true and as well as their having to pass over the sirat. The intercession of Rasulullah ﷺ on behalf of the sinners of his ummat is also true. The fact that the righteous ones will see Allah is also true. The existence of paradise and of hell is also true. These two places will be everlasting and will never perish and neither will their inmates perish.

I seek refuge in Allah from the accursed Shaytaan.

Allah says: "O you who believe, believe in Allah and His Messenger ﷺ and the Book which He revealed upon His prophet and the Books which He revealed before them. And whosoever disbelieves in Allah, His angels, His prophets and the day of qiyaamah, he has verily gone far astray."

CONCERNING ACQUIRING COMPLETE PURITY AND CLEANLINESS

All praises be to Allah, Who acts graciously towards His servants and has commanded them that they worship Him in a state of complete cleanliness, and spreads over their hearts His lights and His grace that it may be a cleanser for their inner selves. And we bear witness that there is no one worthy of worship except Allah alone, without any partner or associate. And we bear witness that Sayeduna Muhammad ﷺ is His servant and messenger, who covered the corners of this world with the light of guidance. May Allah's choicest blessings descend upon him, his noble offspring, his righteous companions. Such a blessing that will on the great day of fear save us. And such a blessing that will erect a shield between us and every clamity.

1. Verily Rasulullah ﷺ said: "Cleanliness is half of one's Imaan". (Muslim)

2. He also said: "Verily my followers will be called on the day of Qiyaamat while their faces and feet will be shining with the signs of the effect of wudoo. So whoever amongst you has the ability to increase his shine (and lengthen it), let him do so." (Bukhary, Muslim)

3. He also said: "The adornments on the body of a Muslim will reach as far as the water of wudoo reached." He also said: "The key to paradise is salaah and the key to the salaah is wudoo." (Ahmad)

4. Rasulullah ﷺ also warned that whoever leaves a spot the size of a single hair unclean without washing it, will suffer such and such afflictions in hell-fire."

5. And while passing by two graves once Rasulullah ﷺ informed the companions that the inmates of those graves were in torment "and they were not being punished for something very big. One of them was not very careful against the droplets of urine he was passing and the other one used to go about spreading stories about people." (Muslim)

REGARDING PERFORMING OF SALAAH

All praises be to Allah Who showers His servants with His bounties And Who causes the enlightenment of His deen and its obligations to settle in their hearts. And all glory to be Him, how great is His authority! And powerful is His sovereignty. How perfect His grace and how all-encompassing His bounties and favours.We bear witness that there is no one worthy of worship except Allah alone, without partner or associate and we bear witness that Sayeduna Muhammad ﷺ is His servant and messenger.? May the choicest blessings of Allah descend upon him, and his offspring, and his companions, who are the key-men towards guidance and the shining lamps in the depths of darkness.

O muslims, Verily the salaah is the very foundation of deen. It is a stronghold of faith, and the most important acts of worship whereby to draw nearer to Allah and it is also the best among the acts of obedience towards Allah.

1. Rasulullah ﷺ has said: "Islam is built upon five pillars: i) the bearing of witness that there is no god except Allah and that Muhammad ﷺ is His servant and messenger, ii) performing Salaah, iii) the paying of zakaah, iv) performing of haj, and v) the fast of Ramadaan." (Bukhary, Muslim)

2. He also said: "Allah has made five salaahs compulsory upon you. Whosoever performs proper ablution for them and performs them punctually, properly performing the rukoo' and with proper devotion and sincerity, will have a covenant from Allah that He will forgive them. And whosoever does not so so, has no such covenant. If Allah so wishes, He may forgive them and if He wishes, He may punish them."
(Ahmad, Abu Dawood)

THE GIVING OF ZAKAAH

All praises is due to Allah, Who grants good fortune and misfortune, Who causes death and gives life, Who causes laughter and causes one to cry, Who originates and creates and destroys, Who grants poverty and riches. He is the One Who causes harm to come to anyone and causes gain and benefit to others. And He is the One Who chooses some of His servants for comfortable conditions and riches And then He has made the institutions of zakaah one of the principles of the deen and one of its fundamentals. And He has explained that through His grace those who desire to purify themselves through giving zakaah. And those who desire to cleanse their wealth do so by giving zakaah.

I bear witness that there is none worthy of worship except Allah alone without any partner or associate and I bear witness that Sayeduna Muhammad ﷺ is Allah's servant and messenger, the chosen one, the leader of all mankind, the sun of hidaayah. May Allah's choicest blessings be on him, his family and his companions, those who are especially blessed with the special qualities of knowledge and piety.

O muslims, know that Allah has declared zakaah to be one of the fundamentals of Islam and He has mentioned it jointly with salaah, which is the most important of these fundamentals. And so He says: "And perform the salaah and give zakaah."

1. And Rasulullah ﷺ has said: "Islam is founded upon five principles (firstly) the declaration "that there is none worthy of worship except Allah and that Muhammad ﷺ is His messenger, (secondly) the establishment of the institution of salaah, (thirdly) the giving of zakaah, (fourthly) to perform Haj and (fifthly) fasting the month of Ramadaan." And Rasulullah ﷺ has sounded a severe warning to anyone who is negligent in the performance of any of these.

2. Rasulullah ﷺ also said: "Whomsoever Allah has given wealth and he fails to give the zakaah due on that wealth, then on the day of qiyaamat that wealth will become a huge poisonous snake with two black spots, which will wrap itself around his neck and then get hold of him by its jaws and say to him: "I am your wealth, I am your treasure." Then Rasulullah ﷺ recited this verse: "And those who acts miserly with the bounties which Allah had given them should not think that it is good for them. No, it will be worse for them. On the day of qiyaamat that which they with held will be twisted around their necks." (3:180)

3. Rasulullah ﷺ once told a man: "You should take out zakaah from your possessions because it is a purity, which purifies you and cause good relations to come about between yourself and your close relatives and you will know the rights of the poor, the neighbour and the beggar." (Targheeb)

I seek refuge in Allah from the accursed Shaytaan.

HOLDING FIRMLY UNTO THE QUR'AN AND ITS TEACHINGS

All praises be to Allah, Who has favoured His servants by sending to them His Messenger Muhammad ﷺ and has also favoured them by sending to them His revealed Book, whereby He has opened the way towards reflection for men of intellect, through what is contained in it of stories and information. And through this book the road towards the correct way of life became clear and so also the straight path became manifest through what it contains of rules and regulations. And distinguishes between what is permissible and what is not. We bear witness that there is no other deity worth of worship except Allah alone without any partner or associate and we bear witness that Sayeduna Muhammad ﷺ is the servant and messenger of Allah, the one on whom was revealed the Furquan so that it may be a warner for the whole world. May Allah's choicest blessings be upon him, his family and all his companions, who were admonished by the Qur'an and admonished others with it.

1. After this, O muslims Rasulullah ﷺ has said: "The best of you is he who learns the Quran and then teaches it (to others)."

2. Rasulullah ﷺ also said: "A person who had been devoted to reciting the Quran will be told: Recite the Qur'an and be raised in rank thereby, and read as you had been used to read it in the world, because your rank in the hereafter will be determined by the last verse that you recite."

   (Ahmad, Tirmithi, Nasai, Abu Dawood)

3. Rasulullah ﷺ also said: "That person in whose heart there is no portion of the Qur'an is like a ruined house."

   (Tirmithi, Daarmy)

THE REMEMBRANCE OF ALLAH AND DUAA

All praises are due to Allah Whose compassion is all inclusive and Whose mercy covers all and Who rewards His servants for their remembrance of Him with His remembrance. And He says: "Remember Me and I will remember you." And He has ordered them and encourages them to ask of Him. And He says: "Ask of Me and I will answer you." And thus He has made the obedient ones and the sinners, and the good hearted ones and the wicked ones to desire a granting of their needs and their hopes as He tells them in his further statement: "Verily I am nearby and I answer the call of him who begs of Me."

We bear witness that there is no others being worthy of worship except Allah alone without any partner or associate and we bear witness that Sayeduna Muhammad ﷺ is Allah's servant and messenger, the leader of the prophets. May Allah's choicest blessings descend upon him, and his family and his companions, who were the best of the chosen ones.Know O, brothers and sisters! Verily the remembrance of Allah and to beg of Him the fulfilment of our needs through du'aa is the best forms of worship, which can be delivered with the tongue, second only to the recitation of the Quran.

1. Verily Rasulullah ﷺ has said: "Whenever a group of people sit together remembering Allah through zikrullah, the angels surround their gathering and Allah's mercy covers them while tranquility descends upon them and Allah remembers them in the assembly of those who are with Him."

2. And Rasulullah ﷺ said: "The example of that person who remembers Allah and the one who does not is as the example of a living person and a dead person." (Bukhary, Muslim)

3. Rasulullah ﷺ also said: "Du'aa is the very essence of worship." (Tirmithi, Ibn Majah)

PERFORMING VOLUNTARY ACTS OF RIGHTEOUSNESS BY DAY AND BY NIGHT

All praise is due to Allah abundantly for all His favours and blessings And we remember Him in such a way that leaves no sign of pride in our hearts and no aversion. And we thank Allah, Who has made the night and the day to follow each other so that the person who wishes may remember Him and express gratitude towards Him.

And we bear witness that there is no one worthy of worship except Allah alone without any partner or associate and we bear witness that Sayeduna Muhammad ﷺ is the servant and messenger of Allah whom He has sent with the truth as a bringer of good news and a warner to all mankind. May Allah's choicest blessings descend upon him, his family and noble companions who strove their utmost in the worship of Allah in the mornings and the evenings until such time that each one of them became a guide and a shining lamp in the darkness.

1. O brothers and sisters, verily Rasulullah ﷺ has said: "Verily Allah says: My servant will continue to draw nearer to Me through voluntary deeds of righteousness until such time that I will start loving him."

2. Rasulullah ﷺ said: "I exhort you towards standing up in voluntary prayers by night, for this is the practice of the righteous ones before you and is for you a means of drawing near to your Lord. It is also an atonement for your sins and a strengthening against sins." (Tirmithi)

3. He also said: "O servant of Allah, be not like so -and- so, who used to stand in worship by night but has now left it." (Bukhary, Muslim)

MODERATION IN EATING AND DRINKING

All praise to Allah, Who has excellently planned the affairs of this Universe, and He created these heavens and the earth. And He sends down sweet waters from the clouds, and through this water causes grains and plants to flourish, And He is the one Who decrees the sustenance of His creatures and their nourishment needs. And he has preserved the strength of living being through edibles and He has assisted them in the performance of deeds of obedience and deeds of righteousness through the eating of good foods.

We bear witness that there is none worthy of worship except Allah alone, without any partner or associate and we bear witness that Sayeduna Muhammad ﷺ is the servant and messenger of Allah, who was assisted in his mission through shining miracles. May Allah's choicest blessings descend upon him, his family and his companions, such blessings that will continue to descend throughout the coming of time and will continue to be doubled with the passing of every hour.

1. O brothers and sisters, abstinence in this world does not mean making haraam upon yourself the permissible things and also does not mean the destruction of halaal wealth. No true abstinence means to have more faith and reliance on that which is with Allah than on that which is with you.

2. Rasulullah ﷺ says: "Jibreel ﷺ has inspired into my heart that no soul shall die until such time that it had received its full decreed sustenance. So be fearful of Allah and be moderate in your search after sustenance and do not allow the delay in the arrival of sustenance to cause you to resort to sinful means to acquire it. Verily the bounties of Allah are only obtained through obedience towards His ways.

ON THE RIGHTS OF MARRIAGE

All praise to Allah, Who created man from water and then granted him blood relationships and relationships through marriage. And He has granted man and all creatures the inclination (towards the opposite sex), which forces them towards procreation and through that system has overseen the continuation of their species. And He has honoured the question of their lineage and granted respect to it. And He has prohibited fornication and adultery and greatly emphasized its ugliness through rebuke and censure. And He has greatly encouraged the entering into marriage, by praising it as being an act of merit and commanded it.

We bear witness that there is no one worthy of worship except Allah alone, without any partner or associate and we bear witness that Sayeduna Muhammad ﷺ is His servant and messenger, whom he has sent as a warner and a bringer of glad tidings. May Allah's choicest blessings and greetings descend upon him and his offspring and his companions in such abundance and in uncountable number.

Verily Allah says: "{O Muhammad ﷺ} We have indeed sent prophets before you and granted to them wives and offspring."

1. Rasulullah ﷺ said: "O young men (of Islam), whosoever of you possesses the means to get married, let him get married. This is the best way of safeguarding your gazes and a great protection for your private parts. And whosoever does not possess the means let him fast, for that will be a protection for him." (Bukhary, Muslim)

2. Rasulullah ﷺ also said: "The marriage that holds the greatest blessings is the one in which the expenses are least."(Baihaqi)

ON EARNING A LIVING AND EMPLOYMENT

All praises are due to Allah. We praise Him the praise of one who believes in the One-ness of Allah, Such a belief that destroys the worship of anyone besides Him. And we glorify Him, in such a glorification whereby we emphatically declare that everything besides Allah is useless, and not to be feared. We thank Him for having raised the heavens as a canopy above His servants and for having laid down the earth as a carpet and a bedding for them. And He has made the night to follow the day and has made the night as a covering and has created the day as a means of earning sustenance.We bear witness that there is no other being worthy of worship except Allah alone, without any partner or associate. And we bear witness that our master Muhammad ﷺ is Allah's servant and messenger, from whose fountain the believers will go away having completely quenched their thirst after having arrived there thirsty for a drink. May Allah's choicest blessings be upon him, his family and his companions, who did not leave aside any effort or energy for the sake of helping the deen of Islam.

1. O muslims, Rasulullah ﷺ has said: "Verily the acquisition of halaal earnings is a compulsory duty upon every muslim after the other compulsory duties." (Baihaqi)

2. Rasulullah ﷺ also said: "None of you has ever eaten a better meal than that which he earned with his hands. (Bukhary)

3. Rasulullah ﷺ also said: "The honest and trustworthy trader and merchant shall be raised up with the prophets, the truthful ones, and the martyrs." (Tirmithi, Daarmy, Ibn Majah)

4. Rasulullah ﷺ also said: "Nabi Moosa عليه السلام hired himself out in employment for a period of 8 to 10 years for the sake of keeping his private parts chaste and for acquiring food and for stomach." (Ahmad, Ibn Majah)

اَلْحَمْدُ لِلّٰهِ نَحْمَدُهٗ حَمْدَ مُوَحِّدٍ يَتَحَقَّقُ فِي التَّوْحِيْدِ مَا سِوَى الْوَاحِدِ الْحَقِّ وَيَتَلَاشٰى وَنُمَجِّدُ تَمْجِيْدَ مَنْ يُّصَرِّحُ بِاَنَّ كُلَّ شَيْءٍ مَّا سِوَى اللّٰهِ بَاطِلٌ وَّلَا يَتَحَاشٰى وَنَشْكُرُهٗ اِذْ رَفَعَ السَّمَآءَ لِعِبَادِهٖ سَقْفًا مَّبْنِيًّا وَّمَهَّدَ الْاَرْضَ بِسَاطًا لَّهُمْ وَفِرَاشًا وَكَوَّرَ اللَّيْلَ عَلَى النَّهَارِ فَجَعَلَ اللَّيْلَ لِبَاسًا وَّجَعَلَ النَّهَارَ مَعَاشًا وَنَشْهَدُ اَنْ لَّآ اِلٰهَ اِلَّا اللّٰهُ وَحْدَهٗ لَا شَرِيْكَ لَهٗ وَنَشْهَدُ اَنَّ سَيِّدَنَا وَمَوْلَانَا مُحَمَّدًا عَبْدُهٗ وَرَسُوْلُهُ الَّذِيْ يَصُدُّ الْمُؤْمِنُوْنَ عَنْ حَوْضِهٖ رِوَآءً بَعْدَ وُرُوْدِهِمْ عَلَيْهِ عِطَاشًا

صَلَّى اللّٰهُ عَلَيْهِ وَعَلٰٓى اٰلِهٖ وَاَصْحَابِهِ الَّذِيْنَ لَمْ يَدَّعُوْا فِيْ نُصْرَةِ دِيْنِهٖ تَشَمُّرًا وَّاِنْكِمَاشًا وَسَلَّمَ تَسْلِيْمًا كَثِيْرًا

اَمَّا بَعْدُ فَقَدْ قَالَ رَسُوْلُ اللّٰهِ صَلَّى اللّٰهُ عَلَيْهِ وَسَلَّمَ طَلَبُ كَسْبِ الْحَلَالِ فَرِيْضَةٌ بَعْدَ الْفَرِيْضَةِ

وَقَالَ عَلَيْهِ الصَّلٰوةُ وَالسَّلَامُ مَا اَكَلَ اَحَدٌ طَعَامًا قَطُّ خَيْرًا مِّنْ اَنْ يَّاْكُلَ مِنْ عَمَلِ يَدَيْهِ

وَقَالَ عَلَيْهِ الصَّلٰوةُ وَالسَّلَامُ التَّاجِرُ الصَّدُوْقُ الْاَمِيْنُ مَعَ النَّبِيِّيْنَ وَالصِّدِّيْقِيْنَ وَالشُّهَدَآءِ

5. Rasulullah ﷺ also told a person to go and cut wood and to sell it and told him: "that is better for you than that you should appear on the day of qiyaamat with your face scarred due to begging." (Abu Dawood, Ibn Majah)

Yes it is permissible for that person who is strong and self sufficient to leave aside the earning of a livelihood on condition that he does not neglect any of his responsibilities.

It has been reported that there used to be two brothers during the time of Rasulullah ﷺ. One of them used to present himself to the presence of Rasulullah ﷺ at all times while the other one used to be busy in his profession, earning a living. This second brother once complained to Rasulullah ﷺ about his brother to which Rasulullah ﷺ said in reply: "Perhaps you are receiving your sustenance through the acts committed by him."

I seek refuge in Allah from Shaytaan the rejected one.

Allah says in the Quran: "And when the Friday prayer has been performed, then spread forth in the land, seeking Allah's bounty. And remember Allah abundantly that you may be successful."

ON ABSTAINING FROM EARNING HARAAM EARNINGS

All praises to Allah, Who has created man from a sticky clay and then formed man in the best form and with the perfect nature. Thereafter man was nourished with pure milk that was palatable, produced from between excreta and blood (in the bodies of cattle) and yet is like cold water. Allah then protected man by what He granted him of pure riziq as a protection against weakness and exhaustion. And He then commanded him to always look for permissible sustenance. We bear witness that there is none worthy of worship except Allah alone, without any partner or associate. And we bear witness that Sayeduna Muhammad ﷺ is Allah's chosen servant and messenger, the one who guides us from going astray. May Allah's choicest blessings descend upon him, his offspring and his companions, who were the best of offspring and the best of companions.

1. Thereafter, O muslims, Rasulullah ﷺ said: "Verily Allah has prohibited the sale of liquor, the bodies of dead animals (who died of their own accord), swine and idols." (Bukhary, Muslim)

2. Rasulullah ﷺ also said: "The traders and merchants will be brought forth on the day of qiyaamat as evildoers, except those who feared Allah, worked righteousness and were trustworthy." (Tirmithi, Ibn Majah, Daarmy, Baihaqi)

3. Rasulullah ﷺ has cursed the person who takes interest, the one who gives interest, the one who writes down the transaction in which interest is involved and the witnesses to the contract." (Muslim)

CONCERNING THE RIGHTS DUE TO OTHERS

All praises are due to Allah, Who has overwhelmed the chosen ones from among his servants with His grace and favours. And He has caused love and brotherhood to come to exist between their hearts and through that has caused them to become brothers and sisters, through His grace. And He has removed from their hearts all malice and thereby caused them to be friends and confidants in this world and in the hereafter they will be even closer friends and mates.

We bear witness that there is none worthy of worship except Allah alone, without any partner or associate and we bear witness that Sayeduna Muhammad ﷺ is His servant and messenger. May Allah's choicest blessings be upon him and his offspring and his companions all those who followed his path in word and deed and in actions of justice and righteousness.

O muslims, know that to observe the rights of others, the ordinary ones as well as the special ones among them is one of the greatest deeds whereby one draws near to Allah. And the careful consideration of these rights is something which purifies all brotherhood and friendship from all impurities. And Allah and His Rasul has encouraged us towards that.

Allah says: "Do not kill your children for fear of poverty."

And Allah says: "And to women are due rights similar to the rights due upon them." And Allah says: "And Allah orders...that you be kind towards parents and to the next of kind and towards near neighbours, companions, travellers and to those slaves whom your right hand possesses."

1. Rasulullah ﷺ said: "On every Muslim there are six rights due towards another Muslim: to visit him when he is sick, to attend his funeral when he dies, to answer his invitation when he invites him, to greet him when he meets him, when he sneezes and says Alhamdu-lillah, he replies "May Allah have mercy on you," and to sincerely protect his interests when he is absent." (Nasai)

ON PREFERRING SOLITUDE TO THE COMPANY OF AN EVIL COMPANION

All praise be to Allah Who has granted the chosen ones from among his creation the great favour by directing their attentions towards true amiable relations with Him. And He granted tranquility to their souls through their secret and intimate conversation with Him and by His showering upon them His grace. So much so that those from whose thoughts the veils have been removed have preferred solitude and to become detached from the world and its beings. And so they have become estranged from familiarity with men even though those men be of their closest and nearest relatives.

We bear witness that there is no other being worthy of worship than Allah alone, without any partner or associate and we bear witness that Sayeduna Muhammad ﷺ is Allah's servant and messenger, the leader of the prophets and the chosen one from among His creation. May Allah's choicest blessings and salutations continue to descend upon him, his offspring and his companions, the leaders among mankind. O muslims, the scholars of Islam hold different opinions as to which of the following, being secluded from men on the one hand and regarding mixing with them is most preferred. The truth of the matter is that the reply differs according to the difference in conditions around us in times of peace and upheavals, and also according to the strong or weak attitudes of the persons involved and according to the companions one keeps with their different states of piety and harmfulness.

1. Rasulullah ﷺ has said: While describing the evil situations that will arise one day. The sahabah then questioned him as to what would be his instructions at that time, He said: "(At that time) be attached to your homes (thereby avoiding mixing with people, except in cases of necessity)."

(Jam-ul Fawaaid, Abu Dawood, Tirmithi)

CONCERNING TRAVEL FOR SPECIAL PURPOSES

All praises are due to Allah Who has opened the mind's eyes of His friends through wisdom and various lessons learnt. And He has especially directed their energies towards observing His creation while being at home and on a journey and has blessed them with them taking lessons from what the eye sees. And we bear witness that there is no other being worthy of worship except Allah alone, without any partner or associate and we bear witness that Sayeduna Muhammad ﷺ is Allah's servant and messenger, the chosen one from among mankind. May Allah's choicest blessings and salutations descend upon him, his offspring and his companions. All those who follow his character and his pattern of life.

O muslims, verily Allah and the shariah has given permission for travelling and had ordered that it be undertaken if there is a need calling for it, which is obligatory or permissible. And the Shariah has laid down certain rules and also mention certain virtues of it.

In this regard Allah says: And whosoever leaves his house on a hijrat journey towards Allah and then death overtakes him, his reward shall be with Allah. "Verily Allah is Most Forgiving, Merciful."

Allah also says: "So whosoever of you is sick or on a journey, let him fast a number of other days at another time."

And Allah says: "And if you are sick or on a journey or one of you comes from having answered the call of nature or has been in contact with a woman, and you find no water, then take for yourself clean sand as purification (tayammum).

1. And Rasulullah ﷺ said: "Verily Allah revealed to me that whosoever sets forth in a path to seek knowledge for him I will ease the path towards paradise." (Baihaqi)

ON WITH-HOLDING ONESELF FROM UNLAWFUL SINGING AND LISTENING TO IT

All praises are due to Allah Who has prohibited us from places of amusement which pulls us towards sin and towards the forbidden acts.

We bear witness that there is no other being worthy of worship except Allah alone, without any partner or associate and we bear witness that Sayeduna Muhammad ﷺ is Allah's servant and messenger who has cleansed us from evils pertaining to pride and fame and has also saved us from temptations and calamities.

May Allah's peace and blessings descend upon him and his family and his companions by whom we seek perfection for ourselves and through whom we are justly proud. May these salutations be without number and unto eternity.

Verily there shall be no blame attached to these research scholars and jurists who went beyond the bounds of permissibility in their endeavors of singing in order to reach certain levels of spiritual development. But some of the general masses as well as some of the learned ones definitely went beyond the boundaries of permissibility following their own fancies and placed themselves in the line of destruction.

1. Rasulullah ﷺ said: "Singing creates hypocrisy in this heart just as water brings forth vegetations." (Baihaqi) And yet in spite of this saying of Rasulullah ﷺ these persons consider such a person as a saint.

2. Rasulullah ﷺ said: "Do not sell singing girls or purchase them, for price received is haraam." (Ibn Majah) In this regard the following verse was revealed: "And among men are those who buy amusement (Vain speech)."

ON ENJOINING GOOD AND FORBIDDING EVIL FOR THOSE WHO ARE ABLE TO DO SO

All praises are due to Allah Who has made the enjoining of good and the forbidding of evil one of the most important aspects of deen and for this purpose, He has sent the messengers. And I bear witness that there is no other being worthy of worship except Allah alone, without any partner or associate and I bear witness that Sayeduna Muhammad ﷺ is His servant and messenger, who had delivered that which was revealed to him from his Lord, the Lord of the Universe. May the peace and blessings of Allah be upon him and his family and his companions, who openly expressed the truth and in the affairs of Allah did not fear any rebuke or blame from any of those who blame and rebuke.

Verily Allah says: "Let there be among you a group of people who invite towards goodness, who enjoin the doing of good and forbid the doing of evil and these are those who will be successful."

And Allah says: "Why do not the Allah—fearing and the (rabbis) learned ones forbid them from their evil talks and eating unlawful wealth? evil is that in which they indulge."

1. Rasulullah ﷺ said: "Whoever of you sees an evil act being committed, let him stop it with his hands and if he is unable to do so, let him change it with his tongue and if he had not the power to do so, then let him detest it with his heart, and this latter line of action is the lowest form of Imaan." (Muslim)

2. Rasulullah ﷺ also said: "In every community wherein there is a man who commits evil deeds and while they are able to stop him from such deeds, they refrain from prohibiting him from such deeds, then before they die Allah will inflict upon them a harsh punishment because of him."

(Abu Dawood, Ibn Majah)

3. Rasulullah ﷺ also said: "When a sin has been committed on earth, then he who witnessed it and disliked and detested it, shall be as if he had been absent when it was done; and the one who was absent when it was committed but is pleased with it shall be as if he was present when it was committed. (Abu Dawood)

4. Rasulullah ﷺ also said: "Allah revealed to Jibreel: "Go and turn such an such a town upside-down upon its inhabitants." Jibreel remarked; "O my Lord, in that town there is one who has not disobeyed you not even for as long as a twinkling of an eye."Allah replied: "Overturn that town upon him and all of them, for his face never changed colour in dissatisfaction at their deeds for my sake." (Baihaqi)

I seek refuge in Allah from Shaytaan the accursed.

And Allah says: "O Muhammad ﷺ keep to forgiveness enjoin goodness and turn away from the ignorant ones."

ON THE ETIQUETTES OF SOCIETY WITH RASULULLAH'S ﷺ MANNER AS ITS BASIS

All praises are due to Allah Who created everything in perfection and He endowed His messenger with the best character in finest form and He purified his attributes and chose him as his chosen one and beloved. And He granted others the ability to emulate his ways, for those who intended to be beautified thereby and He deprived those from following his ways who desired to destroy himself.

I bear witness that there is no other being worthy of worship except Allah alone, without any partner or associate and I bear witness that Nabi Muhammad ﷺ is his chosen messenger and servant who had been sent to teach the best of character. May Allah's chosen and choicest blessings be upon him, his family and his companions, who had taught and cultured the people from all various parts of the world.

Thereafter, here are a few of the social manners of Rasulullah ﷺ. So that member of his flock may follow and thereby gain good reward from them:

1. Rasulullah ﷺ was the best, the most generous and the bravest of all people. (Bukhary, Muslim)

2. Rasulullah ﷺ never ever lifted his hands to hand out beating upon anything, not to a woman, nor a slave, except when he fought in the path of Allah. (Muslim)

3. Rasulullah ﷺ was never obscene in speech nor indecent and neither was he loudmouthed in the bazaars. He did not repay evil with evil but instead he forgave and overlooked. (Tirmithi)

4. Rasulullah ﷺ used to visit the sick, attend the funerals of the deceased and even accepted the invitations of slaves. (Ibn Majah)

5. He used to mend his own sandals, sew his own clothes, he used to do his own domestic work, clean his clothing, milk his goats and attended to his personal needs. (Tirmithi)

6. It was his habit to remain silent for long periods of time." (Sharhus Sunnah)

7. Anas ؓ says: "I served Rasulullah ﷺ for twenty years. During this period he never used to say: "Oof" (by way of expressing disgust or rebuke) and never did he ever ask me: "Why did you do that?" or "Why did you not do that?" (Bukhary, Muslim)

8. Once Rasulullah ﷺ was told: "O messenger of Allah, curse the polytheist." He replied: "I have not been sent to curse I have only been sent as a mercy to all." (Muslim)

9. Rasulullah ﷺ was more modest than a virgin in her private secluded space. When he was displeased with anything we would perceive it from the expression of his face.(Bukhary) More details of his character are found in the books of hadeeth.

I seek refuge in Allah from the accursed Shaytaan.

And Allah says: "Verily indeed you (O Muhammad) are upon you the most noble character."

RECTIFICATION OF THE SPIRITUAL SELF

All praises are due to Allah, Who is All informed of even the most concealed and secretive of intentions, Who is the Knower of the mind's perception, is the Director of the hearts (of men) and the Forgiver of sins. I testify that there is no deity besides Allah alone, Who has no partner. I also testify that our leader, Muhammad ﷺ, His servant and messenger is the leader of all the prophets, that he has encompassed the entire Deen (Religion of Islãm) and that he is to terminate the strength of the apostates.

May an abundance of Allah's salutations and blessings be upon him and his noble and pure family.

Indeed, rectification of the internal and spiritual self is the pillar to reform one's external self. This is extracted from the teachings of the Qur'ãn and Sunnah (life pattern) of him who was the messenger to man and jinn. Indeed Allah says "Rather say — We have submitted ourselves". Allah also says "Indeed it is not the eyes (senses - that are blind to realities) but the hearts in the breast of men have failed to take consideration." In other similar verses, Allah says "We swear by the soul and He Who has fashioned it, Who has also inspired it to it's evil or piety. Surely, successful has been the individual who has purified it and failure is the lot of him who has destroyed it (its pure attribute - by sin).

1. Rasulullah ﷺ said: "Indeed, there is a piece of flesh in the body, when it is in order, the entire body remains in order and when it is corrupted, the entire body becomes corrupt. Know well! It is the heart. (Bukhãri and Muslim)

2. Rasulullah ﷺ said to Wabisa ؓ "You have come questioning about virtue and sin". He answered "Yes". Rasulullah ﷺ then clenched his fingers and struck his (Wabisa's) chest with them saying thrice to him. "Question your soul, question your heart. Virtue is that to which your soul and heart finds contentment. Sin is that which disturbs your soul and excites your consciousness, even though people counsel you (to the contrary)." (Ahmad and Daarimi)

REFORMING THE CHARACTER

All praises are due to Allah Who has beautified the form of man through granting unto him the best standing and size. And He has protected him against becoming overgrown and against being under-developed in his shape and size. And He has made the beautification of man's character subject to his great efforts and He has encouraged man towards adorning his character through injunctions from Himself and warnings.

We bear witness that there is none of worship except Allah alone, without any associate or partner and we bear witness that Sayeduna Muhammad ﷺ is His servant and messenger, from whose forehead the rays of prophethood shone forth. And the reality of truth could be observed from his character and his prophecies.

May Allah's choicest blessings be upon him and his family and his companions who purified Islam from the darkness of Kufr. They completely uprooted all falsehood and became completely unaffected by falsehood, the little and the much thereof.

Thereafter, O muslim! Verily good character is a special quality of him who is the leader of all the prophets ﷺ. And it is the best of deeds of the Siddeeqs—the truthful ones. And bad character is an evil which removes one from nearness to Allah; the Lord of all. It diverts its perpetrator towards the ranks of the Shaytaans. It is as Allah says: "Successful indeed is that one who purifies his soul and a failure is he who corrupts or spoils it."

1. Rasulullah ﷺ said: "Verily the heaviest thing to be placed in a believer scan of deeds on the day of Qiyaamah will be good character. And Allah greatly dislikes an obscene person."
(Tirmithi)

2. Rasulullah ﷺ also said: "Verily, through good character, a believer attains the rank of a person standing in ibadah throughout the night and also fasting throughout the day.":
(Abu Dawood)

الخطبة العشرون في تهذيب الأخلاق

بسم الله الرحمن الرحيم

الحمد لله الذي زين صورة الإنسان بحسن تقويمه وتقديره، وحرسه من الزيادة والنقصان في شكله ومقاديره، وفوض تحسين الأخلاق إلى اجتهاد العبد وتشميره، واستحثه على تهذيبه بتخويفه وتحذيره.

ونشهد أن لا إله إلا الله وحده لا شريك له، ونشهد أن سيدنا ومولانا محمدا عبده ورسوله الذي كان يلوح أنوار النبوة من بين أسارير وجهه، ويستشرف حقيقة الحق من مخايله وتباشيره.

وقال رسول الله صلى الله عليه وسلم إن أثقل شيء يوضع في ميزان المؤمن يوم القيمة خلق حسن وإن الله يبغض الفاحش البذي.

وقال عليه الصلوة والسلام إن المؤمن ليدرك بحسن خلقه درجة قائم الليل وصائم النهار.

3. Rasulullah ﷺ also said: "The person who mixes with people and tolerates their harm with patience is better than him who does not mix with people and does not tolerate their harm towards him." (Tirmithi, Ibn Majah)

4. Rasulullah ﷺ also said: "The believer with the most complete faith is the one with the best character." (Abu Dawood, Daarmy)

I seek refuge in Allah from Shaytaan, the accursed.

And Allah says: "And avoid all outward sins as well as secret sins. Verily those who commit sins, will soon be rewarded (punished) for the sins they committed."

وَقَالَ عَلَيْهِ الصَّلٰوةُ وَالسَّلَامُ اَلْمُسْلِمُ الَّذِیْ یُخَالِطُ النَّاسَ وَیَصْبِرُ عَلٰی

SUBJUGATION OF THE TWO MAJOR PASSIONS

All praises are due to Allah Who has taken upon Himself the responsibility of protecting His servants in all his arrivals and movements and He is the One Who feeds and gives him to drink and the protects him against destruction and guards him. And He preserves him with food and drink from that which causes his destruction. And He enables him to be satisfied with little food and through that destroys his passions and saves him from the evils of his passions and lusts and then he will worship his Lord and fear Him.

And we bear witness that there is none worthy of worship except Allah alone, without any associate or partner and we bear witness that Sayeduna Muhammad ﷺ is Allah's servant and His messenger and His chosen prophet. May Allah's choicest blessings be upon him and pious offspring and relatives and upon the chosen ones from among his companions and those who followed them.

Verily the most feared of the passions and lusts is the passion of the stomach and the private parts. O people, fear Allah, fear Allah that you do not commit excesses in these two. For verily Allah has said: "Eat, and drink and do not waste for verily Allah does not love those who waste."

And Allah says: "Verily those who unjustly devour the possessions of the orphans, they only devour fire (of hell) in their bellies."

And Allah says: "And you devour inheritance—all with greed."

And Allah says: "And do not come near to adultery, for it is a shameful deed and an evil opening the road (to other evils)."

And Allah says: "Do you men come to other men from this world (leaving aside women?)"

And Rasulullah ﷺ said: "I have not left any trial more harmful to the men than the trial of women"

And Rasulullah ﷺ said to Sayeduna Ali رضي الله عنه: "O Ali, do not follow up one look with another glance, for the first one is for you and not the second glance."

And Rasulullah ﷺ heard a man burping and said to him: "Reform from burping by eating less for on the Day of Qiyaamat those who will be most hungry will be those who were most satiated and filled to capacity." (Sharhus Sunnah)

O brothers, know that just as extravagance is blameworthy and condemned in the case of these two passions, in that Allah's rights are neglected by being too much involved with these passions, so also is the excessive diminishing of these passions also condemned because through it the rights of the 'self' or the rights of the family is neglected.

And Rasulullah ﷺ said: "Verily your wife has a right over you and the one visiting you has a right over you and your body also has a right over you."

CONCERNING WATCHING ONE'S TONGUE

All praises are due to Allah Who has created mankind most beautifully and fashioned him. And He granted man's heart the treasures of knowledge and perfected it. And He blessed him with a tongue with which he interprets what the heart hides and what the heart thinks. And we bear witness that there is none worthy of worship except Allah alone, without any partner or associate and we bear witness that Sayeduna Muhammad ﷺ is the servant and messenger of Allah whom He has honoured and granted respect, the prophet, whom He sent with the Qur'an, which He revealed. May Allah's choicest blessings and salutations be upon him, his family and his companions for as long as a man may recite takbeer and tahleel.

Thereafter, O muslims, verily the size of the tongue is small but the wound it creates is very big. For this reason, the Shariah praised the virtue of silence and encouraged it except in cases of uttering the truth.

1. Rasulullah ﷺ said: "Whosoever guarantees me the safety of that which lies between his lips (i.e., the tongue) and that which lies between his legs (i.e., his private parts) to him I give the guarantee of paradise." (Bukhary)

2. Rasulullah ﷺ also said: "To swear at a muslim is impiety and to fight with him with the aim of killing him is unbelief."

3. Rasulullah ﷺ said: "A slanderer will not enter paradise (except after being punished)."

4. Rasulullah ﷺ also said: "Verily truthfulness is a virtue. Virtue leads to paradise, while falsehood is a sin and leads to the fire." (Muslim)

5. And Rasulullah ﷺ said: "Do You know waht is backbiting?" The companions replied: "Allah and His messenger know best" Then he said: "It is that you mention something about your brother which he deslikes. "Then it was asked: "What is the position if that which I mention about my brother is really in him?" He replied: "In that case you have really backbited him, for if that which you mentioned is not in him, you have in fact slandered him." (Muslim)

6. Rasulullah ﷺ also said: "He who observes silence will be safe." (Ahmad, Tirmithi, Daarmy, Baihaqi)

7. Rasulullah ﷺ also said: "The beauty of a person's Islam is to discard those things which do not concern him." (Malik, Ibn Majah, Ahmad)

8. Rasulullah ﷺ said: "He who is two faced in this world will on the day of Qiyaamat have a tongue of fire."

9. Rasulullah ﷺ also said: The person who degrades a person for a sin of which he had repented, will not die until he commits the same sin." (Tirmithi)

10. He also said: "Do not display pleasure at your brother's misfortune or else Allah will shower His blessings upon him and involve you in misfortunes." (Tirmithi)

11. Rasulullah ﷺ also said: "When a faasiq (evildoer) is being praised Allah becomes angry and the throne of Allah trembles." (Baihaqi)

I seek refuge in Allah from Shaytaan the accursed.

Khutbah : 23

THE CONDEMNATION OF ANGER, HATRED AND JEALOUSY

All praises be to Allah, Whose pardon and mercy is not hoped except by those having full hope. And no one fears His wrath and His authority except him who truly fears. And He has saddled his servants with passions and desires and has commanded them to abstain from these. And He has tested them with anger and He order them to subdue their anger in cases where anger besets them.

I bear witness that there is none worthy of worship except Allah alone, without any partner or associate. And I bear witness that Sayeduna Muhammad ﷺ is His chosen servant and messenger, the one under whose banner all the prophets will march. May Allah's choicest blessings descend upon him, his family, and in such numbers of all that existed in the past and what will exist in future for through his blessings both the former generations and the later generations receive the bounties of Allah.

After this, O muslims, Verily anger without due cause and its subsequent results of hatred and jealousy are things that destroyed many peoples. And in condemnation thereof Allah has said in the Quran: "When those who disbelieved had set up in their hearts zealotry, the zealotry of the age of ignorance, then Allah sent down His peace and tranquility upon His messenger and the believers and imposed upon them the testification to piety, for they were most worthy of it. And Allah is aware of all things."

In another verse Allah says: "And let not hatred of a people induce you to deal unjustly, deal justly. That is nearer to piety."

And Allah says: "Say..... I seek refuge in the lord of the daybreak..... from the jealous one when he practises his jealousy."

1. A certain Sahabi once asked for some advice and Rasulullah ﷺ advised him: "Do not become angry." The same Sahabi repeated his question and again Rasulullah ﷺ told him: "Do not become angry." (Bukhary)

الخطبة الثالثة والعشرون (٢٣) في ذم الغضب والحقد والحسد

بسم الله الرحمن الرحيم

الحمد لله الذي لا يتكل على عفوه ورحمته إلا الراجون، ولا يحذر سوء غضبه وسطوته إلا الخائفون، الذي سلط على عباده الشهوات وأمرهم بترك ما يشتهون، وابتلاهم بالغضب وكلفهم كظم الغيظ فيما يغضبون، وأشهد أن لا إله إلا الله وحده لا شريك له وأشهد أن محمدا عبده ورسوله الذي تحت لوائه النبيون، صلى الله عليه وعلى آله وأصحابه صلوة توازي عدد ما كان وما سيكون، ويحظى ببركتها الأولون والآخرون، وسلم تسليما كثيرا.

وقال رسول الله صلى الله عليه وسلم لرجل قال له صلى الله عليه وسلم أوصني قال لا تغضب فردد ذلك مرارا قال لا تغضب.

2. Rasulullah ﷺ also said: "When anyone becomes angry while he is standing up, let him sit down. And if the anger subsides, good and well, otherwise let him lie down."

(Tirmithi, Ahmad)

3. Rasulullah ﷺ also said: "Do not harbour jealousy for one another and do not have hatred for one another."

(Bukhary, Muslim)

4. And Rasulullah ﷺ said: "Verily the illness of other nations before you have come into you, namely, jealousy and hatred. They are very destroying factors. I do not say that they cut off the hair but they in fact destroy your deen."

(Ahmad, Tirmithi)

5. Rasulullah ﷺ said: "I warn you against jealousy for verily jealousy eats up good deeds like fire eats up wood."

6. And He said: "The doors of jannah are opened every Monday and Thursday and then everyone who did not ascribe any partners unto Allah are forgiven except that person between whom and his brother there was enmity and hatred about them is said: "Leave these two alone until they become reconciled." (Muslim)

I seek refuge in Allah from Shaytaan the accursed.

And Allah says in the Quran: "Those who spend (of that which Allah has given them) in times of ease and times of adversity, those who control their anger and pardon mankind for faults committed. And verily Allah loves those who do good to others."

قَالَ عَلَيْهِ الصَّلٰوةُ وَالسَّلَامُ وَلَا تَحَاسَدُوْا وَلَا تَبَاغَضُوْا

Khutbah : 24

CONDEMNATION OF THIS WORLD

All praise is due to Allah, Who causes His friends to know and recognise the dangers of this world and its disasters. And He also unveiled to them the faults of the world and its defects. And thus they realize that the evils of the world exceed the good things therein. The things in this world which are desired and hoped for are not void of dangers. And they also realize that the beautiful aspects of this world are not free from stains of inpurity and neither are moments of happiness free of aspects which are disturbing. This world makes its occupants to hope for happiness but promises them deception.

I bear witness that there is none worthy of worship except Allah alone, without any partner or associate and I bear witness that our master and leader Sayeduna Muhammad ﷺ is the servant and messenger of Allah, who has been sent to all the nations as a warner and a bringer of good news as well as a shining lamp of guidance. May Allah's blessings be upon him, his family and his companions in great abundance.

Thereafter, O muslims, verily many are the verses revealed in the Qur'an condemning this world and its evils. The Qur'an is full of verses condemning this world and of diverting man from it and inviting man towards the hereafter. That was the major objective of the prophets and they were not sent to this world but for this object. The verses in which this was expounded are many indeed and all well known. A few hadeeth in this regard are mentioned here:

1. Rasulullah ﷺ said: "I swear by Allah this world in comparison with the hereafter is like one of you putting his finger into the sea or a river. Let him see how much of the water of the river remains on his finger when he removes the finger." (Muslim)
2. And Rasulullah ﷺ said: "Verily this world is a prison for the believer and a paradise for the unbeliever." (Muslim)
3. Rasulullah ﷺ also said: "If this world in the sight of Allah had been worth even the wing of a mosquito, Allah would never have given an unbeliever even a drop of water to drink." (Ahmad, Tirmithi)

اَلْخُطْبَةُ الرَّابِعَةُ وَالْعِشْرُوْنَ (۲۴) فِیْ ذَمِّ الدُّنْیَا

بِسْمِ اللّٰهِ الرَّحْمٰنِ الرَّحِیْمِ

وَاَشْهَدُ اَنْ لَّآ اِلٰهَ اِلَّا اللّٰهُ وَحْدَهٗ لَا شَرِیْكَ لَهٗ وَاَشْهَدُ اَنَّ سَیِّدَنَا وَمَوْلَانَا مُحَمَّدًا عَبْدُهٗ وَرَسُوْلُهُ الْمُرْسَلُ اِلَی الْعٰلَمِیْنَ بَشِیْرًا وَّنَذِیْرًا ۔ وَّسِرَاجًا مُّنِیْرًا ۔ صَلَّی اللّٰهُ عَلَیْهِ وَعَلٰٓی اٰلِهٖ وَاَصْحَابِهٖ وَسَلَّمَ تَسْلِیْمًا كَثِیْرًا ۔

4. And Rasulullah ﷺ said: "Whosoever loves this world causes harm to his hereafter and whosoever loves his hereafter, causes harm to his world therefore give preference to that which is eternal over that which will perish."
(Ahmad, Baihaqi)

5. Rasulullah ﷺ said: "What do I have to do with this world?" My relationship with this world is that of a rider (in the desert) who comes to seek shelter under the shade of a tree, (rests a little) and then leaves the tree to depart (further on his journey)." (Ahmad, Tirmithi, Ibn Majah)

6. And Rasulullah ﷺ said: "The love of this world is the root of every evil." (Baihaqi)

7. And Rasulullah ﷺ said: "Be of the children of the hereafter and be not of the children of the world." (Abu Nuaim)

I seek refuge in Allah from Shaytaan the accursed.

And Allah says: "But you prefer the life of this world while the hereafter is better and everlasting."

وَ قَالَ عَلَيْهِ الصَّلٰوةُ وَالسَّلَامُ مَنْ اَحَبَّ دُنْيَاهُ اَضَرَّ بِاٰخِرَتِهٖ وَمَنْ اَحَبَّ اٰخِرَتَهٗ اَضَرَّ بِدُنْيَاهُ فَاٰثِرُوْا مَا يَبْقٰى عَلٰى مَا يَفْنٰى ۚ

CONDEMNATION OF MISERLINESS AND OF LOVE FOR THIS WORLD

All praises is due to Allah Who reserves praise for His extended sustenance to His servants. And He removes harm from them after they had reached the limits of despair. And He has created the creation and provides sustenance for them generously. And He has granted to this Universe many kinds of wealth and He tests the creation with various changing conditions so as to ascertain as to who is the best of them in action and grants respite to those who give preference over the hereafter to this world."

And I bear witness that there is none deserving of worship except Allah alone, without any partner or associate and I bear witness that Sayeduna Muhammad ﷺ is His chosen servant and messenger, who through his religion has abrogated all other religions and has included in his shariah the truths of all religions and creeds. May Allah's choicest blessings descend upon him, his family and his companions, those who trod the path of their Lord diligently.

Thereafter, O muslims, Allah commands us in the Qur'an: "O you who believe let not your wealth and your children divert you from the remembrance of Allah. And whoever does that will be of the losers."

And Allah says: "Those who act miserly and command others towards stinginess and conceal that which Allah had granted them of His grace and bounty."

1. Rasulullah ﷺ said: "The son of Adam says: "My wealth, My wealth!" O son of Adam ﷺ nothing is yours except that which you have consumed and finished up and which you have worn and caused to become tatters and what you have spent in charity and utilized."
2. He also said: "Beware of stinginess for verily stinginess has destroyed many of those before you. (Muslim)

3. Rasulullah ﷺ also said: "A swindler and a miser and one who reminds others of his goodness towards them in charity will never enter paradise." (Tirmithi)

4. Rasulullah ﷺ said: "O son of Adam عليه السلام, it is better for you to spend your surplus wealth than to hoard it. Hoarding for you is harmful. You cannot be condemned for that which is sufficient for your needs and when giving in charity begin with those who are your close relatives." (Muslim)

   Be aware of the fact that the above applies to when the hoarding and earnings and for something other than for deen. As regards saving for the sake of deen, Allah has said in the Qur'an: "And your Lord desired that they should reach maturity and bring forth their treasure as a mercy from their Lord." This verse proves that wealth should not be needlessly squandered and that it will be permissible to save for economic necessities.

5. Rasulullah ﷺ said: "Verily a time will come over mankind when nothing will be beneficial to mankind except the dinar (gold coin) and the dirham (silver coin). (Ahmad)

6. Rasulullah ﷺ Said: "There is no harm in being rich for that person who truly fears Allah." (Ahmad)

7. Sufyaan Thowri رحمه الله used to say: "Previously wealth used to be disliked. As for now, it is the shield of a believer."

I seek refuge in Allah from the accursed Shaytaan.

And Allah says: "Spend your wealth for the cause of Allah and cast not yourself into destruction by your own hands and do good. Allah loves those who do good."

CONDEMNATION OF LOVE FOR HONOUR AND FOR NAME AND FAME

All praise be to Allah, the Knower of the unseen, the One Who is completely aware of the secrets of the heart He accepts only those actions which are perfect and complete and pure and clean from all blemishes of shirk and I bear witness that there is none worthy of worship except Allah alone, without any partner or associate and I bear witness that Sayeduna Muhammad ﷺ is the chosen servant and messenger of Allah who has cleansed us from all atains of shirk. May Allah's choicest blessings descend upon him, his family and his companions who were free from all forms of treachery, deception and falsehood.

Thereafter, O muslims, Verily riya (the doing of things for show and for achieving fame among men) is indeed a very destructive thing in the life of a muslim, even if it is practised in his daily forms of worship.

1. Rasulullah ﷺ has said: "Whosoever dons clothing of show and fame in this world, Allah will on the day of qiyamah dress him in clothing of humiliation.

   (Ahmad, Abu Dawood, Ibn Majah)

2. And Rasulullah ﷺ said: "Sufficient is it as evil that fingers should point at a person in worldly affairs as well as deeny matters, except that person whom Allah protects."(Baihaqi)

3. Rasulullah ﷺ said: "Verily two hungry wolves let loose among a flock of goats are not more harmful to than the harm caused to a man's deen by greed for wealth and for honour."

   (Tirmithi, Daarmy)

4. Rasulullah ﷺ said: "Verily Allah loves the righteous ones, who fear Him and remain unknown and hidden from people. They are not searched for when they area bsent, nor are they called for when they are present and neither are they being befriended. Their hearts are lamps of guidance and they are protected by Allah from all evils.(Ibn Majah, Baihaqi).

5. Rasulullah ﷺ was asked about a man who does a good deed as a result of which people praise him, or love him. He replied: "That is a glad tiding hastened towards a believer."

(Muslim)

6. Sayeduna Abu Hurayrah رضي الله عنه once said to Rasulullah ﷺ: While I was in my house (performing salaah) in my place of salaah, a man came to me and found me performing salaah. I found pleasure in myself for the manner in which he found me. (Kindly inform me about this feeling which I felt within myself). Rasulullah ﷺ replied: "May Allah have mercy upon you, O Abu Hurayrah رضي الله عنه. You have gained double reward for having performed your deed in secret and secondly for having done your deed openly." (Tirmithi)

CONDEMNATION OF PRIDE AND VANITY

All praises are due to Allah, the Creator, the Producer, the Fashioner, the Powerful, the Mighty, the Exalted, the High Whose greatness cannot be lessened by Anyone who denounces. He is the All-Powerful before Whom all tyrants are submissive. His greatness is such that it broke the backs of the mighty Persian emperors. And was such that it destroyed the might of the Caesers. Greatness is His lower cloth and Majesty is his upper cloth. Whosoever challenges Him in these two qualities, He inflicts with a sickness from which there is no cure. Most great is His Magnificence and Most sanctifies are His names.

I bear witness that there is no other being worthy of worship except Allah alone, without any partner or associate and I bear witness that Sayeduna Muhammad ﷺ is His servant and messenger upon whom was revealed the great light of ever-spreading brilliance until it illuminated the corners of the earth. May Allah's choicest blessings be upon him and his family and his companions who were the beloved ones and friends of Allah, the chosen ones of this world and the best of all mankind.

Thereafter, O muslims, know that pride and vanity are two most destructive sicknesses which are very much disliked and detested by Allah. The ones filled with pride and haughtiness are indeed inflicted with two great sicknesses. Allah states in the Qur'an. "He does not love the arrogant one and the boastful one. He also mentions about the battle of Hunain" (when the Muslims felt pride in themselves over their large numbers); "And the day of the battle of Hunain, when you exalted in the numbers of your might, which in turn availed you naught."

1. Rasulullah ﷺ said: "Whosoever humbles himself before Allah, Allah will elevate him And in the eyes of his own he will be insignificant but in the eyes of the people he will be considered great. And whoever acts proudly, Allah will humiliate him so that in the eyes of people he will be insignificant while in his own eyes he will be great so much so that he will be looked upon as lower than a dog or a swine." (Baihaqi)

2. Rasulullah ﷺ also said: "As for the two destructive things, the one is passions which are being followed and the other is greed which has become part and partial and is being obeyed of man. And the other one is a person's pride in himself and this one is the worst." (Baihaqi)

3. Rasulullah ﷺ also said: "Never will that person enter paradise in whose heart there is pride even the size of an atom." Hearing this, a man said: How is it if a man likes that his clothes and his shoes should be good? Rasulullah ﷺ replied: "That is beautiful, Allah is beautiful and loves the beautiful. However pride is the rejection of truth and looking down upon people." (Muslim)

4. Rasulullah ﷺ said: "Until such time when you see greed being followed, passions being obeyed and worldly affairs being given preference and you see everyone being fascinated by his own opinion, then occupy yourself with your own rectification for ahead of you are days of great patience, the likeness of which is like holding in your hands burning coals and whoever remains steadfast in those days shall be rewarded to the extent of fifty men doing the same deeds." (Tirmithi, Ibn Majah)

I seek refuge in Allah from the accursed Shaytaan.

THE EVILS OF TREACHERY AND DECEPTION

All praises is due to Allah Who has brought forth his devoted friends from the darkness of Kufr into the light of Imaan and He allows His enemies to enter predicaments of deception. I bear witness that there is no other being worthy of worship except Allah alone, without any partner or associate and I bear witness that Sayeduna Muhammad ﷺ is His servant and messenger who has come forth to lift mankind from the darkness of disbelief and evil.

May Allah's blessings be upon him and his family and all his illustrious companions who were never led into deception by the life of this world and neither were they led into deception at all with regard to Allah. And may these blessings continue to descend upon them throughout all the hours and days and months that is to come.

Thereafter, O muslims, know that the key to happiness lies in being awake and ready to receive guidance and the origins of wretchedness lies in being deceived and in unmindfulness and negligence. The intelligent being in this world are those whose breasts have been opened towards following the straight path which is in accordance with the clear proofs and arguments. And the deceived ones are these whose breasts have become narrowed down and unable to accept the guidance through their acting upon their lusts and desires. Such ones sight continues to be blind and such could not find guidance. Such a one remains blind and takes his desires as his guide and takes Shaytaan as his guide: "And whoever is blind in this world will surely be blind in the hereafter and he will have lost the way."

Allah says: "Let not the life of this world deceive you and let not the deceiver (Shaytaan) deceive you regarding the commands of Allah."

And He says: "They will cry unto them, saying: "Were we not with you? To which the righteous will reply: "Indeed were you with us. But you tempted one another, hesitated, doubted and desires deceived you until the decree of Allah (death) overtook you. And you were left deceived from Allah by the Shaytaan."

Khutbah : 29

THE VIRTUES AND THE COMPULSORY NATURE OF REPENTANCE

All praises is due to Allah through Whose praises all doors are opened. Every address should be started with the mention of "His Name." We repent to Him", a towbah of one who sincerely believes that "He is Lord of all Lords", and the "He is cause of all causes."

We bear witness that there is no being worthy of worship except Allah alone, without any partner or associate. And we bear witness that our master and leader Sayeduna Muhammad ﷺ is Allah's servant and messenger. May Allah's salutations descend upon him, his family and his companions, such a salutation that will protect and save us from the dangers and terrors of the day of being presented before Allah for the reckoning. And may that salutations be the preparation for us to attain nearness to Allah and lead us to the best ending.

Thereafter, O muslims, verily repenting from all sins and returning to Allah as the knower of the unseen and the One who covers the faults of men, such repentance is the first step of those desiring to walk the path towards Allah and it is the capital sum of those desiring to become successful and it is the first step of those who become initiated on the path of the saintly ones. It is also the key towards stability for those who are wavering. It is also the means towards selection for all those desiring closeness with Allah.

Allah says: "And those who, when they have committed an evil deed or have been unjust to their own selves, remember Allah, and then seek forgiveness from Him. [And who else can forgive sins except Allah] And they do not persist in what they have done, while knowing the consequences of their deeds. For these ones their reward will be forgiveness from their Lord and gardens under which rivers flow. Therein they will abide eternally. How great is the reward for those who work righteousness."

1. Rasulullah ﷺ said: "A servant who has committed a sin and then seeks forgiveness from Allah through repentance, Allah will grant him repentance and forgive him." (Muslim)

2. Rasulullah ﷺ also said: "Every one of the children of Adam ﷺ are sinners and the best of sinners are those who had erred and then repented and begged for forgiveness."

(Tirmithi, Ibn Majah, Daarmy)

3. Rasulullah ﷺ also said: "Allah accept the repentance of a servant until the last moments of his life."

(Tirmithi, Ibn Majah)

4. Ibn Masood ﷺ said: "Remorse and sorrow over a sin committed is repentance and the person who sincerely repents from sins is like one who has done no sins at all."

(Sharhus Sunnah)

5. Rasulullah ﷺ said: "Whosoever has an evil deed on him against his brother's honour or something else like that should clear his affair with that brother in this life before such a day when there will be no dirhams and dinars as currencies for compensation. For in the hereafter, if he has any good deeds to his credit, of these will be taken from him to the extent of his evil deed and if he has no good deeds then from the sins of his brother will be taken and loaded upon him."

(Bukhary)

I seek refuge in Allah from Shaytaan the accursed.

And Allah says: "And he who repents after his injustice and rectifies his affair, Allah will surely accept his repentance and forgive him. Surely Allah is Most Forgiving, Most Merciful.

CONCERNING PATIENCE AND GRATITUDE

All praises is due to Allah Who is truly worthy of praise, Who alone is Unique as the Possessor of Majesty and Who is absolute in His attributes of glory and Highness. And He is the One Who grants help to his chosen servants by granting them the special qualities of patience in times of adversity as well as the attribute of gratitude in times of calamities and in times of bounties.

And I bear witness that there is no being worthy of worship except Allah alone, without any partner or associate and I bear witness that Sayeduna Muhammad ﷺ is the servant and messenger of Allah, the leader of the prophets. May Allah's choice blessings and salutations descend upon him and his family, the chosen ones and upon his companions, who were the fore-runners and the leaders of the pious ones and the righteous ones.

Thereafter, O muslims, verily Imaam has two aspects; one half of it relates to sabr (patience) and the other half relates to gratitude (shukr). This is what Rasulullah ﷺ taught us. Hence it is of the utmost importance to have consideration for both these aspects and their virtues so as to facilitate our appreciation of them.

Verily Allah says: "Verily the patient ones will be granted their reward fully without any account."

And Allah says: "And Allah will surely reward those who express gratitude."

And Allah says: "And be patient. Allah is with the patient ones."

Allah says: And be thankful to Me and do not be ungrateful.

1. Rasulullah ﷺ said: "It is indeed surprising from a believer that when good befalls him, he praises Allah and thanks Him and if a calamity strikes him, he praises Allah and bears it with patience. And so a believer is rewarded for every act of his until even for the morsel of food which he lifts up to the mouth of his wife." (Baihaqi)

CONCERNING HOPE AND FEAR

All praise is due to Allah Whose grace is hoped for and Whose overpowering power and punishment is feared. He has filled the hearts of His pious servants with hope and has warned those who turn away from obeying Him and turn away from His reward and generous gifts by severe admonitions and signs of warning. And He guided those pious ones towards His paradise through His directions and His favours.

I bear witness that there is no other being worthy except Allah alone and I bear witness that Sayeduna Muhammad ﷺ is His servant and messenger, the leader of all His prophets and the most noble of all His creation. May Allah's salutations descend upon him and his family and his companions and his offspring.

Thereafter, O muslims, verily hope and fear are two things with which the chosen servants of Allah travel towards every praiseworthy station of spiritual excellence and they are two ways through which they pass all difficult stages towards the hereafter. Numerous are the texts on this topic in the Quran, either individually or related with other verses.

Thus Allah says: "They (those believers) hope for Allah's mercy and fear His punishment."

And Allah says: "They (the believers) call upon their Lord in hope and fear."

And Allah says: "And call upon Him in hope and fear."

And Allah says: "Verily they used to hurry towards good and they call unto Him in hope and in fear."

And Allah says: "Verily your Lord is most forgiving to people for their injustices and verily your Lord is severe in punishment."

1. Rasulullah ﷺ said: "If the believers but knew the severity of Allah's punishment, none would have any hope of attaining His paradise. And if they unbelievers were aware of Allah's mercy none of them would despair of gaining His paradise."

(Bukhary, Muslim)

2. Once Rasulullah ﷺ visited a young man while he was about to die. Rasulullah ﷺ asked him." How are you?" He replied: "I have hope in Allah, O prophet of Allah, and I have fear for my sins."

   Then Rasulullah ﷺ said: "never do these two (hope and fear) come together in the heart of a servant of Allah such a circumstance (at the point of death), except that Allah grants him that which he hopes for and saves him from that which he fears." (Tirmithi, Ibn Majah)

3. Rasulullah ﷺ also said: "A person once exclaimed: "Allah will not forgive such and such a person."

   Allah then said: "Who is that person who exalts himself above Me?, saying that I will not forgive such and such a person? Verily I have forgiven him and I have nullified your deeds and actions."

I seek refuge in Allah from the accursed Shaytaan.

And Allah says: "Inform My servants that I am the Forgiver, the Merciful and that My punishment is a painful chastisement."

Khutbah : 32

CONCERNING POVERTY AND ABSTINENCE

All praises are due to Allah, Who has created man from dry and sticky clay and He adorned him in the best fashion and in the most perfect proportions. Then He blessed His sincere servants with insight until the secrets of their evil deeds became clear to them. Hence they abstain from such deeds with abstinence of those who hate such deeds and they detest having within themselves pride and arrogance and boasting with each other in gathering wealth and riches. But they look forward with all their aspirations to reach such a place where there is no destruction or ending.

I bear witness that there is no other being worthy of worship except Allah alone, without any partner or associate and I bear witness that Sayeduna Muhammad ﷺ is His servant and messenger, the most noble of all people of honour and respect. May Allah's salutations be upon him and upon his companions, who were the best of companions and his family, who were the best of families.

Thereafter, O muslims, it has been established without doubt that there cannot be any hope of attaining salvation except by cutting oneself off from this world and by abstaining from the world. This is attained either through poverty which is ordained by Allah or by a man willingly casting it aside which is called Zuhd—Abstinence. Allah says: "And you devour inheritance greedily and you love wealth very deeply."

So he who loves poverty will not love excessive food while he who is not abstinent will love wealth.

1. Rasulullah ﷺ said: "The poor will enter paradise five hundred years before the rich." (Tirmithi)

2. Rasulullah ﷺ said: "Search for me (i.e., Allah's pleasure) in helping the weak amongst you for verily you are granted riziq and you are being helped due to the weak ones among you."

CONCERNING THE ONENESS OF ALLAH AND RELIANCE IN HIM

All praise is due to Allah, the Creator of the world and the celestial regions, the One Who is the only One in might and power, Who raised up the heavens without any supporting pillars and Who distributes to His servants their sustenance. And He turns away the attention of the men of understanding and intelligence from considering the ways and means (that their sustenance reaches them). And when these men realized that Allah had taken upon Himself the guarantee of granting riziq, they placed their trust in Him and exclaimed: "Allah is sufficient for us and what a grand Patron He is."

We bear witness that there is no one worthy of worship except Allah alone, without any partner or associate and we bear witness that Sayeduna Muhammad ﷺ is His servant and messenger, the one who suppressed all evil and guided towards the straight path. May Allah's salutations be upon him and his family and companions in great abundance.

Thereafter, O muslims, verily tawakkul (reliance in Allah) in all its various degrees is one of the stages of development in the spiritual development of this deen. And this has its basis in the oneness of Allah and in the true conviction in Allah. Allah says: "Verily those whom you worship besides Allah have not the ability to supply you with sustenance. Therefore seek sustenance from Allah. Worship Him and be grateful unto Him. For to Him shall you all be returned."

And Allah says: "And have trust (in Allah) if you are truly believers."

1. Rasulullah ﷺ said: "When you ask, ask of Allah. And when you seek help, seek help from Allah. Know that if all the people of this ummat should gather with the intention of causing you any benefit they will not be able to cause you any benefit in the least except to the extent that Allah had ordained for you And if all the people of this ummat should gather with the intention of causing you any harm, they will

CONCERNING LOVE, LONGING AND PLEASURE

All praise is due to Allah, Who has cleansed the hearts of His devoted servants from being drawn towards the glitter of this world and purified their inner selves from directing their attention to beings other than Him. He then exposed to them His glories to such an extent that they become filled with love for Him and exposed His grandeur to them until they become annihilated in the shine of His majesty and greatness, until they became drowned in recognizing Him and in His love.

I bear witness that there is no other being worthy of worship except Allah alone, without any partner or associate and I bear witness that Sayeduna Muhammad ﷺ is His servant and messenger, the seal of the prophets. May Allah's salutations be upon him, his family and his companions, the leaders of all human beings and their spiritual guides. These companions were the fore-runners and reins-holders of all mankind.

Thereafter, O muslims, Allah says: "He loves them and they love Him."

And He says with regard to the angels: "They celebrate His praises and glorify Him by night and by day without any laxness."

This does not happen out of habit but with great longing.

And Allah says: "With the bounty and the mercy of Allah. And with this should they rejoice." And with regard to the companions of Rasulullah ﷺ, Allah says: "Allah is pleased with them and they are pleased with Him."

1. Rasulullah ﷺ said: "O Allah, I beg of You Your love and the love of those who love You and I beg of You, grant me to do the deeds which causes me to reach Your love." (Tirmithi)

CONCERNING SINCERITY, GOOD INTENTIONS AND TRUTHFULNESS

All praise be to Allah a praise of the grateful ones. And we believe in Him with a faith of those truly believing in Him. We sincerely believe in His Oneness as an admission of the truthful ones. We bear witness that there is none deserving of worship except Allah alone, without any partner or associate, Who has ordered that jinn and man and the angels should worship Him in complete sincerity. And we bear witness that Sayeduna Muhammad ﷺ is His servant and messenger, the leader of all the prophets. May Allah's salutations be upon him and all the prophets, and upon his noble family and his pious companions.

Thereafter, O muslims, it has become clear to those blessed with Imaan and the enlightened instructions of the Qur'an that there is no way of acquiring true happiness and success, except through the acquisition of knowledge and through ibaadah. Every one amongst men faces destruction except those endowed with knowledge. And those endowed with knowledge face the threat of destruction, except those performing practical deeds of goodness. But even those performing good deeds face destruction except those who are sincere in their intentions. And such sincere ones, if they have no sincere intentions, their deeds are useless. For without a sincere intention those deeds are for show, which is tantamount to hypocrisy and disobedience. Similarly sincerity without trueness and without being for attaining Allah's pleasure in conformity with His will is also useless like dust.

Allah says regarding those deeds done for purposes other than His pleasure that such deeds are made into "flying dust, scattered about."

Allah also says: "Verily to Him is due sincere deen." He also says: "Verily the believers are those who believe in Allah and His messenger and then they harbour no doubts and strive with their wealth and their lives in Allah's path. Verily these are the truthful ones."

CONCERNING CONTEMPLATION AND RECKONING WITH ONESELF

All praises be to Allah, Who takes account of all that a person earns and He is the One Who oversees and notices his every sinful deed. And I bear witness that there is no other being worthy of worship except Allah alone, without any partner and without any associate and I bear witness that Sayeduna Muhammad ﷺ is the servant and messenger of Allah, the leader of the prophets. May Allah's blessings and salutations be upon him and upon his family, the leaders of all the chosen ones and upon his companions the heads of all the god-fearing ones.

Thereafter, O muslims, verily the criterion for salvation is the performance of good deeds, but righteous deeds are not taken into consideration unless a person performs it permanently and continuously and does so in the correct and prescribed manner. Linking these factors and doing them continuously will not be acquired except after first making the soul obligated to doing them habitually. This is termed mushaaratah (2) to take notice of mushaarath diligently is termed muraaqabah. However, thirdly, the soul must at specific times be checked to ascertain whether it had fulfilled all these conditions properly or not. This checking and reckoning is termed muhaasabah (taking mutual accounting and reckoning). Fourthly we have the term mu'aaqabah (mutual exertion) which refers to the toil and effort required in order to rectify actions if the above condition are missing. Fifthly the soul must be subjected to various strenuous wazeefas (zikr) if there is any hesitation in the doing of good deeds. This is the stage of mujaahadah. Sixthly we have mu'aatabah (mutual censure) which means putting censure upon the soul, causing it to become disassociated from such places where rebellion against Allah takes place and putting a burden upon it to compensate for faults.

All the above exercises are intended so as not to be unmindful of the soul for a single moment whereby it is intended to save the souls from becoming deviated or defiant or rebellious.The sacred texts (Qur'an and hadeeth)are filled with narrations concerning these points and one should consider the details set forth therein.

And Allah says: "And who is more misguided than him who follows his passions?"

1. Aslam ﷺ reports that once Umar ﷺ visited Sayeduna Abu Bakr ﷺ who at that time was pulling his tongue. Umar ﷺ said: "Stop this. May Allah forgive you." Abu Bakr ﷺ replied: "Verily this organ is the one who causes me to reach the places of destruction." (Maalik)

CONCERNING PONDERING OVER MATTERS AND CONTEMPLATION

All praises be to Allah, Who has encouraged unto ponder and contemplate, to observe and to give deep thought. I bear witness that there is no other deity worthy of worship except Allah alone, without any partner or associate and I bear witness that Sayeduna Muhammad ﷺ is His servant and messenger, the master among the children of Adam ﷺ in this world. May Allah's salutations be upon him and upon his family as well as his companions, the chosen and righteous ones.

Thereafter, O muslims, verily Allah has encouraged us to ponder and reflect with deep thought in so many verses of the Holy Quran and He has praised those who contemplate. In this way, while praising them He says: "those who remember Allah, while standing, sitting and lying on their sides and ponder over the creation of heavens and earth."

He asks: "Do they not ponder over the kingdoms of heavens and earth?"

He also says: "Did We not make the earth as a wide expanse? And the mountains as pegs. And have We not created you in pairs And made your sleep for rest? And made the night as a covering? And made the day as a means of subsistence? And have We not built over you the seven firmaments. And placed therein a light of splendour? And did We not send down from the clouds water in abundance? That you may produce therewith corn and vegetables And gardens of vegetation?"

And Allah says: "Then let man look at his food or that We pour forth water in abundance. And We split the earth in fragments. And produce therein corn And grapes and nutritious plants and olives and dates and enclosed gardens dense with lofty trees and fruits and fodder for use and convenience for you and your cattle."

CONCERNING DEATH AND AFTER DEATH

All praise be to Allah, Who through death broke the necks of the tyrants and has also through death broken the backs of the mighty kings of Persia and through death destroyed the hopes of the Caesers. And He has made death a means towards success for the pious ones and through death has made a meeting place for them with Him. To Him belongs the highest status for the bounties which He bestows, and to Him belongs the right of retribution by means of punishment by means of His overpowering might. I bear witness that there is no other being worthy of worship except Allah alone, without any partner or associate. And I bear witness that Sayeduna Muhammad ﷺ is the servant and messenger of Allah, the one who was blessed with many clear miracles. May Allah's salutations and blessings be upon him and his family and his companions, the possessors of excellence and virtue.

1. Verily Rasulullah ﷺ said: "Remember abundantly the destroyer of pleasures (death)." (Tirmithi, Nasai, Ibn Majah)

2. Rasulullah ﷺ also said: "When a muslim is near death the angels of mercy approach him with a white silk cloth and says to him (his souls): "Come out in happiness, having attained, Allah's pleasure. Come to the comfort and mercy of Allah and proceed to the Lord Who will not be angry with you."

   It is further reported: "When a kafir nears death the angels of punishment approach him with a coarse cloth and says: "Proceed in unhappiness to the punishment of Allah for Allah is angry with you." (Ahmad, Nasai)

3. Rasulullah ﷺ also said: "Two angels come to him in the grave and makes him sit up and say to him: "Who is your Lord?" He will reply: "Allah is my Lord." Then they ask him: "And what is your deen?" He will reply: "My deen is Islam." Then they ask him: "Who is this man who was sent to you?" He will reply: "He is Rasulullah ﷺ."

CONCERNING THE DEEDS FOR THE DAY OF AASHURA

All praise is due to Allah Who has created for the sun and the moon to follow fixed courses, while the stars and the trees bow down to Him and He has given preference for certain periods of time over others just as He gives preference for specific places over others, and for some human beings above other humans.

We bear witness that there is none worthy of worship except Allah alone, without any partner and without any associate and We bear witness that Sayeduna Muhammad ﷺ is the servant and messenger of Allah, the one who guided us towards righteous deeds, of which is the fasting of the day of Aashura, a day of good actions. And he also prohibited as from bad deeds, among which are all those innovated deeds. May Allah's salutations be upon him and his family and upon his companions who upheld the deen, both the compulsory thereof and the permissible and destroyed the prohibited customs of the days of ignorance, both the prohibited and the abominable thereof. May these salutations descend on them all abundantly.

Thereafter, O muslims, the day of Aashura is near at hand. It is a time when people commit some very good deeds as well as various rejected innovations of the first mentioned is the commendable act of fasting on this day.

1. Rasulullah ﷺ said: "Verily the best fasting after the month of Ramadaan is the fasting of the month of Muharram."
(Muslim)

2. And Rasulullah ﷺ said: "Regarding the fast of the day of Aashura, it is my hope that Allah will through it compensate for sins committed during the previous year." (Muslim)

3. And Rasulullah ﷺ said; "Fast on the day of Aashura. And be contrary to the Jews by fasting a day before it and a day after it.

4. In the beginning the Day of Aashura used to be fasted before the fast of Ramadaan was made compulsory. And when it became revealed the Ramadaan should be fasted, those who wished to do so, fasted on this day while others who did not wish to do so, did not fast. Those who voluntarily fasted on Aashura sought to acquire blessings of abundant sustenance for their families." (Six books of Hadeeth except Nasai)

5. Rasulullah ﷺ said: "Whoever spends freely on his family on the day of Aashura, Allah will grant him blessings in his riziq throughout the year." (Razeen, Baihaqi)

Some people have taken the day to be a day of rejoicing, and for the reading of elegies, mourning, the expression of grief and for remembering the tragedies which befall the Ahlul Bayt. They also use it for visiting grave-sites and for other acts. And they busy themselves with such acts of entertainment, amusement and what amount to shirk and sin.

I seek refuge in Allah from the accursed Shaytaan.

CONCERNING THE DEEDS OF THE MONTH OF SAFAR

All praise is due to Allah in whose Hands lie the control of all affairs. He is the creator of all things and He is the Controller of all affairs, the good as well as the bad.

We bear witness that there is no one worthy of worship except Allah alone, without any partner or associate and we bear witness that Sayeduna Muhammad ﷺ is the servant and messenger of Allah Who has taken us out of darkness and brought us into the light and who through his teachings has eliminated all ignorance and evil. May Allah's salutations be upon him and his family and his companions, through whom this deen became manifest in the best form. Through them faith became firmly established in the breasts throughout all the days and months. Abundant salutations upon them.

Thereafter, O muslims, the month of Safar has drawn near to us. And this is the month which is taken as a bad omen by some people while others take it to be the herald of goodness, as was done by the people of the days of ignorance who used to resort to the detested habit of shifting the months around because of this wrong belief.

Allah rejected this custom and stated that this shifting of the months was a cause for further kufr. Similarly Rasulullah ﷺ condemned the practice of taking Safar to be a time for good or bad luck and he rejected the habit of associating sorrows and grief with it.

1. Rasulullah ﷺ said: "There is no spreading of disease from one person to another (except with Allah's permission) neither is there any taking of omens from the flight of birds, nor any evil in the sounding of the owl and neither is there any (ill-fortune in the month of) Safar.
2. Once, Muhammad bin Raashid told Rasulullah ﷺ that people were taking an ill omen from the entrance of the month of Safar. Rasulullah ﷺ said: "There is no ill-omen in Safar."

اَلْخُطْبَةُ الْاَرْبَعُوْنَ (۴۰) فِیْ مَا فِیْ صَفَرَ

اَمَّا بَعْدُ فَقَدْ حَانَ شَهْرُ صَفَرٍ ۔ یَتَشَآءَمُ بِهٖ بَعْضُ النَّاسِ وَیَتَطَیَّرُ ۔ كَمَا كَانَ اَهْلُ الْجَاهِلِیَّةِ مَعَ هٰذَا الْاِعْتِقَادِ یَبْتَدِعُوْنَ فِیْهِ النَّسِیْٓءَ النُّكْرَ ۔ فَاَبْطَلَهُ اللّٰهُ تَعَالٰى بِقَوْلِهٖ اِنَّمَا النَّسِیْٓءُ زِیَادَةٌ فِی الْكُفْرِ ۔ وَكَذٰلِكَ نَفٰى رَسُوْلُ اللّٰهِ صَلَّى اللّٰهُ عَلَیْهِ وَسَلَّمَ الشُّؤْمَ وَالطِّیَرَةَ بِهٖ خُصُوْصًا وَّبِكُلِّ شَیْءٍ عُمُوْمًا ۔ وَاَزَاحَ بِهٰذَا النَّفْیِ عَنَّا هُمُوْمًا وَّغُمُوْمًا

فَقَالَ عَلَیْهِ الصَّلٰوةُ وَالسَّلَامُ لَا عَدْوٰى وَلَا طِیَرَةَ وَلَا هَامَةَ وَلَا صَفَرَ ۔

اَلْحَدِیْثَ قَالَ مُحَمَّدُ بْنُ رَاشِدٍ یَتَشَآءَمُوْنَ بِدُخُوْلِ صَفَرٍ ۔ فَقَالَ النَّبِیُّ صَلَّى اللّٰهُ عَلَیْهِ وَسَلَّمَ لَا صَفَرَ ۔

3. Rasulullah ﷺ said: "Taking omens by the flight of birds is 'shirk'. He repeated this thrice." (Abu Dawood, Tirmithi)

4. Ibn Masood ﷺ said: "All of us sometimes have such baseless thoughts except that Allah removes them through tawakkul (trust in Him)."

From this statement of Ibn Masood, we learn that tawakkul is in not believing in the heart the whisperings (coming into the mind) with regard to the flight of birds, neither in acting upon its results through the limbs, nor expressing belief of the same through the tongue. We will then not be taken to task for any such wrong beliefs.

The statement of Rasulullah ﷺ: "If ill omen is found, it would be in a woman, a property and a horse." Should be interpreted to mean that if by any chance there was any ill-omen, it would be in these three things." (Bukhary, Muslim)

I seek refuge in Allah from the accursed Shaytaan.

Allah says: "The messenger replied: "The ill omen (bad luck) is with you (as a result of your deeds). Is this because you have been admonished to return to Allah. But you are an extravagant people."

وَقَالَ عَلَيْهِ الصَّلٰوةُ وَالسَّلَامُ الطِّيَرَةُ شِرْكٌ قَالَهٗ ثَلٰثًا ۔

وَقَالَ ابْنُ مَسْعُوْدٍ مَّا مِنَّآ اِلَّا وَلٰكِنَّ اللّٰهَ يُذْهِبُهٗ بِالتَّوَكُّلِ ۔

وَمَا رُوِيَ اَنَّهٗ عَلَيْهِ الصَّلٰوةُ وَالسَّلَامُ قَالَ الشُّؤْمُ فِي الْمَرْاَةِ وَالدَّارِ وَالْفَرَسِ فَهُوَ عَلٰى سَبِيْلِ الْفَرْضِ لِمَا قَالَ عَلَيْهِ الصَّلٰوةُ وَالسَّلَامُ وَاِنْ تَكُنِ الطِّيَرَةُ فِيْ شَيْءٍ فَفِي الدَّارِ وَ الْفَرَسِ وَالْمَرْاَةِ ۔

اَعُوْذُ بِاللّٰهِ مِنَ الشَّيْطٰنِ الرَّجِيْمِ ۔

قَالُوْا طَآئِرُكُمْ مَّعَكُمْ اَئِنْ ذُكِّرْتُمْ بَلْ اَنْتُمْ قَوْمٌ مُّسْرِفُوْنَ ۝

CONCERNING WHAT IS BEING DONE IN RABEE-UL-AWWAL

All praise is due to Allah Who is sufficient for all and everything. He is the One who through His perfect attributes become manifest and in His Being is concealed. We bear witness that there is no being worthy of worship except Allah alone, without any partner or associate and we bear witness that Sayeduna Muhammad ﷺ is His servant and messenger, the chosen one. May Allah's salutations and blessings be upon him, and his family and upon his companions, whose uttering were indeed pure.

Thereafter, O muslims, the month of Rabee-ul-Awwal has drawn near and dawned, during which many people have become accustomed to celebrate the birthday of the Holy Prophet in various gatherings. And now it is our intention to clarify the position (as to the permissibility or prohibited nature of this act). Hence we state that in the books of Bukhary and Muslim it is mentioned that Rasulullah ﷺ said: "There are two raka'ahs salaah before Maghrib salaah." (This was repeated thrice and on the third occasion he added: "For those who so desire." This last phrase indicated that Rasulullah ﷺ wanted to point out that this was not to be an established practice and certainly not compulsory. To make it obligatory would thus be wrong).

There are many other proofs and arguments in this regard: The eminent scholars of Islam have a consensus on the point that if non-rewardable acts are considered to be rewardable acts, it would amount to making a change in the deen. Similarly it amounts to changing the deen if the optional deeds are considered to be compulsory. If this noble remembrance of the Rasul (in the form of the Mowlood Shareef) takes place without any special conditions attached to it, there is still no way that such celebrations can be considered to be within the limits of the Shariah. And if these celebrations have such special conditions attached to then and a person considers them to be compulsory to celebrate, such celebrations are innovations. And if one does not look upon such celebrations as being rewardable acts, but still entertains the act, this too is near to being an innovation. As such both these acts are prohibited as all non-permissible deeds should be prohibited to various degrees of prohibition according to the beliefs held. Thus those who hold the belief of these celebrations being compulsory or those in whom there is fear of corruption, should be compulsorily prohibited while those free from such elements will be looked upon as an occasion that has been part of the process of time.

اَلْخُطْبَةُ الْحَادِيَةُ وَالْاَرْبَعُوْنَ فِي الرَّبِيْعَيْنِ

We notice the habit among people that they are more prone to attack and condemn those who abstain from these celebrations with greater vehemence than they would condemn those who abstain from the compulsory commandments. Such people prefer to see the prohibited acts increase without expressing any objection.

The difference of opinion between the latter day scholars is similar to the difference of the earlier scholars, for example, concerning practising on the hadeeth about keeping fast on Friday's alone.

Rasulullah ﷺ said: "Do not fix Friday night for optional prayers from amidst the other nights, nor fix the day of Friday for fasting amidst the other days, except if it be within the regular sequence set by any of you (for fasting)." (Muslim)

Similar is the difference among the scholars on the issue of the hajis stopping at Muhassab. Ibn Umar رضي الله عنه considered it sunnah, while Ibn Abbaas considered it as a mere stop for convenience." (Muslim)

The Shariah has many regulations. However if these celebrations are accompanied by various manifest evils or prohibited acts, then the verdict upon then is one of being nor permissible and prohibited.

This is also the verdict upon the celebration known as Haadi Ashar i.e., it the 11th day which occurs in Rabi-ul-thaani, the festival of Sheikh Abdul Qadir Jailani.

I seek refuge in Allah from the accursed Shaytaan.

Allah says: "Verily, O Muhammad ﷺ, We have elevated for you your mention."

CONCERNING THE MONTH OF RAJAB

All praise be to Allah Who took His servant Muhammad ﷺ on a night journey one night from the Holy Mosque in Makkah to the Masjid-ul-Aqsa in Jerusalem. And from there through the seven heavens. I bear witness that there is none deserving worship except Allah alone, without any partner or associate and I bear witness that Sayeduna Muhammad ﷺ is His servant and messenger, the best of all mankind. May Allay's salutations in abundance be upon him and his family and all his companions, who dispelled the darkness.

Thereafter, O muslims, the month of Rajab has downed upon us Rajab, the deaf one. During this month there are some special regulations concerning this month, some were important than others. When this month used to arrive, Rasulullah ﷺ used to pray: "O Allah great us the blessings of the months of Rajab and Sha'baan and guide us towards Ramaadaan." Secondly there is the fasting of certain of its days according to some reports. Some of these reports are with chairs of transmission reaching Rasulullah ﷺ yet are unauthentic and mostly weak in nature (due to defects concerning the narrators). Many of these reports are totally weak and even fabricated then also there is a report by Khara-shah who says: "I saw Umar bin Khattab ﷺ hitting the palms of people for fasting in Rajab, until they stopped fasting by eating."

Thirdly there is a Mowqoof report (which means a saying not correctly attributed to Rasulullah ﷺ but to one of his companions). Abu Hurayrah ﷺ reports: "A person who fasts on the 27th of Rajab, will be rewarded by Allah for a fast of sixty months."

اَلْخُطْبَةُ الثَّانِيَةُ وَالْاَرْبَعُوْنَ (۴۲) فِيْ مَا يَتَعَلَّقُ بِرَجَبَ

بِسْمِ اللّٰهِ الرَّحْمٰنِ الرَّحِيْمِ

اَلْحَمْدُ لِلّٰهِ الَّذِيْ اَسْرٰى بِعَبْدِهٖ لَيْلًا مِّنَ الْمَسْجِدِ الْحَرَامِ اِلَى الْمَسْجِدِ الْاَقْصٰى ثُمَّ مِنْهُ اِلَى السَّمٰوٰتِ الْعُلٰى وَاَشْهَدُ اَنْ لَّآ اِلٰهَ اِلَّا اللّٰهُ وَحْدَهٗ لَا شَرِيْكَ لَهٗ وَاَشْهَدُ اَنَّ سَيِّدَنَا وَمَوْلَانَا مُحَمَّدًا عَبْدُهٗ وَرَسُوْلُهٗ سَيِّدُ الْوَرٰى صَلَّى اللّٰهُ عَلَيْهِ وَعَلٰى اٰلِهٖ وَاَصْحَابِهِ الَّذِيْنَ كَشَفُوا الدُّجٰى وَسَلَّمَ تَسْلِيْمًا كَثِيْرًا كَثِيْرًا

اَمَّا بَعْدُ فَقَدْ حَانَ شَهْرُ رَجَبَ الْاَصَمِّ لَهٗ اَحْكَامٌ بَعْضُهَا مِنْ بَعْضٍ اَهَمُّ

فَمِنْهَا كَانَ رَسُوْلُ اللّٰهِ صَلَّى اللّٰهُ عَلَيْهِ وَسَلَّمَ اِذَا دَخَلَ رَجَبُ قَالَ اَللّٰهُمَّ بَارِكْ لَنَا فِيْ رَجَبَ وَشَعْبَانَ وَبَلِّغْنَا رَمَضَانَ

وَمِنْهَا الصَّوْمُ فِيْ بَعْضِ اَيَّامِهٖ تَخْصِيْصًا وَّفِيْهِ رِوَايَاتٌ

اَلْاَوَّلُ مَا رُوِيَ مَرْفُوْعًا وَّلَمْ يَصِحَّ مِنْهَا شَيْءٌ وَغَايَتُهُ الضُّعْفُ وَجُلُّهَا مَوْضُوْعٌ

وَالثَّانِيْ مَا عَنْ خَرَشَةَ قَالَ رَاَيْتُ عُمَرَ بْنَ الْخَطَّابِ يَضْرِبُ اَكُفَّ الرِّجَالِ فِيْ صَوْمِ رَجَبَ حَتّٰى يَضَعُوْهَا فِي الطَّعَامِ

وَالثَّالِثُ مَا هُوَ مَوْقُوْفٌ عَلٰى اَبِيْ هُرَيْرَةَ مَنْ صَامَ يَوْمَ سَبْعٍ وَّعِشْرِيْنَ مِنْ رَجَبَ كَتَبَ اللّٰهُ لَهٗ صِيَامَ سِتِّيْنَ شَهْرًا

A third report states that fasting is permissible, but it should not be performed with the belief that it is a sunnah, derived from Rasulullah ﷺ. But rather as a means of precaution, just in case it should be so. However the other reports make it clear that certain specific days of Rajab should not be fasted so as to protect oneself from misinterpreting the rules of Shariah. Mention must also be made of the 27th night of Rajab which has been fixed as a time of celebration during which lectures are delivered on the Mee'raj, which is an innovation by the general public and their leaders.

The verdict on this issue is similar to the verdict delivered in the sermon relating to the blessed birth of Rasulullah ﷺ.

I seek refuge in Allah from the accursed Shaytaan.

CONCERNING THE DEEDS OF THE MONTH OF SHA'BAAN

All praise be to Allah Who has fixed the sustenance (rizq) of His servants as well as their life-spans. And He has commanded that He be remembered and obeyed in the morning and the night. And I bear witness that there is none worthy of worship except Allah alone, without any partner or associate and I bear witness that Sayeduna Muhammad ﷺ is His servant and messenger, the leader of the men of virtue and perfection. May Allah's blessings be upon him and his family and companions who were the best of families and the best of companions.

Thereafter, O muslims, verily the month of Sha'baan has dawned over us as the fore-runner of the month of Ramadaan. This month has great blessings and virtues and attached to it are certain regulations. Listen to them and remember them.

1. Rasulullah ﷺ has said: "Keep taking notice of the crescent moon of Sha'baan, while awaiting Ramadaan." (Tirmithi)
2. Rasulullah ﷺ used to give considerable consideration to the month of Sha'baan more than any other month.(Abu Dawood)
3. And Rasulullah ﷺ said: "Do not precede Ramadaan with voluntary fast one or two days before Ramadaan except if it was a man who had acquired the habit of fasting on a specific day of the week, (then if that day comes one or two days before Ramadaan), let him fast." (Bukhary)
4. Rasulullah ﷺ said: "On this night (the twenty seventh night of Sha'baan) it is decreed every soul that will be born during this year and so also will be decreed every soul that will pass away and so also their deeds are being lifted upto Allah and on this night their sustenance is decreed.

اَلْخُطْبَةُ الثَّالِثَةُ وَالْاَرْبَعُوْنَ فِيْ اَعْمَالِ شَعْبَانَ

بِسْمِ اللّٰهِ الرَّحْمٰنِ الرَّحِيْمِ

اَلْحَمْدُ لِلّٰهِ الَّذِيْ قَدَّرَ الْاَرْزَاقَ وَالْاٰجَالَ ۚ وَاَمَرَ بِذِكْرِهٖ وَطَاعَتِهٖ بِالْغُدُوِّ وَالْاٰصَالِ ۚ وَاَشْهَدُ اَنْ لَّآ اِلٰهَ اِلَّا اللّٰهُ وَحْدَهٗ لَاشَرِيْكَ لَهٗ وَاَشْهَدُ اَنَّ مُحَمَّدًا عَبْدُهٗ وَرَسُوْلُهٗ سَيِّدُ اَهْلِ الْفَضْلِ وَالْكَمَالِ ۚ صَلَّى اللّٰهُ عَلَيْهِ وَعَلٰٓى اٰلِهٖ وَاَصْحَابِهٖ خَيْرِ اَصْحَابٍ وَّاٰلٍ ۚ وَسَلَّمَ تَسْلِيْمًا كَثِيْرًا ۚ

اَمَّا بَعْدُ فَقَدْ حَانَ شَهْرُ شَعْبَانَ ۚ الَّذِيْ هُوَ مُقَدِّمَةُ رَمَضَانَ ۚ لَهٗ بَرَكَاتٌ وَّفَضَائِلُ ۚ وَيَتَعَلَّقُ بِهٖ بَعْضُ الْمَسَائِلِ ۚ فَاسْمَعُوْهَا ۚ وَعُوْهَا ۚ

قَالَ رَسُوْلُ اللّٰهِ صَلَّى اللّٰهُ عَلَيْهِ وَسَلَّمَ اَحْصُوْا هِلَالَ شَعْبَانَ لِرَمَضَانَ ۚ

وَكَانَ عَلَيْهِ الصَّلٰوةُ وَالسَّلَامُ يَتَحَفَّظُ مِنْ شَعْبَانَ مَالَا يَتَحَفَّظُ مِنْ غَيْرِهٖ ۚ

وَقَالَ عَلَيْهِ الصَّلٰوةُ وَالسَّلَامُ فِيْ هٰذِهِ اللَّيْلَةِ يَعْنِيْ لَيْلَةَ النِّصْفِ مِنْ شَعْبَانَ اَنْ يُّكْتَبَ كُلُّ مَوْلُوْدٍ بَنِيْ اٰدَمَ فِيْ هٰذِهِ السَّنَةِ ۚ وَفِيْهَا اَنْ يُّكْتَبَ كُلُّ هَالِكٍ فِيْ هٰذِهِ السَّنَةِ ۚ وَفِيْهَا تُرْفَعُ اَعْمَالُهُمْ وَفِيْهَا تُنْزَلُ اَرْزَاقُهُمْ اَلْحَدِيْثَ

5. Rasulullah ﷺ also said: "When it is the fifteenth night of Sha'baan then keep the night awake by performing voluntary prayers and fast during the day for verily Allah descend with His mercy down to the lowest heaven at the time of sunset and proclaims: "Is there anyone begging for forgiveness that I may grant him forgiveness? Is there anyone begging for sustenance that I may grant him sustenance? Is there any one in difficulties and calamities that I may cure him?" and so Allah continues to shower His blessings until the moment dawn comes along."

The author of "Maa thabata bihis sunnah" says: "Of the most detestable innovations is the custom which had become widespread in most parts of India of lighting lamps and placing these on the houses and the walls. Similarly there is the habit of other forms of amusement and the burning of fireworks. Perhaps its true that this has been taken from the customs of the Hindus of lighting lamps at the time of Divali.

I seek refuge in Allah from the accursed Shaytaan.

Allah says: "We have revealed it on a blessed night, on which every wise command is made as a command from our presence. Verily, We are continuously sending prophets for man's guidance."

CONCERNING THE VIRTUES OF RAMADAAN

All praise to Allah Who is most gracious to His servant in His favours, with which He remove from them the cunning plans of the Shaytaan and towards his hopes and efforts as He made fasting a protective covering and a shield for His true friends and through it has opened for them the doors of paradise. And I bear witness that there is no being worthy of worship except Allah alone, without any partner or associate and I bear witness that Sayeduna Muhammad ﷺ is His servant and messenger, the leader of all creation and the one who placed before us the sunnah. May Allah's choicest salutation descend upon him and his family as well as his companions, those men of tremendous insight and minds able to discern the distinction between right and wrong.

Thereafter, O muslims, verily the month of Ramadaan has drawn near, the month wherein the Holy Qur'an was revealed as a guidance to all mankind and with clear distinction between what is right and what is wrong. So approach this month with longing and eagerness. And listen carefully to what Sayeduna Salmaan ﷺ has reported: He narrates: "Rasulullah ﷺ addressed us on the last day of Shabaan, saying: "O people, a great month has dawned over you, a blessed month wherein is found a night better and more virtuous than a thousand months. It is a month wherein Allah has made it obligatory that the days be fasted and that the night be spent in prayers was made an optional act. He who draws near to Allah by performing any good act in this month shall be as if he had done an obligatory act in any other time. And whosoever performs any obligatory act there in shall be like him who had performed seventy similar acts in another time.

This is a month of patience and the reward for patience us paradise. It is the month of sympathy with one's fellow men and it is a month wherein the sustenance of a believer is increased. He who gives a fasting person something with which to break the fast, for him that will be a forgiveness for his sins and a freedom for him from the fire of hell and for him will be the reward equal to that person's fasting without that person's rewards being lessened at all."

Rasulullah ﷺ replied: "Allah gives the same reward to him who gives a fasting person a sip of milk or a date or a mouthful of water." The person who gives a fasting person to eat to his satisfaction, Allah will cause him to drink from my fountain on the day of Qiyaamah where after he will not become thirsty until he enters paradise." And this is a month, the first part of which brings the decent of mercy from Allah. The second part brings forgiveness and the third part brings immunity from the fire of hell. And whosoever lightens the burden of his slave in this month Allah will pardon him and set him free from the fire of hell."

CONCERNING THE FASTING OF RAMADAAN

All praise be to Allah Who has blessed us by guiding us to the straight path and blessed us with true realisation. And He is the One Who made us of the people of Islam and of the people of faith. We thank Allah and glorify His Name and He had caused a great month to dawn over us called Ramadaan, during which sins are being burnt up and where difficulties are being dispelled. We bear witness with the heart and the tongue that there is no other being worthy of worship Allah alone, without any partner or associate and we bear witness that Sayeduna Muhammad ﷺ our master and leader is the servant and the messenger of Allah, the one who has indicated to us the things that will cause us to enter paradise.

May Allah's salutations be upon him and his family as well as his companions, the most excellent among the people of Imaan abundant salutations.

Thereafter, O muslims, the month of Ramadaan has begun over us. So, make use of the opportunity to take hold of its blessings by being obedient to Allah and by abstaining from sins in the manner in which Rasulullah ﷺ has admonished us to do till the end of time.

1. Rasulullah ﷺ said: "When the first night of the month of Ramadaan enters, the Shaytaan and the rebellious jinns are being imprisoned, the doors of hell are being closed and the doors of paradise are opened without one door being closed and a caller from the heavens proclaim: "O seeker after good proceed forward towards good. O seeker after evil, desist from evil." And Allah has many souls that He sets free from the fire of Jahannam. This happens on every night of Ramadaan." (Tirmithi, Ibn Majah, Ahmad)

2. And Rasulullah ﷺ said: "Every good deed of the sons of Adam is rewarded from ten times to seven hundred times". Allah says: "Fasting is for Me and I Myself will give the reward, because man leaves his desires and his food aside for My sake. And verily the fasting person shall have two

CONCERNING TRAAWEEH SALAAH AND THE RECITATION OF THE QURAN

All praise be to Allah, Who has made the days of Ramadaan brightened up through the fasting and has made the nights, lightened up with the standing in prayer. We bear witness that there is no other being worthy of worship except Allah alone, without any partner or associate and we bear witness that Sayedu:a Muhammad ﷺ is His servant and messenger, the one who brought the good news that, this month, the first portion thereof brings forgiveness, the second thereof is for Allah's mercy and the last part thereof brings freedom and immunity from the punishment of the fire of hell.

May Allah's salutations be upon him in abundance and upon his family and his companions who ruled over people with justice and excellence and guided them towards the abode of peace.

Thereafter, O muslims, verily of the deeds of Ramadaan is the staying awake by night and the standing in prayer, reciting the Holy Qur'an. And to fix specific times and performing acts of ibaadah in moderation both these acts are allowed on conditions that no loss or disturbance is brought about in the execution of ibaadah.

1. Rasulullah ﷺ said: "Verily Allah has made compulsory on you the fasting of Ramadaan and I have made it a sunnah for you to stand in prayer at night. So whoever fasts the month and performs the qiyaam salaah with faith and the sincere intention to acquire reward he will cast aside his sins, ending without sins like the day his mother gave birth to him."

   (Nasai)

2. Rasulullah ﷺ also said: "Whosoever fasts the month of Ramadaan with faith and with the intention of acquiring reward, for him will be forgiven all the sins that had gone before. And who so ever performs traaweeh salaah with faith and with the intention of acquiring reward, for him will be forgiven all sins that had gone before."(Bukhary, Muslim)

3. Rasulullah ﷺ also said: "Fasting and the Quran will intercede on behalf of the servant of Allah. Fasting will say: "Lord, I have prohibited him from eating and from his desires by day. Hence accept my intercession on his behalf. The Quran will say: "Lord, I have prevented him from sleeping by night, so accept my intercession on his behalf. So their intercession will be accepted."

4. Rasulullah ﷺ also said: "Everyone who performs salaah has an angel on his right-hand side and another on his left-hand side. If he completes the salaah, these two take the salaah to the heavens and if he does not complete the salaah, they strike his face with it (i.e., the salaah is rejected)."

(Durr-e-Manthoor)

5. Rasulullah ﷺ was questioned regarding this verse: "And recite the Qur'an in tarteel" he answered: "Recite the Quran correctly and clearly and do not recite it in breaks as you would scatter dates. And recite it not in rhythm as you do in reciting poetry and do not intend to complete it speedily, by all the time awaiting the end of the Surah."

I seek refuge in Allah from the accursed Shaytaan.

And Allah says: "O you who are wrapped up in a mantle, stand up in prayer during the night or decrease a little or increase on it and recite the Qur'an with tarteel (observing all the rules for correct recitation)."

CONCERNING LAYLATUL QADR AND EETIKAAF

All praise to Allah Who has granted us Laylatul Qadr which is more excellent than a thousand months and is the most virtuous of all spans of time and for this time He had prescribed for us the eetikaaf (seclusion) in the houses of Allah, the Merciful One.

I bear witness that there is none deserving of worship except Allah alone, without any partner or associate and I bear witness that our master and leader Sayeduna Muhammad ﷺ is His servant and messenger, the master of those residing in the coutryside and in the towns. May Allah's salutations and blessings be upon him and his family as well as his companions, who were the masters among men of faith and knowledge.

Thereafter, O muslims, we have now reached the last ten days of Ramadaan. This is the time for eetikaaf (i.e., seclusion) in the mosque and it is the time for seeking the night of Laylatul Qadr so as to gain reward and the pleasure of Allah. And with regard to these two the Qur'an and the hadeeth have adequately expounded their virtues. Allah says: "And do not associate with your wives while you are in eetikaaf in the mosques." And Allah says: "Verily Laylatul Qadr is more excellent than a thousand months."

1. Rasulullah ﷺ said: "Whosoever stands in prayer on the night of Laylatul Qadr with faith and the intention of gaining reward, for him will be forgiven all his past sins." (Bukhary, Muslim)

2. Rasulullah ﷺ said: "It (the month of Ramadaan) contains one night which is better than a thousand months. And whoever is deprived of its blessings has been deprived (of all good)." (Ahmad, Nisai)

3. Rasulullah ﷺ said: "When it is the night of Laylatul Qadr, Jibreel descends with a group of angels and they make duaah for every person standing or sitting in the remembrance of Allah." (Baihaqi)

اَلْخُطْبَةُ السَّابِعَةُ وَالْاَرْبَعُوْنَ فِیْ لَیْلَةِ الْقَدْرِ وَالْاِعْتِکَافِ

بِسْمِ اللّٰہِ الرَّحْمٰنِ الرَّحِیْمِ

وَقَالَ عَلَیْہِ الصَّلٰوةُ وَالسَّلَامُ اِذَا کَانَ لَیْلَةُ الْقَدْرِ نَزَلَ جِبْرَئِیْلُ فِیْ کَبْکَبَةٍ مِّنَ الْمَلٰٓئِکَةِ یُصَلُّوْنَ عَلٰی کُلِّ عَبْدٍ قَآئِمٍ اَوْ قَاعِدٍ یَّذْکُرُ اللّٰہَ عَزَّوَجَلَّ ۚ

4. According to another hadeeth Rasulullah ﷺ is reported to have said with regard to the person in eetikaaf; "He refrains from sins and good deeds are recorded in his favour as a person who does all types of good deeds." (Ibn Majah)

5. Rasulullah ﷺ said: "Search for Laylatul Qadr in the last ten days of Ramadaan." (Bukhary)

Saeed bin Musayyib ﷺ says: "The person who is present on the night of Laylatul Qadr in congregation for salaah, has definitely taken his share of its blessings." It is as if the view of this great man is an interpretation of the hadeeth: "The one who is deprived of its goodness is indeed a deprived one." Thus he means that a person who is present on this night is not a deprived person.

I seek refuge in Allah from the accursed Shaytaan.

And Allah says: "I swear by the Lord of the break of day, And by the ten nights of Zil Hijjah, And by the even pairs and the odd single ones And by the night when it passes away."

وَقَالَ عَلَيْهِ الصَّلٰوةُ وَالسَّلَامُ فِي الْمُعْتَكِفِ هُوَ يَعْتَكِفُ الذُّنُوْبَ وَيُجْرٰى لَهٗ مِنَ الْحَسَنَاتِ كَعَامِلِ الْحَسَنَاتِ كُلِّهَا۔

CONCERNING THE AHKAAM OF EIDUL FITR

All praise be to Allah Who has granted us the ability to complete the month of Ramadaan. We glorify Him and magnify His name for having guided us to the attributes of Islam. We bear witness that there is no other being worthy of worship except Allah alone, and we bear witness that our master and leader Sayeduna Muhammad ﷺ is the servant and the trusted messenger of Allah. May Allah's salutations be upon him and his family all of them.

Thereafter, O muslims, verily the month of patience has dawn to its close and Eidul Fitr has dawned over us. Both these two have special deeds of obedience towards Allah which must be observed no neglect and no unmindfulness will be tolerated in the execution of these acts. Of these is to compensate for what we have neglected in those holy days so that we do not spite our noses in the hereafter.

1. Rasulullah ﷺ said: "May that person be humiliated over whom the month of Ramadaan entered and then departed before he acquired forgiveness." And of the adaab of Eid is to stay awake during the night proceeding Eid being busy with Ibaadah.

2. Rasulullah ﷺ said: "Whoever stays awake (in ibaadah) on the two nights proceeding the Eids with the hope of acquiring reward from Allah, his heart will not die (of fear) on the day when all hearts will die.

   Another regulation is to distribute the sadaqatul-fitr on behalf of every child and adult of one's household.

3. Rasulullah ﷺ said: "One sau' of flour or wheat on behalf of every free man in one's family, or one's slave, male or female.

4. Ibn Umar ﷺ reports: "Rasulullah ﷺ made zakaatul fitr compulsory—one sau' of dates or a sau' of barley and he ordered that it be distributed before the people proceed for the salaah of Eid. And of the ahkaam of Eid is the salaah of Eid and the two sermons of Eid. It is reported that Rasulullah ﷺ used to proceed on the morning of Eidul Fitr and on reaching the musallah the first thing he did was to perform the salaatul Eid. Then he used to turn towards the people while they were seated in their rows and he gave a sermon wherein he advised them and ordered them and instructed them.

I seek refuge in Allah from the accursed Shaytaan.

And Allah says: "Allah desires ease for you and He does not desire difficulty for you and He desires that you should complete the number of days and magnify His name for that He had guided you and that perhaps you will be grateful."

CONCERNING HAJ AND THE VISIT TO MADINAH

All praise be to Allah Who has made the Ancient House (Kaaba) as a place of refuge and a place of safety for mankind. And He has honoured the House by relating it to Himself and granting it special honour, making it a sanctuary for mankind out of His grace. I bear witness that there is no other being worthy of worship except Allah alone and I bear witness that Sayeduna Muhammad ﷺ is the servant and messenger of Allah, the prophet of mercy and the leader of this Ummah. May Allah's salutations be upon him and his family and his companions those leaders guiding towards truth and the leaders of mankind.

Thereafter, O muslims, verily the month of haj has arrived with regard to which Allah says: "Haj is performed in the well-known months."

And Rasulullah ﷺ said: "Verily the haj is performed in the known months."

Allah says: "And it is encumbent upon men that for Allah's sake they should perform haj at the House of Allah, for those having the means to do so."

1. Rasulullah ﷺ said: "Whoever is not prevented from performing haj by a manifest necessity, or a tyrant ruler or a preventing illness, and he passes away without performing haj may die if he so wishes as a Jew or if he so wishes as a Christian."
2. Rasulullah ﷺ said: "Whoever performs haj and did not commit any obscenity nor committed any sinful deed, will return (free from sin) like the day his mother gave birth to him." (Bukhary, Muslim)
3. Rasulullah ﷺ performed four umrahs all of them in the month of Zil Qa'da except the umrah which he performed with his haj."

4. Rasulullah ﷺ said: "Follow haj and Umrah with each other for verily the two of them remove poverty and sins."And of the deeds which add to the excellence of haj is to visit the grave of Rasulullah ﷺ, the most noble of all the inmates of the grave. Many reports have reached us regarding the great merit of this act and the chains of transmission of some of these reports are Hasan.

Rasulullah ﷺ said: "Whoever visits my grave for him my intercession will be encumbent." And now I inform you of something which is very important And that is that the month of Zil Qa'da which follows Shawwaal is one of the months of haj and because it was the month of four of Rasulullah's ﷺ umrahs, therefor, there can be no doubt as to the good fortune and the blessings of this month. How most unfortunate is the view of those people, who view this month as a month of ill omen. That can only be the view of the ignorant one's who are ignorant of the rules of Shariah.

I seek refuge in Allah from the accursed Shaytaan.

Allah says: "And announce the haj for the benefit of people, they will come to you on foot and upon every lean camel, travelling along every deep valley."

CONCERNING THE DEEDS OF ZIL HIJ

All praise be to Allah Who but for His Grace, we would not have been guided a right. And had it not been for His bounties we would not have given charity, nor performed salaah. And neither would we have fasted, nor sacrificed animals.

We bear witness that there is none deserving of worship except Allah alone, without any partner or associate And we bear witness that Sayeduna Muhammad ﷺ is His servant and messenger through whom tranquility descended over us. And we are prepared to sacrifice ourselves, our families for his sake. Had it not been for him we would not have recognised the truth and we would not have understood. May Allah's salutations be upon him and his family and upon his companions, who witnessed the battles of Badr and Hunain.

Thereafter, O muslims, verily the month of Zil Hij has dawned over us. The Shariah has laid down certain regulations regarding this month. The most important of these is the sacrifice of animals and the rules, regarding the sacrifice will be dealt with in the khutbah on the tenth of this month. Second of the ahkaam of this month is the fasting of the ten days, meaning thereby the fasting of the ninth day and the spending of the nights in prayers and other good works.

1. Rasulullah ﷺ said: "There are no other days that Allah loves it more that He should be worshipped than the ten days of Zil Hij. The fast of every day is equal to the fasting of a year and the standing in prayer on one night is equal to the standing in prayer on the night of Laylatul Qadr, especially the fast of the day of Arafaat."

2. Rasulullah ﷺ said: "For the fast of the day of Arafaat, I have the hope in Allah that He will pardon all (minor) sins of the previous year and the following year."

اَلْخُطْبَةُ الْخَمْسُوْنَ (۵۰) فِيْ اَعْمَالِ ذِي الْحِجَّةِ

بِسْمِ اللّٰهِ الرَّحْمٰنِ الرَّحِيْمِ

اَلْحَمْدُ لِلّٰهِ الَّذِيْ لَوْلَا لُطْفُهٗ مَا اهْتَدَيْنَا، وَلَوْلَا فَضْلُهٗ مَا تَصَدَّقْنَا وَ لَاصَلَّيْنَا، وَلَاصُمْنَا وَلَاضَحَّيْنَا ، وَنَشْهَدُ اَنْ لَّآ اِلٰهَ اِلَّا اللّٰهُ وَحْدَهٗ لَا شَرِيْكَ لَهٗ وَنَشْهَدُ اَنَّ سَيِّدَنَا وَمَوْلَانَا مُحَمَّدًا عَبْدُهٗ وَرَسُوْلُهُ الَّذِيْ اُنْزِلَتْ بِهِ السَّكِيْنَةُ عَلَيْنَا عَلَيْهِ اَنْفُسَنَا وَاَهْلِيْنَا فِدَيْنَا، وَلَوْلَاهُ مَا عَرَفْنَا الْحَقَّ وَلَا دَرَيْنَا صَلَّى اللّٰهُ عَلَيْهِ وَسَلَّمَ وَعَلٰى اٰلِهٖ وَاَصْحٰبِهِ الَّذِيْنَ شَهِدُوْا بَدْرًا وَّحُنَيْنًا،

قَالَ فِيْهَا عَلَيْهِ الصَّلٰوةُ وَالسَّلَامُ صِيَامُ يَوْمِ عَرَفَةَ اَحْتَسِبُ عَلَى اللّٰهِ اَنْ يُّكَفِّرَ السَّنَةَ الَّتِيْ قَبْلَهٗ وَالسَّنَةَ الَّتِيْ بَعْدَهٗ وَ مِنْهَا التَّكْبِيْرُ دُبُرَ الصَّلٰوتِ الْمَكْتُوْبَاتِ،

3. And of the ahkaam of this time is the takbeer after every salaah. The Sahabi, Abdullah bin Umar ﷺ used to recite the takbeer after every compulsory salaah from the morning of the Day of Arafaat upto Asar salaah on the day of Nahr, saying: "Allahu Akbar Allahu Akbar La Ilaaha Illaallahu Wallahu Akbar Allahu Akbar Wa Lillaahil Hamd.

4. Sayeduna Ali ﷺ used to recite that takbeer from after Fajr on the day of Arafaat upto Asar salaah on the last day of tashreeq. (Athaarus Sunan and Ibn Abi Shaibah)

5. The night of Eid has to be spent by staying awake in zikr. And of the further ahkaam of Eidul Adhaa is the salaah of Eid and the two khutbahs. These are similar to the khutbahs mentioned in Eidul Fitr.

6. Rasulullah ﷺ said: "Whoever stays awake (for ibaadah) on the nights of the two Eids, his heart will not die (for fear) on the day when all hearts will die."

When Rasulullah ﷺ used to proceed for Eidul Fitr and Eidul Adhaa to the musallah the first thing that he did (on arriving there) was to perform the salaah. He then used to turn, facing the people, sitting in their lines and then he used to deliver a khutbah, advising them and instructing them.

I seek refuge in Allah from the accursed Shaytaan.

And Allah says: "By the oath of Fajr and by the ten nights (of Zil Hijjah) and the even and the odd."

وَكَانَ عَبْدُ اللّٰهِ يُكَبِّرُ مِنْ صَلٰوةِ الْفَجْرِ يَوْمَ عَرَفَةَ اِلٰى صَلٰوةِ الْعَصْرِ مِنْ يَوْمِ النَّحْرِ يَقُوْلُ اَللّٰهُ اَكْبَرُ اَللّٰهُ اَكْبَرُ لَآ اِلٰهَ اِلَّا اللّٰهُ وَاللّٰهُ اَكْبَرُ اَللّٰهُ اَكْبَرُ وَلِلّٰهِ الْحَمْدُ

EIDUL FITR

Allah is the greatest, Allah is the greatest. There is none worthy of worship except Allah alone and Allah is the greatest and to Allah be all praise. All praise be to Allah, the Great Benefactor, the Munificent, the Ruler, the Granter of grace, generosity and kindness. He is the Possessor of nobility, forgiveness and Granter of bounties. Allah is the Greatest, Allah is the Greatest. There is none worthy of worship except Allah and Allah is the Greatest and to Allah be all praise.

We bear witness that there is none worthy of worship except Allah alone, without any partner or associate and we bear witness that Sayeduna Muhammad ﷺ is His servant and messenger, the one who was sent to this world when disbelief had spread all over the lands. May Allah's salutations be upon him and his family and all his companions for as long as the sun and the moon shall shine and for as long as night and day shall alternate.

Allah is the Greatest, Allah is the Greatest. There is no other one worthy of worship except Allah and Allah is the Greatest, and to Allah be all praise.

Thereafter, O muslims, know verily that this day of yours is the Day of Eid. Verily on this day Allah shows to you the signs of His kindness that we may hope for the acquisition of high rank, forgiveness and pardon. Allah is the Greatest, Allah is the Greatest. There is no one worthy of worship except Allah and Allah is the Greatest. And to Allah be all praise.

1. Rasulullah ﷺ said: "Verily every people has a day of festival and this is our festival day." Allah is the Greatest, Allah is the Greatest. There is none worthy of worship except Allah and Allah is the Greatest, and to Allah be all praise."
2. Rasulullah ﷺ said: "When it is your day of Eid, the day when it is permissible to break the fast, then Allah boasts to the angels about the muslims. And Allah says: "O My angels, what is the reward of an employee who has completed his duty?" The angels reply: "His reward is that he should be fully recompensed for his work." Then Allah says: "My angels, they are my servants and my bondsmaiden who have fulfilled the duty upon them. They now come forth crying sincerely in dua. I swear by My Greatest, My Loftiness, My Honour and high rank that I will accept their pleas. Then He says: "Return now from here for I have pardoned you and have changed your evil deeds for good deeds."

3. Rasulullah ﷺ concludes: "Then they return, having been forgiven." Allah is the Greatest, Allah is the Greatest. There is no one worthy of worship except Allah and Allah is the Greatest and to Allah be all praise.

These are then the virtues of the day. As for ahkaams, e.g. the giving of the sadaqatul fitr, the salaah, the sermons, these have been dealth with in the khutbah before this one. There are however two points which still have to be mentioned. Allah is the Greatest, Allah is the Greatest. There is none worthy of worship except Allah and Allah is the Greatest and to be all praise.

The first point is this Rasulullah ﷺ said: "Whosoever fasts the month of Ramadaan and follows it up with the fasting of six days of Shawwaal shall be as one who fasted an entire lifetime." (Muslim)

4. Rasulullah ﷺ used to recite the takbeer between the two Khutbah and he used to abundantly recite it in the two Eid khutbas.

I seek refuge in Allah from the accursed Shaytaan.

And Allah says: "Verily successful indeed is he who purified his soul and mentioned the name of His Lord and performed the salaah."

EIDUL ADHAA

Allah is the Greatest. Allah is the Greatest. There is none worthy of worship except Allah. And Allah is the Greatest. And to Allah is due all praise.

All praise is due to Allah Who has fixed for every nation certain rites of (sacrifice) that they may remember His name for that which He had granted them of animals (fit for food and consumption), and Who has taught mankind His oneness and has commanded them towards submission unto Him. Allah is the Greatest Allah is the Greatest. There is none worthy of worship except Allah and Allah is the Greatest. And to Allah be all praise.

We bear witness that there is none worthy of worship except Allah alone, without any partner or associate. And We bear witness that Sayeduna Muhammad ﷺ is His servant and messenger who has guided us to the abode of peace. Allah is the Greatest. Allah is the Greatest. There is none worthy of worship except allah and Allah is the Greatest and to Allah be all praise. May Allah's salutations be upon him and his family and his companions who exerted themselves for the execution of the regulations of Islam and who spent their selves and their possessions in the path of Islam. And what an honour they received. May Allah's choicest blessings be upon them all in great abundance. Alalh is the Greatest. Allah is the Greatest. There is none worthy of worship except Allah and Allah is the Greatest. And to Allah is due to all praise.

Thereafter, O muslims, verily this day of yours is the day of Eid. Allah has laid down as a duty upon you together with other deeds (which had already passed in the khutbahs in the ten previous days) the sacrifice of sacrificial animals to be done with complete sincerity and clean intentions. And Rasulullah ﷺ has explained the obligatory nature of this act as well as the virtues attached to this act. And the Ulema of Islam has in their books explained the detailed masaa-il pertaining to this act. Allah is the Greatest. Allah is the Greatest. There is none worthy of worship except Allah and Allah is the Greatest. And to Allah be all praise.

1. Rasulullah ﷺ said: "The son of Adam عليه السلام does not perform any act on this day of Nahr, which is more beloved in the sight of Allah than slaughtering an animal whereby its blood flows and verily that animal will come forward with the reward of its horns, its hair and its hoofs. And verily its blood falls at a place in Allah's presence before falling on the ground. Therefore, be blessed in yourself for this act." Allah is the Greatest. Allah is the Greatest. There is none worthy of worship except Allah. And Allah is the Greatest. And to Allah be all praise."

2. The companions asked: "O messenger of Allah, what are these sacrifices?" Rasulullah ﷺ replied: "It is the sunnah of your father Ibraheem." Then they asked: "What reward is there in it for us?" Rasulullah ﷺ replied: "For every hair there is the reward of one good deed." They asked:" "And the wool?" He replied: "Every fibre of wool is equal to one good deed's reward." Allah is the Greatest. Allah is the Greatest. There is none worthy of worship except Allah and Allah is the Greatest. And to Allah be all praise.

3. Rasulullah ﷺ also said: Whoever has the means to sacrifice an animal and does not do so, let him not come near to our Musallah (for Eid salaah)." Allah is the Greatest. Allah is the Greatest. There is none worthy of worship except Allah and Allah is the Greatest and to Allah be all praise.

Abdullah bin Umar رضي الله عنه said: "Sacrifices of animals can be performed for two days after Eidul Adhaa. The same is reported from Sayeduna Ali رضي الله عنه.

These are some of the virtues of sacrifice. Go and learn the masaail of sacrifice from the learned Ulema.

I seek refuge in Allah from the accursed Shaytaan.

Allah says: "Neither the flesh of the sacrificial animals, nor the blood reaches Allah. It is the Taqwa (piety) from your side which reaches Him and so He have made these animals subservient to you that you may magnify the name of Allah for his having guided you and give glad tidings to those who do good."

THE KHUTBAH FOR ISTISQAU (WHEN PRAYING FOR RAIN)

All praise is due to Allah Who says in His Book: "He is the One Who sends the winds as a bringer of glad tidings of His coming mercy." "And We have sent down from the heavens pure water whereby We give life to the dead spots on earth. And We provide water for that which We created of animals and many peoples."

We bear witness that there is no being worthy of worship except Allah alone, without any partner or associate and we bear witness that our Master Sayeduna Muhammad ﷺ is His servant and messenger, through whose countenance the clouds sought to get water. May Allah's salutations be upon Him and His family and his companions who had reached the ultimate limits of Islam.

Thereafter, O muslims, O brothers, you have complained of the drought in your areas and about the absence of rain at its appropriate times. And verily Allah has commanded that you beg of Him and He promised to answer your pleas. All praise be to Allah, the Lord of the universe, the Beneficent, the Merciful.

Master of the day of judgement. There is no one worthy of worship except Allah. He does what He desires. While we are all of us in need. O Allah send down upon us rain and make that which you send down upon us a strengthening factor and the fulfilment of necessity. O Allah send down rain upon us which redresses our complaints, resulting in good towards us, giving benefit to us and not causing any harm, which will come quickly and not be delayed. O Allah let water reach your servants your animals. Spread Your mercy and through rain give new life to Your dead earth. O Allah grant us rain which redresses our complaints and comes in abundance, providing fertility, which falls generally, watering all round which is of moderate amount and flow continuously. O Allah bless us with rain and make us not of the disappointed and despondent ones.

O Allah verily Your servants and your towns and villages and animals are in great difficulties and distress of which we cannot complain to anyone but to You. O Allah raise for us from the earth crops and allow the udders of animals to provide us with abundant milk and let down upon us from the heavens rain and let the earth bless us with its produce.

O Allah lift up from us difficulty and hunger and nakedness and remove from us all hardship and calamities which no one else can remove from us. O Allah we seek forgiveness from You. Verily You are the forgiver, so send down rain upon us in abundance.

It is reported that Rasulullah ﷺ turned his cloak inside out while he was facing the qiblah on the mimbar, thus placing the right side on the left and the left side on the right. He also turned the inside to the outside and he outside to the inside. He continued to make duaa while facing the qiblah and the people did likewise.

I seek refuge in Allàh from the accursed Shaytaan.

And Allah says: "And He is the One Who sends the rains after they had become despondent. And He is the One Who spreads his mercy and He is the Guardian, the Praised."

THE SECOND KHUTBAH FOR EVERY FRIDAY

All praise is due to Allah. I seek help from Him and I seek forgiveness from Him and we seek refuge in Him from the evil within ourselves and from the evil of our deeds. Verily the one whom Allah guides a right none can mislead him and the one whom Allah allows to be misled and misguided, none can give guidance unto him. I bear witness that there is none deserving of worship except Allah alone, without any partner or associate and I bear witness that Sayeduna Muhammad ﷺ is His servant and messenger, whom He has sent with the truth as a bringer of good news and as a warner to warn of the coming of the Day of Reckoning. May Allah's choicest blessings be upon him and his family and companions unto eternity. Whosoever obeys Allah and His messenger is surely on the right path and whosoever disobeyed Allah and His messenger has not done any harm to anyone else but himself and he has not done any harm to Allah at all.

I seek protection in Allah from the accursed Shaytaan.

Allah says: "Verily Allah and His angels send salutations upon the nabi. O you who believe send salutations and blessings upon him.

O Allah send Your blessings upon Muhammad ﷺ, Your servant and Your messenger and send Your blessings and mercy upon the believing men and women and upon all Muslims both males and females. And bless Muhammad ﷺ and His wives and offspring.

Rasulullah ﷺ said: "The most merciful of my ummat to my Ummat is Abu Bakr ؓ. And the staunchest of them in the affairs of Allah is Umar ؓ. And the trust one of them in modesty is Uthmaan ؓ. And the Most just among them is Ali (Radhiyallahu anho). Fatima is the leader of the ladies of paradise. Hasan and Hussain (Radhiyallahu anhuma) are the leaders of the youth of paradise, Hamza ؓ is the lion of Allah and His rasool. O Allah forgive Abbaas ؓ and his son with a forgiveness that is both internal as well as external.

SERMON RECITED AT THE TIME OF A NIKAAH

All praise is due to Allah. We praise Him and seek help from Him and we seek forgiveness from Him. And we seek refuge in Him from the evil within ourselves and from the evil of our deeds. Whomsoever Allah has guided aright, none can lead him astray and Whomsoever He allows to go astray, none can provide him with guidance.

We bear witness that there is none worthy of worship except Allah and we bear witness that Sayeduna Muhammad ﷺ is His servant and messenger. May Allah's salutations be upon him and his family and all his companions.

"O you who believe, fear Allah with a fear that is due to Him and do not die except in this state that you are true muslims (in complete submission to Allah)."

"O people, fear your Lord Who has created you from one single soul and from it also created for him a mate and from the two of them spread forth many men and women. Fear Allah and be careful of your duty towards Him in whom you claim your rights from one another, and be mindful of your close family relationship. Verily Allah is at all times watchful over you."

"O you who believe, fear Allah and utter a word directed towards the right. He will repair for you your deeds and will forgive for you your faults. And whosoever obeys Allah and His messenger has indeed attained a great success.

THE DUAH OF AQEEQAH (AFTER THE SLAUGHTER OF A SHEEP AFTER THE BIRTH OF A CHILD)

If its a boy :-

O Allah this is the aqeeqah of ..... (name of the boy) Let its blood be a sacrifice for his blood, let its flesh be a sacrifice for his flesh and let its bones be a sacrifice for his bones and let its skin be a sacrifice for his skin and let its hair be a sacrifice for his hair.

If its a girl :-

O Allah this is the aqeeqah of ..... (name of the girl) Let its blood be a sacrifice for her blood, let its flesh be a sacrifice for her flesh and let its bones be a sacrifice for her bones and let its skin be a sacrifice for her skin and let its hair be a sacrifice for her hair.

"I have turned my face towards Him Who created heavens and earth as an upright Muslim and I am not of those who associate others unto Allah.

Verily my salaah, my sacrifice, my life and my death are only for Allah, the Lord of the Universe. He has no partner and to have this believe have I been ordered and I am the first of those to submit unto Him.

O Allah, this sacrificial animal is from You and this offering is for you.

In the Name of Allah and Allah is the Greatest. (Saying this slaughter the animal).

THE LIFE OF THE MUSLIMS
ASHRAWF ‘ALEE THANWI
INTRODUCTION

Rawsoolullawh (S) said:

Verily, Allawh will send for this Ummah at the beginning of every century a person who will renew (reform and renovate) for it the Deen.

Hadhrawt Hakeemul Ummat Maulana Ashrawf ‘Alee Thanwi (R’A) was 1 such Mujaddidd (Reformer) as is mentioned in the Hadeeth of Rawsoolullawh (S). The condition of the Ummah at all levels and in all spheres of life is dismal and deplorable. The Ummah is grounded in the quagmire of decadence. Its state of dishonourable existence is indeed heart-rending to those who understand the value of Islam and the true position of the followers of Islam. The way of life of the Ummah in present times and the Islam handed down by Muhammadd-ur-Rawsoolullawh-(S) 1434 years ago are entities widely divergent and pole apart. There is extremely little affinity between the present Ummah and the Islam of the Sahabah of Rawsoolullawh (S). Spiritually, morally, culturally, socially, and politically, the Muslim Nation has fallen to the lowest ebb. The Muslim Nation is bankrupt in all spheres of its life in relation to Islam. The pitiable condition of the Nation of Islam besides its stagnation in the morass of corruption and degeneration in which it flounders is its steady sinking into greater destruction. The Ummah is smitten with some incapacitating disease that had destroyed its moral and spiritual fibre that had sapped its lifeblood and has made Muslims the slaves of the Kuffar. The disease has brought the Ummah crashing from its position of grandeur and glory that once was its capital. The former grandeur of the Ummah was raised on the foundations of the highest kind of spirituality and morality. This spirituality and morality that constituted the springboard from which the Ummah of Islam took off in its flight of glory to attain the loftiest pedestals, pinnacles of grandeur, and power was the Rope of Allawh – that Habblullawh stated in the following Ayah of the Qur’an Shareef:

وَاعْتَصِمُوا بِحَبْلِ اللّهِ جَمِيعًا وَلاَ تَفَرَّقُوا...

103. And hold fast, all together, by the rope which Allah (stretches out for you), and be not divided among yourselves;

...وَاذْكُرُوا نِعْمَةَ اللّهِ عَلَيْكُمْ إِذْ كُنتُمْ أَعْدَاء...

...and remember with gratitude Allah's favour on you;

...فَأَلَّفَ بَيْنَ قُلُوبِكُمْ فَأَصْبَحْتُم بِنِعْمَتِهِ إِخْوَانًا...

...for you were enemies and He joined your hearts in love, so that by His grace, you became brethren;

...وَكُنتُمْ عَلَى شَفَا حُفْرَةٍ مِّنَ النَّارِ فَأَنقَذَكُم مِّنْهَا...

...and you were on the brink of the pit of fire, and He saved you from it.

...كَذَلِكَ يُبَيِّنُ اللّهُ لَكُمْ آيَاتِهِ لَعَلَّكُمْ تَهْتَدُونَ ( )

Thus Does Allah Make His Signs clear to you: that you may be guided.

Since the Ummah, in the truest sense of the command, in its early stages gripped this Habblullawh with might and power, it took hold of the powerful and unbreakable Divine Bond stated in the following Ayah:

...وَلْتَكُن مِّنكُمْ أُمَّةٌ يَدْعُونَ إِلَى الْخَيْرِ وَيَأْمُرُونَ بِالْمَعْرُوفِ وَيَنْهَوْنَ عَنِ الْمُنكَرِ...

104. Let there arise out of you a band of people inviting to all that is good, enjoining what is right, and forbidding what is wrong;

...وَأُوْلَـئِكَ هُمُ الْمُفْلِحُونَ ( )

...they are the ones to attain felicity.

But alas! The disease has ruined the Ummah. The Ummah is lying sprawled and prostrate, not in Sujoodd but on its Face at the feet of the Kuffar to be buffeted and manipulated in the conspiracy to fulfil the desires of the Kuffar. No longer is the Ummah holding on to the Rope of Allawh. In Hayatul Muslimeen or the Life of the Muslims, Hadhrawt Hakeemul Ummat diagnosis the disease of the Ummah and provides the prescription and the remedy for the sure cure of the Ummah. The prescription is the result of the diagnosis of one who has been sent by Allawh Ta'ala for this purpose. The remedy offered is not a personal concept, not some new-fangled product of the human mind gone astray. It is the remedy given by Rawsoolullawh (S). Then the great Mujaddidd offers this divine prescription. Since the disease has gripped and blinded the Ummah at all levels, this prescription offered in Hayatul-Muslimeen is for the entire Ummah. It is in fact the true and only panacea for the ills of the Ummah. It is the one and only alchemy of happiness and success for this Ummah that although following the norms and cultures of the Kuffar, still positively asserts its allegiance to Allawh Azza Wa Jall. Since Hayatul Muslimeen is written for all Muslims, Hadhrawt Hakeemul Ummah had endeavoured to keep it as simple as possible so that the Muslim masses may easily comprehend. Simplicity is the thread that runs throughout the book. In fact, the greater portion of the book consists of Qur’an and Hadeeth narrations as the Qur’an and Hadeeth were the foundations on which the superstructure of Islam and the Ummah's glory were erected by the Sahabah (R). The remedy offered by Mujaddidd Hadhrawt Hakeemul Ummat (R’A) is simple, divine, the one and only cure, the certain cure for the Ummah if only the Ummah can rise to the occasion and accept the remedy!

THE LIFE OF THE MUSLIMS
THE TRANSLATION OF THE KHUTBAH

All praise is due to Allawh Who Has revealed in His Kitabb in Section 15 of Soorawh An'am:122:

أَوَ مَن كَانَ مَيْتًا فَأَحْيَيْنَاهُ وَجَعَلْنَا لَهُ نُورًا يَمْشِي بِهِ فِي النَّاسِ...

122. Can he who was dead, to whom We gave life, and a Light whereby he can walk amongst men, be like him who is in the depths of darkness, from which he can never come out?

...كَمَن مَّثَلُهُ فِي الظُّلُمَاتِ لَيْسَ بِخَارِجٍ مِّنْهَا...

...كَذَٰلِكَ زُيِّنَ لِلْكَافِرِينَ مَا كَانُوا يَعْمَلُونَ ( )

Thus to those without faith their own deeds seem pleasing.

Salaam and Durood upon His Rawsool whom He ennobled with His Kalam (Speech – the Qur'an). Allawh Ta'ala says in Soorawh Shuraw:52:

وَكَذَٰلِكَ أَوْحَيْنَا إِلَيْكَ رُوحًا مِّنْ أَمْرِنَا مَا كُنتَ تَدْرِي مَا الْكِتَابُ وَلَا الْإِيمَانُ...

52. And thus have We, by Our command, sent inspiration (Rooh) to you: you know not (before) what was Revelation, and what was Faith;

...وَلَٰكِن جَعَلْنَاهُ نُورًا نَّهْدِي بِهِ مَنْ نَّشَاءُ مِنْ عِبَادِنَا...

...but We have made the (Qur'án) a Light, wherewith We guide such of Our servants as We will;

...وَإِنَّكَ لَتَهْدِي إِلَىٰ صِرَاطٍ مُّسْتَقِيمٍ ( )

...and verily thou dost guide (men) to the Straight Way–

He (Muhammad) called his Ummah to the munificent Thawabb of it (Wahee). Allawh Ta'ala says:

O people of 'Eeman! Answer Allawh and the Rawsool when they call you towards that which will enliven you.

Muhammadd (S) steered the Ummah towards the lofty and glorious heights of Wahee. Allawh Ta'ala says:

They (the true Believers) – Allawh has established 'Eeman in their hearts and has aided them with a Rooh (spiritual power) from Him.

Verily, Allawh Ta'ala says:

'Whoever practices righteousness be it male or female, and he (or she) is a Mu'min, most assuredly We shall grant him (or her) a prosperous worldly life and (in the Akhirawh) We shall reward them for the virtuous deeds they practised.

Whoever turns away from My Remembrance, verily for him is adversity (even before Qiyamah, i.e. in the grave) and We will resurrect him blind on the Day of Qiyamah.

Regarding the people of Jahannum, Allawh Ta'ala says:

Neither will they die therein nor will they be alive.

Thus, the life in the Fire will be a life of misery in which there will be no comfort and prosperity. Although that life will not be death, it will also not be life. Based on these Qur'anic Ayat and numerous others, the authoritative (Muhaqqiqeen) Mufassireen have asserted that true spiritual life and the life of the Hereafter as well as the worldly life are rights that belong exclusively to the obedient servants of Allawh Ta'ala. This conclusion is manifest from the many Qur'anic verses. In spite of the clarity of this issue, our Muslim brethren have become grossly forgetful of it and they behave as if they have never heard of the basis and proofs of this claim of the Mufassireen. Their indifference is so stark that one gains the impression that this matter and its proofs never even crossed their minds. The two kinds of existence mentioned earlier are the worldly life and the life of the Akhirawh. Regarding the Akhirawh, they (our brethren) do recognise to a degree that it is exclusive for the obedient servants of Allawh Ta'ala. But as far as the life of this world is concerned, the thought of it being the exclusive right of the obedient servants of Allawh Ta'ala is exceptionally remote from their minds. Thus, throughout the world we observe avalanches and mountains of hardship and misfortune continuously descending and crashing upon Muslims. Despite this calamitous situation, the causes and the remedy have not occurred to anyone. Those who attempt to devise some remedy for this state of degradation and plan to salvage the situation are confronted with utter and total failure because they have failed to diagnose the disease. An erroneous diagnosis results in an erroneous prescription of a remedy. Hence, the disease instead of curing deteriorates more and more. The natural consequence of such erroneous, misguided and unprincipled plans and schemes devised to extricate the Ummah from the morass of degradation is nothing other than the deterioration of the disease. However, it is seen that failure upon failure does not deter the misguided diagnosers who intransigently believe in the rectitude of their prescriptions of error. The cause of this practical ignorance and misguidance is intellectual ignorance. These practitioners do not fully acknowledge the Divine declarations of the Qur'an and Ahadeeth that have pinpointed the root causes of the calamities that have overtaken the Ummah with such disastrous consequences as we behold. They proclaim that they have 'Eeman in them. What then is the meaning of their partial acknowledgement? 'Eeman in Allawh and His Rawsool means to acknowledge them and believe them to be truthful in every aspect, every statement and deed. But, partial acceptance of some statements and rejection of some fall within the scope of the following Ayah:

What! Do you believe in part of the Book and reject part of the Book?

It is thus imperative that attention be drawn to the existence of this colossal ignorance and negligence so that the causes underlying the disease may be ascertained and the correct remedy prescribed. Proofs, both rational and narration-al as well as observation and experience have established beyond the slightest vestige of doubt that recognition of the causes of our ailments that have afflicted us in this age, as well as the remedy and cure for these ills are confined to the auspicious instructions of Rawsoolullawh (S). This is a claim that we make without the slightest fear of being contradicted. Whoever will believe in the correctness of Rawsoolullawh (S)'s diagnosis and practise in accordance with his prescription will acknowledge the efficacy and swiftness of cure of such divine remedies. He will be convinced of the efficacy of such remedies and wholeheartedly submit to the divine treatment. Rawsoolullawh (S) conveyed his Message to humankind with the greatest of affection and clarity. There exists no ambiguity in it. Now, application of the prescription offered by Rawsoolullawh (S) depends on the fortune and misfortune of people. Those who decide to accept the prescription will be fortunate and successful while those who reject it will be encumbered with misfortune and failure. Whoever in the past did accept and utilise the divine prescription had attained rectitude, success and prosperity. Muslims who have neglected the divine prescription despite their love for Allawh and Rawsoolullawh (S) have nevertheless been blessed. The reason for them being blessed in spite of their negligence is their belief and love for Allawh and his Rawsool (S). This blessing is actually their deprivation – their being deprived of worldly success and prosperity. This deprivation is a warning to them to realise their error and reform their condition. Such a warning then is a blessing in fact. Those bereft of faith and love, viz., the Kuffar are granted leeway because of the misfortune of their evil. They obtain temporary and superficial success and prosperity. But in the Akhirawh, they will be deprived of all prosperity and goodness. Thus, prosperity at the end of which is misfortune and calamity is not prosperity in reality. In addition to the future failure and adversity that will be their fate in the Akhirawh, they discern themselves to be without peace, tranquillity and sweetness of life despite their possession of external worldly comforts and luxuries. About such temporary and mundane success coupled with failure in the Akhirawh, the Qur'an says:

What! Do they think that by our bestowal of wealth and sons to them, We are hastening goodness for them? In fact, they do not understand. Do not let their wealth nor their children surprise you. Allawh intends to punish them in the life of this world therewith, and their souls will depart while they are unbelievers.

Since it has been established beyond doubt that prosperity and success are confined to the prescriptions of Rawsoolullawh (S), it devolves as a necessary obligation upon our Muslim brethren who are informed of the disease, but uninformed of the prescription, to abandon permanently their neglect, ignorance and indolence. It is incumbent upon them to utilise these divine and proven prescriptions so that they attain all forms of prosperity and success in abundance in both this world and the Akhirawh. Keeping in view easy acquisition of benefit and the acceptability of the Call (Da'wat) to the masses, I have enumerated in this book certain laws that are simple to learn and practise. I am presenting this to my brethren. The various parts are 'Eeman, Knowledge, Sawlah, Zakah, Qur'an, Morals, Transactions, Acquisition of Halal, Abstention from extravagance, Stories of the Auliya, Du'a, etc. Looking at the nature and peculiarity of this book, I have named it Hayatul Muslimeen or The Life of Muslims. I have described the various parts as Arwah (Souls) which are in fact the foundations of existence or life. A variety of effects and impressions ensue from these Arwah for Muslims.

Allawh is the Dispenser of Guidance and in His Power is protection and assistance.

ASHRAWF 'ALEE
Jamadul Ukhraw 1346

100 QURAANIC AYAT

Along the margins of the Introduction to Hayatul Muslimeen, Hadhrawt Maulana Ashrawf 'Alee Thanwi (R'A) had written 100 Qur'anic verses in substantiation of what he wrote in this book; because of the gross indifference towards the Deen nowadays, in fact rejection of the Deen, it is necessary to present a translation of the 100 verses.

1. Thus, turn towards your Creator and slay some of you (i.e. some should slay others). (Ayah 54, Soorawh Baqawrawh)
This was a command to the Ummah of Nabee Moosa (A) when they manufactured the golden calf and worshipped it.
2. Then those who were unjust changed the word other than what they were told (to say). Thus We brought down upon the transgressors a calamity from the heavens because of the transgression which they committed. (Soorawh Baqawrawh, Ayah 59)
3. "And, We established over them disgrace and adversity and they became deserving of the Wrath of Allawh. This was because they rejected the laws of Allawh and killed the Ambiyaa unjustly. This (calamity) was because they sinned and transgressed." (Ayah 61, Soorawh Baqawrawh)
4. "What other punishment than disgrace in this worldly life can there be for those among you who commit such a deed. And, on the Day of Qiyamah they will be driven to the severest punishment." (Ayah 85, Soorawh Baqawrawh)
5. "Who is more unjust than the one who prevents the Dhikr and Name of Allawh from the Masjids of Allawh while he strives to ruin them (the Masjids). They should not enter the Masjids but in fear. For them there is disgrace on earth and a great punishment in the Hereafter." (Ayah 114 Soorawh Baqawrawh)
6. "And among them are those who say: O Our Rawbb! Grant us goodness in this world and goodness in the Akhirawh; save us from the punishment of the Fire.' For these (who ask this) is the share which they have earned. And, Allawh is swift of reckoning." (Ayah 201, Soorawh Baqawrawh)

THE PROCLAMATIONS OF ALLAWH ABOUT THOSE WHO REJECTED 'EESA (A)

7. "(And remember) when Allawh said: Verily I will establish those who follow you (Isaa) over those who commit kufr, until the Day of Qiyamah. Then your return is unto Me. I will decide among you those issues in which you differed. I will then punish those who disbelieved, a severe punishment in this world and in the Hereafter. And, they will have no helpers." (Ayah 56, Soorawh Al Imrawn)
8. "Do not lose courage and do not worry. You will be victorious, if indeed you are Mu'mineen." (Ayah 139, Soorawh Al Imrawn)
9. "Allawh granted them the reward of the world and the beautiful reward of the Akhirawh. And, Allawh loves the pious." (Ayah 148, Soorawh Al Imrawn)
10. "We will soon instil fear in the hearts of the unbelievers because of the shirk which they committed with Allawh. They associated with Allawh something for which Allawh revealed no proof. Indeed, evil is the abode of the transgressors." (Ayah 151, Soorawh Al Imrawn)
11. "Those among you who turned their backs on the day when the two armies met, verify, the Shaitawn caused them to fall in error because of some of their deeds." (Ayah 155, Soorawh Al Imrawn)
12. "Thus they returned with the bounties of Allawh and with a favour uncontaminated with any setback. And, they followed the Pleasure of Allawh; Allawh is the One of great munificence." (Ayah 174, Soorawh Al Imrawn)
13. "Whoever migrates in the Path of Allawh, he will find on earth great spaciousness (many places to go) and great scope (for proclaiming the Deen)." (Ayah 100, Soorawh Nisa)
14. "Because of transgression of the Yahoodd, We prohibited for them such wholesome things which were (originally) permissible for them; and because of them devouring riba while they were (in fact) prohibited from this; and because of them dishonestly devouring the wealth of people." (Ayah 120 and 121, Soorawh Nisa)
15. "That (the punishment regarding dacoits) is for them a disgrace on earth and in the Akhirawh will be a great punishment. (Ayah 33, Soorawh Ma'idah)
16. "And he who befriends Allawh, His Rawsool and the Believers, (such people are the army of Allawh) and, verify the army of Allawh will be victorious." (Ayah 56, Soorawh Ma'idah)
17. "Say (O Muhammad!) Should I show you something worse in punishment by Allawh than this? (That is the way of those) whom Allawh has cursed and on whom settled Allawh's Wrath. Allawh made some of them apes and swine. They worshipped the evil one. Such people are the worst in rank and the most astray from the righteous road." (Ayah 60, Soorawh Ma'idah)
18. "And, we cast among them hatred until the Day of Qiyamah. Whenever they attempt to light the fire for war, Allawh extinguishes it; they strive on earth in nothing but mischief; Allawh does not love those who spread mischief." (Ayah 64, Soorawh Ma'idah)
19. "If they had established the Taorawh and the Injeel and what has been revealed to them from their Rawbb, verify, they would have ate (i.e. obtained all their wealth and material requirements) from above and from below (i.e., in great abundance). Among them is a group on righteousness while most among them commit evil." (Ayah 66, Soorawh Ma'idah)
20. "What! Did they not see that we destroyed before them such a people whom we granted such power on earth, which we did nor grant to you. And, We sent the rains in torrents on them and We caused rivers to flow below their orchards. We then destroyed them because of their sins and, We raised after them (the destroyed people) another nation." (Ayah 6, Soorawh An'am)

AYAH PERTAINING TO NOOH (A) AND HIS NATION

21. "Thus We saved him (Nooh) and those with him in the ship, and We drowned those who denied our Laws. Verily, they were a blind people." (Ayah 64, Soorawh A'rawf)

PERTAINING TO HOOD (A)

22. "Thus, We saved him and those with him with our mercy, and We uprooted those who denied our Laws; they were a people without faith." (Ayah 72, Soorawh A'rawf)

PERTAINING TO SALIH (A)

23. "Thus, the quake caught them and they lay prostrate in their homes." (Ayah 78, A'rawf)

PERTAINING TO LOOTT (A)

24. "Thus, We saved him and his family excepting his wife; she was left among those who suffered the punishment." (Ayah 83, Soorawh A'rawf)

25. "And, We rained on them a rain (which was of stones). Look then at the end of the transgressors." (Ayah 84, Soorawh A'rawf)

PERTAINING TO SHU'AIB (A)

26. "Thus the quake caught them and they lay prostrate in their homes." (Ayah 91, Soorawh A'rawf)
27. "Those who rejected Shu'aib became (after their destruction) as if they never existed in their homes; those who rejected Shuaib were the losers." (Ayah 92, Soorawh A'rawf)
28. "And, if the people of these places believed and feared, We would have opened up on them bounties from the heaven and earth, but they rejected; thus We punished them because of what they perpetrated." (Ayah 96, Soorawh A'rawf)

PERTAINING TO MOOSA (A)

29. "We then despatched on them the storm, locusts, lice, frogs and blood. These were clear signs. But even then they were proud. In- deed they were a nation of transgressors." (Ayah 133, Soorawh A'rawf)
30. "Whenever a calamity would befall them, they called: 'O Moosa! Call on our behalf your Rawbb in regard to that which He had promised you. If you remove this punishment from us, then surely, we shall believe in you and send Banee Israw'eel with you. Then when We removed the punishment from them for a while, until a time which they had to reach, they broke their pledge. We thus extracted compensation from them. We drowned them in the sea because they denied our laws and had totally diverted therefrom." (Ayah 136, Soorawh A'rawf)
"Remember that time when your Rawbb revealed to the Angels. 'Verily, I am with You, therefore strengthen those who have believed. I will cast fear into the hearts of the unbelievers. Thus, strike (them) on their necks and hit on all their joints. That is so, because they opposed Allawh and His Rawsool. Whoever opposes Allawh and His Rawsool, verily, (he should know that) Allawh is powerful in punishment." (Ayah 13, Soorawh Anfal)
31. "Verify, Allawh will thwart the plots of the unbelievers." (Ayah 18, Soorawh Anfal)
32. "O Believers! if you fear Allawh, He will grant you a criterion; He will remove your sins from you and forgive you. Allawh is the One of Munificent Grace." (Ayah 29, Soorawh Anfal)
33. "And, what right have they? Why should Allawh not punish them. They prevent (others) from Masjidul Haraam while they (Kuffar) are not the trustees of it. The trustees of it (Masjid-ul Harawm) are none bur those who fear (Allawh); but most of them do not know." (Ayah 34, Soorawh Anfal)
34. "That is so because verily Allawh does not change a bounty which He has given any nation until they do not change their own (spiritual) condition. Verify, Allawh is the Hearer, the Knower." (Ayah 53, Soorawh Anfal)
"(Their condition) is like the people of Fir'aon and those before them. They denied the laws of their Rawbb. Therefore, We destroyed them because of their sins; We drowned the people of Fir'aon. Indeed, all of them were transgressors." (Ayah 54, Soorawh Anfal)
35. "O Nabi! Tell the captives in your custody: 'If Allawh discerns 'Eeman in your hearts, He will grant you better than that which was taken from you and He will forgive you. Allawh is the Forgiver, the Merciful." (Ayah 70, Soorawh Anfal)
36 For them is good news in this worldly life and in the Akhirawh. There is no change in the Words of Allawh. That is the great victory. (Ayah 64, Soorawh Yoonus)
37. "Verily, Allawh will not reform the acts of whose who spread mischief." (Ayah 81, Soorawh Yoonus)

PERTAINING TO THE NATION OF YOONUS (A)

38. "When they believed, We removed the disgraceful punishment from them in this worldly life and We bestowed upon them comfort until an appointed time (i.e. until death)." (Ayah 18, Soorawh Yoonus)
39. "Seek forgiveness from your Rawbb and turn towards Him (with 'Eeman and 'Ibadat) and He will bestow upon you beautiful favours for an appointed lime (i.e. until death; and in the Akhirawh) He will grant munificently to every doer of goodness in abundance." (Ayah 3, Soorawh Hoodd)
40. "O my nation! Seek forgiveness from your Rawbb, then turn to Him? He will send abundant rain to you and He will increase you (much) in your strength. Do not turn your backs as transgressors. (Ayah 52, Soorawh Hoodd)
41. "Allawh will not destroy the cities because of (the people's) transgression while their inhabitants are engaged in reforming (themselves and others)." (Ayah 117, Soorawh Hoodd)

PERTAINING TO YOOSUF (A)

42. "When he attained maturity, We bestowed to him wisdom and knowledge. In this way do We reward the pious." (Ayah 12, Soorawh Yoosuf)
43. "In that way We established Yoosuf on earth so that he could live wherever he pleased. We bestow Our mercy to whomever We wish. We shall not destroy the reward of the pious. Verily, the reward of the Akhirawh is best for those who believe and for those who fear (i.e. those who are pious)." (Ayah 57, Soorawh Yoosuf)

Miscellaneous

44. "The unbelievers will always remain in such a condition in which some calamity (every now and again) will befall them because of their (evil) doings; or it (the calamity) will occur close to their homes until the Promise of Allawh comes (overtakes them). Verify, Allawh does not violate promises." (Ayah 31, Soorawh Raw'd)
45. "For them is a punishment in this worldly life and the punishment of the Akhirawh is much severer. There will be none to save them from Allawh." (Ayah 34, Soorawh Raw'd)
46. "What! Do they not see that, verily, We are reducing the [and on all its sides. Allawh commands; none can impede His command. He is swift of reckoning." (Ayah 41, Soorawh Raw'd)
47. "Remember the time when your Rawbb informed (you via the Rawsool) that if you are grateful, then certainly, He will bestow upon you greater bounties and if you are ungrateful, then verify, My punishment is severe." (Soorawh Ibbrawheem, Ayah 7)
48. "Thus, their (i.e. the Ambiyaa) Rawbb revealed to them: 'Most assuredly, We shall destroy the transgressors and most certainly, We shall grant you this land to dwell in after them. That is for such a man who fears My Presence and My Warning." (Ayah 14, Soorawh Ibbrawheem)
49. "Verily, the people of the forest were transgressors. We, therefore extracted compensation from them. Both (towns of the nations destroyed) were situated on an open plain." (Ayah 78 and 79, Soorawh Al-Hijr)
50. "Verify, those before them plotted, but Allawh destroyed their buildings from the very foundations. Thus the roofs caved in on them. The punishment of Allawh came to them from a source which they did not even suspect." (Ayah 26, Soorawh Nahl)
51. "Those who migrated for the sake of Allawh after they had been persecuted, verify, We shall establish them on earth in goodness, and the reward of the Akhirawh is greater." (Ayah 41, Soorawh Nahl)
52. What! Those who conspire evil, do they feel snug in the thought that Allawh will not let the earth swallow them or there will not come upon them a punishment from a source they least suspect; or some calamity may befall them while they ore wandering about? (If any of these should overtake them) then they will not be able to render Allawh helpless. Or (do they feel safe from Allawh) arresting them with great fear. Verily your Rawbb is most Compassionate, most Merciful? (Ayah 45 and 46, Soorawh Nahl)
53. "Whoever practises righteousness-male or female- while he for she) is a Mu'min, We shall most assuredly grant him (or her) a life of comfort and We shall (in the Akhirawh) reward them because of the virtuous deeds they practised." (Ayah 97, Soorawh Nahl)

54. "Allawh explains (to you) the example of (the people of) a city in which was peace and prosperity. Their sustenance came to them from all sides. Then they were ungrateful of Allawh's bounties. Allawh then gave them the taste of starvation and fear because of (the evil) they perpetrated. Verily, there came to them a Rawsool from amongst them, but they rejected him. Thus the punishment gRawbbed them. Indeed they were transgressors.
Whatever Allawh has given you of lawful and wholesome foods, eat of it and be grateful of the bounties of Allawh, if indeed you worship Him. Verily, Allawh has made unlawful on them carrion, blood, the flesh of swine and what has been sacrificed for beings other than Allawh. He who is driven to helplessness (by starvation) and Is nor desiring pleasure nor is he a transgressor, then verify, Allawh Is the Forgiving, the Most Merciful.
And, do not say for the falsities of your tongues: ?This is permissible and this is unlawful.' In so saying, you are in venting falsehood on Allawh. Verify, those who manufacture falsehood on Allawh, they will not prosper. (This worldly life) is a luxury of a short while. For them is a painful punishment.
Those who were Yahoodd, we prohibited for them the things which We have explained (in Soorawh An'am) to you before; We did not wrong them, but they wronged their own souls." (Soorawh Nahl)
55. "When We wish to destroy any city (or settlement of people), then we (first) command their affluent people (to be righteous). They then transgress in the city. The command then becomes decreed on the city and We then utterly destroy it." (Ayah 16, Soorawh Banee Israw'eel)
56. ?(A pious man said to a proud man who boasted about his lands and wealth) ?If you (despise me and) consider me inferior to you in wealth and children, then perhaps my Rawbb will grant me (something) better than your orchard. He may despatch against you from the heaven a calamity reducing (your orchard) to a barren land; or its water may entirely disappear without you having any power to retrieve it.'
(Suddenly) his wealth was surrounded (by disaster). He thus became disillusioned and (shock-stricken) wringing his hands over what he had spent in (developing) the orchards which now lay sprawled out in destruction. He then cried out: ?Alas! Would that I did not associate any with my Creator.'
He had no group which could assist him other than Allawh nor could he himself rake revenge.
On such occasions to aid is the prerogative of Allawh. He is best in reward and best in (giving best) results.? (Ayah 39-44, Soorawh Kahaf)
57. "Verily, those who believe and practise righteousness, soon will Rahmaan (The Merciful Allawh) instil (in their hearts) a love." (Ayah 96, Soorawh Maryam)
58. "He (Moosa) said (to Samiri): 'Go! Verily, for you in this worldly life will be (this punishment that you will wander around) saying: 'Touch me not.' (Ayah 97, Soorawh Taw-ha)
59. "And, we destroyed many cities which were transgressors (i.e. their inhabitants were unbelievers), and We created (in their places) other nations. "
"Then, when they (the unbelievers) discerned (the approach) of Our punishment, they began to flee. (It was said to them). "Do nor flee! Return to your luxuries and your mansions so that you may be questioned.
They cried: 'Alas! Most certainly, we were transgressors. Thus, that was their continuous cry until we destroyed them, and they were like an uprooted farm and an extinguished Sire." (Ayah 11-15, Soorawh Ambiya)
60. "They conspired to do him (Ibbrawheem) evil, but We made them the losers." (Ayah 70, Soorawh Ambiya)
61. "Then We accepted his call and We saved him from grief. In that way do We save the Believers." (Ayah 88, Soorawh Ambiya)
62. "Verily, We had written in the Zaboor after the Decree (in Looh Mahfooz) that, Verily, the earth will be inherited by My pious servants." (Ayah 105, Soorawh Ambiya)
63. "Many were the cities which We destroyed while they were transgressing. Then these (cities) lay prostrate on their roofs; many a well and many a fort lay in ruin and neglect. What! Did they not travel in the land and thereby gain hearts by means of which they could understand; or ears by means of which they could hear? In reality, eyes do nor become blind; but the hearts in the breasts become blind.
They ask you to hasten the punishment. Never does Allawh violate His Promise. Verily, a day by your Rawbb is like a thousand years of the years which you calculate.
"I extended the time for many cities (nations) while they were transgressing. Then (suddenly) I caught them and unto Me is the return." (Ayah 45-48, Soorawh Hajj)
64. "Allawh promised the Believers among you and those who practised righteous deeds that He will establish them (grant them kingdom) on earth as He had established those before them. And, He will strengthen for them their Deen which He chose for them; He will exchange their fear with safety. They worship Me and do not associate with Me anything. Those who commit Kufr thereafter, verily, they are the transgressors." (Ayah 55, Soorawh Noor)
65. "Those who say: 'O our Rawbb! Grant us wives and offspring who will be the coolness of (our) eyes, and establish us as the leaders of the pious." (Ayah 74, Soorawh Furqawn)
66. "(Allawh) said: 'We will soon strengthen you with your brother and We will make for you both a special power so that they (Fir'aon and his people) cannot gain control over you. With Our Signs will you and those who follow you be victorious." (Ayah 45, Soorawh Qawsaws)
67. "We destroyed many nations who were proud of their luxuries. Thus, their mansions (utterly ruined) thereafter remained uninhabited, but for a short while. We remained the Owners.
Your Rawbb does not destroy a city (i.e. a nation) until He (first) sends a Rawsool to its capital, who then recites to them Our laws. And, We did nor destroy these cities other than because they were transgressors." (Ayah 59, Soorawh Qawsaws)
68. "We caused him (Qawroon) and his mansion to be swallowed into the earth. Thus, there was no group to assist him besides Allawh nor could he (Qaroon) defend himself." (Ayah 8, Soorawh Qawsaws)
69. "Thus, each one (of the unbelieving nations), We grabbed hold of because of their sins. Among them were those against whom We despatched hurricanes; among them were those whom the terrifying screech overtook; among them were those whom We caused to be swallowed by the earth; and, among them were those whom We drowned. Allawh did not wrong them, but they wronged their own souls." (Ayah 40, Soorawh Ankaboot)
70. "Mischief and corruption have appeared on the earth and on the ocean because of the (evil) deeds which the hands of people have committed, so that Allawh may give them a taste of some of their deeds, for perhaps they may return (to righteousness). Say: Travel in the land and see how was the end of those before. The majority of them were mushrikeen." (Ayah 42, Soorawh Room)
71. "Those among the Ahle Kitaab who aided them (the mushrikeen), Allawh drove them from the heights of their fortresses and instilled fear into their hearts. Thus, a group among them, you (Muslims) killed and a group you took captive. We then made you the owners of their land and their homes and their wealth and of such lands on which you had (previously) never set foot. Allawh is powerful over everything." (Ayah 27, Soorawh Ahzaab)
72. "Most certainly, if the munafiqeen and those in whose hearts lurks a disease and those who spread false rumours in Madeenah do not desist then We shall establish your (Muslims') domination over them. Then will they be able to live with you in Madeenah for only a short while. They will be cursed; wherever they go, they will be caught and killed. (This) was the Way of Allawh regarding those who existed before. Never will you find the Way of Allawh changing." (Ayah 61-62, Soorawh Ahzaab)
73. "For the people of Saba were signs in their homeland. There were two (rows) of orchards on the right and the left. (We ordered them). 'Eat of the sustenance of your Rawbb and be grateful unto Him.' (It was) a city of great prosperity, and (Allawh) a Creator Most Forgiving. Then they turned away (from the Path of Allawh). We opened up the gates of flood on them and We replaced their double rows of orchards with another two orchards: (orchards) of bitter fruit, cactus and a bit of brambles." (Ayah 7, Soorawh Saba)
74. "When a Warner (i.e. a Nabi) came to them, it only increased them in detestation (for the truth) because they desired pride on earth and they further plotted evil. The evil conspiracy befell none but those who plotted. What! Do they then await the fate which overtook former (unbelievers)? Never will you find a change in the Way of Allawh. Never will you find for the Way of Allawh a diversion.

What! Have they not travelled in the land and seen the end of those before them. They were more powerful than them. There is nothing in the heavens and the earth which can render Allawh helpless. Verily, He is the One of Knowledge and the Powerful.
If Allawh had to apprehend people because of their (evil) deeds then He would not have left on the surface of the earth a single living thing. In fact, Allawh has granted them an appointed time. Then, when their appointed time arrives, then verily, Allawh is the Overseer of His servants." (Ayah 45, Soorawh Fatwir)
75. "If he (Yoonus) was not among those who glorified Allawh (by reciting tasbeeh), then he would have remained in its (the fish's) stomach until the Day of Resurrection." (Ayah 143-144, Soorawh Saaffaat)
76. "Say: 'O my believing servants! Fear your Rawbb. Those who are virtuous in this world, for them is goodness; the earth of Allawh is spacious. Verily, the patient ones will be fully recompensed in a limitless way." (Ayah 10, Soorawh Zumar)
77. "Then Allawh saved him from the evil plots which they schemed and the disgraceful punishment overtook the people of Fir'aon." (Ayah 45, Soorawh Mu'min)
78. "Most assuredly, We shall aid our Messengers and those who believed, in this worldly life and on the Day when witnesses will stand up." (Ayah 51, Soorawh Mu'min)
79. "Verily, those who said: 'Our Rawbb is Allawh', and then they remained firm, Angels will descend on them so that you do not fear nor grieve. Be happy with Jannat which you have been promised. We are your Friends in this worldly life and in the Akhirawh." (Ayah 31, Soorawh Ha Meem Sajjdah – Fusswilat)
80. "Whatever calamity befalls you is because of what your hands have wrought." (Ayah 30, Soorawh Shuraw)
81. "That Day shall We grab powerfully. Verily, We shall extract recompense." (Ayah 16, Soorawh Dukhawn)
82. "O Believers! if you aid (the Deen of) Allawh, He will aid you and plant your feet firmly." (Ayah 7, Soorawh Muhammad)
83. "Do not lose courage (and because of lack of courage) do not call towards peace while you will be victorious. Allawh is with you. Never will He minimise your deeds.
Verily, this worldly life is only play and amusement, if you believe and fear, Allawh will grant you your reward and He will not ask you for your wealth. If He had to (continuously ask you for your wealth, i.e. to spend in the Path of Allawh), then you will become miserly and He will then reveal your dislike (for spending in His Path), Yes! you are those who are being called upon to spend in the Path of Allawh. From among you are those who are stingy. Verily, whoever is miserly, is in fact miserly upon his own soul. Allawh is Wealthy and you are paupers. If you turn your backs (on Allawh 's Path) then Allawh will replace you with another nation which will then not be like you." (Ayah 38, Soorawh Muhammad)
84. "Verily, Allawh is pleased with those Believers when they took the oath of allegiance to you (Muhammad) under the tree. Allawh knew that (sincerity) which was in their hearts. He therefore cast peace over them and granted them a victory close at hand, and spoils of war in abundance which they took. Indeed, Allawh is the Majestic, the Wise.
Allawh has promised you spoils of war in abundance, which you will take. Thus Allawh hastened it for you and He prevented the hands of people (the Kuffar) from (harming) you. (This is so) that it may be a sign for the Believers and so that Allawh guide you onto a Straight Road.
And another (victory too) which you have not yet attained. Verily, Allawh has encircled it. Allawh is Most Powerful over everything." (Ayah 121, Soorawh Fatah)
85. "It is He Who has sent His Rawsool with guidance and the true Deen so that He manifest it over all deens. Allawh is a sufficient Witness." (Ayah 28, Soorawh Fatah)
86. "Before them the nation of Nooh (also) rejected, as well as the Companions of Rass and the Thamood (they all were unbelievers). And, (as well) Aad, Fir'aon and the Brethren of Loot; the Companions of Aikah and the nation of Tubba'. All of them denied the Rawsools. Thus My Warning became manifest (materialised on them)." (Ayah 14, Soorawh Qawf)
87. "Or do they say: ' We are a victorious nation.' Soon will this group be defeated and it will turn tail (and flee)." (Ayah 46, Soorawh Qamar)
88. "These are such people in whose hearts has become ingrained 'Eeman and whom Allawh has aided with a power from Him." (Ayah 22, Soorawh Mujaadalah)
89. "Thus the (punishment of) Allawh came to them from a source which they least expected, and He instilled fear into their hearts. They will destroy their homes by their own hands as well as by the hands of the Believers. Therefore, take lesson, O people of intelligence?
If Allawh did not decree for them exile, He would have punished them (by execution) here on earth. And, for them in the Akhirawh is the punishment of the Fire. This is because they opposed Allawh and His Rawsool. Whoever opposes Allawh (should know that) verily, Allawh is severe in punishment." (Ayah 4, Soorawh Hashr)
90. "What! Have you not seen these munaafiqs? They say to their kaafir brethren of the Ahle Kitaab: 'If you are expelled, we will accompany you and in regard to you, we will not accept what others say. If war is made against you, we will aid you.' But, Allawh is a Witness that, verily, they are liars. If they (the unbelievers among the Ahle Kitaab) are expelled, these (munafiqeen) will not accompany them; if war is made against them (Ahle Kitaab), they (munafiqeen) will not assist them. And, should they aid them, they (munafiqeen) will turn tail and flee. Thus they will not be aided. Most certainly, in their hearts they fear you more than even Allawh. That is because they are a people who do not understand. (Ayah 14, Soorawh Hashr)
91. "Perhaps (it is so hoped) that Allawh creates love between you and those with whom you are enemies." (Ayah 7, Soorawh Mumtahinah)
92. "And another (Savour) which you love: (viz.) Help from Allawh and a quick victory." (Ayah 13, Soorawh Saff)
93. ?And unto Allawh belongs the treasures of the heavens and the earth, but the hypocrites do not understand. They (munafiqeen) say: 'If we return to Madeenah, the honourable ones will expel the contemptible ones from it (the city).' (But, they fail to realise that) unto Allawh, His Rawsool and the Mu'mineen belongs Izzat (honour, respect and glory). But, the munafiqeen do nor know.? (Ayah 7 and 8, Soorawh Munaafiqoon)
94. "No calamity befalls, but with the command of Allawh. Whoever believes in Allawh, He guides his heart." (Ayah 11, Soorawh Taghaabun)
95. "Whoever fears Allawh, He makes for him an opening and He grants him sustenance from such a source which he did not even think of Whoever has trust on Allawh, Allawh is sufficient for him. Indeed, Allawh will complete His Command. Allawh has ordained for everything a measure." (Ayah 2 and 3, Soorawh Talaaq)
96. "Many settlements (their inhabitants) disobeyed the Command of their Rawbb and His Rawsools. We then took from them a stern reckoning and punished them severely. Thus they tasted the misfortune of their deeds and their end was ruin (and loss)." (Ayah 8 and 9, Soorawh Talaaq)
97. "Verily, we have tested them as We tested the people of the orchards when they took an oath that they would certainly pick up the fruit of the orchards in the morning; they did not even say 'In-sha Allawh'. Then, a calamity (during the night) passed over the orchard from your Rawbb while they remained sleeping. Then by the morning the orchard seemed as if it was already harvested. In the morning they called to one another to hasten to the orchards if they wished to harvest it. They set of (for the orchard) whispering to themselves: 'Do nor allow any beggar to come to you today. You have full authority to refuse (them).
When they beheld the orchard (laying in ruins), they exclaimed: ?Verily, we were astray. In fact we are deprived.'
A decent one among them said: 'What! Did I not tell you: Why do you not glorify Allawh (recite Tasbeeh)'. They all then (spontaneously exclaimed: ?Glory to our Rawbb. Verily, we were transgressors.' They then accused one another, saying: ?Most certainly, we did transgress. Perhaps our Rawbb will grant us something better than it (the ruined orchard). Verily, we turn towards our Rawbb.'
Such then is the punishment. And, the punishment of the Akhirawh is greater; if only they knew." (Ayah 17-33, Soorawh Qalam)
98. "Thus I said (This is the statement of Nooh alayhis salaam): 'Seek the forgiveness of your Rawbb. Verily, He is most forgiving. He despatches abundant rain to you; He increases you in wealth and sons; He granted you orchards and created for you rivers." (Aayat 10, 11 & 12 Soorawh Nooh)
99. "And if they became firm on the road (of Truth), We would have granted them water in abundance." (Ayah 16, Soorawh Jinn)
100. "What! Did He (Allawh) not ruin their plots?" (Soorawh Feel)
These are the 100 Qur'anic verses on which the subject matter of this book is based. Some of the Ayat prove that comfort, success, and prosperity are for the pious servants of Allawh while some verses prove that misfortune, calamity, and adversity are the lots of transgressors. For the sake of brevity, only these verses have been cited. Besides these there are numerous other Qur'anic verses to prove the claims made in this book. It is now incumbent upon Muslims to confine the success and prosperity of both worlds to following the Deen.

And, upon us is but to deliver (the Message)

ROOH I
ISLAM AND 'EEMAN

Both the words, Islam and 'Eeman, are used synonymously. Allawh Ta'ala says:

Whoever among you turns away from his Deen (Islam) and then dies being a kaafir, his good deeds will be ruined in this world and the Akhirawh. Such people are the inmates of the Fire; therein will they remain forever.

Verily, (the true) Deen by Allawh is Islam.

Whoever searches for a Deen other than Islam, never will it be accepted from him. (i.e. His adoption of any other religion will never be acceptable to Allawh Ta'ala). And, in the Akhirawh, he (the one who chooses another religion) will be ruined.

The ruin of one's deeds in this world is the nullification of one's nikah. By reneging from Islam, the renegade's (Murtadd's) wife falls out of his nikah. He is also deprived of inheritance. He will not inherit in the estate of any Muslim. After death there is no Janaazah Sawlah for him. The ruin of one's deeds in relation to the Akhirawh is the everlasting residence in Jahannum. If a murtad (one who renounced Islam) returns to the fold of Islam, he will have to renew his nikah with the woman who was previously his wife. This renewal will be with her consent and approval. If she refuses, it cannot be imposed on her and she cannot be compelled to marry him.

Allawh Ta'ala says:

O People of 'Eeman! Believe in Allawh, His Rawsool, in the Kitabb which He has revealed to His Rawsool and in those Kitaabs which were revealed before (Rawsoolullawh b). Whoever commits kufr (i.e. disbelieves) with Allawh, with His Angels, with His Books, with His Rawsools and with the Day of Qiyamah, verily, he has gone far astray. Undoubtedly, those who were (first) Muslims then became kaafir; then again Muslims; then again kaafir (and remained so to the last), have gone multiplying in kufr. Allawh will never forgive such people nor will He show them the Road (of Jannat).

Verily, those who have rejected Our laws, soon will We enter them into a dreadful Fire. Therein (there condition will be such that) when their skins have become scorched (and burnt out). We will immediately replace the skin so that they suffer the punishment (forever). Verily, Allawh is most Powerful and the Wise.

Those who have adopted 'Eeman and practised righteousness, soon will We enter them into such Paradises under which flow rivers. They will dwell therein forever. Therein will be pure wives for them. We will enter them into a dense shade (of coolness). In these Ayat some of the bounties of Jannat for the people of Islam and some of the terrors and hardships of Jahannum are mentioned for the rejectors of Islam. Other aayat and Ahadeeth explain these in greater detail. O Muslims! The life of this world is insignificant. If you remain steadfast on Islam irrespective of whether you have to suffer some hardship, the comforts and luxuries which you will experience and enjoy immediately after death, will obliterate the memory of any difficulty or hardship which you had undergone here on earth. If due to some baneful motive, greed, fear or hardship you turned away from Islam Allawh forbid! you will experience and suffer such terror and punishment immediately after death that you will forget whatever comfort and luxury you had enjoyed here on earth. You will never be able to escape that misfortune and dread which will overtake you after death. Hence, a person with the least amount of understanding will not renounce Islam for the sake of even the kingdom of the whole world. O Allawh! Guide our brethren and straighten their intelligence.

ROOH II
THE ACQUISITION OF AND IMPARTING DEENI KNOWLEDGE

Rawsoolullawh (S) said:

The acquisition of (Deeni) knowledge is compulsory on every Muslim.

Ibn Majah

This Hadeeth proves that it is obligatory upon every Muslim, male and female, rich and poor, city dweller and villager, to seek Deeni knowledge. Acquisition of Deeni knowledge is not confined to the medium of the Arabic language. The teachings of the Deen are to be acquired through the medium of either Arabic books or non-Arabic books or by enquiring from reliable Ulama or by listening to lectures of reliable and qualified lecturers. Women who are unable to read and cannot reach any Aalim, should through the agency of their men-folk enquire from the Ulama about their Deeni requirements. Rawsoolullawh (S) said:

O Aboo Dharr (a Sahaabi) if you go anywhere to learn one Ayah of the Qur'an, it is better for you than 100 rakaats (Nafl) Sawlah; if you go anywhere to acquire 1 law of the knowledge (of Deen), it is better for you than performing 1000 rakaats (Nafl) Sawlah, irrespective of whether you practised on it (the knowledge) or not.

'Ibn Majah

The immense value and significance of Deeni knowledge are manifest from this Hadeeth. Some people contend that knowledge without practice is futile. This view is erroneous because the Hadeeth states with clarity the great merit of acquiring Deeni knowledge even if one did not practise in accordance. There are three reasons for this great significance of knowledge even if one does not practise according to what has been acquired. These are: Knowledge

1. Prevents one from going astray because of the realization of the truth; this in itself is a great treasure.
2. Of the Deen will Insha-Allawh, induce one to act in accordance with it sometime or the other. Insha-Allawh, a man of knowledge will someday obtain the taufeeq to make a'mal (to practise according to the demands of knowledge).
3. Enables 1 to instruct others in the truth: 1 in possession of Deeni knowledge is in a position to impart that knowledge thereby disseminating the Law of Allawh Ta'ala; this too is of great merit and of tremendous Thawabb

Rawsoolullawh (S) said:

The noblest charity is that a Muslim acquires some knowledge (of the Deen), then imparts it to a brother Muslim

'Ibn Majah

This Hadeeth urges the imparting of Deeni knowledge in whatever measure one has acquired. Its thawaab is greater than all acts of charity. SubhaanAllawh! How gracious is Allawh! He bestows the greatest of thawaab for slight effort of the tongue. Such huge amount of thawaab can never be attained by expending even large sums of money in charity. Allawh Ta'ala says:

O people of 'Eeman! Save yourself and your families from the Fire.

Explaining this Ayah, Hadhrawt 'Alee (R) says that it means

Teach your family acts of virtue (i.e. Deeni acts).

The teaching the Deen to one's wife and children is compulsory is manifest from this Ayah and Hadeeth. Failing to discharge this obligatory duty will result in the punishment of the Fire as stated in the Ayah. All Ahadeeth mentioned so far have been taken from the Kitaab, Targheeb

Rawsoolullawh (S) said that:

Among the good deeds of believers that will continue to build up (as capital) after one's death is Deeni knowledge which was imparted to others. This applies to even a single mas'alah (rule) shown to another. Among such deeds is the dissemination of the Deen, for example by means of writing or purchasing books and distributing these or by assisting students pursuing Deeni knowledge. Also among the virtuous deeds, the Thawabb of which will be perpetuated after one's death are pious children. The Hadeeth mentions some other acts of virtue as well in this regard.

No one has given his children anything better than adab (which in this context refers to Deeni knowledge).

Tirmeedhi and Baihaqi

Rawsoolullawh (S) said:

Allawh Ta'ala makes Jannat a surety for a man who looks after three daughters or three sisters. He imparts knowledge to them; is kind to them until such time that Allawh Ta'ala relieves him of their responsibility (i.e. until they get married).

Someone then enquired regarding 2 daughters and Rawsoolullawh (S) mentioned the same reward for caring for 2 daughters. Another person enquired about 1 daughter. Rawsoolullawh (S) said that this thawaab and significance are for caring for even one daughter.

These Ahadeeth have been extracted from Mishkaat. Acquisition and teaching of Deeni knowledge being fardh (compulsory) and the considerable thawaab therefore are established by these Ahadeeth (cited above) as well as by many other Ahadeeth. The highest degree of such knowledge is that which qualifies one as an Aalim of the Deen. However, not all people have the ability, determination, and opportunity to become Ulama. Nevertheless, Deeni knowledge is incumbent upon all, hence a simple method of acquiring such knowledge will be explained. This simple method enables the general public to acquire Deeni knowledge, thereby discharging their incumbent duty and obtaining the thawaab promised in this regard. This simple way is as follows:

1. Those versant with the Urdu language should study authentic Urdu books of the Deen, e.g. Bahishti Zewar, Ta'leemud Deen, Qawsdus Sabeel, Tabbleegh-e-Deen, and Tas'heelul Mawa'iz. These books should be studied in lesson form from a reliable A'lim. If the services of such a teacher are not available then read and study these books on your own until you find someone able to teach you. Wherever you do not understand, make a mark; seek clarification whenever you meet someone of knowledge. Whatever knowledge you acquire in this way, impart it to others also. Make a special effort to teach such knowledge which you have acquired to your wife and children.

2. Those unable to read Urdu should endeavour to enlist the services of 1 who is versant in Urdu. The instructor should read and explain the books to his class. At the same time, they should refer their Deeni questions to him for explanation. It is best and most beneficial if such a knowledgeable man can be engaged permanently. If necessary, he should be paid a salary that should be the responsibility of the community. All can contribute towards this salary. To raise a salary for an Ustad is not at all difficult. People squander considerable amounts of money on unnecessary and unlawful worldly luxuries; contributing a bit towards one's own Deeni life that in reality is the capital and means of one's everlasting life in the Akhirawh, is no sacrifice. In appointing a teacher and selecting the books for the syllabus, do not be directed by personal opinion and choice. Seek the advice of a pious A'lim.

3. Refer your affairs to some pious Aalim so that you may know and understand if your affairs and activities are in conformity with the Shariah. Whenever you wish to embark on a venture, Deeni or worldly, and you are not certain of the Shar'i ruling and requirements pertaining to that venture, then seek the advice and guidance of a pious 'Alim. What you learn in this way, impart it to others as well. Should you not have the opportunity of going personally to such an Aalim then seek his counsel and guidance by means of a letter. To ensure a quick reply and to make it easy for the Aalim, enclose a self-addressed and prepaid postage envelope in your letter.

4. Occasionally endeavour to meet pious Ulama; sit in their company and listen to their talks and advice. It is very beneficial to go specially to meet them. However, if you lack the means of going to meet them, or the opportunity does not arise and no such pious 'Alim is nearby, then whenever such an opportunity comes your way take advantage of it and spend some time in their company. When in the company of such an Aalim ask him about your Deeni affairs.

5. Another important duty is to invite a reliable and good Deeni lecturer occasionally to your town or neighbourhood. When contemplating to invite a lecturer, seek the advice of a pious Aalim. Do not invite just anyone. When listening to his wa'z (lecture) do so with great attention so that the love and fear of Allawh enter your heart. Practising in accordance with the commands of the Deen will then be a simple matter.

The above is a brief explanation of several simple ways of learning and teaching Deeni knowledge. Determination and steadfastness will result in the easy acquisition of the essential teachings of the Deen. In addition to the adoption of the aforementioned methods, it is essential to abstain from 2 harms:

1. Never attend or participate in the gatherings and functions of the Kuffar and those who have gone astray.

a. Words of kufr and dhalaal (deviation) produce darkness in the heart.

b. At such gatherings, there is the possibility of a Muslim being provoked; his 'Eeman may become inflamed because of harawm acts being committed or statements of blasphemy uttered. His anger may lead to dispute and strife. On the other hand, if one is unable to voice one's anger, 1 will be overtaken by depression and frustration. One's peace of mind will be wrecked.

2. Refrain from disputes and debates. In the majority of cases, debates produce darkening of the heart, ill feeling, and frustration.

Another very harmful effect of attending such gatherings and functions and engaging in debates is doubt and confusion. A statement of falsehood or kufr may throw the unqualified one – the one with insufficient knowledge – into great mental confusion. One may be influenced by the baatil and due to insufficient knowledge the doubt will linger and not be dispelled. Thus, by attending such functions one unnecessarily invites great spiritual calamity upon oneself. One attends at the peril of one's 'Eeman. Should anyone attempt to goad you into a debate, refuse firmly and refer him to the Ulama. Adherence to these instructions and methods, will Insha-Allawh, ensure Deeni and 'Eemani health. You will be fortified spiritually and morally; you will be saved from the diseases which attack the Deen. May Allawh Ta'ala assist you and grant you Taufeeq.

THE REVOLUTION OF THE UMMAH

Ummati – My Ummah – this is the call and slogan of love of Rawsoolullawh (S); his deep love for his Ummah caused him always to call out in dua – Ummati, Ummati.

The revolution of the Ummah in relation to this cry of Ummati does not have for its goal worldly revolution. Thus, the term 'revolution' must not be understood in the context of worldly change and revolution. Although a discussion regarding the mundane revolution of the Ummah is not futile, nevertheless, the dimension of change falling within the purview of our discussion here is Deeni Revolution. The change or revolution that is the aim and goal of Islam has no affinity and no relationship with the kind of mundane changes that have overtaken the Ummah. A study of the life conditions of a disobedient Ummati in relation to the detailed laws and rules of the Shariah will produce the stunning revelation that there is absolutely no affinity and connection between the Ummati and the Shariah. The following are the constituent parts of the Deen:

1. Aqaw'id (Beliefs) Diyanaat (Sawlah, Sawm, Nikah, Talaqq, etc)
2. Mu'aamalaat (Transactions, contracts, trade, etc)
3. Mu'aasharaat (social life, e.g. food, dress, speech, salaam, etc)
4. Akhlaqq (Moral character)

Regarding Aqaw'id, it is indeed fortunate that the 'revolution' of rejection has not yet overtaken the Ummah. Beliefs are not outrightedly rejected although some changes have taken place under cover of the Deen. The type of changes affected under cover of Deen fall within the scope of bid'ah (innovation). It is for the sake of bid'ah that the Ahl-e-Baatil (People of Falsehood) have become the opponents of the Ahl-e-Haqq (People of Truth) because of the latter's endeavours to rectify the error of bid'ah. In short, the Nusoos (Qur'an and Ahadeeth) have not been refuted, but have been subjected to baseless and erroneous interpretation (Ta'weel Baatil). The evil condition of baseless interpretation is the malady that has overcome the Ulama. But the modernists (i.e. the self-styled reformists, luminaries and western-educated Muslims-Translator) have transgressed further by having adopted the revolution of rejection as well. They not only baselessly interpret the Nusoos, but outrightly reject these as well. In fact, they at times mock and jeer at the beliefs of Islam. Because of their mocking and jesting at the Deen, the Guardians of Islam (the Ulama-e-Haqq) have labelled them with kufr. The modernist reactionaries in turn retaliated with epithets such as bigots against the Ulama. But those aware of the nature of kufr will not be deluded. They will know that the Ulama had no choice in the matter. They are under Shar'i compulsion to proclaim such kufr. They will therefore be in agreement with the Ulama. This, then, is the state of the revolution that has overtaken the first constituent part of Deen, viz. Aqaa'id. Regarding the revolution in the second part, viz., Diyaanaat (Sawlah, Saum, etc.) the masses have not wrought a 'revolution' of bid'ah in it, i.e. they have not changed the actual acts and laws pertaining to the teachings in this department of the Shariah, but they have subjected it to neglect and omission. Their attitude of neglect towards this part of Deen is so marked that it conveys the impression that Sawlah, Saum, etc., are not obligatory acts of worship. The same attitude of indifference has been adopted about matters pertaining to Nikah, Talaaq, etc. While accepting these issues to be integral parts of the Deen, as well as accepting the exposition and explanation of these issues given by the Ulama, the general public act on the basis of desire. In a conflict between a Deeni demand and the nafs, the latter asserts its domination; for example, the commission of fornication; living together as man and wife inspite of having administered 3 Talaqq. This condition of neglect, indifference and omission regarding the second constituent part of Deen applies to the masses. However, the modernists (the products of western education) have no hesitation in denying the validity of even these teachings and practices of the Deen. The change thatthe remaining three parts of Deen, viz., Mu'aamalaat, Mu'aasharaat and Akhlaaq, have suffered is by far graver than the revolution which has overtaken the first 2 departments of Deen. Even the masses, due to ignorance, have excluded these three constituent parts from the Deen. These three departments are regarded as mundane affairs – matters applicable to only the world – as such to be decided upon and chosen by opinion and fancy. Thus, impure motives and corruption of the heart have played havoc in these three fields of the Deen. This attitude of crookedness and corruption in understanding have brought into existence a new practice, a new custom and a new habit in opposition to almost every rule and demand of the Shariah in these three departments. A conglomeration of practices, customs and habits having no affinity and sanction in the Shariah now constitutes the way of life of the Ummah. In having chosen an un-Islamic innovated way of life, the masses do not feel the slightest inhibition because they do not consider themselves to have erred in this respect. On the contrary, they proudly regard their newly adopted (un-Islamic) way of life as progress. In fact, they regard their personal practices, customs and ways that they have introduced in opposition to the Divine rules and etiquette of conduct to be superior to the Shariah. This attitude is amply demonstrated by the severe and unbridled opposition they offer those who call them towards the true Law and Way of life of a Muslim, viz., the Sunnah. This has indeed been a drastic change in the Ummah. In the first two departments of Deen (viz., Aqaa'id and Diyaanaat) the constituent parts were not excised from the Deen nor were other beliefs and devotional acts of worship introduced in opposition to those of the Shariah. In other words, as far as belief and practice are concerned, no Muslim considers any act or practice (which may have been innovated) to be superior to Sawlah, Saum, etc. The changes in these two departments are in relation to baseless interpretation (Ta'weel Baatil), neglect, omission and addition to the existing valid practices of Ibaadat. But, the gravity and magnitude of the changes in the latter three departments are so great that these, viz., Mu'aamalaat, Mu'aasharaat and Akhlaaq, have been actually detached and expelled from the Deen. After this excision, new rules and norms of conduct have been adopted in diametric opposition to the Shariah's conduct and culture. To aggravate the issue, the newly adopted un-Islamic culture has been assigned superiority over the original culture of Islam. Thus the change wrought in the latter three departments of the Deen are vastly greater and more drastic than the 'revolution' which the first two departments of the Deen have suffered. The external manifestation and occurrence of the changes in the latter three departments are both abundant and conspicuous. Aqaa'id although compulsory is not externally conspicuous. The change wrought in beliefs is therefore less discernible. The occurrence of Diyaanaat (e.g. Sawlah, Saum) is in specific times; hence, the change in this department too is relatively less in abundance and conspicuousness. But, the last three departments of the Deen (viz., Mu'aamalaat, Mu'aasharaat and Akhlaaq) are applicable at all times and in abundance since they govern every facet of man's life and movement. Therefore, the change that these three departments underwent is abundant and very conspicuous. Indeed a great revolution of detriment has overtaken the latter three avenues of the Deen. Due to the abundance and conspicuousness of this change, an observer will at all times witness the transition – the great change – in the members of the Ummah. The observer (acquainted with true and original Islamic culture) when witnessing this profound change constantly in a member of the Ummah who simultaneously sends up the slogan of (اَنَا مِنْ اُمَّةِ مُحَمَّدْ) I'm of the Ummah of Muhammad (S) will indeed be astounded. He will be struck with surprise and wonder. He will ask:

On what does the claimant base his slogan? In which respect and in what does he agree with Muhammad (S)? On what does he stake his claim?

O Muslims! You are again being warned of your condition of degradation. You have to be alert. You must awaken from your slumber. If even now you fail to wake up, then may Allawh help! If you have realised your fallen state – your fall from the pedestal of glory – then have you not realised that its reformation and its restoration to its former lofty state are incumbent upon you? If it is incumbent – in other words, if indeed you do acknowledge this incumbency – then what are you waiting for? When will you commence with your spiritual reformation that will bring about your restoration to your proper pedestal of glory? Are you awaiting some obstacle, some incapacitating disease, death, or some new wahi (revelation)? For a certainty, there is no hope of any new wahi coming. The Qur'an therefore asks you:

Then, which revelation after it (Qur'an) will they believe?

Obstacles and diseases that will render you helpless are not impossible. But Maut (death) is a certainty. If you are then awaiting the certainty of Maut, what do you think you will then achieve? O Muslims! Regarding this very revolution that the Ummah has undergone and is still undergoing in this age, Rawsoolullawh (S) predicted:

Mankind is like a hundred camels among which you cannot find mount (i.e. one worthy of riding).

And, Allawh knows best and He is the One to grant Taufeeq.

HOW TO RECTIFY THIS CHANGE HOW TO REFORM

In the previous question, it was asked:

Is reformation of the change (or the degradation brought about by the change) not incumbent?

It is not expected of any Muslim to answer that there is no need to reform and reverse the detrimental process of the evil change that has and is presently gripping the Ummah. No Muslim can say that there is no need to reform the degraded and stagnant condition of the Ummah. We shall now Insha-Allawh; indicate the way by which the Ummah may achieve the incumbent reformation. At the very outset, it should be understood that the change or revolution that the Ummah has suffered is a spiritual ailment. Like physical ailments have causes, so too have spiritual ailments. Like the cure for physical disease is the elimination of the causes, so too, the cure for spiritual disease is the elimination of its causes. Once the causes of the spiritual disease have been eliminated, spiritual health and vigour will be the result. There are two factors to be dealt with in this regard:

1. Diagnosis to establish the causes
2. Ways and means of eliminating these causes

A careful and thorough study and examination will reveal that the cause of the Ummah's disease of change and decadence consists of 2 parts:

1. The Death of Islamic knowledge, i.e. widespread ignorance prevailing in the Ummah
2. The Lack of determination

In the absence of knowledge, the essential laws of the Deen remain hidden. Lack of determination impedes practise even if one possesses knowledge.

THE WAYS AND MEANS OF ELIMINATING THE CAUSES OF OUR DEGRADATION

This is the most important factor that demands the greatest attention and the firmest resolution. It has been stated above that the cause of the Ummah's fall consists of two parts. Now, each of these two parts has to be attended to and eliminated in different ways. Both the Ulama and the seekers of knowledge have a role to play in the elimination of ignorance and for each group the programme of action is different. The laymen, i.e. those who have to seek knowledge, fall in two categories, viz., the wealthy who have sufficient means and those with lesser means, who have to spend their times in earning their livelihood. The wealthy that have the means should liberate their sons and dedicate them to the purpose of acquiring Deeni knowledge. Although worldly knowledge may be pursued, this should be only to the degree of necessity and be kept subservient to the Deen. The pursuit of worldly learning should never be allowed to eclipse Islamic knowledge. In this way, the new generation – the offspring of the present generation – will be reformed. The elders themselves should engage in the acquisition of knowledge. Arrangements must be made with an Aalim or one well versed in Deeni knowledge. Ilm should be acquired from such a person systematically. If possible acquire the knowledge through the medium of the Arabic language, for Arabic is the medium of greater insight. If this is not possible, then acquire through the medium of Urdu. On the advice of an experienced Aalim, a set of Urdu books should be studied. The books prescribed should comprehensively explain the various branches of the Deen, viz., Aqaa'id, Diyaanaat, Mu'aamalaat, Mu'aasharaat and Akhlaaq. Each book should be studied twice or thrice under the guidance of an Ustad. If this is not possible, then complete each book at least once by an Ustad. Thereafter study it several times on your own. Those not in positions to devote much time to the acquisition of knowledge because of involvement in earning of livelihood should also study a set of Urdu books. These books should be prescribed for their children as well and should be studied repeatedly. This system of self-study should be adopted until arrangements could be made to enlist the service of an Ustad who can teach the books. The studies should proceed systematically and with regularity. Should any section in the books not be clear, then make a mark and when meeting a person of knowledge seek clarification from him regarding the relevant section. But, never form your own opinion, for this can be very dangerous. Those who are unable to read and for some reason cannot dedicate their children to the acquisition of knowledge academically should initiate among themselves classes for Deeni knowledge. They should make an effort to obtain the service of a qualified Aalim who will teach them the authentic books of Islam. If a qualified Aalim is not available then enlist the service of one who has benefited from the company of Ulama. If such an instructor is not available free, the community should arrange to pay him. The classes should be conducted with regularity, preferably daily; if not daily, then at least once a week. The teacher who is a non-Aalim should not explain anything in the books that he does not understand. He should mark the relevant parts and seek clarification from the Ulama. If a suitable teacher cannot be obtained locally, introduce one from outside and pay him a salary. Do remember that when collecting funds, employ only means which are Islamically lawful. The various categories of seekers of knowledge should adopt another two obligations in addition to their respective ways of study: These are:

1. Whenever you are not aware of the Shariah's ruling regarding any of your affairs, worldly or religious, immediately approach the Ulama-e-Haqq for guidance. If locally no such Aalim is available, write to such Ulama who will be able to guide you. If 1 mas'alah (rule) is asked everyday, after a year one will have acquired the knowledge of over 350 masa'il. After 10 years, this number will have grown to 3500. This is not a difficult task.
2. The 2ND necessary duty is to visit frequently the gatherings of Ulama, be such gatherings public or private occasions.

THE ACQUISITION OF KNOWLEDGE BY WOMEN

Now remains the question of knowledge for women. Endeavours should be made to obtain the service of a pious uprighteous female teacher to impart the Qur'an Majeed and other basic Islamic teachings to minor girls. For this purpose, the kitaab, Beheshti Zewer will suffice. If a pious female teacher is not available then the minor girls too should be included in the program of study of adult females. The program for study of adult females consists of 2 ways:

1. If at home any male (father, husband, brother, son, etc.) is versed in Islamic knowledge, he should daily and at fixed times conduct a class for the women of the house. The same kitaabs prescribed for men (especially Bahishti Zewar) should be taught to women at home. These books should be taught to them several times over.
2. Occasionally ask some pious Aalim who is steadfast on the Sunnah to call at home and lecture to the women. (Such lectures will be from behind a screen, fully observing all Shar'i requirements of Purdah). This method is wonderfully efficacious in ingraining the Deen into the hearts of females. The aforegoing is the program of study and for acquiring knowledge for all seekers of knowledge of the Deen. We shall now discuss the program for the Ulama.

PROGRAM FOR THE ULAMA

The Ulama should have it foremost in them to deliver the ahkaam (laws) of the Shariah to the people. The Ulama can execute this duty in a number of ways. Among such ways and means to be adopted by the Ulama for the dissemination of knowledge are:

1. Dars: Dars or teaching the knowledge of the Deen: In such teaching, the basic parts of the Deen must be accorded priority. Students should be equipped with Diyaanaat as soon as possible. After having acquired Diyaanaat, if the student wishes to study further, and time is available, the Ulama should never refuse. When conducting dars, the Ustad should not answer nonsensical and futile questions put by students. On the contrary, the Ustad should draw the student's attention to the futility of the question and forbid him from indulgence in such futility.
2. Wa'z: Wa'z or lecturing is directed to the public in general. When lecturing, the Ulama should take into consideration the time factor. The main topics of lecturing should be the ills of society and the untoward practices prevalent during the time. Although other subjects too may be introduced, these should be given less time and treated with secondary importance. The essential topics should not be confined to Aqaa'id and Diyaanaat, but should cover Mu'aamalaat (Dealings and contracts, etc) Mu'asharawt (social behaviour and conduct), and Akhlaaq (Morals and Character) in detail; the lecture given should be clear without ambiguity. The audience should understand what is being said. The lecturer should refrain from adopting a style of incitement and animosity and he should never accept any remuneration for delivering a lecture. However, if one is employed specifically for this purpose, then accepting wages will be permissible.
3. Answering Questions: Such answering pertains to questions whether asked verbally or by letter. In this field, the Aalim should bear in mind the following:

a. As far as possible don't delay in answering.
b. Do not answer nonsensical questions. On the contrary, draw the questioner's attention to the futility of his question.
c. If the question has two or more possibilities, do not answer all possibilities. First, ascertain from the questioner, the possibility that is applicable to his question. Sometimes, after having been apprised of the answers of the various possibilities, the questioner chooses the possibility that is conducive to the furtherance of his motive. He thus opts for that answer. In this way, he harms himself spiritually and worldly. By choosing an answer that furthers his motive he puts his adversary at a disadvantage.
d. Do not make it a normal policy to furnish the reasons or dalaa-il (proofs) of the ahkaam (Laws) to nonprofessionals. In most cases such dalaa-il are beyond the comprehension of nonprofessionals. Furnishing proofs is beneficial for the Ulama.
e. If there is reasonable cause to believe that the questioner will not fully understand the answer, then after furnishing him with the written answer advise him to request an Aalim to explain the written answer to him.
f. If there is reason to suspect that the questioner intends to create a dispute and controversy, then do not answer his questions. In short, do not withhold from those who deserve, but refrain from those who are undeserving.

4. Compiling Books: In this field as well, the times should be taken into consideration; the writings should embody clarity and comprehension: If Allawh Ta'ala has blessed the writer with an income; he should not sell his own books.
5. 'Amr bil Ma'roof: Amr bil Ma'roof (Commanding righteousness), Nahyi anil Munkar (Prohibiting evil) is also one of the ways in the program for the Ulama. In some cases non-Ulama also come within this scope. The non-Ulama have to discharge this duty about their subordinates and relatives over whom they exercise control and authority. Such particular Amr bil Ma'roof, Nahyi anil Munkar is not exclusive with the Ulama. However, in relation to the general public, the duty of Amr Bil Ma'roof is exclusive with the Ulama.

In most cases, it is detrimental for non-Ulama to engage in general tableegh to the masses because nonprofessionals are not generally versant with the limits of propagation. They, therefore, commit excesses in the Deen. Furthermore, since most nonprofessionals are not spiritually reformed, their propagational activities are clouded with base motives of the nafs. Pointing to the fact that propagation to the general public is the exclusive duty of the Ulama, some Mufassireen have said that the word min (مِنْ) in the Ayah:

Let there be among you a group calling to virtue…

It is men tab'eedwiyah (تبعيضية) that sets aside some out of the whole; the meaning here being that some and not all should execute this duty. The particular Amr Bil Ma'roof of the Ulama is Waajib in the following cases:

1. A person does something and is not aware of the Shariah's ruling about his doing.
2. The Aalim has full control and authority over the one who does the act.
3. The Aalim is confident that the one doing the deed will heed his (the Aalim's) statements of Amr bil Ma'roof.

In cases other then the three above mentioned, the Amr bil Ma'roof will be Mustahab (preferable and meritorious), but not obligatory. Among the etiquettes of Tableegh is to exhort and explain the one concerned in privacy and with kindness: thereafter, if necessary, in public and with emphasis and severity. On the other hand, if there seems to be no hope of the audience heeding one's call, then ignore them and make dua. Among the branches of Amr bil Ma'roof, Nahyi anil Munkar is to propagate to the Kuffar as well. Such propagation may be either verbally or by means of literature distributed to them. Tableegh to the Kuffar should be to the non-Muslims of one's own land as well as to those of other lands. Although tableegh to the Kuffar is no longer Waajib, nevertheless, since the Shariah is universal, it will be highly meritorious if this branch of tableegh is also undertaken. Defending Islam against the onslaught of the forces of baatil is also a branch of Tableegh. To save the seekers of truth from doubt, confusion and deception, the Ulama should counter and neutralise the criticism, attacks and false allegations of the Kuffar and the Ahl-e-Bid'ah. In achieving this goal, all lawful means should be utilised. The aforementioned discussion pertained to the ways and means of dispelling ignorance. We shall now proceed to outline the ways and means of overcoming lack of courage and negligence.

HOW TO ELIMINATE LACK OF COURAGE

Experience has proven that the following ways are highly efficacious in strengthening one's resolve and in overcoming weakness and lack of courage.

1. Association with a Kaamil (expert and qualified) Shaikh of Tasawwuf (Spiritual Mentor or Guide); the following are the signs of a Shaikh-e-Kaamil:

a. He possesses sufficient knowledge of the Deen.
b. He is a firm adherent of the beliefs, practices and morals of the Shariah.
c. He is devoid of worldly greed.
d. He lays no claim to perfection and excellence.
e. He had lived a while in the company of a Shaikh-e-Kaamil.
f. The contemporary uprighteous Ulama and Mashaa-ikh hold him in esteem .
g. Comparatively, more intelligent persons than ignorant ones incline towards him.
h. The condition of the majority of his mureeds in relation to obedience to the Shariah and reduction in worldly greed is good.
i. He is alert and is concerned about the conditions of his mureeds. He reprimands and admonishes them for their wrongs and defects. He does to permit his mureeds to be the slaves of their desires.
j. After having been in his company several times, one feels a reduction in worldly love while at the same time discerns progress in the love for Allawh Ta'ala.
k. He engages in Dhikr and Shaghl (spiritual exercises). Without such practice, there is no barkat in ta'leem (instruction and teaching).

Kashf (a form of revelation that comes to the Auliya), karaamat (miracles), istijabat-e-dua (acceptance of dua) and tasarrufaat (metaphysical acts) are not requirements of a Shaikh. The companionship of a Shaikh-e-Kaamil is wonderfully efficacious. However, for achieving the benefits of a Shaikh, the mureed's intention must be sincere. The mureed, himself must desire spiritual progress and obedience. He must desire to be imbued with detestation for sin. It is essential that the mureed keep his Shaikh informed of the changing conditions of his heart. Whatever the Shaikh prescribes, the mureed should accept and practise accordingly.

2. The 2ND way will apply when the company of a Shaikh-e-Kaamil is not available. In this case, read and study the life-conditions and spiritual strivings of the Ahlullah (the Saints of Allawh). But, never engage in the mystical practices of Tasawwuf that are written in relation to the lives of the Sufis. Yes, readily follow their advices and statements regarding spiritual purification.

3. The 3RD way in which to eliminate weakness of heart and lack of courage is Muraaqabah (meditation) of Maut and Muraaqabah of the period which will follow Maut. This form of meditation consists of setting aside at least twenty minutes daily. Meditate in solitude about the events which will occur from the time of Sakaraat (pangs of death) until entry into Jannat or Jahannum. Think about these future events, e.g. the questioning in the grave by the two Angels, the punishment and comforts of the grave, resurrection, the scaling of deeds, reward, crossing the Siraat, etc.

The attributes of excellence, e.g. zuhd (being abstemious of the world), khashiyat (fear of Allawh), etc. that are influenced by the development of courage, will attain perfection by means of this form of Muraaqabah.

SUMMARY

Thus far, the factors and causes of the harmful change which the Ummah has undergone as well as the ways and means for rectifying the situation and for reforming the degraded condition of the Ummah have been fully discussed and explained. All praises unto Allawh Ta'ala. The prescription presented for the reformation of the Ummah is very simple and universally applicable. If the Ummah adopts this prescription, its reformation will be possible swiftly – within a very short while. It now remains upon those who are desirous of acquiring benefit and success to act.

ROOH III
RECITING AND TEACHING THE QUR'AN MAJEED

Rawsoolullawh (S) said:

The best of you are those who learn the Qur'an and teach it.

Bukhawri

Why do you not go to the Masjid and learn to recite 2 Ayat of the Qur'an, for this is better for you than 2 camels; 3 Ayat are better than 3 camels, 4 Ayat are better than 4 camels, and so on.

Muslim

Camels (and all vehicles of transport) are of use in only this world while the Qur'anic aayat are of use in both worlds. Here camels have been mentioned by way of example because of their great value and utility' to the Arabs. This is merely an illustration. Otherwise, in fact, the entire universe has no comparison to even a single Ayah of the Qur'an Majeed.

Mirqawt

Another fact that emerges from this Hadeeth is the great thawaab of learning even a part of the Qur'an Majeed. Even a portion of the Qur'an Majeed acquired is indeed a great and wonderful ni'mat bestowed by Allawh Ta'ala.

He who recites the Qur'an well and clearly is equal in rank to the Angels who record creation's deeds. These Angels are gracious, honourable and of lofty rank. He who finds difficulty in reciting the Qur'an will obtain a double reward.

Bukhawri and Muslim

A double reward means: One reward for reciting and another reward for the added effort. This Hadeeth exhorts the one who recites with difficulty to continue reciting and not give up reciting thinking that poor recital is futile. On the contrary, such recitation is highly meritorious, hence a double reward.

A person, who recites one harf (letter) of the Qur'an, obtains one virtue; each virtue multiplies to 10 virtues. I'm not saying that (Alif Lam Meem) is 1 harf. But, Alif in it is 1 harf; the Laam in it is 1 harf and the Meem in it is 1 harf.

Tirmeedhi and Darawmi

1 example, viz., (Alif Lam Meem) has been given. Similarly when the reciter says, Alhamd, he obtains fifty virtues. Allawhu Akbar! What tremendous significance and reward! It is, therefore, most deplorable if one, because of neglect fails to take advantage of this great offer by not acquiring the wealth of the Qur'an.

A person whose breast is devoid of the Qur'an (i.e. he has not learnt anything of the Qur'an Majeed) is like a desolate house.

Tirmeedhi

On the Day of Qiyamah, a crown of such brilliance will be placed on the heads of the parents of one who learnt the Qur'an and practised on its laws, that its glitter will outshine the brilliance of the sun which penetrates your houses. What then do you think will be the position of the one who himself learnt the Qur'an and acted in accordance with it?

Ahmadd and Aboo Dawood

This Hadeeth mentions the great significance of teaching the Qur'an Majeed to children. It is incumbent, therefore, upon Muslims to ensure that their children learn to recite the Qur'an Majeed. If for some reason they cannot or does not gain the opportunity of committing the Qur'an Majeed to memory (Hifz) then at least they should learn it by reciting from the text (Naatharah). However, wherever the opportunity exists for imparting Hifz to the children, advantage should be taken to acquire this great wealth. Indeed it is a wonderful bounty. If for some reason the child does not have the time for learning the whole Qur'an, then even a portion should be taught to him/her. This Hadeeth exhorts even the acquisition of a portion of the Qur'an Majeed.

He who recites the Qur'an, memorises it, accepts its halaal (lawful things) as halaal and haraam (forbidden things) as haraam (i.e. his beliefs in these matters are correct), Allawh Ta'ala will enter him into Jannat and accept his intercession on behalf of ten such persons of his family upon whom entry into Jahannum has become incumbent (i.e. Allawh Ta'ala will forgive them because of his intercession).

Ahmad, Tirmeedhi, Ibn Majah, Darawmi

The significance of committing the Qur'an Majeed to memory mentioned in this Hadeeth is far greater than that mentioned in the earlier Hadeeth. Among one's family members, the closest to one are one's parents. Hence, in terms of the assurance of intercession stated in the Hadeeth the Hafiz's intercession for his parents is a certainty. Parents should now realise the tremendous importance and advantage of making their children Huffaaz of the Qur'an Majeed.

Hearts (of people) also corrode like steel rusts when exposed to moisture.

Someone asked:

O Rawsoolullawh (S)! What is its polish?

Rawsoolullawh (b) replied:

Remembering Maut in abundance and recitation of the Qur'an

Baihaqi – Shu'bul 'Eeman

Hadhrawt Jabir (R) said

Rawsoolullawh (S) once came to us while we were engaged in reciting the Qur'an. Among us were some village-folk and non-Arabs (i.e. some people who were not able to recite the Qur'an properly). Rawsoolullawh (S) said, 'Continue reciting. All are reciting well.'

Aboo Dawood and Baihaqi

From this, it will be realised that even if one lacks the ability to recite superbly, one should continue reciting so that the heart becomes adorned. Those who have the ability to recite superbly should not be scornful of those who lack the ability. Rawsoolullawh (S) encouraged all to recite the Qur'an Majeed even if the recitation is not up to the correct standard.

Rawsoolullawh (S) said:

He who listens to even a single Ayah (being recited by another) obtains such a virtue which perpetually multiplies (it increases in thawaab continuously). The one who recited the Ayah will find the recited Ayah in the form of a Noor on the Day of Qiyamah (which will be of greater value and significance than the virtue that accrued to the one who had listened to the recitation).

Ahmadd

If one is unable to recite, one should always listen to the recital of others. Such listening is rewarded with considerable thawaab. There is absolutely no difficulty involved in the obtainal of such great thawaab by such a simple method.

Continue reciting the Qur'an because on the Day of Qiyamah it will appear as an intercessor for the reciter.

Muslim

The intercession of the Qur'an will result in the reciter being pardoned.

On the Day of Qiyamah, the Qur'an will petition Allawh to cloak the one who had recited it with garments of honour and respect. A crown of honour will then be placed on the head of the reciter. The Qur'an will then petition Allawh Ta'ala to shower His pleasure on the reciter. Allawh will then become pleased with him. The reciter will then be asked to recite the Qur'an, thereby attaining higher ranks of elevation. In reward for each Ayah, a virtue will accrue to him.

Tirmeedhi and Ibn Khuzaimah

Another Hadeeth as well describes the elevation of ranks by means of reciting the Qur'an in the Hereafter. The Hadeeth states:

Continue climbing (higher and higher in rank) with your recitation in the same way as you recited with care and concern on earth. Your abode (of residing) is located (at that rank attained) with the last Ayah recited.

Tirmeedhi, Aboo Dawood, Ibn Majah, and Ibn Hibbaan

1 should now reflect and take advantage of this great treasure in store in the Akhirawh by striving in the recitation of the Qur'an. Effort should be made to secure this wonderful wealth for one's offspring. If one has trouble in memorising or in reciting, one should never lose hope and give up the recitation. Even reciting in such circumstances is highly meritorious as has been explained earlier. If unable to commit the Qur'an to memory, then merely recite it (by way of Naatharah i.e. looking inside and reading). Impart this recitation to others as well. The significance and thawaab are indeed great. The acquisition of the ways and means of a practice or act that is incumbent and rewardable is also incumbent and rewardable. Like it is essential to render the act or practice so too is it essential to acquire its ways and means. This is a simple and self-evident fact. It is therefore incumbent to make the necessary arrangements for learning and teaching the Qur'an Majeed. The ways and means of rendering this duty is to establish a maktab (or madrasah) in your locality so that children can be taught to recite the Qur'an Majeed. Adults too should devote some time towards this acquisition. If a free instructor or teacher is not available, the community should engage a salaried teacher. Boys who have acquired the knowledge of reciting at the madrasah should teach it to the females at home. In this way all males and females will be able to recite the Qur'an Majeed. If anyone is unable to recite the Qur'an, he/she should at least memorise a few Soorawhs. Besides the above, there are some other Huqooq (rights and demands) of the Qur'an Majeed. These are:

1. Once the Qur'an Majeed has been learnt, it should never be forgotten. Whatever parts have been learnt should always be remembered.

2. A person who wishes to learn the translation of the Qur'an Majeed should not undertake the task by means of self-study. In self-study of the Qur'an's translation is the grave danger of misunderstanding. Its translation should be studied under the guidance of an Aalim.

3. The Qur'an Majeed demands the utmost respect and reverence. Never stretch the legs in its direction nor turn your back to it. Do not sit higher than the Qur'an Majeed and do not place it on the ground. Place it on a desk or pillow or any high place.

d. Torn, tattered and unusable pages and copies of the Qur'an Majeed should be wrapped in a clean cloth and buried in such a spot that will not be trampled underfoot.

4. When reciting the Qur'an Majeed contemplate that you are conversing with Allawh Ta'ala. The spiritual light with which the heart will then become imbued will be vividly perceived.

LOVE FOR ALLAWH AND LOVE FOR RAWSOOLULLAWH (S)

1. Hadhrawt Anas (R) narrates that Rawsoolullawh (S) said:

Whoever has in him three things, will experience the sweetness of 'Eeman: (These are)

1. His love for Allawh and His Rawsool is more than that for all and everything.

2. His love for another (person) is motivated by only the love of Allawh. (i.e. His love and friendship with people are not for worldly motives. He befriends people because they happen to be pious men of Allawh).

3. A man who, after having been saved by Allawh from kufr, abhors returning to kufr as much as he abhors falling into a fire

Bukhawri and Muslim

You cannot have total 'Eeman as long as you do not love me more than your father, children and all people.

Bukhawri, Muslim, and Mishkaat

A man cannot be perfect of 'Eeman as long as his love for me is not more than his love for his whole family and for all people.

Muslim

Also in Bukhawri Shareef, it is recorded that Hadhrawt Umar (R) said:

O Rawsoolullawh! Most assuredly, I love you more than all things, but my own life.

Rawsoolullawh (S) said:

I swear by The Being in Whose Power is my life! One is not a perfect believer until one loves me more than one's own life.

Hadhrawt Umar (reflected and) exclaimed

I now love you more than my own life.

Rawsoolullawh (S) replied:

Now you are a perfect Muslim.

Initially, Hadhrawt Umar (R) did not reflect and thought that since one is affected more by difficulty on oneself than difficulty on another, one's life must be dearer than another's must. However, upon reflection he realised that for the sake of Rawsoolullawh (S) every Muslim will readily sacrifice his own life. If a choice has to be made between one's own life and the dignity and honour of Rawsoolullawh (S), even the ordinary Muslim will be prepared to lay down his life at the altar of sacrifice. Hadhrawt Umar (R) thus realised that in fact his love for Rawsoolullawh (S) was greater than his love for his own life. And so it was and remained until the end – Hadhrawt Umar (R) remained steadfast on the Deen never turning his face away from the Deen by the slightest degree.

Hadhrawt Ibn Abbaas (R narrates that Rawsoolullawh (S) said,

Love Allawh Ta'ala because He nourishes and sustains you; love me because Allawh Ta'ala loves me.

Tirmeedhi

It is not to be inferred from this Hadeeth that we have to love Allawh Ta'ala only because He nourishes us. This Hadeeth merely implies that should one be unable to comprehend the limitless and vast favours and bounties of Allawh Ta'ala, then at least contemplate and understand this one great Ni'mat of nourishment (Rizq). No one can ever deny or ignore this obvious fact of Allawh Ta'ala being the sole Nourisher and Sustainer. Hence, understanding even this single fact will induce in one love for Allawh Ta'ala.

Hadhrawt Anas (R) narrates that a villager came to Rawsoolullawh (S) and said:

O Rawsoolullawh! When will it be Qiyamah?

Rawsoolullawh (S) said:

What preparations have you made for it?

He replied:

I have not much Sawlah nor Saum, but I have love for Allawh and His Rawsool.

Rawsoolullawh (S) said:

On the Day of Qiyamah every person will be with the one whom he loved.

This meant that on the Day of Qiyamah those who had loved Rawsoolullawh (S) will be with him. Along with this great fortune, they will be in close proximity to Allawh Ta'ala. Hadhrawt Anas (R) then commented:

After having heard this good news, Muslims became exceedingly happy. After having embraced Islam, nothing else (besides their embracing) made them as happy (as this statement of Rawsoolullawh (S).

Bukhawri and Muslim

The glad tidings conveyed in this Hadeeth are of great significance. Even if one has no great stock of acts of Ibaadat, the love of Allawh and His Rawsool (S) will secure the treasure of Divine Proximity for one in the Akhirawh.

Hadhrawt Aboo Dharr Ghifaari (R) narrated that once Rawsoolullawh (S) performed Sawlah (Tahajjud). The whole night in his Sawlah, he recited a single Ayah until the morning. The Ayah is:

(O Allawh!) If You punish them, they are your servants (i.e. You have all the authority over them). If You forgive them (it is within Your Power), for You are All-powerful and the One of Wisdom.

Nasa'i and 'Ibn Majah

Shaikh Dehlawi (R'A) commenting on this Hadeeth says that the Qur'anic Ayah that was recited the whole night by Rawsoolullawh (S) is the statement of Nabee 'Eesa (A) that he will be making (on the Day of Qiyamah) in regard to his Ummah. Rawsoolullawh (S) presented his Ummah's case for Maghfirat (forgiveness) to Allawh Ta'ala in the same manner. This loving attitude of Rawsoolullawh (S) bears testimony to his great love for his Ummah. For the sake of this love, he sacrificed the comfort of whole nights, petitioning and appealing to Allawh Ta'ala to forgive his Ummah. It will only be a callous and a heartless one whose heart is not moved when he hears of the great love that Rawsoolullawh (S) had for the Ummah.

Hadhrawt Aboo Hurairah (R) narrates that Rawsoolullawh (S) said:

My similitude with you is like a man who strives to prevent moths falling into a fire. The moths plunge into the fire while the man makes great attempts to save them. Inspite of his efforts, they continue to fall into the fire. Similarly, I relentlessly grab hold of you and divert you from the Fire (so that you do not plunge into Jahannum by commission of evil), but you continue with your plunge into the Fire.

Bukhawri

This Hadeeth too indicates the tremendous love and concern that Rawsoolullawh (S) had for his Ummah. His profound concern to save his Ummah from the calamities of the Akhirawh is a manifestation of his love for the Ummah. Which Ummati can ignore this love?

Hadhrawt Abbas Ibn Mirdas (R) narrates that:

Rawsoolullawh (S) made dua of Maghfirawt (forgiveness) for his Ummah in the evening of Arawfat. The Divine Answer came: "Your Ummah has been forgiven, excepting Huqooqul 'Ibadd (i.e. the rights of others which were usurped and plundered and for which no proper amends were made)."

Rawsoolullawh (S) then petitioned Allawh Ta'ala:

O Allawh! If You wish, You can award the rights (which were plundered here) of the oppressed with Jannat and forgive the oppressors.

However, this dua was not accepted on that night. During the morning at Muzdalifah, Rawsoolullawh (S) repeated the dua. On this occasion the request was granted. The acceptance of this dua induced Rawsoolullawh (S) to smile with delight. Rawsoolullawh (S) then said to Aboo Bakr and Umar (R):

When Allawh Ta'ala accepted my dua and forgave my Ummah, Iblees rubbed sand in his face and cried in despondency and defeat. I laughed on seeing his discomfort.

Ibn Majah and Baihaqi

This Hadeeth must not be misconstrued. The inference should not be drawn that usurped, plundered and unfulfilled rights of creation (Huqooqul Ibaad) will compulsorily at all times be waived, without any punishment nor does it mean that the performance of Hajj cancels out such rights. The interpretation of this Hadeeth consists of two possibilities:

1. The possibility of remaining in Jahannum forever as punishment for the usurpation of Huqooqul 'Ibadd
2. Definite punishment for Huqooqul 'Ibadd although such punishment will not be everlasting residence in Jahannum

When Rawsoolullawh (S) made the dua, 2 Divine Promises were the result:

1. Everlasting residence in Jahannum (the first possibility mentioned above) as compensation for plundering huqooqul ibaad was cancelled. After serving one's sentence of punishment in Jahannum, one will emerge therefrom and attain salvation.
2. Certainty of punishment for Huqooqul 'Ibadd (the second possibility) cancelled. In fact, there will be cases where Allawh Ta'ala will secure forgiveness for the oppressors by the presentation of favours and ni'mat to the oppressed. The oppressed will become pleased with the bounties and happily pardon the oppressors in return.

Once again, we must reflect and realise the tremendous and deep love that Rawsoolullawh (S) cherished for the Ummah. His concern for the Ummah was so great that he persisted in the supplication to secure forgiveness for even the oppressors of his Ummah. Is it yet possible that the heart of the Believer will not brim over with love for Rawsoolullawh (S)?

Hadhrawt 'Abbdullawh Bin Amr Bin Al-'As (R) narrates that:

Once Rawsoolullawh (S) after reciting those verses in which are mentioned the dua of Hadhrawt Ibbrawheem and Hadhrawt 'Eesa (A) for their respective Ummats, raised his hands, and supplicated to Allawh Ta'ala as follows:

O Allawh! My Ummah, my Ummah.

Allawh Ta'ala said:

Jibraw'eel, go to Muhammad (S) – Your Creator is aware (of all things) – and ask him the reason for his grief.

Jibraw'eel (A) enquired the reason from Rawsoolullawh (S) for his grief and tears. Rawsoolullawh (S) informed Jibraeel (A) of his concern for the Ummah. Jibraw'eel (A) then brought the following message from Allawh Ta'ala:

We shall please you in regard to your Ummah and We shall not let you grieve.

Muslim

According to Hadhrawt Ibn Abbaas (R), Rawsoolullawh (S) said that he will never be happy as long as there remains a single member of his Ummah in the Fire.

Durrul Manthoor

In terms of this Divine Promise to Rawsoolullawh (S), Insha-Allawh, Allawh Ta'ala will not leave a single Ummati in Jahannum. O Muslims! The wonderful treasures of the Akhirawh that you will be acquiring will be through the auspicious agency of Rawsoolullawh (S). If, therefore, you cannot love him for whom will you ever love?

Hadhrawt Umar (R) narrated that:

There was a man by the name, Abbdullawh and was known as Himar. Rawsoolullawh (S) had punished him for having consumed liquor. After having been punished, he was once again brought to Rawsoolullawh (S) for the same crime. Rawsoolullawh (S) ordered him to be punished. Someone cursed him (Himar) for repeatedly committing the crime.

Rawsoolullawh (S) commented:

Do not curse him. I swear by Allawh that I know he has love for Allawh and His Rawsool.

Aboo Dawood

One can from this incident realise the honour and love which Rawsoolullawh (S) had for one who was imbued with love for Allawh and love for the Rawsool. Even after repeatedly having indulged in a major sin, Rawsoolullawh (S) forbade people from cursing the wrongdoer. It is now necessary that every Muslim fill every vein in his body with the love of Allawh and love of Rawsoolullawh (S). The noble and priceless treasures of the Akhirawh are procurable by virtue of this love without difficulty.

ROOH V

BELIEF IN TAQQDEER AND TAWAKKUL IN ALLAWH

The belief that everything that happened, is happening and will happen is according to the knowledge, will and command of Allawh Ta'ala is called Taqdeer. Belief in Taqdeer is compulsory. The advantages of belief in Taqdeer and Tawakkul (Trust in Allawh) are as follows:

1. No matter what hardship or misfortune befalls one, it will be accepted without panic and the heart will remain strong in the face of such hardships. Strong belief in Taqdeer will indicate that Allawh's Wish is in this occurrence and it cannot be opposed. The hardship will disappear only when so desired by Allawh Ta'ala. Thus, the man of Taqdeer accepts what comes his way with contented resignation.
2. One who has understood and accepted this conception of Taqdeer will not be overcome with frustration at the delay in the passing of the hardship. He will not become despondent and lose hope when the misfortune endures for any length of time. He will banish weakness.
3. The adherent of Taqdeer will not adopt unlawful ways and means of combating the difficulty, for he knows that the adversity has been brought about by Allawh Ta'ala. He understands well that elimination of the hardship is not possible without the Will of Allawh Ta'ala. He therefore realises the futility of his efforts in trying to eliminate what Allawh Ta'ala has willed. He will thus not unnecessarily court the displeasure of Allawh by the adoption of unlawful measures. Why court Allawh's Wrath when one's purpose cannot be achieved even after having displeased Him?
4. The believer in Taqdeer and Tawakkul will not rely solely on material and mundane measures, but will resort to dua as well. He believes that nothing can be gained without His Will. He thus derives greater hope and strength by supplicating to Allawh Ta'ala. An additional benefit of engaging in dua is the strengthening of one's relationship with Allawh Ta'ala. A strong bond of love with Allawh Ta'ala is the basis of peace and all comfort.
5. The believer in Taqdeer will not attribute success, accomplishment and excellence to his efforts. He will attribute everything to the Will and Pleasure of Allawh Ta'ala. He will thus be imbued with humility. Such a man will not be arrogant and haughty.

The summary of what has been said above is:

The believer in Taqdeer and Tawakkul will be grateful (make shukr) in times and occasions of success and prosperity, and he will be patient (make sabr) when failure and adversity overtake him. This is the great advantage that Allawh Ta'ala points to in the following Ayah:

…so that you do not lose hope over what you have lost nor do you become elated because of what you have gained.

Soorawh Hadeed

The Islamic conception of Taqdeer should not be misconstrued and the essential and correct ways and means for worldly affairs should not be discarded on the pretext of resignation to Taqdeer. Discarding the lawful means and agencies which Allawh Ta'ala has created for worldly affairs is weakness as well as erroneous. Such error and weakness have been criticised in the Hadeeth. Hadhrawt Auf Bin Malik (R) narrates that:

Once when Rawsoolullawh (S) decided a dispute, the one against whom the verdict went, exclaimed:

حَسْبُنَا اللهُ وَنِعْمَ الْوَكِيْل

Sufficient for me is Allawh and He is a good Protector.

This exclamation was intended to convey that Allawh's Pleasure was the cause of the setback that he suffered. Hearing this, Rawsoolullawh (S) said:

Allawh Ta'ala does not like weakness. Be alert!

Here Rawsoolullawh (S) exhorted that one should harness the correct means for one's case and activity. However, if inspite of instituting the correct measures, failure results, then one will be justified in saying: (). This Hadeeth appears in Aboo Dawood.

AHADEETH ON TAQQDEER

Hadhrawt Jabir (R) narrates that Rawsoolullawh (S) said:

You can never be a Mu'min as long as you do not believe in Taqdeer – in its good and its bad – to such an extent that whatever is to happen will not be warded off and whatever is not to happen will not occur.

Tirmeedhi

Hadhrawt Ibn Abbaas (R) narrates:

I was (once) behind Nabi (b) when he said to me: 'O son! I shall inform you of a few things. Remember Allawh and He will protect you. Remember Allawh and you will find Him close to you. When you have to ask for something, ask of Allawh Ta'ala. When you require aid, seek His Aid. Believe firmly that if all creation desires to benefit you in anything, they can never benefit you but that which Allawh has decreed for you. If they all unite to harm you, they will not be able to harm you in anything, but that which Allawh has decreed for you.

Tirmeedhi

Hadhrawt Aboo Darda (R) narrates that:

Allawh Ta'ala has already predestined five things for all people, viz., age, sustenance (rizq), deeds, place of burial, and final salvation or condemnation.

Ahmad, Bazzaaz, Kabeer, Ausat

Hadhrawt Mu'aawiyah (R) narrates that Rawsoolullawh (S) said:

Do not advance to acquire something, thinking that you can acquire it by your efforts even though Allawh Ta'ala has not predestined it for you nor retreat from something, thinking that you will be able to obviate it by your efforts even though Allawh Ta'ala has predestined it for you.

Kabeer and Ausat

Whatever Allawh Ta'ala has predestined, will happen no matter what efforts are made by man to gain or ward it off.

Hadhrawt Aboo Hurairah (R) narrates that Rawsoolullawh (S) said:

Strive to acquire what is beneficial for you; seek the aid of Allawh; do not lose courage and if a setback overtakes you, do not say: 'If I had done this then it would have happened like this (i.e. not what had happened).' Instead, say: 'Allawh has ordained this. Whatever He has willed, has happened.

Muslim

The above Ahadeeth have been extracted from Jam'ul Fawaaid. These Ahadeeth pertain largely to Taqdeer. The narrations that will appear hereunder pertain more to Tawakkul.

Allawh Ta'ala states in the Qur'an:

(After you have consulted) and when you have firmly decided, then have trust on Allawh (and proceed to do what you have decided to do). Verily, Allawh Ta'ala loves those who place reliance (on Him).

Soorawh Al Imrawn

What greater wealth does one require than the love of Allawh? Those whose trust and reliance are in Allawh, have secured His love. There is no doubt in the success of such people. From this Ayah it is also manifest that along with Tawakkul should be Tadbeer (i.e. employment of the correct agencies, means and ways). Consultation that is mentioned in the Ayah is in fact a way for deciding an affair. However, one should not repose reliance on tadbeer. Even after having instituted the ways and means, reliance must be placed on Allawh Ta'ala.

Allawh Ta'ala says in the Qur'an Shareef:

They (the Sahabah) are such (sincere) people that when some persons said to them: 'These people (i.e. the Kuffar of Makkah) have made (great) preparations for you (i.e. for fighting you) You should therefore fear them', their (the Sahabah) 'Eeman became stronger. Allawh is sufficient and is best. Unto Him affairs are assigned. Thus, these people (the Sahabah) returned loaded with the bounties of Allawh. No grief overtook them and they remained following the Pleasure of Allawh. Verify, Allawh is most Munificent.

In these aayat is a reference to a particular incident from which the Sahabah benefited both materially as well as spiritually. Allawh Ta'ala indicates here that both these benefits were the consequence of Tawakkul.

Allawh Ta'ala orders Rawsoolullawh (S) in the Qur'an Shareef to say:

Say (O Muhammad!) Nothing can overtake us, but that which Allawh has ordained for us. He is our King. All Believers should assign their affairs to Allawh. (Ask the Kuffar) What are you awaiting for us one goodness out of two, while we are awaiting with regards to you, that Allawh inflicts you with a punishment, from His side, or at our hands. So await, we too are awaiting.

Soorawh Taubah

Since Allawh Ta'ala is the King, the servant should be pleased with whatever the King chooses. This should be the condition of all Muslims. Both prosperity and adversity are beneficial for Muslims. Times and conditions of hardship prove beneficial for Muslims in relation to the end result. In enduring the hardships, ranks increase and sins are forgiven. Thus, it matters not which condition a Muslim is in. Both, viz., prosperity and adversity, are advantageous for Believers. This shows that even if a Muslim is overtaken by difficulty and hardship, he is not reduced to despondency and frustration, for he considers the state of adversity also beneficial to him. If the benefits of adversity do not manifest in this world, then for a certainty, these will be manifested in the Akhirawh. The Akhirawh is our actual and original home and goodness and benefit there will be to our perpetual advantage.

Allawh Ta'ala says:

Moosa (when he saw Banee Israw'eel in fear and suffering because of the cruelty of Fir'aon) said: 'O my people! If you have (true) 'Eeman on Allawh, then have trust in Him, if indeed you have submitted to Him.

They said: 'We have reposed trust on only Allawh.' (They then supplicated): 'O our Rawbb! Do not make us the target of these oppressors; save us by Your mercy from these unbelievers.

Soorawh Yoonus

From this Ayah it is learnt that along with Tawakkul, dua is very efficacious.

10. Allawh Ta'ala says:

Whoever has trust on Allawh, He is sufficient for him.

Allawh Ta'ala dispenses all affairs of those who have trust on Him, be the affairs of a physical or spiritual nature. This is indeed a wonderful promise made to those who adopt Tawakkul.

11. Hadhrawt Sa'd narrates that Rawsoolullawh (S) said:

The good fortune of a person is that he remains pleased with what Allawh has ordained for him. The misfortune of a person is that he refrains from asking Allawh for goodness and that he is displeased with what Allawh has ordained for him.

Ahmadd and Tirmeedhi

Hadhrawt Amr Bin Al-Aas (R) narrates that Rawsoolullawh (S) said:

The heart of man lingers after everything. Allawh does not care for a man who puts his heart at the disposal of everything; he may be destroyed in any place (and way – Allawh cares not for him). Whoever has trust on Allawh, Allawh suffices for him in all affairs.

'Ibn Majah

This Hadeeth points out that such a man whose trust is reposed in Allawh does not become despondent and is not smitten by worry.

Hadhrawt Imrawn Bin Haseen (R) narrates that Rawsoolullawh (S) said:

Whoever remains aligned to Allawh with his heart, Allawh will be sufficient or him in all his affairs. Allawh will bestow on him sustenance from such quarters which he did not even think of. Whoever aligns himself with the world, Allawh hands him over to the world.

Targheebb wa Tarheebb

Hadhrawt Anas (R) narrates that Rawsoolullawh (S) said to a man:

Tie your camel and trust in Allawh.

Thus, Tawakkul does not envisage the abandonment of the lawful means and agencies that Allawh Ta'ala has created for the execution of activities. One has to trust in Allawh and not repose confidence in the means and ways.

Hadhrawt Aboo Khuzaamah (R) narrates that someone asked Rawsoolullawh (S):

Do incantations and medicine alter Taqqdeer?

Rawsoolullawh (S) said:

This too is included in Taqdeer.

Tirmeedhi and Ibn Majah

According to this Hadeeth, the benefit that will result from medicine, etc. is also dictated by Taqdeer. The sum total of this discussion is that Muslims should never become despondent and frustrated in difficult situations. Take lesson from what has been said in these Ayat, Ahadeeth, and do not become weak in your Deen. Repose all your trust on Allawh Ta'ala.

ROOH VI

SUPPLICATING (TO MAKE DUA)

Dua or supplication is to petition Allawh Ta'ala for one's needs and requirements, be such needs mundane or spiritual – be they in regard to one's worldly or Deeni affairs – whether such affairs and needs are within one's ability of acquisition or not. In all cases, the Muslim has to supplicate to Allawh Ta'ala for the fulfilment of his needs. Dua for unlawful desires and needs is not permissible. While making dua, all the lawful means and agencies for the requirement should be harnessed, e.g. the farmer while making dua for his farm to yield should at the same time engage in the means and ways of farming; one making dua for protection against an enemy should at the same time engage in the ways and means of warding off the enemy; the sick while making dua for recovery should resort to medicine and treatment as well; one involved in litigation should while making dua for success in his court-case, engage the proper means of achieving the success as well; one engaged in the acquisition of Qur'anic and Deeni knowledge should make dua for barkat and success while at the same time study properly and acquire whatever ways are essential for the correct acquisition of knowledge; one involved in ibaadat should strive against the lowly desires and the diversions of shaitaan and the nafs while at the same time make dua for aid from Allawh Ta'ala for sincerity and steadfastness in his acts of ibaadat. In affairs in which physical and material means and agencies have no role to play, one should in entirety resort to only dua, e.g. rainfall, protection against plaques, the shaitaan and the deception of the nafs, protection from the oppression of cruel persons, etc. Dua does not mean the mere recitation of some words and the mere ritual reiteration of words after Sawlah. The nature of dua consists of petitioning in the Court of Allawh Ta'ala. The earnestness and concern that people have when making appeals in the courts of the world should at least be adopted when making dua in the Court of Allawh Ta'ala. When making dua, one's mind and body have to be concentrated and directed into the purpose of dua. One should never lose hope in the event of fulfilment of the dua being delayed or if fulfilment is not discerned. One has to submit to the Will of Allawh Ta'ala. Dua is an appeal to Allawh Ta'ala. It is His sole prerogative to grant or reject the appeals of His servants. We have no right to become disillusioned and despondent if we cannot discern acceptance of our dua. The times of dua are not to restricted to the time of Sawlah. Dua should be made at any time, whenever one requires something although the time after Sawlah is very efficacious for acceptance of the dua. Whenever and whatever one is in need of, immediately make dua with the heart as well as with the tongue. This then is the reality and nature of dua. Now when supplicating, do so according to the reality and nature of dua as has been described. If you do so, you will discern the efficacy and barakaat of dua. Barkat of dua does not necessarily mean that whatever you ask for will be granted. At times the very object sought for, is obtained, e.g. something about the Aakhirat, because a favour or bounty of the Akhirawh is pure goodness for the servant. For the attainment of the fortunes of the Aakhirat, 'Eeman and Itaa'at (obedience) are conditions. Without these conditions, the blessings of Akhirawh are not attainable. Sometimes, the object asked for is not obtained, e.g. an object or requirement of the world. This is so because sometimes the worldly object supplicated for is harmful and sometimes beneficial. If it is beneficial in the Wisdom of Allawh Ta'ala, He grants it to the servant and when it is harmful, He withholds it from the servant just as a father will deny his child an object that is detrimental to his interests. The meaning of barkat in this context is that the Attention of Allawh Ta'ala is directed to the servant. Thus, if due to some reason known to Allawh Ta'ala, the object asked for is not granted, then too he is contented. He is not overcome with frustration and weakness. The spiritual strength with which the heart is imbued is the effect of the Special Attention of Allawh Ta'ala because of dua made by the servant. This Special Attention of Allawh is indeed a great treasure. All other treasures pale into insignificance in its presence. This Special Attention is in fact man's original capital that he has to strive for; the possession of this treasure will bring him comfort and peace in this world and in the Akhirawh. The limitless bounties of the Hereafter are obtainable because of the Special Attention that Allawh Ta'ala focuses on His servants. There is, therefore, never the slightest fear of being deprived. The one who makes dua is never deprived because of this inherent barakaat of dua. Some Ahadeeth pertaining to the significance of dua will now be narrated.

Hadhrawt Aboo Hurairah (R) narrated that Rawsoolullawh (S) said:

The servant's dua is accepted as long as he does not ask for something sinful nor for something unkind for his relatives; and, as long as he is not impatient.

It was asked:

O Rawsoolullawh! What is the meaning of being impatient?

It means to say:

'I have asked dua time and again, but it has not been answered.' So saying, one gives up asking dua.

Muslim

This Hadeeth stresses the continuous making of dua even if the dua seemingly is not accepted.

Hadhrawt Aboo Hurairah (R) narrates that Rawsoolullawh (S) said:

Nothing is more appreciable to Allawh than dua.

Tirmeedhi and Ibn Majah

Hadhrawt Ibn Umar (R) narrates that Rawsoolullawh (S) said:

Dua is beneficial in everything. It is efficacious in warding off misfortunes which have already descended as well as misfortunes which are about to descend. Therefore, the servants of Allawh should be steadfast in making dua.

Tirmeedhi and Ahmadd

Hadhrawt Aboo Hurairah (R) narrates that Rawsoolullawh (S) said:

Allawh becomes angry with one who refrains from dua.

Hadhrawt Aboo Hurairah (R) narrates that Rawsoolullawh (S) said:

You should continuously engage in dua and firmly believe that Allawh is accepting your dua. Allawh Ta'ala doesn't accept the dua of one whose heart is careless.

Tirmeedhi

Dua must be made with earnestness and concentration of mind and body while at the same time believing that the dua is definitely being accepted by Allawh Ta'ala. Non-attainment of the object of the dua should not be misconstrued as nonacceptance. The dua is most certainly accepted, but obtainal of the object sought after is subject to the Wisdom of Allawh Ta'ala as has been earlier explained.

Hadhrawt Aboo Saeed Khudri (R) narrates that Rawsoolullawh (S) said:

Any Muslim who makes a dua and his dua does not contain a request for anything sinful or anything regarding the severance of family ties, Allawh Ta'ala grants him one of 3 things most assuredly, viz.,

1. What he has asked is granted immediately or
2. What he has asked is saved for him as a treasure in the Akhirawh
3. Allawh wards away some calamity from him in lieu of the object asked for.

The Sahabah then said that they will resort to dua in abundance. Rawsoolullawh (S) replied that by Allawh Ta'ala everything is in abundance. Thus, no dua is returned empty.

Hadhrawt Anas (R) narrates that Rawsoolullawh (S) said:

Everyone should petition his Creator for all his needs.

In the narration of Hadhrawt Thaabit (R) it is said:

Everyone should ask his Creator for all his needs be it even salt or be it a shoelace when it breaks.

Tirmeedhi

One should not consider it improper to make dua for insignificant items because by Allawh Ta'ala even such things that are significant, great and valuable by us, are insignificant in His Gaze.

ROOH VII

ASSOCIATION WITH THE PIOUS

Wonderfully efficacious for spiritual progress is to join the company of the pious. One should endeavour to sit in the company of pious people so that talks of wisdom and piety as well as virtuous habits are acquired. The life-stories of the pious should be studied. This too serves the same purpose as association with the pious. Virtuous character is acquired by reading and studying the life-stories of the saintly men of Allawh. Allawh Ta'ala has instilled in man the propensity to be influenced by others. Such influence is derived without any concentration and any special endeavour. The life and conditions of others generally influence people greatly. This acceptance of influence applies to both good and bad influence. The company of the pious is therefore extremely beneficial while evil company is extremely harmful. The company of the pious refers to association with such a person who has sufficient knowledge of the necessary laws of the Shariah, and whose beliefs are correct. The one with whom association is struck up should be a person who refrains from bid'ah (innovation) and evil customs and practices. He should be one who is steadfast in Sawlah, Saum and the essential acts of Ibaadat. His relationship and affairs with others should be impeccable. He should be a man of humility, piety and abstemious. He must be one who takes precaution in matters pertaining to halaal and haraam. He must be of uprighteous moral character. He must be a man who does not hold the poor and the needy in contempt. Both his external and internal character must be virtuous. The fear and love of Allawh should imbue his heart. He must not be a man of worldly greed. For the sake of the Deen he should care for nothing, neither for wealth nor honour. He should be a man who prefers the life hereafter to the life of this world. He must be a man of sabr and shukr. A man of these capabilities and characteristics is indeed alchemy for one's spiritual development. Those who lack the ability to discern or recognise the ability of a man – whether he is a man of piety or not – should take the advice of the pious people of his time. Whomever the pious people of the time describe as pious will be worthy for company. Furthermore, by being in the company of a pious man a few times, one will discern in oneself an aversion for evil and an inclination towards virtue. A man whose company produces this effect on the heart is indeed a pious man. Abstain as far as is possible from a man in whom evil qualities are discerned. Unless necessity compels one, do not enter into his company. Evil company utterly destroys one's Deen. At times evil persons harm not only one's spiritual life, but one's worldly life as well. Such worldly loss could be sustained in a variety of ways, such as in one's wealth, property, honour and life. Then there are such people in whom one cannot discern good or bad qualities. Entertain good opinion about such people but do not cultivate their company. Experience has proven that pious company plays a great and effective role in one's spiritual progress while the company of evil persons weakens the heart and ruins one's spiritual life. Some verses of the Qur'an and Ahadeeth pertaining to pious and evil company will now be cited. Allawh Ta'ala says:

O people of 'Eeman! Fear Allawh and join the company of the truthful.

Joining the company of the truthful is to associate with the pious and follow their ways of rectitude.

When you see those conjecturing (finding fault and jesting) in our Laws then turn away from them until (such time) that they engage in some other talk. And, if shaitaan caused you to forget (and you remained sitting with them), then do not sit after remembering with an unjust people.

The Qur'an here very explicitly warns against association with those who jest with the Deen; with those who treat the Deen light-heartedly; with those who show no respect for the Laws of Allawh.

Hadhrawt Ibn Abbaas (R) narrates that Rawsoolullawh (S) was asked:

Among those with whom we associate, who is the best?

Rawsoolullawh (S) replied:

The one who reminds you of Allawh when you look at him; his speech improves your Deen and his acts remind you of the Akhirawh.

Aboo Ya'laa

Some of the important signs of a pious man, which have been mentioned earlier, are stated in this Hadeeth.

Hadhrawt Aboo Umaamah (R) narrates that Rawsoolullawh (S) said:

Luqmaan said to his son: 'O my son! Associate with the Ulama. Make this an obligation on you. Listen to the talks of the people of wisdom because Allawh Ta'ala livens a dead heart with the light of wisdom in the same way as the dead earth is enlivened by abundant rainfall.

Tibrawni

Wisdom refers to the subtle points of the Deen. Such words of wisdom flow from the lips of truthful saints of Allawh Ta'ala.

Hadhrawt Muaaz Ibn Jabal (R) narrates that Rawsoolullawh (S) said: "Allawh Ta'ala said: 'My love becomes incumbent for such persons who love one another for My Sake and who associate for My Sake…'

Maalik and Ibn Hibbaan

The meaning of for Allawh's sake is for the sake of the Deen or Deeni motives and not worldly motives.

Hadhrawt Aboo Musa (R) narrates that Rawsoolullawh (S) said:

The similitude of a pious companion and an evil companion is as a man standing with musk (this is the similitude of a pious companion), and a man stoking a furnace (this is the similitude of an evil companion). The man with the musk will give you some or (if he does not give) then you will at least gain its fragrance while the stoker of the furnace will burn your clothing (if a spark of fire falls on you) or (if he does not burn you) then at least the smoke of the fire will reach you.

Bukhawri and Muslim

Even if one does not derive the full benefit of the pious company, one will gain to a certain degree, and likewise even if the evil company does not fully harm, one will to a certain extent be affected by the evil.

Hadhrawt Aboo Saeed Khudri (R) narrates that he heard Rawsoolullawh (S) saying:

Do not associate with anyone except with a person of 'Eeman.

Tirmeedhi, Aboo Dawood, and Darimi

There are two possible meanings to this Hadeeth, viz.,

1. Do not associate with a kaafir.
2. Associate with only one of perfect 'Eeman. Do not associate with a man of imperfect 'Eeman.

In the light of this Hadeeth, only a man of perfect 'Eeman – a man who is fully pious – is worthy of association.

Hadhrawt Aboo Razeen (R) narrates that Rawsoolullawh (S) said to him:

Should I not inform you of something which is a (great) pivot of this Deen and by means of which you can acquire the success of this world and the hereafter? Firstly, adhere to the gatherings of the people of Dhikr (those who remember Allawh much); secondly, when in solitude, keep your tongue moving with Dhikrullah as much as is possible; thirdly, love for the sake of only Allawh and hate for the sake of only Allawh…

Baihaqi in Shu'bul 'Eeman

Experience too has established that pious company is the root or basis of the Deen. Among the various ways of strengthening one's Deen and experiencing the sweetness of Deen, the most efficacious is the company of the pious.

Hadhrawt Aboo Hurairah narrates that once he was in the company of Rawsoolullawh (S) who said:

In Jannat are pillars of Ya'qoot (a precious stone of Jannat). On these pillars are erected mansions of zabarjad (a material of Jannat). In these mansions are open doors which glitter like bright stars.

The people asked:

'Who will occupy these lofty mansions?'

Rawsoolullawh (S) replied:

Those who loved one another for the sake of Allawh; those who associated with one another for the sake of Allawh and those who met one another for the sake of Allawh.

Baihaqi in Shu'bul 'Eeman

Hadhrawt Samurah (R) narrates that Rawsoolullawh (S) said:

Do not live with the mushrikeen nor be together with them. Whoever lives with them and associates with them is one of them.

Tirmeedhi

From these aayat and Ahadeeth, it is abundantly clear that association should be with men of piety so that one may gain spiritually and be influenced by the virtue and statements of wisdom and piety of the pious men. The derivation of spiritual benefit from the company of the pious has been amply proven from the aforegoing references. Such aayat and Ahadeeth will now be cited by which it will be proven that this same benefit is also attainable by studying the life-conditions of the pious.

Allawh Ta'ala says:

We narrate all these stories of the Ambiya (Nooh, Hood, Saalih, Ibraheem, Loott, Shuaib, and Moosa – alaihimus salaam) to you so that We strengthen your heart.

Soorawh Hood

This then is one benefit of reading and studying the stories of the pious people. The heart is strengthened and imbued with comfort and contentment. The heart becomes fortified against falsehood just as the pious people were strong and steadfast against falsehood. Because of such steadfastness, Allawh Ta'ala bestows His Aid. In another Ayah Allawh Ta'ala declares:

We aid Our Messengers and the people of 'Eeman here in this world and We will also aid them on that Day when these (Angels) bearing testimony will stand.

Soorawh Mu'min

It is evident that the Aid on that Day of Qiyamah will be only for the obedient ones. They will be the successful ones while the disobedient will be met with failure. Because of the stories of the pious people, one gains strength and firmness on the Deen while at the same time it is learnt that these pious ones will attain the loftiest states of the Akhirawh, hence one is encouraged to follow in their footsteps thereby also gaining the lofty ranks in the Hereafter.

Ibn Mas'ood (R) says:

Whoever wishes to adopt the path of piety forever, should adopt the path of those (pious ones) who have passed away.

There is no absolute certainty that a man who is living will remain firm on the path of piety unto the end. The danger always remains of him going astray. Hence, the path of piety of a living man could be adopted only as long as he remains on that path. The perpetual path of piety is the path of the Sahabah of Rawsoolullawh (S). It is also stated in the Hadeeth that the character and habits of the Sahabah should be established as a standard as far as is possible. (Jam'ul Fawaaid) It is obvious that the adoption of the character and ways of the Sahabah can be possible only if one is aware of their life-stories. It is therefore essential to study books on the lives of the illustrious Sahabah.

Like the Qur'an Majeed, the Ahadeeth similarly narrate the stories of the Ambiya, Ulama, and Auliya with a view of inducing in people the urge to follow the uprighteous and pious personalities of the past. This purpose is stated in the order:

Therefore, follow their guidance.

The Ahadeeth are replete with the stories of pious and accepted personalities. These stories are an effective way of exhorting people towards piety and spiritual progress. It is precisely for this reason that we find the Auliya always making it a point to compile such books. The following are some books in this regard. Do make a special effort to read these books or let someone read and explain the books to you. If the services of an Aalim are available for this purpose then it will be most beneficial.

1. Taarikh Habeebullah
2. Nashrut Teeb
3. Maghaazi-e-Rawsool
4. Qawsawsul Ambiya
5. Futuhush Shaam wal Misr wal Ajam
6. Futuhul Iraq
7. Futuhaat Bhunsa
8. Firdaus Aasiyah
9. Hikayatus Sawliheen
10. Tadhkaratul Auliya
11. Anwarul Muhsineen
12. Nazhatul Basateen
13. Imdadul-Mushtaq
14. Naik Beebiya

N.B. Certain things in some of these books will be above the understanding of most people. Such difficult and incomprehensible sections should be omitted.

ROOH IIX
THE LIFE OF RAWSOOLULLAWH (S)

It is essential to inculcate in one the reverence and respect for the lofty character and habits of Rawsoolullawh (S). It is necessary that the morals of Rawsoolullawh (S) become established in ones heart so that love for Rawsoolullawh (S) becomes dominant in the heart and eagerness to follow the holy character of Nabi-e-Kareem (saws) is induced in the Believer. Some aayat and Ahadeeth will be mentioned in this regard. Allawh Ta'ala says:

Verily, you (Muhammad) are on a lofty character.

Soorawh Noon

The Nabi is inconvenienced by this act (but he does not make this known); he takes you into consideration (by his silence). But Allawh speaks plainly and cares not (for anyone).

Soorawh Ahzaab

This is a reference to a particular incident. Some Companions stayed longer than what was proper on this occasion at the home of Rawsoolullawh (S) who was anxious to retire for the night. They continued in conversation. Although Rawsoolullawh (S) was inconvenienced by their late stay, he nevertheless, refrained from asking them to leave, not wishing to hurt their feelings. This reticence of Rawsoolullawh (S) was about his personal matters and not to such affairs that came within the purview of Tabbleegh.

Hadhrawt Anas (R) narrates:

I served Rawsoolullawh (S) for ten years, but never did he speak a word of rebuke to me; he never said to me: 'Why did you do this and why did you not do that?'

Bukhawri and Muslim

Rawsoolullawh (S) was the kindest in disposition. Once Rawsoolullawh (S) asked me to do something, but I refused while in my heart I intended to go where ordered. I then went on the errand. I passed some children playing in the marketplace and I joined them. Suddenly Rawsoolullawh (S) arrived there and laughing, he took hold of my neck and said: 'Are you going?' I said yes, I am going now.

Muslim

I was walking with Rawsoolullawh (S). He had on him a heavy shawl made in Najraan. Along the way a Bedouin came. The Bedouin gRawbbed hold of the shawl and pulled it with such force that Rawsoolullawh (S) was pulled forward close to the breast of the Bedouin who said, 'O Muhammad! Order that I too be given from that wealth of Allawh, which is with you.' Rawsoolullawh (S) smiled and ordered that he be granted a gift.

Bukhawri and Muslim

6. Hadhrawt Jabir (R) said that:

Rawsoolullawh (S) never refused to give anything which he was ask- ed. If he had it, he would give it. If he did not have it, he would present an apology and make a promise to give it at another time.

Bukhawri and Muslim

Hadhrawt Anas (R) narrates that:

Once a man asked Rawsoolullawh (S) for some goats which belonged to Rawsoolullawh (S). The goats were grazing in a valley. Rawsoolullawh (S) presented all the goats to the person who had asked for them. This man said to his people when he returned: "O my people! Become Muslims. By Allawh! Muhammad gives much.

Muslim

Jubair Bin Mut'im (R) said that:

Once he was walking with Rawsoolullawh (S) on his return from Hunain. A group of Bedouins surrounded Rawsoolullawh (S) and were asking for gifts. They gRawbbed from Rawsoolullawh (S) everything which he had until finally they snatched even the shawl from his body.

Rawsoolullawh (S) said:

At least return my shawl. If I had camels as numerous as the trees, I would have distributed them among you; you would then not have found me to be miserly and small of heart.

Bukhawri

Hadhrawt Anas (R) narrates that:

After Rawsoolullawh (S) would complete Fajr Sawlah, the servants of the people of Madeenah would bring containers of water. Whoever presented a container, Rawsoolullawh (S) would immerse his holy hand in the water. This was done for the sake of barawkat. Sometimes the mornings were extremely cold, nevertheless, he immersed his hand in the water.

Muslim

Hadhrawt Anas (R) narrates that:

Rawsoolullawh (S) was not harsh in disposition nor was he one who cursed. If someone had to be reprimanded, he would (at most) exclaim: 'What is the matter with him. May dust settle on his forehead.'

This statement, viz., May dust settle on his forehead is not a curse. Even during Sawlah, dust settles on the forehead when in Sajjdah by the head touching the earth. In a way, this was a dua for the betterment of the person. It implied that the errant attain rectitude by performance of Sawlah, for Sawlah prevents from evil and shameless deeds. This is 1 of the peculiarities of Sawlah. This Hadeeth is recorded in Bukhawri Shareef.

Hadhrawt Aboo Saeed Khudri (R) narrates that:

Rawsoolullawh (S) was more modest that a young Purdah-Nasheen girl (a girl who remains in seclusion). Hadhrawt Aboo Saeed Khudri says: "When he (saws) saw something which he detested, we would realise it from the effect on his auspicious face.

Bukhawri and Muslim

He would not generally mention it due to excessive modesty.

Hadhrawt Aswad (R) narrates that he asked Hadhrawt Aishah (R):

What did Rawsoolullawh (S) do at home?

She replied:

He would assist his wives in their housework.

Bukhawri

Some examples of the type of housework done by Rawsoolullawh (S) are mentioned in the following Hadeeth.

Hadhrawt Aishah (R) narrates:

Rawsoolullawh (S) would mend his shoes, sew his clothing, and do the work of the house as ordinary people among you do.

She also narrates that:

Rawsoolullawh (S) did not act like a master at home. He would milk the goats himself.

Tirmeedhi

Hadhrawt Aishah (R) narrates that:

Rawsoolullawh (S) never killed anything with his own hands nor did he beat any servant. Yes, Jihaad in the Path of Allawh was an exception. He never hit anyone in anger nor inconvenienced anyone unnecessarily or in revenge. However, when the prohibitions of Allawh were violated, Rawsoolullawh (S) took appropriate action for the sake of Allawh Ta'ala.

Muslim

Hadhrawt Anas (R) narrates:

I was eight years old when I joined the service of Rawsoolullawh (S). I remained in his service for ten years. Whenever I damaged anything with my hands, Rawsoolullawh (S) did not scold me. Even if someone from the family of Rawsoolullawh (S) scolded me, he would prevent them, and say: "If anything else was decreed, it would have happened.

Masaabeeh and Baihaqi

Rawsoolullawh (S) visited the sick and participated in the funeral (janaazah) service.

Ibn Majah and Baihaqi

When making musaafahah (shaking hands) with someone, Rawsoolullawh (S) would not withdraw his hand before that person withdrew his hand; nor would he turn away his face until the other person did not turn away his face. Rawsoolullawh (S) was never seen stretching his legs towards others.

Tirmeedhi

In the Kitaab, Shamaail Tirmeedhi are 2 lengthy narrations from which some sentences will be quoted here. Hadhrawt Hasan and Hadhrawt Husain (R) narrate on the authority of their father, Hadhrawt Ali (R):

At home, Rawsoolullawh (S) divided his time into three periods. In one period, he remained engrossed in the ibaadat of Allawh Azza wa Jall. In the other period, he engaged himself in fulfilling the rights of his family. One period he reserved for himself. His special period was then further divided between others and himself. The benefits and barkat of this special period were spread among the people at large through the medium of the special companions of Rawsoolullawh (S). In this special period, Rawsoolullawh (S) granted certain distinguished Sahabah (the Ulama among the Sahabah) permission to sit in his company. In this special time, Rawsoolullawh (S) preferred the distinguished Sahabah above others. In this time, Rawsoolullawh (S) engaged the distinguished group of Sahabah in matters of the Deen and the Ummah. All who attended came with the motive of acquiring benefit from Rawsoolullawh (S). Besides the benefits of knowledge, they would also participate in meals with Rawsoolullawh (S). When they departed from his company, they would leave as guides of the Deen.

This was the atmosphere of the special and distinguished gatherings of Rawsoolullawh (S). Regarding the time Rawsoolullawh (S) spent outside the home, Hadhrawt Hasan and Hadhrawt Husain (R) narrate on the authority of their father, Hadhrawt Ali (R) that:

Rawsoolullawh (S) was at all times pleasant and smiling. People would not quarrel in his presence. Rawsoolullawh (S) did not speak until another speaker completed and became silent. He overlooked the disrespect that was in the conversation of a stranger. He did not interrupt a conversation unless it exceeded the bounds of propriety. He would then intervene and end it either by his express prohibition or by leaving the company.

This was his attitude with the general public, i.e. with those with whom he had connection, viz., the Sahabah. Regarding his attitude towards his enemies, something will be said about it now.

Hadhrawt Aboo Hurairah (R) narrates that once someone asked Rawsoolullawh (S):

O Rawsoolullawh! Curse the mushrikeen.

Rawsoolullawh (S) replied:

'I was not sent as one who curses. I was sent only as a mercy.'

Muslim

Rawsoolullawh's (saws) habit was to even ask for the betterment of his enemies. Occasionally he would supplicate to Allawh for protection against his enemies.

In a lengthy Hadeeth narrated by Hadhrawt Aishah (R), regarding the incident of Taaif, Rawsoolullawh (S) referred to the torture of the Kuffar on this occasion to have been severer than the hardship that he suffered during the Battle of Uhud. On this occasion at Taaif, Hadhrawt Jibraeel (A) introduced Rawsoolullawh (S) to the Angel in charge of the mountains. The Angel greeted Rawsoolullawh (S) and said:

O Muhammad! I am the Angel of the mountains. Allawh has sent me to you so that you command me. If you command, I will crush the people of Ta'if between these two mountains.

Rawsoolullawh (S) replied:

No! I hope that Allawh will create from among them such men who will worship only Allawh and associate none with Him.

Bukhawri and Muslim

At this critical time too, Rawsoolullawh (S) never thought of revenge. He only had to give the order and his enemies would have perished. But, he chose to forgive them and supplicate on their behalf. He confronted his opponents with love and affection.

In a lengthy Hadeeth, Hadhrawt Ali (R) narrates an incident about a Jew who at the time was a subject of the Muslim state in Madeenah. Rawsoolullawh (S) owed the Jew some money. Once in demanding his money, he refused to allow Rawsoolullawh (S) to go home. He blockaded Rawsoolullawh (S) in the Masjid from Zuhr until Fajr of the next day. When people started to remonstrate with the Jew, Rawsoolullawh (S) prevented them and said:

Allawh has forbidden me to be unjust to those with whom I have a treaty and with those with whom I have no treaty.

Late during the day, the Jew proclaimed:

I bear witness that there is no deity but Allawh and I bear witness, that verily, you (O Muhammad!) are the Rawsool of Allawh.

The Jew said:

'I adopted this attitude (towards Rawsoolullawh) because in the Taurah a description of the Nabi is given. The Taurah describes the Nabi to be Muhammad, the son of 'Abbdullawh. His birthplace will be Makkah. His place of migration, Madeenah. His kingdom will be over the Land of Shaam. He will not be harsh. He will not be loud in the marketplaces. He will not commit acts of immodesty. I wished to ascertain whether this man is indeed the Muhammad stated in the Taurah.'

Baihaqi

If these few Ahadeeth are read once daily, one will very soon realise the change towards piety that will overcome one.

ROOH IX
TAKING SPECIAL CARE TO FULFIL THE RIGHTS OF MUSLIMS

Allawh Ta'ala says:

'O People of 'Eeman! Men should not mock at other men, for it may be that they (those mocked at) are superior to them (the mockers) nor should women mock at other women, for it may be that they (who are mocked at) are superior to them (the mocking women). O People of 'Eeman! Refrain from abundance of suspicion, for verily, some suspicions are sin, nor should some of you scandal about others.

Soorawh Hujurawt

Hadhrawt 'Abbdullawh Ibn Mas'ood (R) narrates that Rawsoolullawh (S) said:

'To abuse a Muslim is an evil sin and to fight with a Muslim (unnecessarily) is (close to) kufr.'

Hadhrawt Aboo Hurairah (R) narrates that Rawsoolullawh (S) said:

When a man observing faults of others says (by way of complaint and adopting a holier than thou attitude considering himself free of fault): 'People are corrupt,' then this person will soon become the most corrupted (because he has despised the Believers).

Muslim

Hadhrawt Huzaifah (R) narrates that he heard Rawsoolullawh (S) say:

A scandalmonger will not enter Jannat (without being punished).

Bukhawri and Muslim

Hadhrawt Aboo Hurairah (R) narrates that Rawsoolullawh (S) said:

On the Day of Qiyamah, the one in the vilest of conditions will be a two-faced person. He says one thing (in favour) of one person and then another thing (in regard to the same affair) to another person.

Bukhawri and Muslim

Hadhrawt Aboo Hurairah (R) narrates that Rawsoolullawh (S) said:

Do you know what is gheebat (scandalling)?

The Sahabah said:

Allawh and His Rawsool know best.

Rawsoolullawh (S) replied:

To speak about a brother (Muslim) such things which will displease him if he comes to know of it.

Someone asked:

What if what I say exists in the brother (in other words, if what is said is the truth)?

Rawsoolullawh (S) said:

'If what you say is in him, then it is gheebat and if what you say is not in him, then it is buhtaan (slander).'

Muslim

Hadhrawt Sufyaan Ibn As'ad Khadrami (R) narrates that he heard Rawsoolullawh (S) say:

Indeed, it is an act of the greatest abuse of trust if you tell a Muslim brother something false while he believes that you are telling him the truth.

Aboo Dawood

Hadhrawt Muaaz (R) narrates that Rawsoolullawh (S) said:

Whoever taunts a brother (Muslim) with a sin (which the Muslim had committed), will not die until he (the taunter) commits the same sin.

Tirmeedhi

Thus to speak sarcastically of the sins of others and to adopt a holier than thou attitude will lead to such a person himself falling in the sin. However, to speak to a sinner by way of admonishment and naseehat is not in the scope of the warning sounded in the above Hadeeth. Advice, exhortation to do good and admonition are acts of virtue. Hadhrawt Waathilah (R) narrates that Rawsoolullawh (S) said:

Do not display pleasure at the plight (be it a worldly difficulty or a Deeni condition) of a brother (Muslim), for it is quite possible that Allawh bestows His mercy on him and involves you in that plight (which had overtaken the brother).

Tirmeedhi

Hadhrawt Abdur Rahman Ibn Ghanam and Asma Bint Yazeed (R) narrate that Rawsoolullawh (S) said:

The worst among the servants of Allawh are those who gossip and create rifts between friends.

Ahmadd and Baihaqi

Hadhrawt Ibn Abbaas (R) narrates that Rawsoolullawh (S) said:

Do not unnecessarily dispute with a brother (Muslim) nor joke with him in such a way which displeases him. Do not promise him something which you cannot fulfil.

Tirmeedhi

However, failure to fulfil a promise because of a valid reason is excluded from the prohibition of the above Hadeeth. In this regard, Hadhrawt Zaid Bin Arqam (R) narrates that:

According to Rawsoolullawh (S) one who has the intention of fulfilling a promise but fails because of some real reason is not guilty of sin.

Aboo Dawood and Tirmeedhi

Hadhrawt Eyaadh Mujaasha'i (R) narrates that Rawsoolullawh (S) said:

Allawh Ta'ala has revealed to me that all people should inculcate humility so much, so that no one becomes proud over another and no one commits oppression on another.

Muslim

Hadhrawt Jareer Ibn 'Abbdullawh (R) narrates that Rawsoolullawh (S) said:

Allawh is not merciful to a person who has no mercy on others.

Bukhawri and Muslim

Hadhrawt Aboo Hurairah (R) narrates that Rawsoolullawh (S) said:

Endeavour to fulfil the needs of widows and orphans. He who does so is equal (in thawaab) to one who strives in Jihaad.

Bukhawri and Muslim

Hadhrawt Sahl Bin Sa'ad (R) narrates that Rawsoolullawh (S) said:

'One who cares for an orphan, be the orphan related to him or not, will be together with me in Jannat like this: (Saying so, Rawsoolullawh – (S) – indicated with his forefinger and middle finger, separating both slightly).'

Indeed the reward is tremendous. It is no small reward to be a neighbour of Rawsoolullawh (S) in Jannat. The reason for slightly separating the two fingers and not placing them together is that after all, there will be a difference. A non-Nabi can never be on par with a Nabi.

Bukhawri

Nu'maan Bin Basheer (R) narrates that Rawsoolullawh (S) said:

'You will observe Muslims as one body in regard to mutual love and affinity. When one part pains, the entire body is affected.'

Bukhawri and Muslim

Hadhrawt Aboo Moosa (R) narrates that whenever someone came to Rawsoolullawh (S) with a need, Rawsoolullawh (S) would advise the Sahabah to intercede on behalf of the one in need so that they who intercede may participate in the thawaab. Rawsoolullawh (S) would say:

Whatever Allawh decides will be commanded on the tongue of His Rawsool.

Whatever Allawh Ta'ala wishes the needy to obtain, he will get it but the intercessor too will obtain his share of thawaab so easily. Interceding on behalf of another should be only when the one who is being petitioned is not displeased by the intercession as was the case with Rawsoolullawh (S) who himself exhorted the Sahabah to intercede on behalf of the one in need.

Bukhawri and Muslim

Hadhrawt Anas (R) narrates that Rawsoolullawh (S) said:

Assist your brother (Muslim) whether he be the oppressor or the oppressed.

Someone asked:

How is he to be aided in committing oppression?

Rawsoolullawh (S) replied:

Restraining him from committing oppression is to aid him.

Bukhawri and Muslim

Hadhrawt Ibn Umar (R) narrates that Rawsoolullawh (S) said:

A Muslim is the brother of another Muslim. He does not oppress him nor does he desert him in need and difficulty. He who remains in the service of his brother (Muslim), Allawh remains in his (the one who aids) service. He who removes a hardship from a Muslim, Allawh will remove from him a difficulty of the hardships of Qiyamah. He who conceals the faults of a Muslim, Allawh will conceal his faults on the Day of Qiyamah.'

Bukhawri and Muslim

Hadhrawt Aboo Hurairah (R) narrates that Rawsoolullawh (S) said:

Despising a Muslim is a sufficient evil in a man.

Muslim

Even if a man has no other evils in him besides this one evil of holding other Muslims in contempt, he has been overwhelmed by evil and corruption, for this one evil is sufficient to utterly destroy him.

All things of a Muslim are sacred and to be honoured by other Muslims. His life, property and honour must be respected.

Muslim

It is not lawful for a Muslim to hurt, harm or inconvenience another Muslim. His life, property and dignity have to be honoured. His faults should be concealed and he must not be slandered. In short, he must be protected and honoured.

Hadhrawt Anas (R) narrates that Rawsoolullawh (S) said:

"I swear by The Being in Whose possession is my life that a man is not a perfect Muslim unless he loves for a brother (Muslim) what he loves for himself." (Bukhawri, Muslim)

Hadhrawt Anas (R) narrates that Rawsoolullawh (S) said:

"One from whose mischief a neighbour is not safe, will not enter Jannat." (Muslim)

The neighbour remains in a state of fear as a result of one's mischief. Such an evil person will not enter Jannat before being sentenced to punishment in Jahannum.

Hadhrawt Ibn Abbaas (R) narrates that Rawsoolullawh (S) said:

"He is not of us who does not have mercy on our little ones nor has respect for our aged ones. And (he is not of us) who does not forbid evil." (Tirmeedhi)

It is among the duties of a Believer to be kind to juniors, respect seniors and call to virtue and forbid evil. However, when discharging this duty of admonition, one should be kind, have respect for others and act honourably. One should not adopt harshness and a holier than thou attitude.

Hadhrawt Anas (R) narrates that Rawsoolullawh (S) said:

"Whoever defends a brother (Muslim) who is being reviled, Allawh will defend him and aid him in this world and the Akhirawh. Whoever refrains from defending a Muslim who is being reviled while having the ability to defend, Allawh will apprehend him in this world and the Akhirawh." (Sharhus Sunnah)

Hadhrawt Uqbah Bin Aamir (R) narrates that Rawsoolullawh (S) said:

"Whoever observes a fault of another and conceals that fault (not advertising it), is (in thawaab) like one who has saved the life of a girl who was being buried alive." (Ahmad, Tirmeedhi)

Hadhrawt Aboo Hurairah (R) narrates that Rawsoolullawh (S) said:

"Every man is a mirror to his brother (Muslim)." (Tirmeedhi)

Thus, when a Muslim sees a fault or an evil in another Muslim, he should act as his mirror and make known to him his fault without disgracing him, without revealing to others what he has seen just as a mirror while revealing to the viewer the faults in his appearance does not publicise to others such faults.

Hadhrawt Aishah (R) narrates that Rawsoolullawh (S) said:

"Maintain people on their ranks." (Aboo Dawood)

It is a teaching of the Deen that everyone should be treated in terms of his/her rank. Due regard has to be accorded to the position of a person. Everyone cannot be driven with the same whip.

Hadhrawt Ibn Abbaas (R) narrates that he heard Rawsoolullawh (S) saying:

"He is not a perfect Muslim who eats while his neighbour remains hungry." (Baihaqi)

Hadhrawt Aboo Hurairah (R) narrates that Rawsoolullawh (S) said:

A Mu'min (Believer) is the repository of love. There is no goodness in a man who does not have love for anyone nor does anyone love him. (Ahmad, Baihaqi)

Hadhrawt Anas (R) narrates that Rawsoolullawh (S) said:

"He who fulfils a need of a person in order to give him pleasure, has given me pleasure; whoever has given me pleasure has given Allawh pleasure; whoever has given pleasure to Allawh, He will give him Jannat." (Baihaqi)

Hadhrawt Anas (R) narrates that Rawsoolullawh (S) said:

73 acts of pardon (Maghfirat) are recorded for a person who aids a man in difficulty. Of these (73 pardons), one is sufficient for the rectification of all his affairs. The other 72 will serve as means for the acquisition of lofty stages in the Akhirawh.

Baihaqi

Hadhrawt Aboo Hurairawh (R) narrates that Rawsoolullawh (S) said:

Whenever a Muslim visits a sick brother (Muslim) or merely goes to meet a brother, then Allawh says: You are holy; your walking is holy ; you have arranged your abode in Jannat.'

Tirmeedhi

Hadhrawt Aboo Ayyub Ansaari (R) narrates that Rawsoolullawh (S) said:

It is not lawful for a Muslim to sever his ties with another Muslim for more than three days, in such a way that when they meet, the one turns his face one way and the other turns his face the other way. The better of these two is the one who makes Salaam first.

Bukhawri and Muslim

Severance of ties referred to in this Hadeeth means the breaking off of relationship because of enmity and worldly reasons. This Hadeeth does not refer to the adoption of solitude and dissociation with the general public. Such solitude is for the sake of the development of the rooh (spiritual development) and is in fact, instructed by the Deen. Hadhrawt Aboo Hurairah (R) narrates that Rawsoolullawh (S) said:

Refrain from suspicion. The worst of lies is suspicion (thinking ill of others on mere supposition). Do not pry into the private affairs of others. Do not bid a higher price (for any object of sale) with the intention to deceive (and not to buy). Do not have jealousy for one another nor entertain malice for each other. Do not scandal (gheebat). Fear Allawh! All servants (of Allawh) should live like brothers.

Bukhawri and Muslim

Hadhrawt Aboo Hurairah (R) narrates that Rawsoolullawh (S) said:

A Muslim owes six rights to another Muslim.

Someone asked:

O Rawsoolullawh! What are they?

Rawsoolullawh (S) said:

When meeting him, say Salaam to him; when he invites you, accept his invitation; when he seeks aid from you, aid him; when he sneezes and says, 'Alhamdulillah', then say: 'Yarhamukallawh'; when he is sick, visit him; and when he dies, accompany his janaazah.

Muslim

The rights that Muslims enjoy over Muslims are not restricted to six. However, on this particular occasion, Rawsoolullawh (S) mentioned six. In other Ahadeeth and Qur'anic verses, more rights and duties are mentioned. Hadhrawt Aboo Bakr Siddeeqq (R) narrates that Rawsoolullawh (S) said:

A man who harms any Muslim and deceives him, is accursed.

Tirmeedhi

The rights, duties and attitudes mentioned in all the aforegoing Ahadeeth pertain to the general body of Muslims. Such rights are applicable in abundance. Besides these general rights there are also special rights applicable in particular occasions and circumstances. The special and particular rights have been dealt with in our book, Huqooqul Islam. In these days, there is great negligence and indifference in regard to the discharge of the rights and the execution of duties. It is therefore essential to be diligent in the fulfilment of these rights and duties. May Allawh Ta'ala grant us the taufeeq.

NECESSARY EXPLANATION REGARDING RIGHTS

The Huqooq (Rights) explained in this Rooh Nine are applicable to all Muslims in general. However, it is obvious that the importance and significance of huqooq will increase if these are related to special people. In regard to Rights, parents enjoy priority and greater significance because of their close relationship with their offspring. The huqooq of parents are unanimously accepted. There is therefore no need to elaborate on the details of these Rights. However, some explanation regarding certain aspects which are not generally known, seems to be necessary. These aspects have been explained in a separate treatise known as Ta'deel Huqooqil Waalidain (The Equilibrium of the Rights of Parents). This treatise is included here as an appendix to Rooh IX.

TA'DEEL-E-HUQOOQIL WAALIDAIN (THE EQUILIBRIUM OF THE RIGHTS OF PARENTS)

Allawh Ta'ala says in the Qur'an Majeed:

Verily, Allawh commands you to fulfil Trusts to their rightful ones, (and Allawh commands you) to decide with justice when you decide among people.

2 commands are understood from the general meaning of this gracious Ayah, viz. it is:

1. Incumbent to discharge the Waajib (obligatory) rights of people
2. Unlawful to destroy or fail in discharging the rights of one person for the sake of the rights of another person

This article proposes to discuss two specific cases which relate to the two above general rules enunciated by the aforementioned Qur'anic verse. The two cases mentioned are:

1. The fixation of the Waajib (compulsory) and Ghair Waajib (non- obligatory) rights of parents
2. The equilibrium (balance or just attitude and action) to be adopted in the event of a conflict between the rights of parents and wife or parents and one's children

Some unscrupulous persons – and experience has shown that there are numerous such persons – are so extreme in neglecting the huqooq of parents that they totally ignore the Shariah's commands pertaining to the compulsion of obedience to parents. Because of their total indifference in this regard, they invoke the greatest of calamities and misfortunes on them. On the other hand, some pious people adopt the other extreme whereby their obedience to their parents is of such a degree which occasions the destruction of the rights of others, e.g. the rights of their wives and children. This set of extremists are again indifferent to the commands which decree obligatory the rights of parents and children. Thus, they too, like the former set of persons, invite calamity and misfortune on themselves.

Besides the two sets of people mentioned above, there is a third set. These people do not destroy or fail in the discharge of the huqooq of people. They fulfil these rights and adequately discharge their duties and obligation. But, they understand some non-incumbent duties to be obligatory. Believing optional duties to be compulsory, they set about fulfilling these with this attitude. Sometimes, due to adverse circumstances or some other factors, they are unable to remain steadfast in the discharge of such duties. They find it difficult and unbearable. As a result, frustration sets in and their minds are afflicted with a host of divisive thoughts. They start to believe that the Shariah has imposed unbearable burdens on man and in this way; they ruin their Deen. In this way, this group also is guilty of trampling on the huqooq of someone, and that someone is one's own Nafs that also has rights over one. Speaking on the obligatory rights of the Nafs, Rawsoolullawh (S) said:

Verily, your nafs has rights over you.

Among these Huqooq Waajibah (Obligatory Rights), protection of one's Deen has priority. The fulfilment of non-obligatory rights of parents with the attitude described above, sometimes leads towards sin (which has been mentioned above). If after the laws have been correctly understood, one sets about fulfilling rights which are not obligatory, the evil mentioned above will not occur; frustration will not overtake one and one will not then attribute one's failure to adhere to this self-imposed task as an injustice and unbearable burden imposed on man by Deen. It will be realised that the difficulty was of one's own making. Furthermore, after having correctly understood the non-obligatory nature of certain rights, one will derive pleasure from one's steadfastness in executing these. In short, there is great wisdom in having knowledge of the Ahkaam (Laws of the Shariah). On the contrary, there is nothing but harm in ignorance. The essential narrations of Hadeeth and Fiqh pertaining to this subject will now be enumerated and thereafter the rules extracted from these narrations will be explained.

'Allawh is the One from Whom Aid is sought, and on Him is my trust.'

THE NARRATIONS

'Ibn Umar (R) narrates:

I had a wife whom I loved while Umar (his father) disliked her. He (Hadhrawt Umar, the father) ordered me: 'Divorce her.' But, I refused. Umar (R) then went to Rawsoolullawh (S) and mentioned this (my refusal) to him. Rawsoolullawh (S) then said to me: 'Divorce her.'

He (Ibn Umar) then divorced her.

Tirmeedhi – extracted from Mishkaat

In Mirqawt (that is the commentary on Mishkaat), it is explained that this order given by Rawsoolullawh (S) is Amr-e-Istihbabb or an order, the execution of which is not compulsory although it is preferable. This type of order falls in the Mustahab (preferable and meritorious) category of laws. If the order was intended as an obligatory (Wujoob) command then there must have been some factor for this command. Imaam Ghizaali (rahmatullahi alayhi) says in Ihyaaul Uloom that this Hadeeth indicates that the right of the father has priority over the right of the wife. But, for the prevalence of this priority it is essential that the father is not motivated by a corrupt motive. The rectitude of the motive of a man like Hadhrawt Umar (R) is a self-evident fact.

In a Hadeeth narrated by Hadhrawt Muaaz (R) Rawsoolullawh (S) said:

Never disobey your parents even if they order you to dissociate yourselves from your wife, children and wealth.

Mishkaat

In Mirqawt, it is explained that this Hadeeth merely emphasises perfect obedience and the significance of obedience to parents. It does not have a literal meaning. In fact, it is not incumbent upon the son to divorce his wife even if his refusal to divorce her causes great displeasure to his parents. In divorcing her, he will be afflicted with great harm. It is indeed remote that parents will derive pleasure from the difficulty and misery of their son. Thus, he is not required to divorce his wife at their insistence. The author of Mirqawt says that the indication in the Hadeeth to prove that Rawsoolullawh (S) said this as emphasis is the statement:

Do not commit shirk with Allawh even if you are slaughtered or burnt.

Undoubtedly, this statement is for the purpose of emphasis. The Qur'anic Ayah:

…except he who is compelled (to utter kufr, for then there is no blame on him)…

It clearly grants permission to proclaim a statement of kufr under duress and compulsion. Hence, the above Hadeeth is for emphasis. If the statement: Do not commit shirk even if you are killed or burnt. was for compulsion it would have negated the permission announced by the Qur'an (as in the Ayah mentioned above) to utter kufr under compulsion while of course, 'Eeman is not rejected by the heart. This proves that the Hadeeth mentioned by Hadhrawt Muaaz (R) serves the purpose of emphasising obedience to parents.

Hadhrawt Ibn Abbaas (R) narrates that Rawsoolullawh (S) said:

He who obeys Allawh in regard to obedience to his parents will have opened on him two doors of Jannat if both parents exist, and one door if one parent exists. If he disobeys them, then two doors of Jahannum will be opened on him if both (parents) exist and one door if one parent exists.

In the same Hadeeth, it is mentioned that a man said:

Even if they are unjust to him (to the son)?

Rawsoolullawh (S) replied:

Even if they are unjust; even if they are unjust; even if they are unjust

Baihaqi

Commenting on this Hadeeth, the author of Mirqaat says that about the discharge of the Huqooq of parents, the son obeys Allawh Ta'ala. He fulfils the rights of the parents in the manner in which Allawh Ta'ala has commanded. Fulfilment of the right of parents is not an act of Ibaadat entirely independent in nature. It is in fact, a duty rendered for the sake of Allawh Ta'ala Who has ordered its observance with particular care and emphasis. Obedience to parents has therefore to be discharged based on it being obedience to Allawh Ta'ala. Thus, whatever they command, if it were in accordance with the Law of Allawh, it will be accepted and done. If they command any violation of the Law of Allawh Ta'ala, it will not be accepted. In this regard the Hadeeth narration is:

There is no obedience for creation in any obedience which countenances disobedience to Allawh.

The meaning of injustice of parents mentioned in the Hadeeth refers to worldly matters and not to affairs of the Akhirawh. Even if they are unjust and unkind in worldly matters, children should be kind to them; respect them and fulfil their rights. Their injustice does not permit children to fail in the execution of their lawful demands and rights. But, discharge of Rights is not to be understood to mean obedience to even their unlawful orders and requests. The Hadeeth mentioning injustice of parents' is similar in meaning to the Hadeeth that orders Zakaat-payers to please the Zakaat-collectors even if the latter are unjust to them. In the Kitabb, Lam'aat, it is also stated that this is for emphasis and not to be taken literally.

3 people are mentioned. They were on a journey when they were caught up in heavy rain. They took refuge in a cave. A huge boulder rolled and blocked the cave-entrance, cutting off their escape from the cave. The 3 decided to supplicate to Allawh Ta'ala based on some deeds that they had done with the greatest of sincerity. The deed that 1 of the 3 offered to Allawh Ta'ala as his basis of supplication was about his aged parents and little children. He implored Allawh Ta'ala in the following way:

O Allawh! I was a man who grazed goats. During the evenings when I returned home, I would first give of the goats' milk to my parents. Only then would I serve milk to my children. One day, I had gone very far and when I returned I found my parents sleeping. I did not consider it good to wake them; hence, I stood near to them with the bowl of milk in my hand. I considered it bad to allow my children to drink before I had given milk to my parents. The children were crying about my feet. I stood until it became morning.

Commenting on this Hadeeth, the author of Mirqawt says that this Hadeeth in meaning is similar to the incident of Aboo Talhah (R) and his guests mentioned in the Hadeeth. When guests arrived, he asked his wife if there was any food. She replied that the only food present was the food of the children. He asked her to put the children to sleep so that the food could be served to the guests. In Lam'aat, it is explained that the children (mentioned in the Hadeeth about the milk) were not hungry but were crying, as is the habit of children to demand delicacies. If the children were hungry, it would have been incumbent (Waajib) to have fed them. It is not conceivable that a Sahaabi of the rank of Aboo Talhah neglected an obligatory act for the sake of a non-obligatory duty. Allawh Ta'ala, Himself has lauded praise on Aboo Talhah and his wife. In Durrul Mukhtaar, it is clearly stated that the right of one's little children has priority over the right of one's parents. In Durrul Mukhtar, it is said:

A man has living both his father and little son. The right of the child has priority over the right of the father in regard to expenditure. Some have said that he should spend equally on both.

In Kitaabul Aathaar, Imam Muhammad (rahmatullahi alayhi) narrates that Hadhrawt Aishah (R) said:

The noblest of what you eat is of your earnings, and your children (i.e. their earnings) are among your earnings.

Based on this Hadeeth, Imam Muhammad (R'A) said that a father might eat from the earnings of his son if he (father) is in need if he does not waste. If the father is wealthy and takes from the property of the son anything, he (the father) will be indebted to the son. This is also the view of Imam Aboo Hanifah (R'A). Imam Muhammad (R'A) narrates that Imaam Aboo Haneefah (R'A) said:

Hammaad (R'A) narrates from Ibraheem (R'A) that the father has no right in the wealth of his son other than food and clothing if he (the father) is in need.

Commenting on this statement, Imaam Muhammad (R'A) said:

This is the opinion to which we adhere.

Hakim and others narrate:

Verily, your children are gifts from Allawh unto you; He bestows female children to whomever He pleases and He grants male children to whomever He pleases. Their wealth is for you (parents) if you are in need.

Kanzul Ummal

This Hadeeth, in fact, indicate the law propounded by Imaam Muhammad that the father has a right in the wealth of his children only in times of need and to the extent of need. The statement of Rawsoolullawh (S), viz., "when you are in need," clarifies this. Thus, if the father takes from the son's wealth unnecessarily, the amount taken will be a debt on the father. Hadhrawt Aboo Bakr Siddeeq (R) also explained in the same way the following Hadeeth or Rawsoolullawh (S):

You and your wealth belong to your father.

Hadhrawt Aboo Bakr (R) stated that:

This refers to necessary expenditure for the parents when they are in need.

Baihaqi

The following is recorded in Durrul Mukhtaar:

Jihadd is not Fardh on such underage and baaligh child (one who has attained the age of puberty) whose both parents or one parent are/is alive because service to them is Fardh Ain nor is it permissible for such children to go on a journey in which there is danger except if they (parents) give their consent. If there is no danger in the journey, they may go without permission. Among such journeys is the journey in quest for knowledge.

In Rawddul Muhtar, it is said:

Parents have the right to prevent their children from going on such journeys (which are dangerous) when they will suffer great hardship by their children's departure on such journeys. This same rule is applicable even if parents happen to be kaafir. However, if the kaafir parents prevent their (Muslim) children from the jihaad which is being waged against their (the parents') co-religionists, then the children shall not obey their parents. But, if they (parents) are poor and are dependent on their children, then they (children) will have to remain and serve their parents, even if they are kaafir. Fardh Ain will not be sacrificed for the sake of Fardh Kifaayah (Jihaad is Fardh Kifaayah and serving parents is Fardh Ain). Dangerous journeys are those pertaining to Jihaad and sea voyages. If there is no danger in the journey then it is permissible to depart on the journey without (their) permission excepting when great hardship will descend on them if the children depart. If there is no danger in the journey then one may go on journey for trade, Hajj and Umrah even without their permission. Similarly, the permission will apply to a greater extent for a journey in pursuit of Knowledge (of the Deen).

Similar rulings are recorded in Bahrur Raaiq and Fataawa Hindiyyah. In one place in Fatawa Hindiyyah, it is stated:

It is necessary to obtain the consent of the parents, if the work (for which the journey is being undertaken) is not necessary.

In Durrul Mukhtaar, the following is recorded in the chapter dealing with maintenance:

It is Waajib (upon the husband) to give his wife such a house in which none of his relatives nor any of her relatives reside.

Rawddul Muhtaar states after narrating various versions in this regard:

It is Waajib to provide a moderate house for a wealthy and honourable wife. In our cities in the land of Shaam, even the middle class people do not live in houses in which strangers live. This applies to a greater degree with people of the upper class. However, an exception is where a house has been inherited by several brothers who have subdivided the house, each one living (separately) in his own section, but the rights and duties of the building being common to them all. Times and circumstances continuously change. The Mufti should take into consideration the changing circumstances and decree accordingly, for without it, a healthy social life is not possible.

From the aforegoing narrations, several masa'il (rules) are manifest. These are enumerated hereunder.

1. It is unlawful to obey parents if they order their children to discard an act or duty that is obligatory on them (children) according to the Shariah. Obedience in such cases of conflict is not at all permissible, leave alone the idea of obedience to them being incumbent in these cases where their orders violate the Shariah. The following cases come within the ambit of this rule:

a. The man's financial condition is such that if he assists his parents from his money, his wife and children will be reduced to misery. His income is not sufficient to provide for his parents as well as his family. In this case, it is not permissible for the man to impose hardship on his wife and children by spending on his parents. This should be understood. The application of this rule is in relation to necessities and not luxuries. If after providing for the basic necessities of the wife and children, the man is able to spend on the necessary requirements of his parents, then it is incumbent on him to do so. – Translator

b. It is a right of the wife that she demands (if she so wishes) to live apart from the parents and relatives of the husband. Thus, should the wife invoke this right and the parents insist that they (their son and daughter-in-law) live together with them (parents), it will not be permissible for the husband to accede to the demand of the parents in this case. It is Waajib in this case of conflicting demands to give to the wife a separate place of residence.

c. If parents prevent their children from setting out for Umrah, Hajj and the acquisition of necessary Ilm (that amount of Deeni knowledge which is Fardh on one), then it is not permissible to obey their wishes.

2. It is not permissible to obey parents in anything that is unlawful in the Shariah, e.g. they order that the children take up such employment that is unlawful in Islam or they wish their children to participate in unlawful functions, gatherings, customs and bid'ah.

3. The rule pertaining to such acts that are Mubaah (permissible); acts which are neither obligatory nor prohibited; if parents command their children to render or to abstain from permissible acts, then the circumstances will have to be taken into consideration. If one is dependent on something and refraining therefrom will mean hardship, then obeying one's parents who refuse permission will not be incumbent. One is then allowed to embark on the task. Example: A poor man who is unable to find employment locally decides to travel elsewhere for seeking his living, but his parents refuse permission for him to go. In this case, it is not obligatory to obey the wishes of the parents. However, if the intended work (i.e. which is permissible) is not essential and one is not dependent on it or there is great danger involved in doing it or due to the son's absence the parents will be put to hardship because of no suitable arrangements being possible for their care, then it is not permissible to oppose the wishes of the parents, e.g. participation in a non-obligatory war, or a sea voyage or departing without being able to make arrangements for the care of the parents. In this case, the journey being not essential, it is obligatory to obey the parents. On the contrary, if there is no danger in the journey nor will the son's departure bring about hardship upon his parents since adequate arrangements exist, then it will be permissible to participate in that work or journey even if parents oppose. Although, it is permissible, nevertheless, it will still be Mustahab to respect their wishes in this case too. The following examples will come within the scope of this rule.

a. Parents wish their son to divorce his wife without having any real grounds. It is not Waajib in this case to obey the parents. The Hadeeth in regard to Hadhrawt Ibn Umar (R) who divorced his wife on the orders of his father, Hadhrawt Umar Ibn Khattaab (R) has already been explained earlier.

b. If parents order that the son hand over his entire earnings to them, it is not Waajib for him to obey their wishes in this regard. Should parents compel their children to hand over their (children's) earnings they (parents) will be sinful. The Hadeeth stating that 'You and your wealth belong to your father', applies to times of need as has been explained earlier. Rawsoolullawh (S) said:

The wealth of a man is not lawful (to others) but with the wholehearted consent of the owner (of the wealth).

c. Should the father take from the son's wealth more than his basic requirements, it will be a debt on him (father). Such debt can be claimed from the father. If he refuses to pay here, he will have to pay in the Hereafter. The clear statements of the Fuqaha suffice to prove this. The Fuqaha were fully qualified and competent to understand the meanings of the Ahadeeth. And Allawh knows best.

ROOH X

THE RIGHTS OF ONESELF

Man's life is the property of Allawh Ta'ala and He has imposed on us rights in respect to our own lives. Life has been bestowed to us as an Amaanat (Trust). It is therefore incumbent to utilise and guard this Amaanat according to the Divine Command. Among the rights incumbent on us in respect of our lives are:

1. The protection of its health and strength
2. The guarding of its peace

This means to refrain from any such activity that unnecessarily imposes strain and frustration. Neglect in these rights results in interference with one's Deen. Peace of mind and courage are destroyed and in consequence one will fail to render service to others. At times, due to the frustration and weakness, one's condition aggravates to the degree where one's very 'Eeman is in danger of elimination. This grave state result because of impatience and ingratitude fostered by the frustration and depression that overtakes man who has failed in fulfilling the rights of his own body and soul; some aayat and Ahadeeth will now be mentioned in this regard.

Allawh Ta'ala mentions in Soorawh Shuraw, Nabi Ibraheem's (A) statements in which he enumerates the bounties of Allawh Ta'ala on him. Among these bounties, he states:

When I become sick, only He cures me.

The desirability of health is obvious from this Ayah.

'Prepare to the best of your ability power for them (the enemies).

Soorawh Anfal

This Ayah categorically commands the protection of strength and power. The Hadeeth of Uqbah Bin Aamir (R) narrated in Muslim, mentions that Rawsoolullawh (S) explained the above Ayah as a reference to martial training since this strengthens both the heart and the Deen. Rawsoolullawh (S) mentions specifically training with the bow and arrow in the Tafseer of the above Ayah because the bow and the arrow were the weapons of that age. This Ayah and its Tafseer will be applicable to whatever weapons are in vogue during any age.

Do not be wasteful.

Waste leads to destitution that in turn produces hardship, worry and frustration. Thus, this Ayah in fact commands abstention from frustration and despondency that one invites upon oneself by extravagance. Peace of mind is thus commanded by the Qur'an.

Some of the Ahadeeth are:

Regarding excessive fasting and remaining awake at night in ibaadat, Hadhrawt 'Abbdullawh Ibn Amr Aas (R) narrates that Rawsoolullawh (S) said:

Your body too has a right over you; your eyes too have a right over you.

Bukhawri and Muslim

Excessive striving and staying awake at night have a detrimental effect on the health and this is negatory of the rights that the body of man has.
Hadhrawt Ibn Abbaas (R) narrates:

In regard to two bounties, most people remain in loss (deprived of their benefits). One is health and the other is peace of mind.

Health and peace of mind are two bounties that are strong aids in the development of one's spiritual and Deeni life. Peace of mind will exist when one has sufficient material possessions. The worry of poverty and want will thus not overtake one. From this narration, we realise that the two favours mentioned above are to be cultivated.
Hadhrawt Amr Bin Maimoon Udi (R) narrates that while admonishing a man, Rawsoolullawh (S) said:
Consider (certain) five things as a treasure before (another) five things overtake you.
1. Youth before old age;
2. Health before sickness;
3. Wealth before poverty;
4. Peace of mind before worry; and
5. Life before the event of death

Tirmeedhi
The five treasures mentioned should be valued and advantage be taken of them while they endure. These five treasure or bounties should be expended in the interests of the Deen and one's spiritual reformation and development. Once these treasures have ended, the great opportunity of rendering perfect ibaadat will have passed, hence Nabi (saws) exhorted that maximum benefit be derived while these conditions last.
Hadhrawt Ubaidullah Ibn Muhsin (R) narrates that Rawsoolullawh (S) said:
He among you who arises in the morning with 'Eeman, health and sufficient food for that day, should consider himself as being in possession of the whole world

Tirmeedhi
Hadhrawt Aboo Hurairah (R) narrates that Rawsoolullawh (S) said:
Whoever seeks lawful earnings … to refrain from begging and to fulfil the rights of his family and neighbour, he will meet Allawh Ta'ala on the Day of Qiyamah with his face glittering like the moon of the fourteenth night…

Baihaqi and Aboo Nuaim
This establishes that the seeking of wealth for a valid reason is exhorted and is full of significance. Lawful wealth too plays its part in the acquisition of peace of mind that is an end desired by the Deen.
Hadhrawt Aboo Dharr (R) narrates that Rawsoolullawh (S) said:
Abstention from the world (which is ordered by the Deen) does not mean making unlawful what is lawful nor the destruction of wealth.

Tirmeedhi and Ibn Majah
Destruction of the material bounties and means that Allawh Ta'ala has created is not advocated by Islam since possession of material wealth is conducive for the attainment of peace of mind which is a desirable end. The overwhelming majority of people on earth cannot enjoy peace of mind without material prosperity.
Hadhrawt Aboo Dardaa (R) narrates that Rawsoolullawh (S) said:

Allawh has created both medicine and sickness. For every sickness, there is a medicine. Resort to medicine and refrain from using haraam substances as medicine.

Aboo Dawood
This Hadeeth clearly commands the protection of health.
Hadhrawt Aboo Hurairah (R) narrates that Rawsoolullawh (S) said:

The stomach is the fountain of the body. If it is maintained in a healthy state, one remains healthy. If it is despoiled, the health deteriorates.

Shu'bul 'Eeman, Baihaqi
This Hadeeth too refers to the guarding of one's physical health.
Hadhrawt Umm Munthir (R) narrates that once Rawsoolullawh (S) said to Hadhrawt Ali (R):

Do not eat of these dates, for you are sickly.

Umm Munthir (R) then prepared some beet and barley. Rawsoolullawh (S) ordered Hadhrawt Ali (R) to eat of it, saying: "

This suits you.

Ahmad, Tirmeedhi, and Ibn Majah
This Hadeeth also pertains to the protection of one's health.
Hadhrawt Aboo Hurairah (R) narrates that Rawsoolullawh (S) would make the following dua:

O Allawh! I seek Your protection from starvation…

Aboo Dawood, Nasa'i, and Ibn Majah
In Teebi, it is said that the reason for asking protection against starvation is that starvation produces physical weakness and mental anguish. Again this Hadeeth too implies the desirability of health and peace of mind. Another Hadeeth mentions the significance of hunger while the Hadeeth cited above mentions the seeking of protection against hunger. Although there seems to be an apparent contradiction here, in reality there is no contradiction. The significance of hunger mentioned in the Hadeeth is similar to the significance of sickness also stated in the Ahadeeth. Like sickness, hunger is not an end to be acquired. The significance in this regard refers to the thawaab one will receive by adopting patience when overtaken by the calamity of sickness or hunger. When this has been imposed on one, there is nothing but patience to adopt. Thus, the significance stated, is from that direction.
Hadhrawt Uqqbah Bin Amir (R) narrates that he heard Rawsoolullawh (S) say:

Practise arrow shooting and horse riding…

Tirmeedhi, Ibn Majah, Aboo Dawood, and Darawmi
This Hadeeth points to the maintenance of physical health and strength.
Hadhrawt Uqqbah Bin Amir (R) also narrates that he heard Rawsoolullawh (S) say:

Whoever gives up arrow shooting after having learnt, it is not of us…

Muslim
The emphasis on physical strength and power is indeed great in this Hadeeth.
Hadhrawt Aboo Hurairah (R) narrates that Rawsoolullawh (S) said:

A strong Believer is better than a weak Believer.

This Hadeeth speaks of physical strength as is clear from the explanation of the Hadeeth by the authorities of the Deen. Physical power and strength are abilities that Allawh Ta'ala loves in his servants. Physical strength has to be developed by Believers. Since this is desirable, it follows that it is a duty upon one to preserve one's health and develop one's strength while at the same time it will be un-Islamic to resort to such practices that are harmful and injurious to ones health. Excessive eating, excessive sleeping, excessive indulgence in sexual relations is destructive to one's health. In the same way, excessive reduction in food and sleep produces physical weakness. Physical training, martial arts, and ways of defence are all included within the scope of this Hadeeth.
This should be understood. The inference should not be drawn that the sports of the Kuffar also come within the purview of this Hadeeth. Kuffar sport is prohibited by the Shari'ah. – Translator Physical training and methods of defence should be practised within the bounds of the Shariah and the law.

Hadhrawt Amr Bin Shuaib narrates on the authority of his father the following Hadeeth of Rawsoolullawh (S):

One traveller is a shaitawn; two travellers are two shaitawns while three travellers constitute a caravan.

Maalik, Tirmeedhi, Aboo Dawood, and Nasa'i

This criticism of one or two persons undertaking a journey applies to times of danger. Three being a fair group, obtained the description of 'caravan' from Rawsoolullawh (S). By labelling one or two travellers as devils, Rawsoolullawh (S) discouraged travelling by single persons and even two people since they may not be able to protect themselves adequately along the journey during times of danger. Thus, we realise from this Hadeeth that it is essential to prepare for our protection and defence.

In 1 Hadeeth narrated by Hadhrawt Aboo Thalabah (R):

Rawsoolullawh (S) forbade a travelling group breaking up and scattering at a place where the group halts on the journey. Rawsoolullawh (S) attributed such scattering and wandering about to the shaitawn. Travelling companions should remain together so that they may aid one another if some difficulty, calamity or emergency overtakes them.

Aboo Dawood

This Hadeeth too stresses the need for arranging one's protection and taking precaution against sudden calamities.

Hadhrawt Aboo Saeed Khudri (R) narrates that Rawsoolullawh (S) said to one man:

Take along your weapons. I fear the Bani Kuraizah (who were Jews and the enemies of the Muslims)… This man went home and brought along his weapons…

Muslim

In times of danger, arming oneself in a lawful manner is stated in this Hadeeth.

Hadhrawt 'Abbdullawh Ibn Mas'ood (R) narrates:

On the Day of Badr, three persons sat on a camel (i.e. due to the poorly equipped army of Muslims, each camel had three persons to carry). Aboo Lubaabah and Hadhrawt Ali were Rawsoolullawh's (saws) partners on a camel. When it was Rawsoolullawh's (saws) turn to walk, both these companions insisted that they would walk on behalf of Rawsoolullawh (S) and that he should remain on the back of the camel. Rawsoolullawh (S) said to them: "You are not stronger than me; I depend on thawabb as you do.

Sharhus Sunnah

From this Hadeeth, we realise that one should not be accustomed to too much comfort. One has to be prepared for all exigencies and emergencies.

Hadhrawt Fudhaalah Ibn Ubaidah (R) narrates:

Rawsoolullawh (S) forbade us from becoming accustomed to much comfort and he would order us sometimes to walk barefooted.

Aboo Dawood

Again, too much comfort has been deprecated. Muslims have to be alert and prepared at all times.

Hadhrawt Huzaifah (R) narrates that Rawsoolullawh (S) said:

It is not proper for a Believer to disgrace himself.

It was asked :

O Rawsoolullawh (S)! What is meant by this?

Rawsoolullawh (S) said:

To undertake something which you cannot bear

Tirmeedhi

To assume a task beyond one's capability is not proper for a Mu'min. The consequence will be failure, disgrace, worry, and shame. Frustration will then overtake one. This Hadeeth covers all such acts and tasks that are beyond one's power. In all cases of difficulties and hardships adopt sabr (patience) and supplicate unto Allawh Ta'ala for aid. The aforegoing discussion establishes clearly that health, strength and peace of mind are desirable ends to be pursued. All such acts that interfere with the attainment of these ends are detestable. Such impediments are at times totally prohibited and sometimes they are reprehensible. Sometimes these laudable aims (health, strength and peace) are wrecked, not by any voluntary action of man himself, but by an Act of Allawh Ta'ala. In such cases of hardship, sabr has to be adopted. Thawaab accrues in the wake of these divinely imposed hardships while at the same time divine aid is granted to enable one to withstand the difficulties and hardships. In this way frustration and despondency do not settle over one. Such divinely imposed hardships occurred to all Ambiyaa (alayhimus salaam) and Auliya Kiraam. The Qur'an and Hadeeth are replete with such episodes.

ROOH XI

STEADFASTNESS IN SAWLAH

Sawlah is of vital importance for the life of a Muslim. Some Qur'anic Aayat and Ahadeeth pertaining to Sawlah will be narrated here.

AYATS

Allawh Ta'ala says in the Qur'an Majeed about the attributes of those who fear Him:

They perform Sawlah correctly…

Soorawh Baqawrawh

This is a reference to proper performance of Sawlah; performing Sawlah regularly at appointed times and observing all the rules of Sawlah. In numerous places in the Qur'an Shareef, Allawh Ta'ala commands the correct performance of Sawlah. The large number of times referring to the correct observance of Sawlah abundantly illustrates the vital importance of Sawlah.

O People of 'Eeman! Seek aid with Sawbbr (Patience) and Sawlah.

Soorawh Baqawrawh

A special characteristic of Sawlah is mentioned in this Ayah. Everyone stands in need of assistance in both material and spiritual life. In terms of the Qur'an Majeed, Sawlah is a great and wonderful source of aid that a Believer can obtain by means of correct performance of Sawlah.

The Qur'an Majeed orders:

Guard (all) Sawlah…

Soorawh Baqawrawh

Allawh Ta'ala commands that we guard our Sawlah diligently; that we do not delay or postpone the proper and due performance of Sawlah, no matter what the exigency or emergency may be. The insistence on performing Sawlah at the divinely appointed times is so much stressed that the Qur'an commands that Sawlah be performed even in times of grave danger when engaged in fighting the enemy – in times of war. Even if the fighting is severe and heavy, the Qur'an Shareef orders that Sawlah be performed while mounted on one's means of transport and facing any direction, even while in motion and even if one is unable to perform ruku and sajdah due to the extreme danger and awkward circumstances produced by the war. Indeed, we must ponder and realise the vital importance of Sawlah from this command to perform Sawlah at the appointed time even when one's life is in grave danger. There is no permission to postpone the performance of Sawlah. This is what is meant by "guarding" Sawlah mentioned in the Qur'an.

The Qur'an Shareef also commands that if the danger of the enemy making a sudden attack is imminent, the Muslim army should split up into groups. One group should perform Sawlah while the other group fights on or guards. After the one group has performed Sawlah, the other group will come to Sawlah while the first group will go into confrontation with the enemy. The Sawlah to be performed on the battlefield under such dangerous conditions differs to some extent from the normal Sawlah in method of performance of the rakaats. The method of performing Sawlah in dangerous circumstances is described in the books of Fiqh. The point to observe and reflect on here is that even in the most dangerous of times, permission to delay the Sawlah is not granted. This amply establishes the vital importance of Sawlah in the life of a Muslim.

In certain circumstances, e.g. sickness, non-availability of water, etc., one is not able to utilise water to achieve the states of tahaarat (purity). However, notwithstanding such circumstances, the Qur'an does not grant permission to delay performance of Sawlah until one is able to acquire the state of tahaarat by means of water. For this exigency, the Qur'an orders that Tayammum be made. By means of Tayammum, Allawh Ta'ala bestows on us the states of taharawt; hence Sawlah has to be executed at its proper time. There is no permission to postpone the Sawlah. The Qur'an orders that if one is unable to stand and perform Sawlah, due to illness or weakness, one has to sit and perform Sawlah. If the sickness and weakness are such that even sitting is not possible, then Sawlah has to be performed while laying down and Ruku' and Sajdah shall be made by means of signs. But, permission to delay Sawlah is not granted. Sawlah is the salient and most outstanding feature of Islam. It is the distinguishing factor between kufr and 'Eeman. All Ulama unanimously aver that if a kaafir whom none has heard proclaiming the Kalimah, performs Sawlah, and then it is incumbent to regard him as a Muslim. Zakaat, although of fundamental importance, is not a salient and conspicuous sign of Islam as Sawlah is.

The Qur'an Majeed says while mentioning a group of Ambiyaa and the corrupt people who followed them:

(After them) such corrupt persons were born who destroyed Sawlah. ..Soon will they (in Akhirawh) see the punishment (for their destruction of Sawlah).

Soorawh Maryam

This Ayah sounds a grave warning of terrible punishment for those who neglect and ruin the institution of Sawlah.

7. The Qur'an Shareef commands:

Order your family to perform Sawlah, and you, yourself, also be steadfast on it.

Soorawh Taw Ha

In the first instance, this command is directed to Rawsoolullawh (S), and in general, it applies to all Believers. From this Command we realise that when even the august and holy personage of Rawsoolullawh (S) is not excused from Sawlah, then to a very greater degree will the command be applicable to us. We also learn from the Ayah that while we have to be steadfast in the observance of Sawlah, it devolves as an incumbent duty upon us to ensure that we inculcate the proper observance of Sawlah in our familles and our dependants.

AHADEETH

Hadhrawt Aboo Hurairah (R) narrates that Rawsoolullawh (S) said:

Will there remain any impurity on a person who baths five times a day in a river flowing in front of his house?

The people said:

No impurity will remain on him.

Rawsoolullawh (S) said:

This is the effect of the five Sawlah. By means of it, Allawh Ta'ala purifies the performer of all sins.

Bukhawri and Muslim

Indeed, a great significance of Sawlah is stated in this Hadeeth.

Hadhrawt Jaabir (R) narrates that Rawsoolullawh (S) said:

The distinguishing factor between kufr and 'Eeman is the deliberate neglect of Sawlah

Muslim

Deliberate neglect brings one close to kufr. One who abstains from Sawlah flounders on the brink of kufr.

Hadhrawt Abdur Rahmaan Bin Amr iIbn Al-'As (R) narrates that Rawsoolullawh (S) said:

Sawlah, on the Day of Qiyamah, will be a light, a proof and a means of salvation for the one who guarded it. He who neglects Sawlah, will have no light, no proof and no salvation (from the direction of Sawlah). He (the one who neglected Sawlah) will be in the company of Qaroon, Fir'aon, Haamaan and Ubay Ibn Khalf on the Day of Qiyamah.

Ahmadd, Darawmi, and Baihaqi, Shu'bul 'Eeman

What greater punishment and disgrace can there be than to be resurrected in the company of such great unbelievers and to be flung into Jahannum along with them?

Hadhrawt Bareedah (R) narrates that Rawsoolullawh (S) said:

The subject of a pledge that exists between the people and us (the Ambiya) is Sawlah. Thus, whoever neglects Sawlah has become a kaafir (i.e. in terms of practical life, not in terms of 'Eeman).

Ahmad, Tirmeedhi, Nasa'i, and Ibn Majah

The evil of neglecting Sawlah is amply illustrated by this Hadeeth. Those who deliberately neglect Sawlah are likened to the Kuffar. They appear in practical life as Kuffar. Since there is no distinguishing feature between them and the Kuffar, Islamic law will treat them on par with the Kuffar. It is clear from this Hadeeth that neglect of Sawlah is a salient feature of kufr. Although a Muslim will not be proclaimed a Kafir if he neglects the performance of Sawlah, nevertheless, the Shariah views his crime with the utmost of gravity. Persistence in the neglect of Sawlah is punishable by death in Islam.

'Amr 'Ibn Shuaib narrating on the authority of his father who in turn narrates from his father (R) that Rawsoolullawh (S) said:

Stress on your children the performance of Sawlah from the age of seven and beat them at the age of ten years (if they neglect Sawlah).

Aboo Dawood

Hadhrawt Aboo Hurairah states that two persons from the tribe of Aboo Khuzaa'ah embraced Islam at the hands of Rawsoolullawh (S). One of the two was martyred and the other one died a natural death about a year or so later. Hadhrawt Talhah Bin Ubaidullah (R) says that in a dream he saw the one who died a year later entering Jannat first. Being surprised he mentioned his dream in the morning to Rawsoolullawh (S) who said:

What did not the one who died later (than the martyred one) keep the fasts of Ramadhaan and in the year perform thousands of Rakaats of Sawlah. (If only the Fardh, Waajib and Sunnatul Muakkadah Sawlah are taken into account, the number will be close to 10000 rakahs? It is for this reason that he surpassed the martyr).

Ahmadd, 'Ibn Majah, 'Ibn Hibban, and Baihaqi

The narrations of Ibn Majah and Ibn Hibbaan further state that Rawsoolullawh (S) explained that the difference in rank between the two is as vast as the difference between the heaven and the earth. It is obvious that this greater rank and significance acquired by the one who died later were due in particular to the Sawlah that he performed in abundance after the departure of the martyr. This abundance of Sawlah has in fact been mentioned by Rawsoolullawh (S). Sawlah is an 'Ibadat that enables one to attain ranks higher than even the rank of martyrdom.

Hadhrawt Jaabir Bin 'Abbdullawh (R) narrates that Rawsoolullawh (S) said, Sawlah is the key to Jannat.

Darawmi

This indicates the superiority of Sawlah over other acts of ibaadat.

Hadhrawt 'Abbdullawh Ibn Qart (R) narrates that Rawsoolullawh (S) said:

The first act about which one will be questioned on the Day of Qiyamah will be Sawlah. If Sawlah is found to be proper, other acts too will pass as proper. But, if Sawlah is found there to be despoiled, then all other acts too will fail.

Tibrawni and Ausat

The influence of Sawlah will permeate all other acts of ibaadat. Sawlah will be the criterion for the reckoning of one's acts of virtue. Success in Sawlah will bring about the success of all other acts of ibaadat while failure in Sawlah will lead to the failure of other acts of ibaadat. This is a great proof for the significance and superiority of Sawlah. Its vital importance for the success of a Muslim in both this world and the hereafter can never be exaggerated.

Hadhrawt Ibn Umar (R) narrates that Rawsoolullawh (S) said:

He who has no Sawlah has no Deen. The relationship of Sawlah with the Deen is like the relationship of the head with the body.

Tibraani, Ausat, and Sawgheer

Without the head, man is a dead body. So too, without Sawlah, all other acts of ibaadat are lifeless. It is therefore, a fatal error to neglect Sawlah and pin one's hopes of salvation and success on other acts of virtue. Minus Sawlah, one's Deen lays utterly in ruin.

Hadhrawt Hanzalah (R) narrates that he heard Rawsoolullawh (S) say:

Whoever guards the five Sawlah while believing that the Sawlah is the Right of Allawh, will enter Jannat.

Ahmad

The meaning of guarding Sawlah is the proper execution of Sawlah at their appointed times, observing all rules (the Faraaidh, Sunan and Mustahabbaat) of Sawlah and striving in performance of Sawlah with concentration and humility. The aforementioned Qur'anic verses and Ahadeeth of Rawsoolullawh (S) illustrate the great importance of Sawlah. No Muslim should bring calamity and ruin upon himself by neglecting Sawlah. In fact, it is inconceivable that after having been informed of this tremendous significance of Sawlah, a Believer will persist in neglecting the proper performance of Sawlah.

ROOH XII
ERECTION OF MASAJID

This section deals with the construction, caring, repairing and maintenance of Masjids. The Huqooq (Rights) of the Masjid are also discussed in this Rooh. Among the rights (huqooq) of the Masjid are:

1. Performing Sawlah in the Masjid
2. Establishing performance of Sawlah in jamaat
3. Cleaning and maintaining the Masjid in good condition.
4. Visiting the Masjid in abundance
5. Respecting and revering the Masjid.

Some Qur'anic aayat and Ahadeeth in this regard will now be narrated.

Allawh Ta'ala states in the Qur'an Majeed:

Who is more unjust than the one who prevents (others) from the Masajid of Allawh – that the Dhikr of Allawh should take place therein, and who strives to ruin the Masajidd?

Ayah 114 Soorawh Baqawrawh

In reality, construction and maintaining the Masaajid of Allawh are the duties of only those who believe in Allawh and the Last Day; who establish regular Sawlah; who pay Zakaat and who fear none besides Allawh. Such people shall attain their goal (Jannat and Najaat in the Akhirawh).

Soorawh Tawbah

This Ayah conveys the glad tidings of Jannat and Najaat (salvation) for those who erect, administer and maintain the Masjids.

They (the people of Hidayah) are in such places (for purposes of ibaadat) in regard to which Allawh has ordered respect. In these places the Name of Allawh is remembered.

Soorawh Noor

The places mentioned in this Ayah refer to the Masajid. The way of respecting the Masaajid is explained in the Ahadeeth that appear hereunder.

AHADEETH

Hadhrawt Aboo Saeed Khudri (R) narrates that Rawsoolullawh (S) said:

When you observe any person concerning himself with the Masjid, then bear witness that he is a Believer because Allawh Ta'ala says:

Verily, only those who believe in Allawh, the Last Day, perform Sawlah, pay Zakaat and fear none besides Allawh, erect (and maintain) the Masjids of Allawh.

Soorawh Taubah

Performing Sawlah in the Masjid, visiting the Masjid in abundance, cleaning the Masjid, maintaining the Masjid, etc., all come within the scope of this Hadeeth.

Hadhrawt Uthmaan (R) narrates that Rawsoolullawh (S) said:

Whoever erects a Masjid purely for the sake of gaining Allawh's Pleasure, Allawh will erect for him a mansion in Jannat.

Bukhawri and Muslim

Sincerity of intention is conditional for the obtainal of this thawaab. This promise of reward applies to the erection of new Masaajid as well as to the repair and renovation of existing Masaajid. This is clear from the fact that Hadhrawt Uthmaan (R) narrated this Hadeeth on renovating Masjidun Nabawi. Other Ahadeeth too confirm that this great reward is even for those who assist in the construction of the Masjid no matter how small their contribution may be. Allawh Ta'ala rewards based on the sincerity of one's intention.

It is narrated that Rawsoolullawh (S) himself carried bricks on the construction of Masjidun Nabawi. In the Hadeeth it is stated that no matter how small one's contribution may be towards the construction of a Masjid, Allawh Ta'ala will erect a mansion in Jannat in return for the contribution.

Ibn Khuzaimah and Ibn Majah

Hadhrawt 'Abbdullawh Ibn Umar (R) narrates that Rawsoolullawh (S) said:

Whoever erects a Masjid for Allawh Ta'ala (with sincerity), Allawh Ta'ala will erect for him a mansion in Jannat, far greater than the Masjid.

Ahmadd

The quality and size of the palace that Allawh Ta'ala will bestow on the one contributing towards the erection of a Masjid will be commensurate with one's sincerity.

Hadhrawt Aboo Hurairah (R) narrates that Rawsoolullawh (S) said:

Allawh Ta'ala will erect a palace of pearls and emeralds in Jannat for one who erects with halaal (lawful) earnings a house (Masjid) for Allawh Ta'ala.

Tibraani and Ausat

The sanctity of the Masjid demands that only lawful and wholesome wealth and materials be expended in its erection. Lawful in this context applies to all things that go into the erection of the Masjid. Nothing haraam should be employed in the Masjid. In some places, especially rural areas, people build Masjids on land that belong to others. When the owner objects, the builders of the Masjid take offence and brand him as being anti-Islam. If the owner happens to be a non-Muslim, the builders of the Masjid consider it a great act of thawaab in confronting him and refusing to hand over his land. When the owner happens to be a non-Muslim, the errant Muslims responsible for the structure, consider their dispute and intransigence against the non-Muslim proprietor as a conflict between kufr and Islam.

This attitude of the Muslims is unjust and sinful. Remember well, that a structure reared on the land of a person without his consent is not a Masjid. The Shariah does not accept such a building erected on usurped ground as a Masjid.

Hadhrawt Aboo Saeed (R) narrates:

There was an African woman who used to sweep the Masjid. One night she passed away. In the morning, Rawsoolullawh (S) was informed of her death. He said, 'Why did you not inform me?' Rawsoolullawh (S) then accompanied by the Sahabah went to her grave and recited takbeer there (he made dua for her).

Ibn Majah and Ibn Khuzaimah

In 1 narration, it is said that Rawsoolullawh (S) asked her (i.e. the dead woman who was buried – this was one of the miracles of Rawsoolullawh – (S) :

Which act did you discover to be of great significance?

The dead woman replied:

Sweeping the Masjid

Aboo Shaikh Isbahaani

This Hadeeth indicates the great significance of caring for the Masjid. Even the simple task of sweeping the Masjid was an act honoured greatly by Allawh Ta'ala and Rawsoolullawh (S). The importance and significance of this act of sweeping rendered by the little-known and forlorn African lady were such that Rawsoolullawh (S) voiced his displeasure at not being informed immediately of her death. Her service of sweeping the Masjid was so noble that Rawsoolullawh (S) specially went with a group of Sahabah to her grave. Allawh Ta'ala and Rawsoolullawh (S) regard the service of sweeping the Masjid most highly. But alas! Nowadays, people consider this task lowly and below their dignity.

Hadhrawt Aboo Qursafah (R) narrates a lengthy Hadeeth in which Rawsoolullawh (S) said:

Removing dust particles and waste from the Masjid is the mahr (dowry) of large-eyed damsels of Jannat.

Tibbrawni and Kabeer

Hadhrawt Aboo Saeed Khudri (R) narrates that Rawsoolullawh (S) said:

Whoever removes from the Masjid any offensive item, Allawh Ta'ala will in return erect for him a palace in Jannat.

Ibn Majah

Hadhrawt A'ishah (R) narrates:

Rawsoolullawh (S) commanded us to build Masajid in all neighbourhoods and he ordered us to maintain the Masajid clean.

Ahmad, Tirmeedhi, Aboo Dawood, Ibn Majah, and Ibn Khuzaimah

The existence of Masjids in all neighbourhoods facilitates the regular and easy performance of Jamaat Sawlah by all residing in the neighbourhood. In this way, everyone can acquire the maximum benefits of Sawlah and all other advantages attendant to Jamaat Sawlah. Since Masjids are places of sanctity, nothing impure should be taken in. Impure garments and people in the state of impurity should not enter the Masaajid. Regular cleaning of the Masjid also comes within the scope of the command stated in the above-mentioned Hadeeth.

It should now be clear that the practice of taking into the Masjid groups of Kuffar tourists on sightseeing is not permissible. Firstly, the Kuffar are constantly in the state of ceremonial impurity (the states of Hadeeth and janaabat); secondly, the Kuffar's attire is not in accord with the reverence of the Masjid; thirdly, the garments of the Kuffar are generally najis (impure); fourthly; the Kuffar visitors attend the Masjid in mixed groups of male and female. This is an act of the greatest immorality in so far as Islam is concerned. – Translator

Hadhrawt Waathilah (R) narrates that Rawsoolullawh (S) said:

Perfume the Masajid on Fridays.

Ibn Majah, Kabeer, and Tibraani

This Hadeeth does not mean that the act of perfuming the Masjid should be restricted to only Fridays. Friday has been mentioned because more people are present for Jum'a Sawlah, hence the greater significance of cleaning the Masjid on Fridays.

Hadhrawt Aboo Hurairah (R) narrates that Rawsoolullawh (S) said:

When you see someone trading (buying and selling) in the Masjid, then say: 'May Allawh not grant you profit in your trade.' When you see someone calling out in the Masjid for his lost article, then say: 'May Allawh not return your article.'"

Tirmeedhi, Nasa'i, Ibn Khuzaimah, and Hakim

In another Hadeeth, it is said:

The Masajidd are not made for this.

Aboo Dawood and Ibn Majah

The Masaajid are not places for mundane activities. Masjids are erected purely for the Dhikr and ibaadat of Allawh Ta'ala; hence worldly activities such as buying, selling and making announcements pertaining to worldly affairs are not permissible. The Hadeeth mentions the prohibition of searching for lost articles inside the Masjid. By this is meant making an announcement inside the Masjid regarding an article lost outside the Masjid. The curse ordered by Rawsoolullawh (S) for such announcements and worldly activities inside the Masjid is to serve as a warning. However, if there is fear of creating a commotion inside the Masjid by uttering the curse which Rawsoolullawh (S) has commanded for such occasions, then utter the curse (viz., May Allawh not return your lost article.) silently. The sanctity of the Masjid does not allow the perpetration of mundane acts in it.

Hadhrawt Ibn Umar (R) narrates that Rawsoolullawh (S) said:

There are several acts which are improper in regard to a Masjid. The Masjid should not be used as a thoroughfare (a short-cut to get to the other side of the road); weapons should not be borne inside the Masjid; raw meat should not be taken in; punishment should not be meted out inside it; and, it should not be made a place of trade.

Ibn Majah

All such worldly acts are negatory to the sanctity and respect of the Masjid, hence forbidden. The prohibited activities are not restricted to those mentioned in this Hadeeth. Anything that is in conflict with the sanctity and dignity of the Masjid is not allowed in the Masjid.

Hadhrawt 'Abbdullawh Ibn Mas'ood (R) narrates that Rawsoolullawh (S) said,

Soon will there be such people who will indulge in (worldly) conversation inside the Masjid. Allawh cares not for them.

Ibn Hibbaan

This Hadeeth refers to the prohibition of worldly talk inside the Masjid. It mentions the displeasure of Allawh Ta'ala. Such people are deprived of His Mercy and instead they invite Allawh's Wrath.

Hadhrawt 'Abbdullawh Ibn Umar (R) narrates that Rawsoolullawh (S) said,

For every step taken by one who proceeds to the Masjid for Jamaat Sawlah, a sin (which he had already committed) is wiped out and a good deed is recorded. This happens in going to as well as in returning from the Masjid.

The thawaab for proceeding to and even returning from the Masjid is indeed colossal. There is no limit to Allawh's mercy.

Hadhrawt Aboo Darda (R) narrates that Rawsoolullawh (S) said:

Whoever walks to the Masjid in the darkness of the night, will meet Allawh with Noor on the Day of Qiyamah.

Tibbrawni

Hadhrawt Aboo Hurairah (R) narrates that he heard Rawsoolullawh (S) say:

Allawh Ta'ala will grant His Shade to seven (types) of persons on the day when their will be no shade besides His Shade. (Among the seven) one is a man whose heart is attached to the Masjid.

Bukhawri and Muslim

Hadhrawt Anas (R) narrates that Rawsoolullawh (S) said:

Refrain from these foul-smelling (vegetables) before coming to our Masjids. If you wish to eat these, then eliminate the bad odour with fire. (i.e. by means of cooking).

Tibbrawni

This Hadeeth prohibits the eating of raw garlic, onions and the like before coming to the Masjid. Other Ahadeeth specifically mention garlic and onions.

Hadhrawt Aboo Umaamah (R) narrates that Rawsoolullawh (S) said:

Whoever proceeds to the Masjid having only the intention of learning or teaching some goodness (something of the Deen), will receive the Thawabb of a perfect Hajj.

Tibrawni

From this Hadeeth we learn that a Masjid while it is a place of Sawlah is also a place of acquiring knowledge of the Deen. It is therefore highly beneficial and meritorious if in the Masjid there always remains a person who can impart teachings of the Deen. From all the aforementioned narrations, the following program of actions is established for Muslims:

1. In all place – cities, towns and villages – Masjids should be built in accordance with the needs of the place.
2. All means and agencies employed in the construction of the Masjid must be halaal.
3. The Masjids must be respected and honoured. They have to be properly maintained and kept free of all offensive odours and uncleanliness or any activity that causes offence and violates the sanctity of the Masjid.
4. Males must perform Sawlah in the Masjid. They must not forgo jama'at (congregational Sawlah) without a valid reason. In addition to the increased thawaab for performing Sawlah in jamaat in the Masjid, there is also the benefit of fostering good ties with Muslims. One remains informed of the condition of the community. This is clear from the Ahadeeth.
5. The community should retain in the Masjid the service of such a man who is competent enough to instruct the community in the teachings of the Deen.
6. Whenever one finds the opportunity, proceed to the Masjid and become engaged there in Deeni activity.

The Ahadeeth make it abundantly clear that it is by far better for women to perform Sawlah at home. (In fact, it is no longer permissible for women to attend the Masjid for performance of their Sawlah. – Translator

ROOH XIII

DHIKRULLAH REMEMBERING ALLAWH IN ABUNDANCE

The Qur'an Majeed and the Ahadeeth are replete with commands to remember Allawh Ta'ala constantly and in abundance. The thawaab and significance of Dhikrullah are indeed great. Dhikrullah is not difficult. It is indeed a most simple duty. One who is neglectful of such an important, yet simple, and most rewarding practice is most unfortunate. Indifference to Dhikrullah is an invitation to calamity upon oneself. Dhikr has been absolutely simplified. It is free from conditions and restrictions. Time, number, wudhu, place, etc. have not been made necessary conditions for Dhikr. There is, therefore, no difficulty in making Dhikr. There is no valid excuse for refraining from engagement in constant Dhikr. For making Dhikr, it is not necessary to have a Tasbeeh in hand (rosary). The use of a Tasbeeh is permissible; one may therefore use it to facilitate the remembrance of the number of times one chooses to recite a particular form of Dhikr. A Tasbeeh is also beneficial for inculcating in one the habit of constant Dhikr. For this purpose, the use of a Tasbeeh is therefore best. Some people, who are not in the habit of making Dhikr constantly, feel that by keeping a Tasbeeh in hand at most times, one will develop riyaa (show) since people will regard the holder of the Tasbeeh as a pious person. This thought prevents them from keeping a tasbeeh at hand. The result of this attitude is that they do not develop the habit of Dhikr. It should be realised that riyaa is an internal condition. If one's niyyat is to attract people's attention and to display piety then only will the question of riyaa arise. Riyaa is not what others think of one. One should not indulge unnecessarily in such suspicions that are merely traps of shaitaan to divert one from constant Dhikr. Shaitaan also endeavours to deceive the Believer and divert him from constant Dhikr by whispering into him that Dhikr merely with the tongue, when the heart is engrossed in worldly affairs, is useless. Know that this is a trap of shaitaan to divert one from the remembrance of Allawh Ta'ala. As long as one's niyyat at the commencement of the Dhikr was to obtain thawaab and the Pleasure of Allawh, one will continue to acquire these benefits even if the heart does not accompany the tongue in the Dhikr. However, during one's free time, when making special Dhikr, endeavour to control the attention of one's heart to concentrate on the Dhikr. Do not indulge in futility – useless activities – for this diverts the heart from the Dhikr of Allawh Ta'ala. Some Aayat and Ahadeeth will now be mentioned about Dhikrullawh.

1. Allawh Ta'ala says in the Qur'an Shareef:

Remember Me, and I will (as a favour) remember you.

Soorawh Baqawrawh

Praising those who constantly engage in Dhikr, the Qur'an Shareef says:

They are such people who remember Allawh Ta'ala while standing, sitting and laying down.

Soorawh Al Imrawn

Remember (make Dhikr of) your Rawbb in your heart (i.e. silent Dhikr) with humility and fear (and make Dhikr) in a voice which is less than jahr (loudness), morning and evening; and, be not among the in- different ones.

Soorawh A'rawf

Dhikr should be made at all times. This is clear from the command in the Ayah to make Dhikr morning and evening which means the whole day. Dhikr should also preferably be made silently. The Dhikr may also be made audibly, but not shouting and screaming. This is stated in the term, "less than jahr". There is no merit in making Dhikr by means of shouting. However, if some Shaikh of Tasawwuf who is steadfast on the Sunnah devises loud Dhikr for his mureeds as some remedy for spiritual conditions, then such loud Dhikr will be permissible. But, one should remember not to disturb the peace and sleep of others by one's loud Dhikr. Disturbing others is sinful.

Allawh Ta'ala says in the Qur'an Majeed:

(The people whom Allawh directs towards Himself are) those who have 'Eeman and whose hearts find rest in the Dhikr of Allawh. Verily, in the Dhikr of Allawh do hearts find peace.

Soorawh Raw'd

Dhikr creates and strengthens a special bond between man and His Creator. Because of this divine bond, the heart becomes enwrapped in peace and tranquillity.

(The people who narrate the glory of Allawh in the Masajid) are such men who are not diverted by commerce and trade from the Dhikr of Allawh, from establishing regular Sawlah and from paying Zakaat. (They are such men) who fear a Day when the hearts and eyes (of men) will be upturned.

Soorawh Noor

Verily, the remembrance of Allawh is the greatest.
O people of 'Eeman! Remember Allawh in abundance.

Soorawh Ahzabb

O people of 'Eeman! Do not allow your wealth and your children to divert you from the remembrance of Allawh.

Soorawh Munafiqoon

And, remember the Name of your Rawbb and turn yourself in entirety towards Him.

Soorawh Muzzammil

Verily, he who has purified himself (from evil beliefs and practices) and remembers the Name of His Rawbb and performs Sawlah has achieved the goal (of success and salvation).

Soorawh A'la

AHADEETH

Hadhrawt Aboo Hurairah and Hadhrawt Aboo Saeed (R) narrate that Rawsoolullawh (S) said:

The angels surround those people who sit down to make the Dhikr of Allawh Ta'ala; the Rahmat of Allawh descends on them and peace descends on them.

Muslim

Hadhrawt Aboo Musa (R) narrates that Rawsoolullawh (S) said:

The comparison between a man who makes Dhikr of his Rawbb and one who does not make Dhikr is like the comparison between a living person and a dead person.

Bukhawri and Muslim

The one who engages in Dhikr has been compared to a living person because the existence of the Rooh is in fact the remembrance of Allawh. The one who refrains from Dhikr has been compared to a dead person.

Hadhrawt Aboo Hurairah (R) narrates that Rawsoolullawh (S) said:

Allawh Ta'ala says: 'I am with My servant when he remembers Me. When he remembers Me in his heart, I too remember him in Me. When he remembers me in a gathering, I remember (and mention) him in a superior gathering (i.e. the assembly of Malaa-ikah and Ambiya).

Bukhawri and Muslim

Hadhrawt Anas (R) narrates that Rawsoolullawh (S) said:

When you pass by the gardens of Jannat, eat of its fruits.

People asked:

What are the gardens of Jannat?

Rawsoolullawh (S) replied:

Gatherings of Dhikr.

Tirmeedhi

Hadhrawt Aboo Hurairah (R) narrates:

Allawh brings down loss on a man who sits in some place without engaging in Dhikr and on a man who lays in some place without engaging in Dhikr.

Aboo Dawood

The exhortation in this Hadeeth is to engage constantly in Dhikr, in all conditions and circumstances.

Hadhrawt 'Abbdullawh Bin Busr (R) narrates that a man said:

O Rawsoolullawh! The ordinances of Islam are numerous for me (the reference here is to nafl practices). Instruct me in something which I may easily adhere to.

Rawsoolullawh (S) said:

Maintain your tongue always fresh with the Dhikr of Allawh.

Tirmeedhi and Ibn Majah

The optional (Nafl) acts of thawaab in Islam are numerous. A very great variety of Nafl practices exists for procuring thawaab and the proximity of Allawh Ta'ala. The Sahaabi was referring to numerous practices that he found somewhat arduous. He therefore, wished for a simple practice that he could easily adhere to while at the same time not missing the great thawaab that is attendant to other acts of Nafl Ibaadat. Rawsoolullawh (S) informed him that constant Dhikr of Allawh was such an act.

Hadhrawt Aboo Saeed (R) narrates that Rawsoolullawh (S) was asked about the one who will be the noblest among people on the Day of Qiyamah and the closest to Allawh Ta'ala. Rawsoolullawh (S) said:

Those men and women who remember Allawh in abundance

Someone asked:

O Rawsoolullawh! What about the one who wages jihaad in the Path of Allawh?

Rawsoolullawh (S) replied:

The one who engages in (constant) Dhikr of Allawh is superior in rank to the one who wages jihaad, even if he fights so vehemently against the Kuffar and mushrikeen that his sword breaks and even if he is dyed red in blood.

Ahmad and Tirmeedhi

The reason for the superiority of the Thaakir (the one who makes Dhikr) over the Mujaahid (the one who wages Jihaad) is obvious. Jihaad is waged purely for the sake of Allawh Ta'ala – for the remembrance of Allawh Ta'ala, much as Wudhu is performed for the sake of Sawlah. In the Ayah:

(The Believers are) those whom, when We grant them power on earth, they establish Sawlah, pay the Zakaat, enjoin good and forbid evil. And to Allawh belongs the outcome of all affairs.

The basis of Jihaad is thus, Dhikrullah. This being the actual aim, its superiority should be apparent.

Hadhrawt 'Abbdullawh Ibn Umar (R) narrates that Rawsoolullawh (S) said,

Everything has a polish, and the polish of the heart is the Dhikr of Allawh.

Baihaqi

Hadhrawt Ibn Abbaas (R) narrates that Rawsoolullawh (S) said:

Shaitawn sits glued to the heart of man. When man makes the Dhikr of Allawh, shaitaan abdicates (moves off); when man is negligent of Allawh's Dhikr the shaitaan casts evil whisperings in man.

Bukhawri

Hadhrawt Ibn Umar (R) narrates that Rawsoolullawh (S) said:

Do not increase speech other than Dhikrullah because much speech besides Dhikrullah hardens the heart; the furthest from Allawh is one with a hard heart.

Tirmeedhi

The essence of the latter three Ahadeeth cited above, is that actual purity of heart is by means of righteous deeds and hardness of heart is the result of evil acts. The basis of both forms of deeds is the intention of the heart while the origin of iraadah (intention) is the mind. Reduction in Dhikr brings about the introduction of satanic thoughts in the mind. This in turn leads to evil intentions. Pious intentions are then effaced. Instead of practising righteous deeds, evil is committed. Abundance of Dhikrullah blocks the entry of evil thoughts. This in turn does not allow evil intentions to assert themselves. One then abstains from sin and engages in righteous deeds. Hardness of heart is thus eliminated and purity inculcated. This state of purity of the heart is not automatically acquired, but requires effort and striving. To be contented with only Dhikr without striving against the lowly desires is only self-deception.

Hadhrawt Aboo Saeed Khudri (R) narrates that Rawsoolullawh (S) said:

There are many people reclining on comfortable beds and making the Dhikr of Allawh Ta'ala on earth. Allawh Ta'ala will grant them elevated ranks (in the Akhirawh).

Ibn Hibban

It should not be imagined that material possessions of comfort, wealth and luxury are negatory of Dhikrullah. Such possessions too are favours of Allawh Ta'ala. Those indulging in luxury should not abstain from Dhikrullah. They too should be constantly engaged in the remembrance of Allawh Ta'ala whilst enjoying the comforts of the bounties that Allawh Ta'ala has bestowed on them.

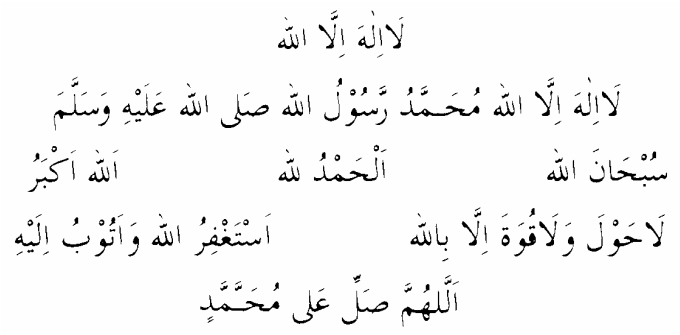
Hadhrawt Aboo Saeed Khudri (R) also narrates that Rawsoolullawh (S) said:

Engage in the Dhikr of Allawh in such abundance that people comment that you are insane.

Ahmad, Aboo Ya'laa, and 'Ibn Hibban

Hadhrawt Ibn Abbaas (R) narrates that Rawsoolullawh (S) said:

Engage in the Dhikr of Allawh in such abundance that the munafiqeen (hypocrites) comment: 'You are a pretender'. (i.e. they accuse you of engaging in Dhikr for creating the impression of piety).



Tibbrawni

Hadhrawt Muaaz Ibn Jabal (R) narrates that Rawsoolullawh (S) said:

The people of Jannat will not grieve over anything but the moments in which they did not engage in Dhikrullah (while they were on earth). They will regret for such (wasted) moments.

Tibraani and Baihaqi

This type of regret will not be similar to regrets of the world. It will not cause hardship or sorrow. An explanation of Dhikr in general has been given so far. In the Ahadeeth are mentioned many special forms of Dhikr as well. For such specific forms of Dhikr, great thawaab has been narrated. Some simple forms of special Dhikr are mentioned here.

SUMMARY

Never be negligent of Dhikrullah, be it a special form of Dhikr or any Dhikr in general. Dhikr can be made at any time or at a specific time fixed to suit one's convenience. Any number of ties Dhikr may be made. Dhikr may be made by using either the fingers (to count the number of times) or a tasbeeh. Dhikr may be also made at all times without the use of a tasbeeh. The main purpose is to be constantly engaged in the remembrance of Allawh Ta'ala. There are certain du'as which have to be recited on special occasions. Such duas should be learnt. May Allawh Ta'ala grant you taufeeq to practise accordingly.

ROOH XIV
PAYMENT OF ZAKAAT

The wealthy are obliged to pay Zakaat. This too, like Sawlah, is a fundamental of Islam. Numerous Qur'anic aayat command the payment of Zakaat and extol the virtues of Zakaat while warning of the dire punishment for refraining from paying Zakaat. Numerous such Ayat mention Zakah along with Sawlah. It is simple to locate these verses in the Qur'an Shareef. Here only Ahadeeth pertaining to Zakaat will be narrated.

1. Hadhrawt Aboo Dardaa (R) narrates that Rawsoolullawh (S) said:

Zakah is the Bridge of Islam…

Tibrawni and Ausat

Those who do not pay Zakaat are therefore comparable to those who are stranded, having no bridge to cross. The great rank and fundamental importance of Zakaat are apparent from this Hadeeth.

Hadhrawt Jabir (R) narrates that Rawsoolullawh (S) said:

The one who pays Zakaat on his wealth, has purified his wealth.

Tibrawni, Ausat, and Ibn Khuzaimah

Impurities that have accumulated in one's wealth are eliminated by Zakaat; hence, the wealth is purified. It should be clear that wealth, the Zakaat of which has not been paid, is shorn of barkat.

Hadhrawt Ibn Umar (R) narrates that Rawsoolullawh (S) said:

Whoever among you believe in Allawh and His Rawsool, must pay Zakaat on his wealth.

Tibraani and Kabeer

This illustrates that 'Eeman is weakened by not paying Zakaat.

Hadhrawt 'Abbdullawh Bin Mu'aawiyah (R) narrates that Rawsoolullawh (S) said,

There are three deeds; whoever practises them will taste the sweetness of 'Eeman. (These are) Render ibaadat unto only Allawh believing that none besides Allawh is worthy of ibaadat; pay Zakaat on wealth wholeheartedly…

In this Hadeeth, Zakaat is coupled along with Tauheed. This brings out the significance and elevated rank of the institution of Zakaat. The effect of paying Zakaat wholeheartedly as stated in the Hadeeth is increase in experiencing the pleasure or sweetness of 'Eeman.

Hadhrawt Aboo Hurairah (R) narrates that Rawsoolullawh (S) said:

Whoever owned gold and silver (i.e. wealth), but did nor pay Zakaat thereon, will be punished with his gold and silver on that Day, the duration of which will be fifty thousand years (the Day of Qiyamah). His gold and silver will be made into sheets and heated in Jahannum. His sides, forehead and back will then be branded with the heated sheets of gold and silver. When the sheets cool, they will again be heated and he will thus be punished continuously.

Bukhawri and Muslim

Hadhrawt 'Alee (R) narrates that Rawsoolullawh (S) said,

"In the wealth of rich Muslims the amount which is sufficient for the poor among the Muslims has been made obligatory. The hardships of the poor regarding food and garments are because of the deeds of the wealthy (i.e. their refusal to pay proper Zakaat). Beware! Allawh Ta'ala will demand a stern reckoning from them and mete out a painful punishment." (Tibraani, Ausat, Sagheer)

In another Hadeeth which further explains the above Hadeeth, it is said that the poor on the Day of Qiyamah will complain to Allawh Ta'ala that the wealthy did not discharge 'our' (the poor's) rights, which Allawh Ta'ala had ordained as obligatory. Allawh Ta'ala will then reply:

"I take oath by My Grandeur and Might that I will grant you proximity to Me and remove them (the wealthy) far from Me." (Tibraani, Sagheer, Ausat)

7. Hadhrawt 'Abbdullawh Ibn Mas'ood (R) narrates:

"We have been commanded to establish Sawlah and Zakaat. Whoever does not pay Zakaat, his Sawlah too is not accepted." (Tibraani, Isbahaani)
In another narration, Hadhrawt Ibn Mas'ood (R) said:
"He who establishes Sawlah (performs it regularly) but does not pay Zakaat, is not a true Muslim. His good deeds do not benefit him." (Isbahaani)
This should not be understood to mean that such people (those who fail in Zakaat) should not perform Sawlah. Neglect of Sawlah is a sin apart from failure to pay Zakaat. The Hadeeth merely means that one should not be neglectful in the discharge of such an important and fundamental ibaadat as Zakaat. Like being steadfast in Sawlah so too, should one be steadfast in Zakaat.
Hadhrawt Aboo Hurairah (R) narrates that Rawsoolullawh (S) said:

On the Day of Qiyamah, the wealth of one who did not pay Zakaat will be converted into a monstrous and deadly poisonous serpent which will be strung around the neck of this person. The serpent will bite at the jaws of this person and exclaim, 'I am your wealth; I am your treasure.'

Bukhawri and Nasa'i
In affirmation of this claim, Rawsoolullawh (S) recited the following Qur'anic Ayah:

وَلَايَحْسَبَنَّ الَّذِيْنَ يَبْخَلُوْنَ بِمَا اٰتَاهُمُ اللهُ مِنْ فَضْلِهِ هُوَ خَيْرًا لَّهُمْ بَلْ هُوَ شَرٌّلَّهُمْ ، سَيُطَوَّقُوْنَ مَابَخِلُوْا بِهٖ يَوْمَ الْقِيَامَةِ ، وَلِلّٰهِ مِيْرَاثُ السَّمَاوَاتِ وَالْاَرْضِ ، وَاللهُ بِمَا تَعْمَلُوْنَ خَبِيْرٌ ،

This Ayah refers to the wealth being made into a garland that will be hung around the neck of the one who did not pay Zakah.
Ammarah Bin Haram (R) narrates that Rawsoolullawh (S) said:

Besides La ila ha illallawh, Allawh Ta'ala has decreed another four things compulsory. If he fulfils three, it will not fully benefit him as long as he does not discharge all 4. These four are: Sawlah, Zakaat, Fasting in Ramadawn, and Hajj of Baitullah Shareef.

Ahmad
From this Hadeeth we learn that for salvation it is essential that all four compulsory acts be practised. If one performs Sawlah, fasts and performs Hajj, but does not pay Zakaat, it will not be sufficient for salvation (i.e. to be saved totally from the punishment of the Fire).
Hadhrawt Anas Bin Malik (R) narrates that Rawsoolullawh (S) said:

The one who fails to pay Zakaat will enter the Fire on the Day of Qiyamah.

Tibrawni and Sawgheer
Hadhrawt Ibn Umar (R) narrates that Rawsoolullawh (S) said:

Sawlah is a conspicuous act observable to all, hence it is rendered while Zakaat is inconspicuous (being hidden), hence it is devoured (i.e. withheld from the poor). Such people are hypocrites.

Bazzaaz
This Hadeeth means that some people perform Sawlah, not for the sake of Allawh Ta'ala, but because people will hold them in contempt. Such people do not pay Zakaat because they know that people are not aware of their failure to render this obligation. Such is the attitude of the Munafiqeen.
Hadhrawt Bareedah (R) narrates that Rawsoolullawh (S) said:

Allawh Ta'ala afflicts famine on a community which does not pay Zakah.

Tibraani, Haakim, and Baihaqi
In another similar narration, it is said that Allawh Ta'ala withholds rain from such people.
Hadhrawt Aishah (R) narrates that Rawsoolullawh (S) said:

Zakaat will destroy the wealth in which it is.

Bazzaaz and Baihaqi
The meaning of wealth in which there is Zakaat, is such wealth on which Zakaat is obligatory, but from which Zakaat has not been taken out. As a consequence of not paying Zakaat, one's wealth is steadily depleted by way of Allawh Ta'ala removing the barakaat from the wealth.
Hadhrawt Umar (R) narrates that Rawsoolullawh (S) said:
Wealth is generally lost on the land and the sea because Zakaat has not been paid on it.
Tibrawni and Ausat
This does not mean that wealth is lost or destroyed only because Zakaat has not been paid on it. If wealth is lost inspite of Zakaat having been paid, it should not be regarded as a loss since the reward for it will be obtained in the Akhirawh. Such loss is occasioned by the Wisdom of Allawh Ta'ala and is in the interests of its owner. But wealth lost because of not paying Zakaat is a punishment. There is no reward for sustaining such loss.
Hadhrawt Asmaa bint Yazeed (R) narrates that she and her aunt visited Rawsoolullawh (S). They were wearing some gold jewellery at the time. When Rawsoolullawh (S) enquired from them if they had paid Zakaat on the gold, they replied in the negative. Rawsoolullawh (S) said:

What! Have you no fear that Allawh Ta'ala will put on you jewels of fire? Pay its Zakaat.

Ahmad
The following facts are clear from the aforegoing narrations:
1. Zakaat is Fardh.
2. The significance of Zakaat is very great.
3. Failure to pay Zakaat results in calamity and misfortune settling over one. The calamity here on earth is depletion of wealth, elimination of barkat, famine, etc. The calamity in the Akhirawh for not paying Zakaat is the Fire of Jahannum.
4. One who does not pay Zakaat is comparable to a Munaafiq.
5. Zakaat has a resemblance to Huqooqul Ibaad (i.e. rights of people). Thus, it is an emphasised 'Ibadat.

WEALTH ON WHICH ZAKAAT IS PAYABLE

1. Gold and silver, be these in whatever form; in the form of cash, notes, jewellery, utensils (although it is haraam to use utensils of gold and silver), etc.
2. Stock-in-trade, i.e. goods purchased with the intention of reselling.
3. Livestock
4. Farm-produce on Ushri lands

Among the causes of the hardship of Muslims is also poverty. Zakaat is an adequate remedy for the alleviation of poverty. If Muslims abstain from extravagance and pay their Zakaat in full, there will not remain a single destitute person among the Muslims. The statements of Rawsoolullawh (S) are ample testimony for this claim. Like all acts of ibaadat, there are numerous masaa-il (rules) pertaining to Zakaat. The knowledge of such rules has to be acquired from the Ulama or from reliable books on the subject.

ROOH XV
CHARITY OTHER THAN ZAKAAT

Zakaat is a compulsory obligation. One should not feel released from all other acts of charity once Zakaat is paid. There are many avenues of charity in which it is essential to spend on various occasions. After having paid Zakaat, one should not become heartless and refrain from other acts of charity.

Hadhrawt Fatimah Bint Qais (R) narrates that Rawsoolullawh (S) said:

Undoubtedly, besides the obligation of Zakaat, there are other rights too in wealth.

In substantiation of this claim, Rawsoolullawh (S) recited the Ayah:

لَيْسَ الْبِرَّ اَنْ تُوَلُّوْا وُجُوْهَكُمْ قِبَلَ الْمَشْرِقِ وَالْمَغْرِبِ وَلٰكِنَّ الْبِرَّ مَنْ اٰمَنَ بِاللّٰهِ وَالْيَوْمِ الْاٰخِرِ وَالْمَلٰٓئِكَةِ وَالْكِتٰبِ وَالنَّبِيّٖنَ ، وَاٰتَى الْمَالَ عَلٰى حُبِّهٖ ذَوِى الْقُرْبٰى وَالْيَتٰمٰى وَالْمَسٰكِيْنَ وَابْنَ السَّبِيْلِ وَالسَّآئِلِيْنَ وَفِى الرِّقَابِ ، وَاَقَامَ الصَّلٰوةَ وَاٰتَى الزَّكٰوةَ ، وَالْمُوْفُوْنَ بِعَهْدِهِمْ اِذَا عٰهَدُوْا ، وَالصّٰبِرِيْنَ فِى الْبَاْسَآءِ وَالضَّرَّآءِ وَحِيْنَ الْبَاْسِ ، اُولٰٓئِكَ الَّذِيْنَ صَدَقُوْا وَ اُولٰٓئِكَ هُمُ الْمُتَّقُوْنَ

There is no virtue in turning your faces to the east or west, but (true) virtue is for one who brings ‘Eeman in Allawh, the Last Day, the Angels, the Book and the Prophets; and spends wealth, despite his love of it, on relatives, the orphans, the destitute, the wayfarers, the beggars and (in freeing) slaves; and establishes Sawlah and pays Zakaat; (and virtue is for) those who, when they make a promise, fulfil it and are patient in adversity and calamity, and in battle. Those are the ones who have spoken the truth, and those are the ones who are Muttaqoon (Allawh Fearing)

In this Ayah, Allawh Ta'ala mentions Zakaat as well as other forms of charity for special occasions.

Tirmeedhi, Ibn Majah, and Darawmi

Assisting those in debt, lending things to another and other forms of voluntary charitable acts come within the scope of the above Ayah and Hadeeth. Things of little value (i.e. in terms of material wealth) should be merely given without asking for their return.

Allawh Ta'ala says in the Qur’an Shareef:

Spend in the Path of Allawh.

Soorawh Baqawrawh

Who will give a beautiful loan to Allawh (i.e. with sincerity)…

You can never attain perfect piety until you spend from that (wealth) which you love. Whatever you spend, Allawh knows well.

That (Jannat) has been prepared for those who fear Allawh, such people who spend (in the Path of Allawh) in prosperity and in adversity.

Soorawh Al Imrawn

'Verily, Allawh Ta'ala has purchased the lives and the wealth of the Believers in return for Jannat.

And, whatever they spend, be it little or much (in the Path of Allawh) and whatever distance they travel (in the path of Allawh) are recorded for them so that Allawh grants them the best of rewards for their deeds.

Soorawh Taubah

Fulfil the rights of relatives, of the needy and the traveller.

Soorawh Banee Israw’eel

Whatever you spend (in the Path of Allawh), He will compensate

Soorawh Saba

They feed the orphans and the captives because of love for Allawh.

Soorawh Dahr

Besides there verses there are many other ayat that also speak about the virtue of spending in the Path of Allawh Ta'ala, other than by means of Zakah. Some Ahadeeth in this regard will now be cited.

Hadhrawt Aboo Hurairah (R) narrates that Rawsoolullawh (S) said:

Allawh Ta'ala says: 'O son of Adam! Spend (in good works), I too shall spend on you.’

Bukhawri and Muslim

Hadhrawt Jaabir (R) narrates that Rawsoolullawh (S) said:

Beware of the love of wealth. Such greed has destroyed people before you.

Muslim

Hadhrawt Aboo Saeed (R) narrates that Rawsoolullawh (S) said:

Spending one dirham in one's lifetime is superior to spending a hundred dirhams at the time of one's death.

Aboo Dawood

Hadhrawt Ali (R) narrates that Rawsoolullawh (S) said:

Hasten in charity, for charity prevents the affliction of calamities.

5. Hadhrawt Aboo Hurairah (R) narrates that Rawsoolullawh (S) said:

Whoever spends (in the Path of Allawh) one date from a halaal earning – and Allawh accepts only what is halaal – Allawh takes it up in His Right Hand. Allawh Ta'ala then increases it manifold until it becomes as huge as a mountain.

Bukhawri and Muslim

Hadhrawt Aboo Hurairah (R) narrates that Rawsoolullawh (S) said:

Charity does not decrease wealth.

Muslim

As a consequence of giving charity in the Path of Allawh, one's wealth will increase either by way of an increase in income or by barkat in one's wealth.

Hadhrawt Aboo Dharr (R) narrates that Rawsoolullawh (S) said:

Never hold any goodness in contempt even if it be to the extent of meeting a brother Muslim with a smile.

Muslim

Hadhrawt Aboo Moosa Ash'ari (R) narrates that Rawsoolullawh (S) said:

Sawdqawh in varying degrees is an obligation on every Muslim.

The people asked,

If someone has no wealth to give?

Rawsoolullawh (S) said:

Earn something (by one's labour); use what has been earned on yourself as well as in Sawdqawh.

The people asked,

If someone is unable to work?

Rawsoolullawh (S) said,

Let him help (by means of his labour) someone in need and difficulty.

The people said,

If he is unable to do even this?

Rawsoolullawh (S) said,

Let him show someone a good act.

The people said,

If he is unable to do even this?

Rawsoolullawh (S) said:

Let him not harm anyone. This too is Sadqah for him.

Bukhawri and Muslim

Rawsoolullawh (S) described these acts of virtue as Sadqah (charity) because of the benefit for others. Like Sadqah benefits others so too do the acts mentioned in this Hadeeth. These acts have been figuratively described as Sadqah. The actual meaning of Sadqah is to spend wealth in the Path of Allawh Ta'ala. Refraining from harming others has been described in the Hadeeth as an act of benefit to humankind. This description indicates the great importance of serving others and abstaining from doing anything detrimental and hurtful to people. This teaching is indeed a great Rahmat (blessing).

Hadhrawt Aboo Hurairah (R) narrates that Rawsoolullawh (S) said:

Every joint (in the human body) is liable for one act of charity daily. Justice meted out between two persons is also sadqah. Assisting someone to mount a vehicle or helping in loading his luggage are also acts of Sadqah. A good word (which benefits others) is also Sadqah. Removing a harmful object (e.g. thorn, peel, etc.) from the road is also Sawdqawh.

Bukhawri and Muslim

Explaining the above Hadeeth, another Hadeeth also in Muslim Shareef states that in the human body are 360 joints; whoever renders this number of good deeds daily, has saved himself from Jahannum.

Hadhrawt Aboo Hurairah (R) narrates that Rawsoolullawh (S) said:

A noble form of Sadqah is to lend a camel (or any other animal) to a person who wil obtain the benefit of its milk in the morning and the evening. (After having milked the animal in the morning and the evening, it is returned to its owner).

Bukhawri and Muslim

Hadhrawt Anas (R) narrates that Rawsoolullawh (S) said:

It is an act of Sadqah for a Muslim to plant at tree or sow the land from which people, birds and animals derive benefit.

Bukhawri and Muslim

Hadhrawt Jaabir (R) narrates that Rawsoolullawh (S) said:

Whatever is stolen from it (the farm) is also Sadqah for the owner (of the produce).

Muslim

Although the owner did not sow his lands for this purpose, nor does he regard theft of his goods as a benefit for him, nevertheless, it is recorded as Sawdqawh for him.

Hadhrawt Aboo Hurairah (R) narrates that Rawsoolullawh (S) said that:

A prostitute was forgiven because she took pity on a dog that was on the verge of death due to thirst. She removed her leather sock and with her scarf lowered in into a well. In this way, she obtained water that she gave to the dog to drink.

Some asked:

Do we obtain thawaab for service to animals as well?

Rawsoolullawh (S) replied:

There is thawaab in (rendering service to) every living creature.

Bukhawri and Muslim

This applies to animals that are not harmful. Elsewhere in the Ahadeeth permission has been granted to kill animals that are harmful.

Hadhrawt 'Abbdullawh Ibn Umar (R) narrates that Rawsoolullawh (S) said,

Render 'Ibadah to Rahman (Allawh, the Most Merciful); feed (the poor) and be in the habit of making salaam (whether the Muslim is known or unknown to you), you will then enter Jannat in safety.

Tirmeedhi and Ibn Majah

Hadhrawt Aboo Hurairah (R) narrates that Rawsoolullawh (S) said:

Smiling when meeting a Muslim is also an act of Sadqah. Commanding goodness and prohibiting evil are also acts of Sadqah. Directing a lost person on the right road is also Sadqah for you. Assisting the blind is also Sadqah for you. Removing a stone, thorn, etc., from the road is also Sadqah for you. Pouring water from your bucket into the bucket of a brother Muslim is also Sawdaqawh.

This Hadeeth in fact explains that every act or service rendered to the creation of Allawh Ta'ala, no matter how slight or insignificant that act may seem, is a deed acceptable by Allawh Ta'ala. All such acts of service are beneficial and one obtains thawaab therefore.

Hadhrawt Sa'd Bin Ubadah (R) narrates that when his mother died he enquired from Rawsoolullawh (S) in regard to Sadqah of much significance that he wished to render on behalf of his mother.

Rawsoolullawh (S) said,

Water

Thus Hadhrawt Sa'd Bin Ubaadah (R) arranged for a well to be dug for the use of people. The intention for digging the well was that Allawh Ta'ala bestows the Thawabb to his (Sa'd's) mother.

Aboo Dawood and Nasa'i

Hadhrawt Aboo Saeed (R) narrates that Rawsoolullawh (S) said:

Allawh Ta'ala will bestow the green (luxurious) garments of Jannat to the one who clothed a Muslim who had no clothes. Allawh Ta'ala will give of the fruits of Jannat to the one who fed a hungry Muslim. Allawh Ta'ala will award the finest and pure drink of Jannat to the one who gave a thirsty Muslim something to drink.

Aboo Dawood and Tirmeedhi

Hadhrawt Anas Ibn Malik (R) narrates that Rawsoolullawh (S) said:

There are seven things, the thawaab of which continuously accrues to a person even after death. Deeni knowledge which was taught to anyone; a canal dug (i.e. some form of irrigation), a well dug; a tree planted (from which people or animals derive benefit); a Masjid built; a copy of the Qur'an left (for someone to recite); and, children who will make dua for forgiveness of their deceased parents.

Targheeb, Bazzaaz, and Aboo Nu'aim

A narration in Ibn Majah mentions Sadqah, Musaafir Khaanah (a place where travellers stop over) instead of a well and a tree as is mentioned in the above Hadeeth.

Hadhrawt Sa'd (R) narrates that on one occasion when Rawsoolullawh (S) distributed some wealth among the people, he (Sa'd) requested Rawsoolullawh (S) to give also to a certain person. Rawsoolullawh (S) replied:

At times, I give to a man while another (to whom no gift is made) is more beloved to me. But I give the man (whom I do not love as much as the other) for fear of him not remaining firm on the Deen if not given. Allawh will therefore (i.e. if this person is not firm on the Deen), thrust him onto his face into Jahannum.

Muslim

This Hadeeth establishes the significance of assisting converts. Initially their 'Eeman is not grounded and they are unable to undergo much difficulty. The danger exists of them reneging from 'Eeman if they experience much difficulty after having embraced Islam. To aid them by means of wealth until their 'Eeman becomes strong, is meritorious.

Hadhrawt Aboo Hurairah (R) narrates that Rawsoolullawh (S) said:

I take oath by that Being Who sent me with the true Deen! Allawh will not punish on that Day of Qiyamah the one who had mercy on the orphan; who spoke tenderly with the orphan; who took pity on the orphan.

Targheebb and Tibrawni

This Hadeeth establishes the great significance of aiding orphanages. All narrations of Qur'an and Hadeeth enumerated in this section illustrate the tremendous importance and significance that the Deen places on service to creation. The narrations mention many individual acts of service that are beneficial to others as well as to those who render them. One more Ayah and one more Hadeeth that embrace all service to creation will be cited here.

Qur'anic Ayah:

Assist one another in (acts of) righteousness and piety.

Soorawh Ma'idah

Hadeeth:

The most beloved to Allawh among mankind is the one who is of the greatest benefit to mankind.

Targheebb and Isbahani

May Allawh Ta'ala grant all taufeeq.

ROOH XVI

FASTING

Fasting, like Sawlah and Zakaat, is fundamental institution of Islam. The Fardh Fasting is a practice of vital importance. Allawh Ta'ala states in the Qur'an Shareef:

O people of 'Eeman! Fasting has been decreed compulsory for you.

The importance of fasting is abundantly established by numerous narrations of the Qur'an and Hadeeth. It is clear from the narrations of the Qur'an and Hadeeth that for attaining salvation, Sawlah, Zakaat and Hajj are not sufficient. It is essential to fast the Fardh fasts of Ramadawn.

Fasting is distinguished from other acts of ibaadat by its inconspicuous nature. Whereas other acts of ibaadat, e.g. Sawlah, Zakaat, Hajj, are conspicuous in varying degrees. Fasting is much concealed. Only Allawh Ta'ala is aware if one is fasting or not. Only those who truly have the love or fear of Allawh Ta'ala in their hearts will fast. Experience proves that weakness in love and fear for Allawh could be remedied by engaging in such acts that produce muhabbat (love) and azmat (respect, honour and awe). Fasting is greatly efficacious in this regard. Thus weakness in one's 'Eeman and love for Allawh is strengthened by fasting. One in whose heart the love and fear of Allawh Ta'ala become embedded will be strong and steadfast on the Deen. The natural effect of fasting is to produce strength in one's Deen. This effect is referred to in the following 2 Ahadeeth:

Hadhrawt Aboo Hurairah (R) narrates that Rawsoolullawh (S) said that Allawh Ta'ala said:

All good deeds are for the one who renders them, but fasting. Fasting is exclusively for Me (Allawh).

Bukhawri

Rawsoolullawh (S) said that Allawh Ta'ala said:

The one who fasts, abstains from eating, drinking and sexual relations for My Sake.

Another narration states that Allawh Ta'ala said that:

The fasting person leaves off his desires and pleasures for His Sake.

Ibn Khuzaimah

Fasting being exclusively for the sake of Allawh Ta'ala reflects the high degree of sincerity underlying the act of ibaadat. The high degree of sincerity coupled with abstention from evil and futility produce glitter and strength in the 'Eeman of the fasting person. Great emphasis is therefore laid on fasting. This is very clear from the fact that Allawh Ta'ala described the act of man's fasting as being only for Him (Allawh Ta'ala).

Hadhrawt Aboo Umaamah (R) narrates that he asked Rawsoolullawh (S) to impose on him some deed of great significance. Rawsoolullawh (S) said:

Adopt fasting, for there is no act greater than it

Hadhrawt Aboo Umaamah repeated his request a second time. Rawsoolullawh (S) again advised him to adopt fasting. Hadhrawt Aboo Umaamah put forward his request again, a third time, and Rawsoolullawh (S) said:

Adopt fasting, for there is no deed equal to it.

Nasa'i and Ibn Khuzaimah

The superiority of fasting is in relation to certain special characteristics of fasting such as degree of sincerity, efficacy in strengthening weak 'Eeman, inculcating love and fear of Allawh and its acting as a barrier against sin. These special benefits of fasting are attainable only if one fasts consciously and observes the respects and rights of fasting.

Rawsoolullawh (S) said:

Fasting is a shield and a powerful fortress.

Ahmad and Baihaqi

Like fasting is a shield of protection against internal (spiritual) diseases, viz. sins, so too is it a protection against external sicknesses, i.e. physical illness. In the majority of cases, physical sickness is the result of excessive eating. This cause is arrested in fasting.

Hadhrawt Aboo Hurairah (R) narrates that Rawsoolullawh (S) said:

Every person has a Zakah (to pay) and the Zakah of the body is fasting.

Ibn Majah

As wealth is purified by means of paying Zakaat, the body is purified by means of fasting. Zakaat is the elimination of impurities from wealth while Fasting is the elimination of impurities from the body. The role of fasting, as already indicated, operates in both the physical and spiritual spheres of man's life.

Hadhrawt Aboo Hurairah (R) narrates that Rawsoolullawh (S) said:

Keep fasting; you will remain healthy.

Tibbrawni

Fasting produces both physical and spiritual health. Fasting produces spiritual peace and exhilaration.

Hadhrawt Aboo Hurairah (R) in a lengthy Hadeeth, narrates that Rawsoolullawh (S) said:

The fasting person experiences two (occasions of) delights: At the time of iftaar and at the time when he will meet his Rawbb.

Bukhawri

During the month of Ramadhaan an additional ibaadat, viz., Taraaweeh Sawlah has also been decreed. The performance of Taraaweeh is Sunnatul Muakkadah that is an act, the performance of which is obligatory although it may be omitted for a valid Shar'i reason. One who is neglectful of Sunnatul Muakkadah is guilty of sin and is termed in the Shariah a 'faasiq'. Taraaweeh reduces sleep to some extent. Sleep is an act highly pleasing and loved by the nafs. Hence, by means of Taraaweeh Sawlah one strives against the nafs and in so doing the nafs is disciplined. This ibaadat of Taraaweeh is an act that is greatly efficient in the spiritual training of the nafs. During the month of Ramadhaan, Allawh Ta'ala has united two great and highly efficacious spiritual exercises in the form of fasting and Taraaweeh Sawlah.

Rawsoolullawh (S) said:

Allawh Ta'ala has ordained fasting in Ramadhaan compulsory, and I have decreed (by the command of Allawh) wakefulness at night (i.e. Taraaweeh, etc.) Sunnah. Whoever in the state of 'Eeman and the belief of thawaab fasts in Ramadhaan and stays awake at night (i.e. for Taraaweeh), emerges from sin, purified as the day when his mother gave birth to him.

Nasa'i

Hadhrawt 'Abbdullawh Bin Umar (R) narrates that Rawsoolullawh (S) said,

Fasting and the Qur'an will intercede on behalf of one on the Day of Qiyamah. The Fast will proclaim: 'O Allawh! I prevented him from eating and carnal desire. Therefore, for my sake accept my intercession on his behalf.' The Qur'an will proclaim: 'I prevented him from sleep. Therefore, accept my intercession on his behalf.' The intercession of both will be accepted.

Ahmad, Tibbrawni, and Hakim

In a lengthy, Ayah Allawh Ta'ala says:

For the fasting man and for the fasting woman ... Allawh has prepared a great reward and forgiveness.

Soorawh Ahzabb

Hadhrawt Aboo Hurairah (R), in a lengthy Hadeeth, narrates that Rawsoolullawh (S) said:

I swear by That Being in Whose possession is the life of Muhammad! The odour of the mouth of a fasting person is sweeter to Allawh Ta'ala than the fragrance of musk.

Bukhawri

Hadhrawt Ibn Umar (R) narrates, in a lengthy Hadeeth, that Rawsoolullawh (S) said:

Fasting is exclusively for Allawh Ta'ala. The thawaab of it (being limitless) no one knows besides Allawh Ta'ala.

Tibbrawni and Baihaqi

Hadhrawt Aboo Saeed Khudri (R) narrates that Rawsoolullawh (S) said:

The Doors of the Heavens are opened up on the first night of Ramadhaan. Not a single Door (among the Doors of Heaven) is then closed until the last night of Ramadhaan. For every Sawlah performed (this refers to Taraaweeh Sawlah) during the nights of Ramadhaan, Allawh Ta'ala records one and a half thousand good deeds for every Sajdah (of that Sawlah). And, for the fasting person, Allawh Ta'ala creates in Jannat a mansion of red Ya'qoot (a precious stone in Jannat). This mansion will have seven thousand entrances. (So huge will be these entrances that) In each entrance will be located a palace of gold adorned with red Ya'qoot. When the Muslim fasts the first day of Ramadhaan, Allawh Ta'ala forgives all his sins committed from the first of the previous Ramadhaan. Daily (i.e. during Ramadhaan) from the time of Fajr Sawlah until sunset, seventy thousands Malaa-ikah supplicate for his forgiveness. In return for every Sajdah which he (the fasting person) makes of any Sawlah, whether during the day or night, he will obtain (such a wonderful) tree (so huge) that an equestrian will take 500 years to pass under its shade.

Baihaqi

Hadhrawt Salmaan (R) narrates that during the last Jum'ah of the month of Sha'baan Rawsoolullawh (S) recited a Khutbah in which he said:

O People! An auspicious month has dawned over you. In that month is a night that is superior to a thousand months (i.e. ibaadat in this night is superior to the ibaadat rendered in a thousand months. Allawh Ta'ala has made compulsory fasting in this month and has decreed wakefulness at night (i.e. Taraaweeh Sawlah) Sunnah. A Nafl (non-obligatory or optional) act rendered in this month for attaining proximity to Allawh is equal to a Fardh act rendered in other months. A Fardh act rendered in this month is equal to seventy Fardh acts of other months ...Whoever gives to a fasting person something for iftaar, his sins will be forgiven and he will be saved from Jahannum; he obtains as much thawaab as the fasting person (to whom he had given something for iftaar) while the thawaab of the person is not reduced in any way.

The people asked:

O Rawsoolullawh! All of us are not by the means to give something for the iftaar of another.
They were at the time under the impression that Rawsoolullawh (S) referred to a full meal).

Rawsoolullawh (S) said:

This thawaab is even for the man who gives another a date, a drink of water or milk (for iftaar)...

Ibn Khuzaimah

Another special ibaadat during the month of Ramadhaan is I'tikaaf during the last ten days. I'tikaaf during Ramadhaan is an 'Ibadat that belongs to the class of Sunnah known as Sunnatul Kifaayah. This ibaadat is a collective Sunnah upon all. However, if a few, even one person, renders the I'tikaaf, the Sunnah obligation will be discharged on behalf of the whole community. The Ibaadat of I'tikaaf consists of secluding oneself inside the Masjid for the last ten days of Ramadhaan. The time has to be passed in ibaadat. Some Ahadeeth regarding the significance of I'tikaaf are enumerated hereunder.

Hadhrawt Ali Ibn Husain narrates from his father that Rawsoolullawh (S) said:

He who observes the ten days i'tikaaf during Ramadhaan will obtain the thawaab of 2 Hajj and 2 Umrah.

Hadhrawt 'Ibn Abbas (R) narrates that Rawsoolullawh (S) said about those who observe I'tikaaf

They are prevented from all sins and they obtain thawaab as if they are rendering all good deeds.

Mishkaat

By the practice of I'tikaaf, one gains the opportunity of continuous residence in the Masjid. The significance of remaining in the Masjid for Ibaadat has already been explained in Rooh number 12. Women who intend to observe I'tikaaf should do so at home. They should seclude themselves in a particular place at home. The special acts of Ibaadat of the month of Ramadhaan terminate with the coming of Eid. The Hadeeth explains great significance of the Day of Eid as well. In a lengthy Hadeeth, Hadhrawt Anas (R) narrates that Rawsoolullawh (S) said:

When Eid arrives, Allawh Ta'ala addresses the Mala'ikah: 'They (Muslims) have fulfilled My Fardh. They have emerged to make dua. I take oath by My Splendour, by My Grandeur, by My Grace and by My Loftiness that I will most certainly accept their petition.' Allawh Ta'ala then proclaims to the Believers: 'Return! I have forgiven you and I have exchanged your evil deeds with virtues.' They thus return from the Musalla (where the Eid Sawlah was performed) forgiven.

ROOH XVII

HAJJ

Hajj is Fardh when the conditions thereof are found. In the absence of the necessary conditions, Hajj is Nafl. Like Sawlah, Saum (Fasting), and Zakaat, Hajj too is of fundamental importance. It is one of the Pillars of Islam.

Allawh Ta'ala says:

It is obligatory upon people to make Hajj of this House (Ka'bah) for the sake of Allawh. It is obligatory on the person who has the means of reaching there.

Ayah 97, Soorawh Al Imrawn

If Hajj has become Fardh on a person, observance of Sawlah, Saum (Fasting), and Zakaat will not suffice for salvation (Najaat). Hajj is a demonstration of love for Allawh. The flavour of love that permeates the acts of Hajj distinguishes it from other Ibaadat. Thus, those who possess love for Allawh Ta'ala will perform Hajj. Even if their love is deficient, it will be strengthened by their engagement in the acts of love that belong to the Ibaadat of Hajj. Love for Allawh established in the heart will solidify one's Deen. The presence of love for Allawh in the heart establishes one's Deen on a firm basis. Hajj is especially efficacious for strengthening one's Deen.

Hadhrawt Aishah (R) narrates that Rawsoolullawh (S) said:

Making Tawaaf of Baitullah, to walk between Safaa and Marwah and to pelt stones (at the Jimaar) have been ordained for establishing the remembrance of Allawh Ta'ala.

Aboo Dawood

An observer might wonder at the wisdom underlying the circumambulation, the running and the pelting, but the Muslim should not be concerned about the wisdoms beneath these acts. Render these acts believing them to be the commands of Allawh Ta'ala and that His Remembrance will be grounded in the heart by observing these acts. The relationship of the Believer with Allawh Ta'ala is strengthened and his love is tested. Without understanding the wisdom of these acts, the Muslim in love with Allawh, executes them because of the Command of Allawh Ta'ala. All Commands of Allawh Ta'ala are carried out because of His love. The acts of Hajj are permeated with love. Love overwhelms intelligence regarding the acts of Hajj. Idhtiba (baring the shoulder) and Raml (walking with shoulders swaying in soldier-like fashion) – acts done in Hajj – were initiated in the beginning as a display of physical strength when there was yet Kuffar domination over Makkah. However, these practices were retained even after Allawh Ta'ala destroyed the power of the Kuffar and established Islam over Makkah. Hadhrawt Umar (R) states in this regard:

Inspite of the cause of these acts no longer existing, we shall not give them up, for we rendered these acts since the time of Rawsoolullawh (S) and Rawsoolullawh (S) himself rendered these acts in Hajjatul Wida when there was not a single kaafir in Makkah.

Aboo Dawood

If Hajj was not dominated by the attitude of love, these acts (Idhtiba, Raml and running) would have been terminated because of already having served their purpose. Hadhrawt Aabis Bin Rabeeah (R) narrates that once Hadhrawt Umar (R) after kissing Hajr-e-Aswad (The Black Stone) said:

I know that you are a stone. You can neither benefit nor harm anyone. If I did not see Rawsoolullawh (S) kissing you, I would not have kissed you.

Aboo Dawood

Hadhrawt Umar (R) kissed the stone merely because he saw Rawsoolullawh (S) doing so. It was the relationship of love with Rawsoolullawh (S) which motivated Hadhrawt Umar (R) to kiss Hajr-e-Aswad, and by his statement, Hadhrawt Umar (R) clarified the Muslims do not regard Hajr-e-Aswad as an object of worship. Hadhrawt Ibn Umar (R) narrates that Rawsoolullawh (S) placed his lips on Hajr-e-Aswad and for a long while remained in this state crying. When Rawsoolullawh (S) turned around, he saw Hadhrawt Umar (R) also crying. Rawsoolullawh (S) said:

O Umar! This is indeed an occasion of shedding tears.

Ibn Majah, Ibn Khuzaimah, Hakim, and Baihaqi

This too is a demonstration of love.

Hadhrawt Jaabir (R) narrates that Rawsoolullawh (S) said:

When it is the Day of Arafah (when all the Hujjaaj gather), Allawh Ta'ala says to the Mala'ikah: 'Look at My servants. They have come to Me from far off, crying to Me in their state of forlornness and worry while they are wandering around in the heat. I make you witness that I have forgiven them.'

Baihaqi, and 'Ibn Khuzaimah

A few narrations that indicate the nature of love of the acts of Hajj have been mentioned. All acts of Hajj, it will be found, are permeated with the flavour of love. A cursory glance at the various rites of Hajj will make this abundantly clear. Wandering in the hills of Muzdalifah and Arafaat; shouting and proclaiming 'Labbaik'; wandering about bareheaded; donning two unsewn garments; wearing garments like the dead; refraining from cutting or trimming the hair and nails; not even being allowed to kill lice; running to and fro between Safaa and Marwah; circumambulating the Ka'bah; kissing the Black Stone; glancing with elancholy at the Ka'bah; pelting the Pillars; sacrificing animals; together with the many prohibitions and restrictions are all acts which are strongly influenced by Love for Allawh Ta'ala. In this Ibaadat of Hajj, love overwhelms intelligence. The Ibaadat of Hajj is for those in love – in love with their Creator. Certain things in these acts are waived for women because of the Shariah's consideration of Purdah. Like the acts of Hajj are permeated with love, so too are the places, viz., Makkah Mukarramah and surroundings where these rites of love are offered. The holy places too play their part in strengthening the love of Allawh in the hearts of the Mu'mineen who have come to offer their love to their Creator. It is mentioned in the Qur'an Shareef in Soorawh Ibraheem, that Nabi Ibraheem (A) while making dua requested Allawh Ta'ala to incline the hearts of people to his progeny who will settle around the Holy Ka'bah. Allawh Ta'ala accepted this dua and its effect is plainly visible to all Muslims. There is not a single Mu'min whose heart is not attached to the Ka'bah. Hadhrawt Ibn Abbaas (R) says that if Hadhrawt Ibraheem (A) had not specified 'the hearts of some people' in his dua, then even multitudes of Jews and Christians would have gathered at the Ka'bah. But, because Nabi Ibraheem (A) asked for only the hearts of Believers to be inclined to his progeny who settled near the Ka'bah, it (Ka'bah) has become a place of love and veneration for only Believers. Hadhrawt Ibn Abbaas (R) narrates that on the occasion when Rawsoolullawh (S) migrated from Makkah, he turned towards the city as he was departing and said in grief and sorrow:

How pure and beloved a city you are to me. If my people had not expelled me, I would never have left you to live elsewhere.

Mishkaat

Since every Mu'min has a bond of love with Rawsoolullawh (S), it is only necessary that this love will extend to the city that Rawsoolullawh (S) loved so dearly. Thus, love for Makkah Muazzamah is the result of the dua of two Nabis, viz. Nabi Ibbrawheem (A) and Rawsoolullawh (S).

What have been so far explained is the true, actual and Deeni significance of Hajj and the places of Hajj. Besides these Deeni significances there are also some worldly benefits in Hajj although one's intention and gaze must not be on the worldly advantages. Without even being concerned of the worldly benefits, they are acquired automatically. Another Ibaadat similar to Hajj is Umrah that is a Sunnatul Muakkadah obligation. Umrah too is an Ibaadat of love and consists of certain acts which are rendered in Hajj. For this reason, Umrah has been described as Hajj As-ghawr or Lesser Hajj. Umrah is rendered during the period of Hajj as well. Thus two Ibaadaat of the greatest significance are united on one occasion. Besides the period of Hajj, the Ibaadat of Umrah may be discharged at any other time also. Allawh Ta'ala says in the Qur'an:

Fulfil Hajj and Umrah in full measure for the sake of Allawh.

It is necessary to observe all conditions, acts and etiquettes of these acts of Ibaadat. In addition, of the greatest importance is sincerity of intention. Rawsoolullawh (S) said that whoever fails to perform Hajj inspite of having the means and inspite of their being nothing to prevent him, may die as a Jew or Christian. This stern warning applies to those who forgo the Fardh Hajj for no valid Shar'i reason. The harshness of this warning indicates the absolute importance of Hajj. Hadhrawt Ibn Abbaas (R) narrates that Rawsoolullawh (S) said:

Whoever intends to go on Hajj should make haste.

Mishkaat

Hadhrawt Ibn Mas'ood (R) narrates that Rawsoolullawh (S) said:

Unite Hajj and Umrah (during the Hajj period). Both (acts of Ibaadat) eliminate poverty and sins in a similar way in which the impurities of gold, silver and iron are eliminated. The reward of a Hajj that was performed correctly is nothing other than Jannat.

Mishkaat

The above Hadeeth mentions a worldly benefit and a Deeni benefit, viz., elimination of poverty and elimination of sins. Sins here refer to Huqooqullah (sins committed against Allawh Ta'ala and in which the rights of others were not involved). Regarding Huqooqul Ibaad (the rights of others), sins committed in this relation are not forgiven even by martyrdom. For the forgiveness of sins involving the rights of others, it is essential to obtain first the pardon of those whose rights were usurped or destroyed.

Hadhrawt Aboo Hurairah (R) narrates that Rawsoolullawh (S) said:

Allawh Ta'ala accepts the dua of the one who performs Hajj and Umrah and if he seeks forgiveness, Allawh Ta'ala forgives him.

Mishkaat

Hadhrawt Aboo Hurairah (R) narrates that Rawsoolullawh (S) said:

Whoever sets out for Hajj, Umrah or Jihad but dies on the journey (before being able to render these obligations), Allawh Ta'ala records for him the thawaab of the ghaazi (one who returns victorious from the Jihaad field) and the thawaab of one who has performed the Hajj and Umrah.

Mishkaat

In relation to Hajj, there is another act of Ibaadat as well. This is the Ziyaarah (Visiting) of the auspicious Raudhah (Grave) of Rawsoolullawh (S). The majority of Ulama say that the visit to the gracious Raudhah of Nabi-e-Kareem (sallAllawhu alayhis wasallam) is Mustahab. This act too is permeated with love. While Hajj is love for Allawh Ta'ala, Ziyaarah of the Holy Raudhah is love for Rawsoolullawh (S). Hajj produces progress in the love of Allawh Ta'ala and Ziyarawh of the Holy Raudhah produces progress in the love for Rawsoolullawh (S).

Hadhrawt Ibn Umar (R) narrates that Rawsoolullawh (S) said:

The one who after having made Hajj visits me after my death (i.e. visits the Holy Raudah) is like one who has visited me while I was alive.

Mishkaat

Rawsoolullawh (S) has equated visiting his Grave to visiting him when he was alive. The tremendous significance of Ziyaarah of the Raudha-e-Mubaarak should thus be manifest. The benefit to be gained is indeed great. The effect of Ziyaarah is the inculcation of love in the heart for Rawsoolullawh (S) similar to the effect of love was which generated in the hearts of Believers when they visited Rawsoolullawh (S) during his lifetime. Increase in love for Rawsoolullawh (S) by Ziyaarah of the Holy Grave is readily felt in the hearts of the true Believers. This is a true and common experience for all those who make the Ziyaarah to the auspicious Grave of Rawsoolullawh (S). Madeenah Munawwarah too, is a place of holiness and love like Makkah Muazzamah.

Hadhrawt Aboo Hurairah narrates in a lengthy Hadeeth that Rawsoolullawh (S) made dua to Allawh Ta'ala and said:

O Allawh! He (i.e. Nabi Ibraheem – alayhis salaam) made dua to You for Makkah. I make dua to You for Madeenah…)

Mishkaat

Hadhrawt Aishah (R) narrates that Rawsoolullawh (S) said:

O Allawh! Make Madeenah beloved to us just as we love Makkah …and even more beloved than Makkah…

Mishkaat

Hadhrawt Anas (R) narrates that when Rawsoolullawh (S) returned from a journey, he would spur on his camel as soon as he saw the houses of Madeenah. This, Rawsoolullawh (S) would do to reach Madeenah quickly. This action indicates the profound love which Nabi-e-Kareem (saws) had for Madeenah Munawwarah.

Hadhrawt Yahya Ibn Saeed (R) narrates that Rawsoolullawh (S) said:

On the surface of the earth there is no place which I love more for my grave to be located than Madeenah.

Mishkaat

Rawsoolullawh (S) repeated this statement thrice. The aforegoing narrations will suffice to indicate the profound love that engulfs the acts of Hajj, Umrah, Ziyaarah and the Holy Places. The love of all these is indeed embedded in the hearts of the Believers. There is no need to provide proof for this. Believers who are by the means should, therefore, not neglect these noble, important and great acts of Ibaadat. These acts are indeed a great treasure.

ROOH IIXX

QURBAANI – SACRIFICE

Qurbaani or sacrificing animals on Eidul Adh-haa is obligatory on those on whom Sadqah Fitr is compulsory. Qurbaani is an Ibaadat of such tremendous significance that even if it is not obligatory, one should endeavour to render it. There is great thawaab in even making Qurbaani on behalf of one's naa-baaligh (under age) children. Qurbaani made on behalf of the dead is also very beneficial in that the thawaab reaches the dead. Some Qur'anic aayat and Ahadeeth will now be narrated about this important sacrifice. Allawh Ta'ala says in the Qur'an Shareef:

Sacrificing (animals) has been ordained on every Ummah so that the Name of Allawh is mentioned on these particular animals which Allawh has bestowed on them…

Soorawh An'am

We have made the sacrifice of camels and cows among the salient features of (the Deen) of Allawh. There is benefit in it for you.

Ayah 36 Soorawh Hajj

According to the Qur'an Shareef, there are both worldly as well as Deeni (spiritual) benefits in the Ibaadat of Qurbaani. Allawh Ta'ala has declared the sacrificing of animals as a salient feature of Islam. In addition to thawaab in the Hereafter, we derive the benefit of consuming their flesh and making use of their skins. The Qurbaani is an 'Ibadah that has been instituted solely for our benefit. Hence, the Qur'an Shareef says:

Neither the flesh (of the sacrificed animals) nor their blood reach Allawh. But, it is your taqwa (piety and sincerity of heart) which reaches Him. Convey glad tidings to the sincere ones.

Ayah 37 Soorawh Hajj

Although sheep and goats are also animals for sacrifice, the Qur'an specifically states that the sacrifice of camels and oxen is a salient feature of the Deen. Sacrificing camels and oxen will therefore be of greater merit. The meaning of sincerity in Qurbaani is to make the sacrifice purely for the sake of Allawh Ta'ala and to obtain thawaab. The intention must not be to eat meat. Although it is only natural that the flesh of the sacrificed animals will be eaten, the intention for making the Qurbaani should never be this. If the intention is consumption of meat, the Qurbaani will not be valid.

Allawh Ta'ala commands Rawsoolullawh (S):

Perform Sawlah for your Rawbb and sacrifice (animals).

Soorawh Kauthar

The command of Sawlah and Qurbaani are given to Rawsoolullawh (S) in the above-mentioned Ayah. Qurbaani being coupled with Sawlah and commanded directly to Rawsoolullawh (S) as an obligatory duty for him to discharge, point to the emphasis which Allawh Ta'ala lays on this Ibaadat.

Hadhrawt Aishah (R) narrates that Rawsoolullawh (S) said:

During the days of Qurbaani, there is no deed of man more loved by Allawh Ta'ala than sacrificing of animals. On the Day of Qiyamah, the sacrificed animal will arise with its horns, hair and hoofs. The sacrificed animal is accepted by Allawh Ta'ala before the blood reaches the ground. Therefore, render the Qurbaani wholeheartedly and happily.

'Ibn Majah, Tirmeedhi, and Hakim

This Hadeeth in fact states the following:

1. The greatest act of Ibaadat during the Days of Sacrifice is to make Qurbaani of animals.
2. The full reward of the sacrifice will be obtained in the Akhirawh. Thawaab will be obtained for every hair on its body and for every drop of blood in its body.

3. The act of Qurbaani is so dear to Allawh Ta'ala that it is accepted immediately the act is rendered, even before the first drop of blood reaches the earth.
4. Muslims should offer the sacrifice with love and with the true spirit of sacrifice. They should not bicker unnecessarily about the price being asked and about the money being spent in obtaining an animal for sacrifice. Qurbani is a great sacrifice and should not be despoiled by displaying a poor and miserly attitude.
Hadhrawt Zaid bin Arqam (R) narrates that the Sahabah enquired from Rawsoolullawh (S) about the Qurbaani practice. Rawsoolullawh (S) said:

It is the way of your father, Ibbrawheem (A).

The Sahabah asked,

What will we acquire by it?

Rawsoolullawh (S) replied,

A good deed (is recorded for you) in return for every hair (on its body).

The Sahabah asked,

O Rawsoolullawh! If there is wool on the body?

Rawsoolullawh (S) said:

A good deed in return for every strand (of wool on its body).

Hakim

Hadhrawt Ali (R) narrates that Rawsoolullawh (S) said to Fatimah (R):

O Fatimah! Get up and be present at your Qurbaani (when it is about to be slaughtered). All your sins are forgiven as the first drop of its blood reaches the earth. Remember that on the Day of Qurbaani its flesh and blood will be brought and after increasing it by seventy times, it will be placed in your Scale of good deeds.

Hadhrawt Aboo Saeed (R) asked:

O Rawsoolullawh! Is this reward exclusive for the Family of Muhammad – truly, they deserve such great thawaab – or is this thawaab for all Muslims as well?

Rawsoolullawh (S) said:

For the Family of Muhammad (saws) as well as for all Muslims in general.

Isbahaani

Hadhrawt Husain Ibn Ali (R) narrates that Rawsoolullawh (S) said:

The Qurbaani rendered wholeheartedly, happily and with sincerity of intention will on the Day of Qiyamah be a shield against Jahannum for the sacrificer.

Tibbrawni

Hadhrawt Aboo Hurairah (R) narrates that Rawsoolullawh (S) said:

He who is by the means but does not render the Qurbaani, should not come to our place of Eid Sawlah.

Targheebb

One may realise the great displeasure that Rawsoolullawh (S) voiced against those who neglect this great act of Ibaadat. This grave warning mentioned in this Hadeeth applies only to those who fail in offering the sacrifice despite them having the means of sacrificing. Hadhrawt Ali (R) sacrificed two sheep. When asked about this sacrifice, he said that Rawsoolullawh (S) commanded him to render these sacrifices. One sheep was for himself and the other was sacrificed on behalf of Rawsoolullawh (S). Rawsoolullawh (S) has tremendous rights (huqooq) over the Ummah. It is not possible for us to fulfil adequately those rights. A Qurbaani offered every year by a Mu'min on behalf of Rawsoolullawh (S) is in fact nothing great and no sacrifice. We should not allow this wonderful opportunity to slip by without having taken advantage of this great act of Ibaadat by means of which colossal thawaab is obtained so very easily. Those who are by the means should not be miserly and neglectful. Hadhrawt Aboo Talhah (R) narrates that Rawsoolullawh (S) sacrificed one sheep for himself and one sheep on behalf of his Ummah. In this regard, Rawsoolullawh (S) said:

This Qurbaani is for the one in my Ummah who believes in me and who acknowledges me.

Musali, Kabeeri, and Ausat

This sacrifice on behalf of the Ummah demonstrates the love which Nabi-e-Kareem (saws) had for his Ummah. Rawsoolullawh (S) remembered us in his act of sacrifice. It is indeed regretful that members of the Ummah, inspite of having the means, will forget to offer Qurbaani on behalf of Rawsoolullawh (S). The meaning of Rawsoolullawh (S) having made a Qurbaani on behalf of the Ummah is that he included the Ummah in the thawaab of the sacrifice. It does not mean that one sheep can be sacrificed in the names of more than one person. A sheep and a goat can be sacrificed only for one person while a cow and camel can be sacrificed for seven persons. Hadhrawt Aboo Hurairah (R) narrates that Rawsoolullawh (S) said:

Fatten your animals (of sacrifice i.e. feed them well), for they will be your mounts on the Siraat (the Bridge over Jahannum).

Kanzul Ummaal

This Hadeeth has 2 interpretations.
1. The animals will become the mounts on which people will safely cross over Siraat. If a number of animals were sacrificed by a single person, he will receive in return a wonderful and strong animal of the greatest swiftness. The mounts may also be changed at various stages in the journey across the Swirawt.
2. The second interpretation is that by virtue of the barkat and thawaab of having made Qurbaani, one's crossing over the Siraat will be swift and in great comfort.
In Kanzul Ummal, a Hadeeth states that the best Qurbaani is that of an animal which is strong and healthy – physically it should be free of all deficiencies.

ROOH XIX
INCOME AND EXPENDITURE

Ways and means of income, earning one's livelihood and spending such income should conform to the Shariah. Hadhrawt Ibn Mas'ood (R) narrates that Rawsoolullawh (S) said:

On the Day of Qiyamah, no one will be able to move (on Hisaab – Reckoning) until a reckoning of five things has not been taken…

Tirmeedhi

Among the 5 things mentioned in the above Hadeeth, 2 questions pertain to income and expenditure. One will be asked: 'How did you earn your living and how did you spend your income?'
Earnings and expenses are also matters controlled and regulated by the Deen. In this sphere too, there should be no contraventions of the Shariah. Income must not be derived by unlawful means, e.g. riba, dealing in unlawful items, usurping the rights of others, cheating, defrauding, withholding the inheritance of anyone, etc. Many people violate the Shar'i laws of inheritance and deprive the rightful heirs of their Islamic share of the inheritance. In this way, the usurpers add to their income what is haraam and what does not belong to them. Among the ways of earning which conflict with the Deen, is to become involved so intensively in trade and commerce that even Sawlah is neglected, Akhirawh is forgotten, Zakah and Hajj are not discharged and no time remains for one to acquire the essential teachings of the Deen. One should not become so much involved that there remains no time to sit in the company of some saintly person, to learn from him the essentials of the Deen. Association with the pious – with the Auliya – is an important requirement for the spiritual progress of a Muslim. This facet of life should therefore never be neglected. Income should not be expended in such ways, avenues and practices that are condemned by the Deen. Extravagances, spending in customs that have no Shar'i sanction, spending for the sake of gaining name, spending in unnecessary luxuries – luxuries that are far in excess of one's needs, etc. are all evil ways that bring about ruin in both mundane and spiritual life. There is nothing wrong with earning and accumulating wealth if one abstains from extravagance, haraam and all ways and means unlawful in Islam. Wealth can and should be used constructively for one's own benefit as well as for the benefit of others and for rendering service to the Deen. There are varieties of Deeni activities that require wealth. Therefore, a man of wealth can obtain great thawaab by earning and employing wealth in accordance with the Shariah. Aiding the poor and needy, contributing to Deeni projects such as Masjids, Madrasahs, works of Tableegh, etc. are wonderful channels in which to employ wealth and thereby build up one's capital in the Akhirawh. Hadhrawt ‘Abbdullawh (R) narrates that Rawsoolullawh (S) said,

The seeking of a halaal earning is the (next) Fardh (duty) after the Fardh (Sawlah).

Baihaqi

Hadhrawt Aboo Khimari (R) narrates a lengthy Hadeeth in which Rawsoolullawh (S) said:

The world is for four (types) of persons. (One among the four) is a man whom Allawh Ta'ala granted wealth as well as understanding of the Deen. He fears his Rawbb and is kind (and renders service) to his relatives. And, about the wealth, he follows the commands of Allawh and discharges rights. This man is the noblest…

Tirmeedhi

Hadhrawt Aboo Saeed Khudri (R), narrating a lengthy Hadeeth, said that Rawsoolullawh (S) said:

Wealth is an object of pleasure. Wealth acquired in a rightful way (in accordance with the Shariah) and spent in a rightful way will be an aid for its owner.

Bukhawri, Muslim

Hadhrawt Amr Ibnul Aas (R) narrates that Rawsoolullawh (S) said:

Wholesome (pure) wealth for a noble person is good.

Ahmad

Hadhrawt Miqdaam Ibn Ma'di Karib (R) narrates that he heard Rawsoolullawh (S) say:

‘There will come a time when only gold and silver (wealth) will benefit people.’

According to Hadhrawt Sufyaan Thauri (R’A), wealth during the time of the Sahabah was not preferable since their hearts were ennobled with strong ‘Eeman. Since they possessed a very strong ‘Eeman there was no need for them to seek strength and confidence in wealth. In view of the evils normally attendant to wealth, the Sahabah and the early Muslims refrained from its acquisition. However, now (says Hadhrawt Sufyaan Thauri) wealth has become the shield of the Mu'min. Since ‘Eeman is no longer as strong as it was during former times, poverty creates worry and frustration in people. The result is deterioration in the worldly and spiritual conditions of Muslims as they no longer are able to stand up to the rigours of poverty. Hadhrawt Sufyan Thauri (R’A) also said that if we did not have wealth, the wealthy worldly people (those puffed up with pride) would have despised us, held us in contempt and trampled over us in any way they wished. Hadhrawt Sufyaan Thauri (R’A) also said that whoever is in possession of wealth should increase it and not squander it because in this age the first thing that will suffer in the event of poverty and want is one's Deen. Since people, on account of weakness of ‘Eeman, are no longer capable of enduring the rigours of poverty, they compromise their Deen for worldly comforts. Hadhrawt Sufyaan Thauri (R’A) said that Halaal wealth does not tolerate extravagance or waste. Therefore, spend carefully and be not reckless. If you are reckless in spending, you will be overwhelmed by worry and frustration. Hadhrawt Aboo Saeed (R) narrates that Rawsoolullawh (S) said:

An honest and uprighteous trader will be with the Ambiya, Siddeeqeen and Shuhadaa (on the Day of Qiyamah).

Tirmeedhi

The great significance of lawful trade is stated in this Hadeeth. The lawful trader who is honest and uprighteous will enjoy the association of the Ambiya, Saints and Martyrs in the Hereafter. Hadhrawt Miqdaam Bin Ma'di Karib (R) narrates that Rawsoolullawh (S) said:

The noblest food ate by one is that from his (lawful) labour. Nabi Dawood (A) ate from the labour of his hands.

Bukhawri

Islam teaches the nobility and dignity of work and labour. The Ahadeeth explains much significance of labour. Nabi Dawood (A) made his living by making armour. However, this significance applies to only such occupations that are in accord with the Shariah. Haraam forms of labour and occupations, e.g. photography of living objects, musical instruments, cinemas, etc., are haraam forms of occupations. The proceeds from unlawful occupations are likewise unlawful. Hadhrawt Aboo Hurairah (R) narrates that Rawsoolullawh (S) said:

There was not a Nabi who was not sent as a shepherd.

The Sahabah asked,

You also tended to sheep?

Rawsoolullawh (S) replied:

I tended the goats of the people of Makkah…

Bukhawri

This Hadeeth too asserts the significance of manual labour. All Ambiya (alayhimus salaam) were shepherds looking after the sheep and goats of people. Hadhrawt Nabi Musa (A) remained a shepherd, tending the goats and sheep of Nabi Shuaib (A) for eight or ten years. (Ahmad, Ibn Majah). The episode of Musa (A) being a shepherd is narrated in the Qur’an Shareef as well. This again brings out the significance of manual labour. Hadhrawt Thaabit Ibn Dhullaak (R) narrates that:

Rawsoolullawh (S) permitted hiring out of land.

Income derived from land and property hiring is a lawful occupation in Islam, as this Hadeeth indicates. Among the noble ways of earning living is farming. Much significance of farming has been mentioned in the Hadeeth. Hadhrawt Anas (R) narrates that Rawsoolullawh (S) said that whatever man, animal or bird eats from any tree or farm planted by a Muslim, its owner obtains the thawaab of Sadqah thereby. Hadhrawt Anas (R) narrating a lengthy Hadeeth says that:

A man from among the Ansaar came to Rawsoolullawh (S) and requested something. Rawsoolullawh (S) sent someone to bring a mug and a mat from one house. These items Rawsoolullawh (S) auctioned among the Sahabah. With the money obtained for the items Rawsoolullawh (S) bought some food and an axe. Giving these to the Ansaari, Rawsoolullawh (S) said:

Go (to the forest), cut wood and sell it. This is better for you than begging that will be a blot of disgrace on your face (on the Day of Qiyamah).

Aboo Dawood and Ibn Majah

This Hadeeth establishes that a lawful occupation, no matter how menial and inferior, is better than begging. Asking is a disgrace, said Rawsoolullawh (S).

Hadhrawt Ibn Umar (R) narrates that Rawsoolullawh (S) said:

Allawh Ta'ala loves a Mu'min who engages in a lawful means of earning a living.

Tibrawni and Baihaqi

A halaal trade or any halaal means of earning should not be despised. Many people consider certain forms of earning as lowly and regard such people with contempt. The Hadeeth shareef in stating Allawh's love for the Mu'min who earns a halaal livelihood, clearly implies the dignity of labour and brings out the great significance of earning one's living irrespective of how lowly and inferior the work may seem in the eyes of worldly people. It is in a person's own interests that he saves up some money so that he may be saved worry and despondency. It is a fact that most people are not able to undergo hardship. When in need of money, they resort to practices that are unlawful and adopt haraam measures to obtain money in order to satisfy their needs. It is therefore necessary to abstain from waste and at the same time save up money. There is nothing wrong in saving. According to the Hadeeth, even Rawsoolullawh (S) would give his wives expenses at one time for the whole year. Rawsoolullawh (S) advised the Sahabah to retain some wealth as this is better for peace of mind. This was specifically stated by Rawsoolullawh (S) to Hadhrawt Ka'b Ibn Malik (R) who had expressed his desire to contribute all his wealth in the Path of Allawh Ta'ala. In 1 Hadeeth, Hadhrawt Ibn Mas'ood narrates that Rawsoolullawh (S) said:

I detest a man who is useless. He is neither engaged in any worldly activity nor any Akhirawh activity.

Ahmad and Baihaqi

Indolence and inactivity are detestable attributes. A man who is not engaged in Deeni work should involve himself in some lawful worldly activity and earn his livelihood. He should not remain idle and waste away his life. On the other hand, those fully involved in Deeni activities, should repose their trust in Allawh Ta'ala. He is the Provider. He will most certainly provide for them. Workers of the Deen should not in the least be worried about their rizq. Extravagance or waste is evil. The Shariah prohibits waste. Allawh Ta'ala states in the Qur'an Shareef:

Do not waste. Verily, the wasters are the brothers of shaitaan.

Hadhrawt Mugheerah (R) narrates that Rawsoolullawh (S) said:

Allawh Ta'ala detests that you destroy wealth (i.e. by means of wasting).

Bukhawri and Muslim

Hadhrawt Anas, Aboo Umaamah, Ibn Abbaas and Ali (d m) narrate that Rawsoolullawh (S) said:

Walk along the middle path.

This means the adoption of moderation. Moderation in spending is the instruction of Islam. Spend only when necessary. If people are moderate in expenditure and abstain from extravagance, they will never be dependent on others. They will not be forced to ask others, thereby bringing disgrace upon themselves. Rawsoolullawh (S) said that to ask is disgrace. Overspending and failing to budget one's income lead to debt that in turns brings disgrace, worry and frustration. People are financially ruined and comes spiritual ruin along with such worldly ruin as well. Among the worst of calamities is debt, especially if one has no means of paying the debts. Rawsoolullawh (S) has sounded dire warnings about unpaid debt. Even martyrdom is no absolution for debt. A shaheed (martyr) will be forgiven all his sins, but debt. Debt will be demanded even in the Akhirawh. In this regard, Rawsoolullawh (S) said:

I take oath by That Being in Whose possession is my life that the man who is in debt will not enter Jannat even if he is martyred (in the Path of Allawh); then is resurrected and again martyred; then again is resurrected and again martyred. He will not enter (Jannat) until his debt is paid.

Targheebb, Nasa'i, Tibbrawni, and Hakim

However, there are exceptions. If the debt was incurred because of a real need and one has the intention of paying and at the same time makes effort to pay, then the warning stated in the above Hadeeth will not apply to such debt. In such cases, even if the debt remained unpaid, Allawh Ta'ala will settle the rights of the creditors on behalf of the sincere debtor who was genuinely unable to pay. The discussion in this section shows that wealth if acquired lawfully and spent in accordance with the Shariah is a ni'mat (bounty) from Allawh Ta'ala. Wealth becomes an evil when acquired and expended in contravention of the Shariah. When wealth, (like even wives and children) impedes one's spiritual development and interferes with one's Deeni life then indeed it will be an evil. In Soorawh Taghaabun, Allawh Ta'ala describes even one's family as one's enemy. This applies when the family obstructs one in the Path of Allawh Ta'ala. The same reasoning will apply to wealth. The Ayah mentioning that family can be one's enemy also states that wealth can be one's enemy. Thus, when one's family and wealth cause one to forget the Akhirawh they will be one's enemies. The Mu'min should make use of the bounties of Allawh Ta'ala like an obedient slave and not a rebellious traitor.

ROOH XX
NIKAH AND PROGENY

Islam lays stress on marriage. The actual order, if there are no impediments and no expediencies, is for man to get married. Hadhrawt Ibn Abi Najeeh (R) narrates that Rawsoolullawh (S) said:

The man who has no wife is the most dependent

People asked:

Even if he has much wealth?

Rawsoolullawh (S) said:

Even if he has much wealth

Then Rawsoolullawh (S) added:

The woman who has no husband is most dependent.

People said,

Even is she has much wealth?

Rawsoolullawh (S) said:

Even is she has much wealth.

Rawzeen

The object of wealth is to attain peace and comfort. These states of tranquillity are not attainable by unmarried people. Furthermore, there are great worldly as well as spiritual advantages in Nikah. In this regard Hadhrawt 'Abbdullawh Ibn Mas'ood (R) narrates that Rawsoolullawh (S) said:

O assembly of youths! Whoever among you has the ability to discharge the responsibilities of a family-life (i.e. fulfil the rights of the wife) should get married because Nikah guards the eyes and prevents from immorality (i.e. fornication).

Hadhrawt Aishah (R) narrates that Rawsoolullawh (S) said:

Marry women, for they will bring for you wealth.

Bazzaaz

If both husband and wife are intelligent, there will be barkat in the income of the husband. The husband will endeavour to earn more because of his added responsibility while the intelligent wife will not squander the wealth, but will economise and conduct the house budget in a way in which the husband is not able to do. This family will because of this attitude of the marriage partners become prosperous and will have comfort and peace. And this is the purpose of wealth.

Hadhrawt Aboo Hurairah (R) narrates that someone asked Rawsoolullawh (S):

Who is the best woman?

Rawsoolullawh (S) replied:

The woman whose husband becomes happy when he looks at her; who obeys his orders; who does not oppose her husband with either her person or wealth

Nasa'i

Thus, obedience and service to the husband elevate the wife to a noble status. In the words of Rawsoolullawh (S), such a woman is the best. It is an act of great thawaab and much significance for a woman to tend to the affairs of her home. Rawsoolullawh (S) exhorted women to do their housework themselves. Once Hadhrawt Fatimah (R) requested Rawsoolullawh (S) for a servant to assist her in the housework. Hadhrawt Fatimah (R) did all her housework herself. In answer to her request, Rawsoolullawh (S) said:

O Fatimah! Fear Allawh. Fulfil the compulsory duties (Fardh) of your Rawbb and do the work of your house-folk.

Bukhawri, Muslim, Aboo Dawood, and Tirmeedhi

Which woman can consider herself superior than Hadhrawt Fatimah (R)? But the Queen of womankind, the Leader of the women of Jannat, Hadhrawt Fatimah (R) did all her housework herself. This Hadeeth clearly establishes the significance of women doing their own housework.

Hadhrawt Ma'qil Bin Yasar (R) narrates that Rawsoolullawh (S) said:

Marry such women who are loving and produce children (in abundance) because (on the Day of Qiyamah) I will vie with other Ummats (and be proud) of your numbers.

Aboo Dawood and Nisai

The numerical superiority of the Ummah will be a source of great pleasure for Rawsoolullawh (S) on the Day of Qiyamah. Abundance of children is thus a great ni'mat and has many advantages both in the worldly life and in the Akhirawh. After the parents' death, obedient children continuously engage in dua and acts of thawaab on behalf of their deceased parents. Children who have received a thorough Deeni upbringing and Islamic guidance will perpetuate piety and virtue in the future generations. Children who died in infancy will be a great aid for their parents in the Akhirawh. Through the intercession of such children, the parents will obtain forgiveness and be saved from the calamities of the punishment of Jahannum. Pious children, who have attained adulthood, too will be intercessors on behalf of their parents in the Akhirawh. The greatest benefit in abundance of progeny is the increase in the numbers and strength of the Ummah in this world and the pleasure of Rawsoolullawh (S) in the Akhirawh. Abstention from marriage is to be deprived of all these noble benefits. Therefore, it is abominable to refrain from marriage if there is no valid reason. Reprimanding a wealthy unmarried Sahaabi, Rawsoolullawh (S) said:

O Ukaaf! ...(while you remain unmarried) you are (like) a brother to shaitawn. If you had been among the Nasawraw you would have become a monk. Our (i.e. Islam's) way is Nikah...

The worst among you are the unmarried. The most effective weapon which shaitaan employs against pious men is women. However, those who are married are saved from immorality.

Ahmad

The full benefits of marriage are realised when both husband and wife fulfil the other's rights. The marriage will then be imbued with love and understanding. Many rights are linked with marriage. Both partners have rights and so do the offspring. Some important huqooq (rights) will be mentioned here. From these, one will be able to understand the other rights of marriage. Hadhrawt Aboo Musa Ash'ari (R) narrates that Rawsoolullawh (S) mentioned the significance of imparting Deeni knowledge to a bondswoman (woman of the right hand in the words of the Qur'an). From this Hadeeth it is apparent that the significance of imparting Deeni knowledge to one's wife will be far greater. It is thus necessary for the husband to ensure that his wife has sufficient Deeni knowledge. Hadhrawt Aboo Hurairah (R) narrates that Rawsoolullawh (S) said:

I exhort you to be kind to women. Accept it (my exhortation). Women have been created from a crooked rib. If you attempt to straighten her, you will break her; her breaking is talaaq. And, if you leave her as she is, she will remain crooked. Therefore, accept this (my) exhortation of kindness towards them.

Tirmeedhi

It is not possible that she will do everything to satisfy the husband. Any such attempt by the man to impose on her to conform in entirety to his wishes will only break her. This means that the marriage will be wrecked and talaaq will occur. It is therefore essential to overlook little faults and such acts that do not find favour with the husband's tastes. The husband should be big-hearted enough to accommodate her slight faults about his likes and dislikes. Extreme harshness as well as extreme laxity will allow shaitaan to instil in woman desires which are in conflict with the Deen. As far as matters of the Deen are concerned, the husband should not be lax so as to grant her leeway to violate the laws of Allawh Ta'ala. But, in things of personal taste the husband should not make too much demands on her. Hadhrawt Hakeem Bin Mu'aawiyah (R) narrates that his father said to Rawsoolullawh (S):

O Rawsoolullawh! What are the rights of our wives over us?

Rawsoolullawh (S) said:

When you eat, feed her; when you wear garments, clothe her; do not strike her in her face (even if she is at fault); do not curse her; do not dissociate from her except in the house.

Aboo Dawood

According to this Hadeeth, if there is reason to show displeasure towards her, the husband should not show his displeasure by leaving the house and staying away from her. Hadhrawt Umme Salmah (R) and Hadhrawt Maimoonah (R) – both wives of Nabi-e-Kareem b – were with Rawsoolullawh (S) when Hadhrawt Ibn Umme Maktoom (R), a blind Sahaabi, entered. Rawsoolullawh (S) said to both wives:

Both of you seclude yourselves (adopt Purdah) from him.

The two wives said:

But, he is blind!

Rawsoolullawh (S) said:

What! Are you too blind?

Tirmeedhi and Aboo Dawood

It is among the rights of the wife that the husband ensures that she remains in Purdah and not come into the presence of ghair-mahram males. They (ghair-mahram men) should not look at them nor should they (women) look at the ghair-mahram men. In this measure lies the protection of the Deen of the wife, for she is thus guarded against the evil of intermingling with other men. At the same time, there is great worldly benefit, especially for the happiness of the home, in Purdah. Some rights of husbands will now be mentioned. Hadhrawt Aboo Hurairah (R) narrates that Rawsoolullawh (S) said:

If (making Sajjdah for anyone was permissible and I had to order anyone to make sajdah for another), I would have commanded the wife to make sajdah for her husband.

Tirmeedhi

The superiority and the great right of the husband over the wife are amply borne out by this Hadeeth. Hadhrawt Ibn Abi Aufa (R) narrates that Rawsoolullawh (S) said:

I take oath by That Being in Whose possession is my life that a woman does not fulfil the haqq (right) of Allawh as long as she does not fulfil the haqq (right) of her husband.

Ibn Majah

The wife should not feel that she has discharged the rights and duties of Allawh Ta'ala by only carrying out the obligations of Sawlah, Saum, etc. Obedience to her husband is also a command of Allawh on her. It is therefore, essential that she obeys and pleases her husband in all things that are lawful in Islam. Hadhrawt Ibn Umar (R) narrates that Rawsoolullawh (S) said:

The Sawlah of a woman disobedient to her husband does nor reach further than her head (i.e. it is not accepted by Allawh Ta'ala). (Her Sawlah remains unacceptable) until she desists from her disobedience.

Tibbrawni

The aforegoing narrations clearly illustrate the great significance and importance which Islam attaches to the institution of Nikah. Monasticism is not part of Islam. Nikah is a spiritual guard as well as a worldly guard. All Muslims have therefore to enter into the Nikah bond if there is no impediment. However, if there exists valid Shar'i reason for abstaining from Nikah, one will not be blameworthy. Exceptions have been mentioned in the Hadeeth. Those who are not able to discharge the rights of marriage are not under obligation to marry. Once a man brought his daughter to Rawsoolullawh (S). She persistently refused to get married. Upon enquiring from her the reason for her refusal, she explained her case and said that she will never marry. Since she was certain that she will not be able to fulfil the rights of a husband, Rawsoolullawh (S) did not compel her to marry. If a widow feels that in marrying again her children's life will be wrecked, then she is not under obligation to marry. Rawsoolullawh (S) praised such a woman and mentioned great thawaab for her in the Akhirawh because of her sacrifice for the sake of her children. In the interests of her orphaned children, she abstained from marriage. Hadhrawt Yahya Bin Waqid (R) narrates that Rawsoolullawh (S) referring to future times of fitnah (mischief, evil and strife), said:

... (At that time) I prefer for my Ummah remaining single (unmarried) and (I prefer for them) dissociation from relationships (with people) and (I prefer for them) living on mountain peaks. I grant them permission (for this at such times of fitnah).

Rawzeen

Hadhrawt Ibn Mas'ood (R) and Hadhrawt Aboo Hurairah (R) narrate that Rawsoolullawh (S) said:

There will dawn a time over people when the destruction of a man will be at the hands of his wife, parents and children. They will humiliate him because of his poverty and will make such demands which will induce him to engage in such activities (to gain more money), which will finally destroy his Deen.

Baihaqi

If marriage will constitute a danger to one's 'Eeman and Deen, then abstention therefrom will be allowed because the reason is valid in the Shariah. However, there are also such people who are like drones. They are merely lacking in determination and effort. They rely on others for their needs. Regarding such people, Rawsoolullawh (S) said:

Five types of persons will enter the Fire. (Among the five mentioned in this Hadeeth, one is) a man who is weak in resolve. He has no understanding of the Deen. He is a burden on others; he has neither wife nor children and he does not earn his living. He lives like a drone.

Muslim

Children too have rights (Huqooq). If parents discharge the rights of their offspring correctly, they will become more obedient and useful. The Deeni rights that children have over their parents have already been explained in Rooh Two and Rooh Three. Their worldly rights consist of training them in such ways and means that will enable them to achieve comfort and worldly benefit. Hadhrawt Ibn Umar (R) narrates that Rawsoolullawh (S) said:

Teach your sons swimming and archery and teach your daughters sewing.

Baihaqi

The activities mentioned in this Hadeeth are by way of example. All worldly activities of necessity come within the scope of this Hadeeth.

ROOH XXI

DISSOCIATION OF THE HEART FROM THE WORLD AND CONSTANT REFLECTION ON THE AKHIRAWH

Despite the fact that man is in the world and is part and parcel of this material world, it is essential for his spiritual progress that his heart remains dissociated from the world and associated with the Akhirawh. It is necessary that man at all times reflects on the Akhirawh. Allawh Ta'ala has created us for a specific purpose, viz., His remembrance. We are to spend a short while in this transitory abode and then pass onto our next phase of life in our onward journey towards Allawh Ta'ala. It is thus imperative that the heart of man does not cling to this world even though he physically is constrained to participate in mundane activities. Along with emptying his heart from worldly love, he has constantly to reflect and remind himself about the Akhirawh. This attitude will produce strength in the heart. Deen will become solidified and the 'Eeman in the heart will start to glow. For attaining firmness of 'Eeman, it is necessary that one endeavours to meditate on the worthlessness of this world. Reflection is necessary. Always ponder on the fact of this earth being perishable and will one day pass into non-existence. Ponder especially on the shortness of one's own life. How swiftly the time flies by. Soon will one be called into the presence of Allawh Ta'ala and a reckoning will be demanded. Reflect on the wonders and the everlasting nature of the Life Hereafter. Once maut (death) arrives – and in relation to man, maut arrives with great swiftness – the events of the period after death will occur in rapid succession. The athaab (punishment) in the grave, the reckoning and the torments in Qiyamah, Jannat, Jahannum, Siraat, reward and punishment are all things on which it is necessary that the Mu'min reflects continuously. Constant reflection on these issues will produce firmness of 'Eeman and the realisation of the futility of this ephemeral life and the reality and permanence of the Akhirawh will dawn on one. The 'Eeman and intelligence of the Mu'min will then discern actual truth and operate from an elevated platform. Some narrations in regard to this subject will now be related.

Allawh Ta'ala says in the Qur'an Shareef:

Alluring (and adorned) has been made for mankind the love of desires regarding women, sons, mounds of gold and silver, beautifully marked horses, other grazing stock and farms. (But) these are things for use in this worldly life. And, by Allawh is a beautiful end. Say (O Muhammad!): Shall I inform you of that which is better than these things? For those who fear (their Rawbb) are such Gardens by their Rawbb, beneath which flow rivers; therein will they dwell forever; (and for them therein) will be pure wives and (greatest of all) The Pleasure of Allawh. Allawh is the Overseer of His servants.

Ayah 15, Al Imrawn

Whatever you have (of worldly possessions) will (one day) come to an end. (But) whatever is with Allawh will remain forever.

Soorawh Nahl

Wealth and children are a glitter of this world. And, righteous deeds which remain forever are best by your Rawbb for obtaining thawaab and best for (pinning) hopes.

Soorawh Kahaf

Know (and understand well) that, verily, the life of this world is (but) play, amusement, adornment, mutual pride (vying with one another in material possessions and worldly pomp) and mutual rivalry in accumulating wealth and children. In the Hereafter is a dreadful punishment (for the rebellious ones), and (for the people of 'Eeman) will be forgiveness and pleasure from Allawh.

Soorawh Hadeedd

You prefer the worldly life (to the Akhirawh) whereas the Hereafter is best and everlasting.

Soorawh A'la

AHADEETH

Hadhrawt Mastoor Bin Shaddaad (R) narrates that Rawsoolullawh (S) said:

I take oath by Allawh (and say) that the similitude of this life with the Akhirawh is as the (quantity of) water that remains on the finger after it was dipped into the sea.

The insignificance of this world in relation to the Akhirawh is described in this Hadeeth. What quantity of water will there be on one's finger that has been withdraw from the sea after having been dipped it in? Whatever comparison that slight bit of moisture on one's finger has with all the water in the oceans of the earth that is the relation or comparison of this world with the Akhirawh. The worthlessness and insignificance of this worldly life in relation to the wonderful and everlasting life in the Akhirawh is quite apparent from this Hadeeth. Hadhrawt Jaabir (R) narrates that Rawsoolullawh (S) once, on passing by a dead goat, said:

Who among you desires to obtain this (dead and decomposing goat for the price of a dirham (a silver coin)?

The people said:

We do not desire it for anything (leave alone a dirham).

Rawsoolullawh (S) said:

I take oath by Allawh that the world is more contemptible to Allawh than what this (dead) goat is to you.

Muslim

Hadhrawt Sahl Bin Sa'd (R) narrates that Rawsoolullawh (S) said:

If the world had the value of even the wing of a mosquito by Allawh, He would not have given any kaafir even a drink of water.

Tirmeedhi and Ibn Majah

Hadhrawt Aboo Musa (R) narrates that Rawsoolullawh (S) said:

Whoever loves his world will harm his Akhirawh and whoever loves his Akhirawh will harm his world. Therefore, give preference to the abode that will be everlasting (i.e. Akhirawh).

Ahmadd and Baihaqi

Hadhrawt Ka'b Bin Malik (R) narrates that Rawsoolullawh (S) said:

Two hungry wolves let loose in a flock of sheep do not cause so much damage to the flock as does the love of wealth and vanity cause to one's Deen.
Tirmeedhi and Darawmi

Love of wealth and vanity or the desire for greatness and glory are spiritually destructive forces. They bring total ruin to one's Deen. Love of wealth drives one to indulge in all sorts of unlawful activities that utterly ruins one's Deeni life. The desire for name, fame and glory brings in its wake much corruption, hatred, revenge and other bestial qualities that wreck one spiritually and harm one's worldly life considerably. The desire for rank and position is evil. However, if high rank comes to one without hankering after it, then it will be a ni'mat from Allawh Ta'ala. In this regard Hadhrawt Aboo Hurairah (R) narrates that Rawsoolullawh (S) said:

Allawh Ta'ala will say to a man on the Day of Qiyamah: What! Did I not bestow leadership on you?

Muslim

In the Qur'an Shareef, Allawh Ta'ala states:

And, he (Nabi Moosa) was (given) by Allawh dignity.

Soorawh Ahzabb

And, he (Nabi Isaa) was (given) dignity on earth and in the Akhirawh.

Soorawh Al Imrawn

From these narrations, it is clear that rank, dignity and honour, if forthcoming from Allawh Ta'ala, are favours that have to be appreciated. Nabi Dawood and Nabi Sula'Eeman (alayhimas salaam) were even granted vast kingdoms. This was a great bounty from Allawh Ta'ala. Although it is improper to desire for rank and position for worldly and nafsaani motives, there is nothing wrong if such desire is motivated purely for Deeni purposes to render service to the Deen as was the case with Nabi Yoosuf (A), who expressed the wish to be put in charge of the treasury of the land. However, it is not for everyone to express the wish for high posts and ranks. Inspite of such wishes being permissible if based on sincere motives, there is always the danger of spiritual corruption overtaking one.

Hadhrawt Aboo Hurairah (R) narrates that Rawsoolullawh (S) said:

Whoever had control over even ten persons (on earth) will be ushered (into the Divine Court) in such a way ...that (if he had committed any injustice upon his subjects) his injustice will destroy him.

Daarawmi

The grave danger attendant to leadership should thus be realised from this Hadeeth.

Hadhrawt Ibn Mas'ood (R) narrates that once Rawsoolullawh (S) slept on a mat. The imprint of the mat had formed on the mubaarak (auspicious) body of Nabi-e-Kareem (S). Ibn Mas'ood (R) then said:

O Rawsoolullawh! Grant us permission to prepare a (comfortable) bed for you.

Rawsoolullawh (S) said:

What relationship have I with the world? My similitude with the world is like a traveller with a tree under which he halts after a tiresome journey. He halts a while under the shade of the tree and then leaves it again to continue his journey.

Ahmadd and Tirmeedhi

Hadhrawt Aishah (R) narrates that Rawsoolullawh (S) said:

The world is the abode of a person who has no home; it is the wealth of the person who has no wealth. He who has no intelligence accumulates the wealth of the world (i.e. more than what is necessary).

Ahmadd and Baihaqi

Hadhrawt Huzaifah (R) narrates that he heard Rawsoolullawh (S) say in his Khutbah:

The love of the world is the root of all evil.

Rawzeen and Baihaqi

Hadhrawt Jaabir (R) narrates that Rawsoolullawh (S) said:

This world is a continuous journey which recedes (further and further) while the Akhirawh is a continuous journey which approaches (nearer and nearer). Both (this world and the Akhirawh) have their sons. If you can, be not among the sons of the world. Today you are in the abode of practice (Daarul Amal) and there is no reckoning here. Reckoning will be for you in the Akhirawh and there will be no amal (practice).

Baihaqi

Hadhrawt Ibn Mas'ood (R) narrates that Rawsoolullawh (S) recited the following Ayah:

Allawh Ta'ala expands the breast of the one whom He intends to guide, so that (he accepts) Islam.

Rawsoolullawh (S) then said:

When Noor enters the breast, it (the breast) expands.

Someone asked:

O Rawsoolullawh! Is there a sign for this?

Rawsoolullawh (S) said:

Yes. He saves himself from this abode of deception (the world); he inclines towards the everlasting abode (Akhirawh) and he makes preparations for the everlasting abode before the arrival of death.

Baihaqi

Hadhrawt Aboo Hurairah (R) narrates that Rawsoolullawh (S) said:

Remember much the severer of delights, i.e. Maut.

Tirmeedhi, Nisai, and Ibn Majah

Hadhrawt 'Abbdullawh Ibn Umar (R) narrates that Rawsoolullawh (S) said,

Maut is a gift for the Mu'min.

Baihaqi

A gift is an object of pleasantness. The Mu'min should therefore be pleased with Maut. If there is fear for athaab (punishment) then arrangements should be made to be protected against such punishment (which follows after death). The protection against athaab is to be obedient to the commands of Allawh and His Rawsool (S) and to resort to taubah for deficiencies.

Hadhrawt 'Abbdullawh Ibn Umar (R) narrates that Rawsoolullawh (S) took hold of his (Ibn Umar's) shoulders and said,

Stay on earth as if you are a foreigner or like one walking along the road.

Like a foreigner longs for his homeland and a traveller is continuously on the move anticipating a quick arrival home, so too should be the Mu'min. His heart should never be attached to this world. His gaze must be focused on Jannat, his original and permanent home. He must prepare himself for his return home.

Hadhrawt Ibn Umar (R) would say:

When evening approaches do not wait for morning; when the morning approaches do not wait for the evening...

Bukhawri

Hadhrawt Baraa Ibn Aathib (R) narrates that Rawsoolullawh (S) said:

When the Mu'min is about to depart for the Hereafter, Malaa-ikah (angels) with glittering faces come to him. They have with them kafan (burial shrouds) and fragrance from Jannat. Malakul Maut (the Angel of death) then arrives and explains (to the dying Mu'min):

O pure soul! Come towards the forgiveness and the pleasure of Allawh Ta'ala.

…The Malaa-ikah (with glittering faces) take possession of the soul and wrap it in the heavenly kafan and fragrance… They proceed with the (pure) soul upwards. Every group of angels living on earth, by whom they pass, enquire: 'Whose pure soul is this?' The Malaa-ikah (in whose possession the soul is) informs them (the other angels) of the identity of the person and (in informing them) call the soul by various beautiful and honourable titles. …They then reach the first heaven and the Doors thereof are opened up. The holy Malaa-ikah of the first heaven (a group among them) accompany the procession to the second heaven and the Doors are opened up. In this way the procession goes from heaven to heaven until the seventh heaven is reached.

Allawh Ta'ala then orders:

Enter the Book of Record of My servant in Illeeyeen and proceed towards the earth with him (for the questioning in the grave by Munkar and Nakeer).

The soul is then returned to its body. The angels (Munkar and Nakeer) then come to the person and ask:

Who is your Rawbb?

The Mu'min replies:

Allawh is my Rawbb.

They ask:

What is your Deen?

He replies:

Islam is my Deen.

They then ask:

Who is this man who was sent among you?

He replies:

He is the Nabi of Allawh.

A caller then (on the instruction of Allawh Ta'ala) calls out from the heaven: "My servant has spoken the truth. Arrange for him the comfort of Jannat; clothe him with the garments of Jannat and open up on him a window from Jannat. The sweet breezes and fragrances of Jannat thus come to him…

Ahmadd

The same Hadeeth continues and narrates the evil and terrible condition that overtakes the kaafir soul. After death and in Qiyamah will occur the following events: The sounding of the Trumpet (Soor), the resurrection of the dead, the torments of Qiyamah, the reckoning, the fortunate will be given to drink from the Fountain of Kauthar, punishment in Jahannum for certain sins (or for those who were not forgiven), intercession for the people of 'Eeman, entry into Jannat and the Vision of Allawh Ta'ala. These are all things to reflect on to create life in 'Eeman. If one is not able to set aside a specific time for such meditation, then at least when going to bed at night, think about these events.

ROOH XXII

ABSTAINING FROM SIN

It is of vital importance for the Mu'min to abstain from all sin. This is essential for developing his 'Eeman. Sin darkens 'Eeman and creates weakness in it. On the assumption that there will not be punishment for sins, then too, it is necessary for the Mu'min to abstain from sin, for sin is disobedience that is the cause of Allawh's displeasure. No man wishes to displease even a worldly benefactor. The favours of Allawh on man are innumerable. Allawh Ta'ala is man's greatest and true Benefactor. How can the Mu'min then displease Him? Besides this consideration, there is also the danger of punishment for the commission of sin. Such punishment may be both in this world as well as in the Hereafter. One form of worldly punishment is that a man given up to sin engrosses himself fully, body and heart, in the world to such a degree that he becomes fearful of the Akhirawh and thus detests it. He loses firmness of heart and 'Eeman. The Mu'min should therefore, not venture near to sin, no matter what type of sin it may be, whether the sin pertains to Huqooqullah (Rights of Allawh) or Huqooqul Ibaad (Rights of creation). Various types of punishment for different sins have been mentioned in the Ahadeeth.

Hadhrawt Aboo Hurairah (R) narrates that Rawsoolullawh (S) said:

When the Mu'min sins, a black spot forms on his heart. If he makes istighfaar and taubah, the black mark is removed and his heart is purified. If he increases his sin, the black mark increases. This is the corrosion of the heart spoken of by Allawh Ta'ala (in the Qur'an)

Ahmad, Tirmeedhi, and 'Ibn Majah

Hadhrawt Muaaz (R) narrates that Rawsoolullawh (S) said:

Guard yourselves against sin because the Wrath of Allawh descends in the wake of sin.

Ahmadd

Hadhrawt Anas Bin Malik (R) narrates that Rawsoolullawh (S) said:

Should I not show you your sickness and its remedy? Your sickness is sinning and your remedy is to seek forgiveness (istighfaar).

Baihaqi

Hadhrawt Anas (R) narrates that Rawsoolullawh (S) said:

The hearts too become corroded (by means of sin). Its polish is istighfaar.

Baihaqi

Rawsoolullawh (S) said,

Verily, man is deprived of rizq because of the sins which he perpetrates.

Ahmad

Hadhrawt 'Abbdullawh Ibn Umar (R) narrates that once ten of them were in the company of Rawsoolullawh (S) when he said:

I seek the protection of Allawh from five things that may overtake you. When immorality becomes rampant in a people, they will be overtaken by epidemics and such diseases that never existed before. When a people are involved in giving short-weight and measure, they will be overtaken by famine, hardship and oppression of the authorities. When people stop paying Zakaat, rain is withheld from them. If it were not for the animals in their midst, never would there have fallen rain for them. When people violate pledges and promises, Allawh will overwhelm them with their enemies from other nations. Thus the enemy will take by force their wealth.

Ibn Majah

Hadhrawt Ibn Abbaas (R) narrates that Rawsoolullawh (S) said:

When khiyaanat (abuse of trust) becomes rampant in a people, Allawh Ta'ala overwhelms their hearts with fear. A nation perpetrating injustice will be overpowered by its enemies.

Malik

Hadhrawt Thaubaan (R) narrates that Rawsoolullawh (S) said:

There will soon come a time when all the nations (of the Kuffar) will unite against you (Muslims)…

Someone asked:

Will we be less in numbers at that time?

Rawsoolullawh (S) said:

In fact, you will be numerous, but useless …Allawh Ta'ala will remove your respect and fear from the hearts of your enemies (who will then despise you) and Allawh will instil weakness in your hearts.

Someone asked:

What is the cause of the weakness?
Rawsoolullawh (S) said:

Love of the world and detestation for Maut.

Aboo Dawood and Baihaqi
Rawsoolullawh (S) said:

When Allawh Ta'ala desires to punish people (for their sins) he causes their children to die in abundance and makes their women barren.

Jazaa-ul A'maal
Hadhrawt Aboo Dardaa (R) narrates that Rawsoolullawh (S) said:

Allawh Ta'ala says: 'I am the King of kings. Their hearts are in My control. When servants (i.e. Muslims) are obedient to Me, I make the rulers merciful to them. When the servants are disobedient to Me, I cause the rulers to oppress them and be cruel to them…

Aboo Nu'aim
Hadhrawt Wahabb (R) narrates that Allawh Ta'ala said to Banee Israw'eel:

When I am obeyed, I become pleased; when I become pleased, I bestow limitless barkat. When I am disobeyed, I become Wrathful and I curse (the disobedient ones). The effect of My La'nat (Curse) extends to seven generations.

Jazaa-ul A'maal and Ahmad
This does not mean that the Curse that descended on the wrongdoers, settles on the future generations as well. However, the future generations are deprived of the goodness and barkat that would have come their way if their forbearers were pious. The beneficial effects of the piety of parents are transmitted to offspring. But, if the parents are evil, no goodness and benefits could be transmitted to their offspring.
Hadhrawt Wakee' (R) narrates that Hadhrawt Aishah (R) said:

When a man becomes disobedient to Allawh Ta'ala then those who (formerly) praised him (the man), begin to find fault with him.

Ahmadd
These narrations speak of sin and disobedience to Allawh Ta'ala in general. The evils and harms that flow in the wake of sinning are stated in these Ahadeeth. Some Ahadeeth relating to specific harms of sins will now be cited.
Hadhrawt Jaabir (R) narrates that Rawsoolullawh (S) said:

Allawh Ta'ala has cursed the devourer of riba, the payer of riba, the writer of riba (i.e. he who writes out the riba document), and the witnesses of riba. All are equal (in sin).

Muslim
Hadhrawt Aboo Musa (R) narrates that Rawsoolullawh (S) said:
After the kabaa-ir (major sins), the greatest sin is that one dies leaving debt, but no wealth for its payment.
Ahmadd and Aboo Dawood
Hadhrawt Aboo Hurrah Riqaashi (R) narrates on the authority of his paternal uncle that Rawsoolullawh (S) said:

Hear! Do not be unjust. Hear! A man's wealth is not halaal (for another) without his voluntary consent.

Baihaqi and Darawqutni
This Hadeeth brings within its scope of warning all forms of injustices in which the rights of others were usurped and violated. Examples of such violation of rights are:
1. • Incurring debt and not paying.
2. • Depriving the rightful Shar'i heirs of their inheritance.
3. • Extracting funds for charitable purposes by exercising pressure, whether direct or indirect, on people. People are sometimes put to shame and contribute towards the charitable project what they cannot afford. Prominent people make use of their influence to extract contributions. This is in fact a form of extortion.
Hadhrawt Saalim (R) narrates on the authority of his father that Rawsoolullawh (S) said:

A man who usurps even one cubit of land belonging to another, will be garlanded with the (weight) of that land as far as it extends into the seven earths.

Bukhawri and Ahmadd
Hadhrawt 'Abbdullawh Ibn Umar (R) narrates that:

Rawsoolullawh (S) cursed the taker and giver of a bribe.

Aboo Dawood, Ibn Majah, and Tirmeedhi
In another narration by Hadhrawt Thu'baan (R), it is said that:

Rawsoolullawh (S) cursed the agent who arranged the bribe as well.

Ahmadd and Baihaqi
In the case of bribery too, are exceptions. Where one is not able to escape the oppression and injustice of an oppressor, but by giving a bribe, it will not be sinful to give a bribe in such circumstances, but it will always remain haraam for one to accept a bribe.
Hadhrawt 'Abbdullawh Ibn Umar (R) narrates that:

Rawsoolullawh (S) prohibited liquor and gambling.

Aboo Dawood
All forms of intoxicants are covered by this Hadeeth. Insurance, lotteries, etc., are all forms of qimaar (gambling) which are prohibited.
Rawsoolullawh (S) said:

My Rawbb has commanded me to destroy all musical instruments…

Ahmad
Hadhrawt Aboo Hurairah (R) narrates that Rawsoolullawh (S) said:

The fornication of the eyes is to look with lust; the fornication of the tongue is to speak lustful things; the fornication of the hands is to touch with lust; the fornication of the feet is to walk towards lust; the fornication of the heart is to desire evil…

Muslim
These forms of fornication are stepping-stones to the final act of zina (fornication). Intermingling with the opposite sex gives rise to such acts that lead to fornication.
Hadhrawt 'Abbdullawh Ibn Umar (R) narrates that Rawsoolullawh (S) said,

The major sins are to commit shirk with Allawh Ta'ala, disobedience to parents, killing an innocent person, and to take a false oath.

Bukhawri
Shirk means to associate any created being or object in the worship or in the specific attributes of Allawh Ta'ala, such attributes that belong to Him exclusively. Among the practices of shirk prevalent in our time are:
1. Worshipping of graves of the Auliya of Allawh Ta'ala: The Auliya are the created beings and servants of Allawh Ta'ala. Worshipping their graves by means of sajdah, ruku, tawaaf of the graves is among the worse acts of shirk. Kissing the graves of the Auliya and adorning the graves with bed-sheets also are linked to the practice of shirk.
2. Taking a vow in the name of some Wali of Allawh Ta'ala: Vows (Mannat) can be taken in the Name of only Allawh Ta'ala

3. Believing that Allawh Ta'ala has assigned the affairs of the universe to created beings in such a way that the created beings act independently of the Will of Allawh
4. The belief that the Auliya are able to grant children, wishes and prayers (dua): In consequence of this belief of shirk people direct their dua directly to the Auliya instead of directly to Allawh Ta'ala

Disobedience to parents applies to all such things that are not in contradiction to the Law of Allawh Ta'ala. Obedience to parents is of paramount importance, but obedience to parents is not permissible in such things that are haraam. It is not permissible to obey parents if their wishes conflict with the Wishes of Allawh Ta'ala. Hadhrawt Aboo Hurairah (R) narrates that Rawsoolullawh (S) said:

(Among the major sins are) to devour the wealth of orphans, to flee from the battlefield of Jihaad and to slander innocent and chaste women (to accuse them of fornication and immorality).

Bukhawri and Muslim

In another Hadeeth Hadhrawt Aboo Hurairah also mentions among the great sins, stealing, banditry and fornication. (Bukhawri, Muslim)

Hadhrawt 'Abbdullawh Bin Umar (R) narrates that Rawsoolullawh (S) said:

Four qualities in a man render him a total munaafiq (hypocrite). If one (of these four) exists in him, a share of nifaqq (hypocrisy) is found in him; such nifaaq will remain in him as long as he retains that quality. These 4 qualities of nifaaq are:

1. Abuse of trust when trust is reposed in him
2. When he speaks, he lies.
3. When he promises, he violates his promise.
4. When he argues, he becomes abusive.

Hadhrawt Safwaan Ibn Assaal (R) narrates that Rawsoolullawh (S) said:

Do not deliver an innocent person to the rulers so that he be executed (or oppressed) and do not practice magic…

Tirmeedhi, Aboo Dawood, and Nisai

All forms of injustices committed with the aid of the authorities in the land and all forms of evil satanic practices such as witchcraft, fortune telling, etc., come within the scope of this Hadeeth's prohibition. The following are some evil acts prohibited in Islam and for which grave warnings of punishment have been sounded by Rawsoolullawh (S):

1. To mock at someone
2. To taunt a person
3. To call a person by a degrading nickname
4. To cast suspicion against someone
5. To search for the faults of others
6. Gheebat (scandalling)
7. To gossip
8. To revile a person for no proper reason
9. Double-talk, to be two-faced
10. To slander
11. To deceive
12. Pride, vanity
13. Cruelty and oppression
14. Refraining from aiding one in hardship inspite of having the means
15. To create loss for another in his wealth
16. To cast aspersions against a person thereby ruining his reputation
17. To be unkind to juniors and disrespectful to seniors
18. To break ties with a Muslim for some worldly motive.
19. Making/Taking pictures of living things-people and animals.
20. Shaving or cutting the beard
21. Imitating the Kuffar and fussaaq in dress
22. For women to imitate men in dress and for men to imitate women in dress

Besides the above, there are many other sins and it is essential to abstain from all sin. Involvement in sin stunts spiritual development and the Noor of 'Eeman does not glitter. Sin darkens the heart. Sin hardens the heart and creates detestation for Allawh Ta'ala and for all pious men associated with Allawh Ta'ala. Constant indulgence in sin creates in one an aversion for pious company. The consequence is that the one given up to sin recedes further and further from the Rahmat of Allawh Ta'ala. He then loses all hope in rectitude and in the mercy and forgiveness of Allawh Ta'ala. When overcome by this destructive condition, the Believer will be standing on the threshold kufr. It is essential to continuously resort to taubah and seek the forgiveness of Allawh Ta'ala. Taubah and Istighfaar do not allow the darkness flowing from sin to engulf and permanently settle on the heart. Taubah secures forgiveness for all sins of violation of Allawh's Rights. However, if the sin involves the huqooq (rights) of others as well, a requisite for obtaining forgiveness is to rectify the rights of those whose rights were violated. This is to be done by either discharging the actual object if the haqq is in tangible form, e.g. money, etc., or by obtaining pardon if the right is intangible, e.g. slander, abuse, violence against the person.

Hadhrawt 'Abbdullawh Ibn Mas'ood (R) narrates that Rawsoolullawh (S) said,

A sincere repenter of sins is like one who has not committed sins.

Baihaqi

Hadhrawt Aboo Hurairah (R) narrates that Rawsoolullawh (S) said:

Discharge the rights of the brother (Muslim) today – whether such rights pertain to his honour or wealth – before there comes the time (Akhirawh) when there will be neither gold or silver.

Bukhawri

If arrangements are not made here to fulfil usurped or undischarged huqooq (rights), the demand for discharge will be made in the Akhirawh. But, there, man will have no means of paying his rights and fulfilling what he had cast aside here. Thus, he will be made to pay and discharge the rights of others in Qiyamah by means of his accepted virtuous deeds. His deeds (the sole capital of the Believer in Akhirawh) will be taken and in proportion to the rights usurped will be handed over to the Saahibul Haqq (the one who is entitled to the rights).

ROOH XXIII

SAWBBR AND SHUKR

Among the attributes essential for man's spiritual as well as worldly progress and prosperity are Sabr (patience) and Shukr (gratitude). The conditions and circumstances that occur to man, be these voluntary or involuntary are of two types: pleasing or displeasing. If the circumstances occurring to man are pleasing, he should consider these as favours from Allawh Ta'ala and offer his heartfelt appreciation and gratitude. He should consider such bounties more than what he actually deserved and verbally he should recite the praises of Allawh Ta'ala. Furthermore, he must not employ such bounties of Allawh Ta'ala in sinful avenues, e.g. spending wealth in un-Islamic customs; using one's strength, influence and knowledge in ways deprecated by the Shariah. This is the meaning of Shukr. On the other hand, the circumstances arising may be displeasing, causing anxiety and difficulty to one. When man is confronted with such conditions, he should consider that in these untoward conditions Allawh Ta'ala has placed some benefit that is not discernible ordinarily. Such conditions are subject to Allawh's Wisdom and they are for the betterment of the one involved in the displeasing condition. The attitude of the Mu'min in such circumstances should be one of resignation. He should not complain nor display impatience. If the displeasing occurrence is a command of the Shariah, he should adhere to it firmly and not permit frustration and worry to overtake him. If the condition is some calamity which has befallen him, he must bear it with firmness and not be overwhelmed by despondency. This is the meaning of Sabr. Of the two attributes, Sabr is the more difficult. This attribute is more in demand since man is confronted more with circumstances that are displeasing and difficult to him. As examples, some conditions of displeasure will be cited here.

1. The nafs of man becomes agitated and perplexed at the imposition of Deeni duties that have to be rendered. It thus attempts to escape such acts that are commanded by Allawh Ta'ala. It desires the commission of haraam and seeks a release from the obligations of Sawlah, Saum, etc. It becomes displeased when an unlawful source of income has to be banished. It feels a great burden in discharging the rights of others. In such cases, man has to adopt courage and suppress the baneful urges and dictates of the nafs. He has necessarily to overcome his urges of the nafs and proceed undaunted with the execution of the commands of Allawh Ta'ala, irrespective of the displeasure the nafs suffers. Such displeasure and apparent difficulty will be short-lived. Firmness and harnessing the nafs into obedience will very quickly produce comfort and peace. The initial displeasure will be transformed into pleasure.
2. The calamities of poverty, sickness, death, persecution by enemies, loss of property, etc: when confronted by such misfortunes, reflect on the possible wisdoms underlying these calamities. The greatest benefit to be achieved from such displeasing conditions is thawaab from Allawh Ta'ala. Allawh Ta'ala has promised great reward for the Believer overtaken by calamities. When such calamities befall man, he should not unnecessarily publicise them nor should he meditate on these misfortunes. He should not make these misfortunes the occupation of his mind. Adoption of this attitude will create peace in the heart. However, if there are lawful ways and means of combating the calamity, these should be adopted.
3. An oppressor creating obstacles in the way of the Deen: one is thwarted by an unjust person in the execution of one's Islamic duties or attempts are made to bring disrepute and insult on the Deen. When confronted by such opposition, the Mu'min holds life cheap. Do not consider life to be of any importance in the endeavour to elevate the Word of Allawh Ta'ala. But, this does not mean the creation of anarchy based on desire. Even in the endeavour to uphold the Shariah, the Shariah the Law of Allawh must not be violated.

The above are some examples of conditions in which Sabr has to be adopted. Some narrations in this regard will now be cited.

Allawh Ta'ala says in the Qur'an:

Seek aid with Sawbbr and Sawlah.

Soorawh Baqawrawh

If love of wealth and love of fame overwhelm man and impede the development of his 'Eeman-as it will most certainly do-he should engage in Sabr and abundance of Sawlah, for this will most assuredly fortify him against the onslaught of his nafs. The form of Sabr advocated in this Ayah is abstention from the desires and dictates of the nafs.

We shall certainly test you by means of some fear, poverty, loss of wealth and life. And, give glad tidings (of thawaab) to those who adopt Sabr (in the face of these calamities)…

Soorawh Baqawrawh

Regarding the perseverance and fortitude of some nations of the past, Allawh Ta'ala says:

They lost not courage because of the hardships that confronted them in the Path of Allawh. They were not weakened nor were they awed by the enemy. Allawh Ta'ala loves such Saabireen (those who are steadfast and have patience).

Soorawh Al Imrawn

Men of Allawh are steadfast in the face of the enemy. Hardships and obstacles confronting them in their journey towards Allawh Ta'ala do not deter them. Their fortitude and steadfastness – their Sabr – are such that they do not descend to flattering the enemies of Allawh Ta'ala. Their gaze is focused on Allawh Ta'ala and they know that victory is theirs. Allawh Ta'ala says:

Those who are patient (have Sabr in their Deeni activities), we will most certainly reward them for their good acts.

Soorawh Nahl

…the men who have Sabr and the women who have Sabr …for them all, Allawh has prepared forgiveness and a great reward.

Soorawh Ahzabb

All forms of Sabr are included in this Ayah. Sabr about ibaadat, Sabr about sin and Sabr about calamities are within the purview of this Ayah that promises great reward and forgiveness for the Sawbireen.

AHADEETH

Hadhrawt Aboo Hurairah (R) narrates that Rawsoolullawh (S) said:

Shall I inform you of something by means of which Allawh eliminates sin and elevates ranks? Performing a perfect wudhu when making wudhu is displeasing (to the nafs), walking much to the Masjid, and waiting anxiously for the arrival of another Sawlah after having performed one Sawlah…

Muslim and Tirmeedhi

Hadhrawt Aboo Dardaa (R) narrates:

My Beloved (saws) made wasiyyat to me that I should not commit shirk with Allawh Ta'ala even if my flesh is cut up and even if I am cast into a fire…

Ibn Majah

Perseverance on such occasions of oppression is a high rank of Sabr. However, in cases of brutality and torture, the Qur'an Hakeem grants permission to make a verbal declaration of even kufr if the heart does not deny 'Eeman. The extraction of anti-'Eeman statements from a person under torture does not come within the Islamic definition of kufr and shirk.

Hadhrawt Ibn Abbaas (R) narrates that Rawsoolullawh (S) once appointed Hadhrawt Aboo Musa (R) as commander of an army that was despatched on an expedition by sea. In the darkness of the night while the ship was sailing, a caller from above the ship exclaimed:

O occupants of the ship! Let me inform you of something which Allawh Ta'ala has undertaken as His responsibility.

Hadhrawt Aboo Musa (R) answered:

If you have something to tell us, then speak up.

The Caller called out:

Allawh Ta'ala has undertaken the responsibility of quenching the thirst on the Day of Qiyamah of those who remained thirsty during fasting on hot days.

Targheebb

Hadhrawt Aishah (R) narrates that Rawsoolullawh (S) said:

A person who struggles in the recitation of the Qur'an (because of his inability to recite properly), will gain a double reward from Allawh.

Bukhawri and Muslim

Hadhrawt Aishah (R) narrates that Rawsoolullawh (S) said:

The most beloved deed to Allawh is such a deed on which there is constancy even if the deed is little.

Bukhawri and Muslim

It is quite evident that Sabr is required in being constant in practising a deed.

Hadhrawt Aboo Hurairah (R) narrates that Rawsoolullawh (S) said:

Jahannum is veiled in pleasures and delights while Jannat is veiled in difficulties and hardships.

Muslim

Hadhrawt Aboo Hurairah (R) narrates that Rawsoolullawh (S) said:

A Muslim's sins are forgiven whenever he is overtaken by hardship and difficulty even if it be a thorn which pricks him.

Bukhawri and Muslim

Hadhrawt Aishah (R) narrates that Rawsoolullawh (S) said:

A man who remains with Sabr and with the niyyat of thawaab at a place overtaken by an epidemic and believing that only what Allawh has decreed will happen, will attain the thawaab which a shaheed (martyr) obtains.

Bukhawri and Muslim

Hadhrawt Anas (R) narrates that Rawsoolullawh (S) said:

Allawh Ta'ala will give Jannat in return for the two eyes on which patience was exercised.

Bukhawri

This Hadeeth refers to a man losing his sight. Blindness is indeed a great hardship. Sabr in this difficulty will be rewarded with Jannat.

Hadhrawt Aboo Hurairah (R) narrates that Rawsoolullawh (S) said that Allawh Ta'ala said:

There is nothing but Jannat for the one who is patient and hopes for thawaab when I take away someone beloved to him.

Bukhawri

Sawbbr is of great merit especially on occasions of death of near and dear ones.

15. Hadhrawt Aboo Musa Ash'ari (R) narrates that Rawsoolullawh (S) said that Allawh Ta'ala orders the Malaa-ikah to erect a special mansion in Jannat for the one who had exercised patience and praised Allawh Ta'ala when an infant had passed away. The name given to such a special palace in Jannat is 'Baitul Hamd'. (Ahmad, Tirmeedhi)

Hadhrawt Aboo Dardaa (R) narrates that Rawsoolullawh (S) said:

Allawh Ta'ala loves three persons to whom He directs His special Gaze of Mercy …(Among the three, one is) a man who is prepared to sacrifice his life in the Path of Allawh, whether he actually loses his life or Allawh Ta'ala grants him victory (over the enemy). About such a person, Allawh Ta'ala says: 'Look at this servant of Mine! How he has dedicated his life to My cause!

Targheebb

Sufficient narrations have been cited to indicate the significance and importance of Sabr. Shukr will now be explained. Shukr is an ibaadat. A characteristic of Shukr is that it simplifies the ibaadat of Sabr. A man who has adopted Shukr will take calamity and hardship in his stride. Since he realises the tremendous bounties of Allawh Ta'ala on him, hence his gratitude, he will understand that the hardship has been imposed on him by his Benefactor, Allawh Ta'ala, in his own interests. His mind is thus conditioned to accept all hardships with resignation and without complaint. For the sake of gaining Thawabb, he will bear the hardships without being overwhelmed by frustration. On the contrary he will derive pleasure from the realization that the hardship has been imposed on him by his Benefactor, Allawh Ta'ala. A man of Shukr (gratitude) reflects on the ni'mats bestowed on him by Allawh Ta'ala. Such reflection strengthens the bond of love between man and his Benefactor. He cannot, therefore, become despondent, break down in the face of difficulties that he realises are trials from the side of his Creator, and Benefactor Who has always showered him with His numerous blessings and bounties. Thus, Sabr, based on the attitude of Shukr becomes a simple matter for the one overcome by calamities and hardships. Some narrations regarding Shukr will now be cited.

Allawh Ta'ala says:

Remember Me and I will remember you. Be grateful to Me and be not ungrateful.

Soorawh Baqawrawh

If you are grateful for My bounties, I will increase (these) for you. If you are ungrateful, then My punishment is severe.

Soorawh Ibbrawheem

Hadhrawt Ibn Abbaas (R) narrates that Rawsoolullawh (S) said:

Whoever has attained four things has attained the goodness of this world and the Akhirawh. These are: A heart which makes Shukr; a tongue which makes Dhikr; a body which adopts Sabr when overtaken by trials and tribulations; and, a wife who is chaste and does not abuse the wealth of her husband.

Baihaqi

It is a fact that the life of man is always confronted by some condition or the other. He may be involved in pleasing or displeasing circumstances. When enjoying pleasing conditions, man has to be grateful. He has to show Shukr. When apprehended by displeasing conditions, he has to adopt Sabr. Thus Shukr and Sabr are attributes which are to be applied at all times. Remember this well and you will live a life of peace and comfort.

ROOH XXIV

MUSLIM SOCIAL CONDUCT

This section deals with issues that are of great importance for the development of the Ummah's social life. Without a healthy social life based on piety, there will be corruption, mistrust and dissension in the community. There are certain factors that are essential ingredients for a successful communal life. Without these, a community cannot hope to have love and unity among its members. Among these essential factors, one is consultation. Consultation in affairs should be based on honesty and true sympathy for the one to whom the advice is given. If there is no mutual trust among people, there will be no confidence on the advice given. Mutual trust, love and unity among people are possible only if people ensure that they do not cause harm, difficulty and discomfort for others while at the same time there should be concern to save others from harm and hardship. This attitude will bring about true unity and love among the individuals of a community. Consultation with others also facilitates the progress of mutual love and unity. Three essentials have been mentioned in the aforegoing explanation, viz., consultation, mutual relationship and straight dealings. Some narrations will now be cited in this regard.

Hadhrawt Sahl Bin Sa'd (R) narrates that Rawsoolullawh (S) said:

Calmness in affairs is from Allawh and haste in affairs is from shaitawn.

Tirmeedhi

Consultation impedes haste that leads to failure. By consulting with others, calmness is introduced into one's affairs. In such procrastination pertaining to worldly matters, there is worldly benefit as well as Deeni benefit since the Deen has stated the significance of procrastination in mundane matters.

Allawh Ta'ala says:

(O Muhammad!) Consult with them (Sahabah) in special matters. And, when you have arrived at a decision (after consultation, irrespective of whether your decision conforms to the advice given or not) then have trust in Allawh (and proceed). Verily, Allawh loves those who rely on Him.

Al-Imrawn

The special matters refer to such affairs about which no Wahi (Revelation) had come from Allawh Ta'ala although they were important. Consultation has not been reported about matters of trivial importance.

Their (the Believers) affairs are decided by mutual consultation.

Soorawh Shuraw

The Qur'an Shareef praises the Mu'mineen because of the praiseworthy practice of 'Shuraa' or consultation by means of which they decide their affairs. The significance of consultation may be gauged from the fact that Allawh Ta'ala ordered even Rawsoolullawh (S) to consult with his Sahabah regarding matters of importance. Hadhrawt Anas (R) says that Rawsoolullawh (S) consulted with the Sahabah about the Battle of Badr.

Hadhrawt Maimoon Ibn Muhraan (R) narrates that:

When no direction on an affair could be found in the Qur'an and Hadeeth; Hadhrawt Aboo Bakr (R) would convene a gathering of intelligent and experienced men and consult with them.

It is not incumbent on the one who seeks advice or consults with others to act in accordance with the advice proffered. The episode of Hadhrawt Aboo Bakr's (R) determination to wage war against those who refused to pay Zakaat is ample testimony for this. Inspite of all advising against the campaign, Hadhrawt Aboo Bakr (R) rejected their unanimous advice and acted in terms of his own decision.

Hadhrawt Ibn Abbas (R) narrates that:

The consultants of Hadhrawt Umar (R) were Ulama – young as well as elderly Ulama.

Bukhawri

Hadhrawt Jaabir (R) narrates that Rawsoolullawh (S) said:

When a brother (Muslim) seeks to consult, then give him advice.

Ibn Majah

Some rules pertaining to consultation will now be mentioned.

1. If the consultation is a matter that requires concealing, it should be maintained a secret.

2. The participants in the consultation are people of trust. This means that what has been discussed in the gathering should not be publicised outside. However, if the discussion pertains to the usurping of another's property or to harming anyone, then it will not be permissible to conceal the conspiracy.

Matters of communal or national importance – matters that concern the community collectively – should not be publicised. Should one come by some information that concerns the entire community or nation, it has to be conveyed to the responsible persons in whose charge is the affairs of the community. In this regard, Allawh Ta'ala states in the Qur'an Shareef.

When they learn of some affair regarding matters of safety or fear, they quickly spread it (among the people). If they referred the matter to the Rawsool and to those in charge among them then, those qualified in such matters will know it (i.e. what action to take).

Soorawh Nisa

At times publication of certain information is not in the interests of the community or nation. Great harm may result in the publication of such matters. The Qur'an Hakeem, therefore, prohibits such publication which may be news for the general public, but harmful for the nation as a whole. The news media generally fall in this category of reprimand. Most newspapers spread rumours and at times publish such reports that are largely detrimental to the national interests. Information is published without thorough investigation; while sometimes investigations were made, but the reports besides having news value, harms people, communities or nations. Such detrimental publication of news comes within the prohibition stated in the above-quoted Qur'anic Ayah. Ittifaaq or unity is indeed a great ni'mat. Allawh Ta'ala says in the Qur'an Shareef:

Hold, all of You, firmly onto the Rope of Allawh and do not split up.

Soorawh Al Imrawn

The Rope of Allawh is the Deen of Allawh. The desired goal of unity is attainable only if the community adheres to the Law of Allawh Ta'ala. Unity without correct adherence to the Shariah is not possible. For the Ummah, unity will remain an empty slogan as long as the Deen is not firmly and correctly upheld. Obedience to Allawh Ta'ala will bring about the blessing of unity. Hence, the Qur'an Shareef says:

And, Allawh created unity in their hearts.

Soorawh Anfal

Linking unity to obedience of the Shariah, the Qur'an Shareef says:

O People of 'Eeman! Obey Allawh and obey the Rawsool. Do not dispute among yourselves, for your hearts will weaken and your awe (and power) will disappear.

Soorawh Anfal

This Ayah commands obedience to the Shariah in all affairs. The Believers are ordered to take their direction from Allawh and His Rawsool. Because of such obedience unity in the community will become attainable easily. Allawh Ta'ala will produce mutual love and respect in the hearts of the Mu'mineen for one another. Such unity which stems from the hearts of people will create awe and power in the nation. In the absence of this true unity, people will dispute. Their disputes will not be sincere, but will be motivated by personal, baneful and lowly motives. Infighting and mutual recriminations will prevail. This will scatter the community and destroy its power. The Kuffar will lose respect for the nation. They will no longer fear the nation of Muslims (as is the case today). Muslims will thus be overwhelmed and dominated by others. This Ayah, therefore, mentions the evil of disunity. It is declared the basis of unity and points out that the actual aim and object of Believers should be Obedience to the Deen. Hadhrawt Aboo Darda (R) narrates that Rawsoolullawh (S) said:

"Maintain healthy (loving, brotherly and straightforward) relationship among yourselves. Corruption among you destroys (your Deen)." (Tirmeedhi, Aboo Dawood)

Ittifaaq (Unity) is established and maintained by means of discharging Huqooq (Rights). People have to respect and honour the rights of one another. Disregard for the rights of other creates disunity. The question of Huqooqq (Rights) has already been discussed in Rooh IX.

RECTITUDE IN DEALINGS AND CONDUCT

Those who have some concern for Deen pay some attention to rectitude in their dealings. They do consider this matter as an issue of the Deen. However, they commit errors in their mutual dealings because of not having sufficient knowledge of the rules pertaining to such affairs. This situation may be quite simply rectified by studying the book 'Safaai Mu'aamalaat' (also by Hadhrawt Maulana Ashrawf Ali Thanwi) as well as the fifth part of Beheshti Zewer. In addition, enquiries should be made with an Aalim whenever information is required in these matters. Following the direction of an Aalim will ensure that the activity is conducted along Shar'i lines. Regarding social conduct, it must be observed that this facet of life has been much neglected. Even pious people in these times have separated this aspect of life from the Shariah. It is not even considered part of the Deen. Even people with Deeni inclinations regard social conduct as being a worldly matter having no link with the Shariah. This erroneous understanding has resulted in great neglect in this field of life. Some Qur'anic aayat and Ahadeeth will be cited to convey the significance and importance of a healthy social conduct in the lives of Muslims.

Allawh Ta'ala states:

'O people of 'Eeman! Do not enter the houses of other until you have obtained consent and made salaam on the inmates of the house …If you then do nor find anyone therein, then do not enter the house until permission has been granted for you. And, if it is said to you. 'Return!', then return. That is purer for you…

Soorawh Noor

The Mas'alah (Rule) regarding Isti'thaan (seeking permission to enter) is explained in the above verse of the Qur'an. The fact that this act of social conduct has been mentioned in the Qur'an Shareef is sufficient to convey the importance which Allawh Ta'ala accords affairs of social intercourse. It is not proper for a Believer to enter the premises of another person without having obtained his prior consent. If consent is refused, offence should not be taken, for the one refusing the consent may have a valid reason. Thus, in refusing permission, the inmates of the house are fully within their rights. In the Hadeeth recorded in Bukhawri and Muslim it has been explained that if after having made salaam (i.e. saying Assalaamu Alaykum) thrice, no permission or reply from within the house is forthcoming, one should depart and not linger around; there is great wisdom in this command of the Shariah. The inmates of the house may be in such a condition that does not permit their appearance. They may be having a rest. There may be sickness in the house and the arrival of someone is likely to create some disturbance. The inmates of the house may be engaged in some important work. The arrival of someone will interfere with their work. Therefore, no one should take offence if permission is not granted or if no one from inside answers the knock at the door. This matter of Isti'thaan (seeking permission to enter) seems of trivial importance to most people and is not considered of any Shar'i importance. But, the very fact that the Qur'an decrees its Command in this question establishes its significance.

2. Allawh Ta'ala says:

O people of 'Eeman! When it is said to you in a gathering: 'Make space,' (for newcomers), then make space. Allawh Ta'ala will grant you a spacious place (in Jannat). If (on account of some need) it is said to you: Leave (the gathering), then get up and leave.

Soorawh Mujadalah

In this command too is great wisdom, if the leader in the gathering asks or orders anyone to leave the gathering, he should be obeyed. If space is limited, the Believers should endeavour to draw together and make space available for others with an open heart. One should not become selfish and consider only one's own comfort.

Hadhrawt Aishah (R) narrates that Rawsoolullawh (S) went to bed. He remained laying on the bed until he thought that she had fallen asleep. She says:

Rawsoolullawh (S) slowly removed the blanket, put on his shoes very quietly, opened the door silently and went out. He then closed the door silently.

On this occasion, Rawsoolullawh (S) went to Jannatul Baqi, the cemetery. Upon his return, he explained the reason for his actions:

I thought that you were asleep. I did not wish to disturb you and I feared that if you awoke and found yourself to be alone, you may become scared.

Muslim

The Hadeeth states with clarity that Rawsoolullawh (S) was averse to disturbing Hadhrawt Aishah (R). This demonstrates the importance of not disturbing others by means of our acts and attitudes. A Believer must always consider the next person and not behave in a neglectful and inconsiderate manner. Such disregard for the privacy and peace of others is contrary to the Shari'ah.

Hadhrawt Miqdaad (R) narrates that three people (himself included) were once the guests of Rawsoolullawh (S). He says:

After Isha we would go to sleep. When Rawsoolullawh (S) returned late at night he made salaam in such a way that if anyone was awake he could hear it and if anyone was asleep he would not be disturbed.

Muslim

The few narrations cited above will convey the great importance of social conduct in the lives of Muslim. Islam lays much emphasis on such matters. Social conduct is an integral part of the Shariah. It cannot be separated from Islam. This subject has been dealt with in detail in our book, A'adabul Mu'asharawt as well as in the Beheshti Zewer from Part Ten onwards. A study of this subject should definitely be made by all Muslims.

ROOH XXV

THE DISTINGUISHING CHARACTERISTICS OF THE NATION OF ISLAM

It is essential for Muslims to be distinguished from the followers of other religions and cultures. Muslims should be recognisable from their external appearances. External appearance is among the salient features of Islam. In such external appearance, the identity of the nation is maintained and Muslims are guarded against assimilation into other non-Muslim cultures. Islam thus stresses the importance of external appearances. Islam prohibits unnecessary adoption of the ways and appearances of other nations. Certain acts that eliminate a Muslim's identity are haraam even if they are not the special characteristics of other communities. Thus, shaving or cutting the beard, wearing shorts that expose part of the satr, etc., are completely forbidden. If a Muslim along with the adoption of such haraam ways despises or mocks at such Shar'i prohibitions, his act of transgression progresses from sin to kufr. Then there are certain things that are not exclusive to any particular community. The adoption of such things will be permissible. If a form of dress is particular with a non-Muslim community, it will be sinful for Muslims to adopt such dress even if the Shar'i requirements about satr concealment are fulfilled by such attire. Another example of prohibited imitation is to eat sitting at tables with knives and forks. This way of eating is the manner of an alien community. Islam has taught its adherents a special way of conduct in eating. Therefore, it will not be permissible to adopt the ways of non-Muslims in this regard even if such ways have no religious undertones. If the ways adopted from the Kuffar are of religious import as well, then it will amount to kufr, e.g. wearing a cross, etc. Then there are such things that are of neither religious nor cultural import. Such things are of real use and benefit. Even if such things are the inventions of the Kuffar, there will be nothing wrong in adopting them. This applies to inventions of transport, communications, weapons and other items of benefit. However, in such matters, the nonprofessional should not determine the permissibility or prohibition of anything. He should obtain the advice and direction of the Ulama who will properly inform him. It is also prohibited to adopt the ways and appearances of such Muslims who happen to be fussaaq and bid'atis. It is also prohibited for men to take on the attire and appearance of women and vice versa. Some Qur'anic Aayat and Ahadeeth on this subject will now be cited.

Allawh Ta'ala says:

Shaitaan said. 'I will teach them to ruin the appearance made by Allawh.'

Soorawh Nisa

Examples of ruining the appearances bestowed onto us by Allawh Ta'ala are shaving the beard, tattooing, women cutting their hair, etc. Different rules apply to the changing of appearances. Certain changes are prohibited as mentioned above. Certain changes pertain to adornment and are waajib (compulsory), e.g. clipping of the moustache, cutting nails, removal of the hairs below the navel and under the arms. Other changes are permissible, e.g. for a man to shave the hair on his head, to cut the beard after it has exceeded a fist-length, etc. Such permissible ways of adornment are decided on by the Shariah and not by custom. Custom is not on par with Shariah. Furthermore, custom is subject to change with the times and attitudes of people, but not so the Shari'ah.

Do not incline to the transgressors for then the Fire will touch you.

Soorawh Hoodd

The Qur'an prohibits Muslims from inclining to (or adopting) the ways, cultures and customs of the Kuffar. Inclining towards them is punishable by the Fire of Jahannum as is stated in the above Ayah. It is evident that if one adopts a culture or the ways of a particular people, it will be because of one's pleasure for such ways and customs. The heart having inclined towards the aliens, adopts their ways that it finds pleasing and attractive. But Islam forbids its followers to incline towards the transgressors and the Kuffar.

AHADEETH

Hadhrawt 'Abbdullawh Bin Amr Bin 'As (R) narrates that:

Once he had 2 garments on him that were dyed a saffron colour. Rawsoolullawh (S) commented, "These are among the attire of the Kuffar. Do not wear these."

Muslim

Such bright coloured garments are nor permissible for men.

Hadhrawt Rukanah (R) narrates that Rawsoolullawh (S) said:

The turban tied on top of a topi is a differentiating factor between the mushrikeen and us.

Tirmeedhi

Wearing of turbans is common to both Muslims and non-Muslims. The Islamic aversion for imitation of non-Muslims is so great that it considered it necessary to create a difference in the wearing of the turban even if such difference was not visibly discernible. Hence, Rawsoolullawh (S) ordered Muslims who donned the turban to have a topi on as well. The turban will be tied on top of the topi.

Hadhrawt Ibn Umar (R) narrates that Rawsoolullawh (S) said:

Whoever imitates a nation (in its ways and culture) becomes one of them.

Ahmad and Aboo Dawoodd

If a Muslim adopts the appearance of the kaafir and faasiq, he will be associated with them in the sin.

Hadhrawt Aboo Raihaanah (R) narrates that once Rawsoolullawh (S) prohibited ten things. Among these ten things prohibited was to line garments with silk in the style of the non-Muslims (of that time).

Aboo Dawood and Nisa'i

Hadhrawt Ibn Abbaas (R) narrates that Rawsoolullawh (S) said:

Allawh curses those men who adopt the appearances of women and those women who adopt the appearances of men.

Bukhawri

Hadhrawt Ibn Abi Mulaikah (R) narrates that:

It was said to A'ishah (R) that a certain woman wears shoes that resemble the shoes of men. Hadhrawt A'ishah (R) commented: "Rawsoolullawh (S) has cursed women who imitate men."

Aboo Dawood

Such imitation is greatly in vogue in our day. In such imitation is a double sin. One sin is the imitation of the opposite sex that in itself is prohibited. The other sin is the imitation of the Kuffar by adopting their styles and fashions of dress.

Hadhrawt Hajjaaj Bin Hassan (R) narrates:

We went to meet Hadhrawt Anas (the prominent Sahaabi; on this occasion Hajjaaj was a little boy). My sister Mugheerawh told me that at that time, I was a little kid and I had two plaits on my head. Hadhrawt Anas (R) rubbed his hand over my head, made dua for barkat and said: 'Cut off these plaits because this is the style of the Jews.'

Aboo Dawood

Hadhrawt Aamir Bin Sa'd (R) narrating from his father says that Rawsoolullawh (S) said:

Maintain clean the area in front of your houses and do not imitate the Jews.

Tirmeedhi

Hadhrawt Ibn Umar (R) narrates that Rawsoolullawh (S) said:

Allawh curses the woman who adorns the hair (of others by means of adding hair) and the one who desires such adornment of hair, those who tattoo and who are tattoed.

Bukhawri and Muslim

Adorning hair by the addition of hairs for women is mentioned in this Hadeeth. If the hair added is human hair, such adornment will be haraam in all cases. If the hair is artificial and has not been made from some haraam or impure substances, it will be permissible for a married woman to resort to such adornment with the permission of her husband and for the sake of her husband. But such adornment will not be permissible for unmarried women because in presenting an artificial appearance with long hair is deception. She will be deceiving others. Tattooing is forbidden in all circumstances.

Hadhrawt Ali (R) narrates that:

Once Rawsoolullawh (S) had an Arabian crossbow in his hand. On this occasion, Rawsoolullawh (S) saw a crossbow of Persian origin in the hands of a Muslim. Rawsoolullawh (S) commented: "Throw it (the Persian bow) away and take one like this (Arabian bow)…"

Ibn Majah

From this command of Rawsoolullawh (S) it is apparent that the objects of use of other nations should not unnecessarily be adopted. This applies to weapons and all other items of use and benefit. If Muslims have their own equivalent, they should make use of their own products and not give preference to the products of the non-Muslims.

Hadhrawt Huzaifah (R) narrates that Rawsoolullawh (S) said:

Recite the Qur'an in Arabic style and tone (i.e. correct and with simplicity) and refrain from the style and tone of the People of the Book (Jews and Christians).

Baihaqi

Even in reciting, the ways of other nations and of people who do not follow the Shariah should not be imitated.

Hadhrawt 'Abbdullawh Bin Amr Ibnul Aas (R) narrates that he heard Rawsoolullawh (S) say:

A woman who imitates men and a man who imitates women are not of us.

Targheebb

It is very essential that Muslims adopt Islamic ways and methods in all their affairs, whether worldly or Deeni. There is great benefit in Muslims maintaining their Islamic identity in all their affairs and not only in matters pertaining to worship. The Qur'an and the Hadeeth emphasise this. Hadhrawt 'Abbdullawh Bin Umar (R) narrates that Rawsoolullawh (S) said,

My Ummah will be split into seventy three sects of which all, save one, will be in the Fire.

People enquired:

Which group will be saved (from the Fire)?

Rawsoolullawh (S) replied:

That group which will be on my path and the path of my Sahabah.

Tirmeedhi

Path in the context of this Hadeeth refers to the Way that has to be followed. Following a way in opposition to it leads to Jahannum. Rawsoolullawh (S) did not restrict his 'Path' to any specific department of the Shariah. This Hadeeth covers both mundane and spiritual matters. Affairs pertaining to our worldly life as well as Deeni life are included in the Path of Rawsoolullawh (S) and his Sahabah. What actually constitutes the Path of Rawsoolullawh (S)? This is not a question that everyone can expound based on his opinion. In this matter, the masses have no option other than enquiring from the Ulama who understand these issues. They have to follow the Ulama. Without following the direction given by the Ulama, the Deen of the masses is not safe.

MALFOOZAT STATEMENTS

1. The commercial peers (spiritual guides) say that they will not divulge the special mysteries without 1 becoming Bait to them. This is nothing but their fabrication. Indeed, what are the special mysteries that they will not divulge? Most certainly, whatever mysteries were essential (for Muslims) were delivered to the world by Rawsoolullawh (S) from the hilltops, Mimbars, and in public. In fact, whatever special mysteries they (the commercial mentors) claim to know of – mysteries that are apart from what Rawsoolullawh (S) had divulged – are evils. By means of such evils, they are desirous of trapping people in their pernicious nets of deception. Most assuredly, they are unable to divulge such evils publicly. Indeed, their special mysteries are such evils that they cannot divulge even after 1 has become Bait to them for no one will divulge his own faults and evils.
2. The majority of these customary spiritual guides are ignorant. They speak whatever notoriety comes to their lips. They consider initiation into the Path to be sufficient for salvation.
3. The commercial peers are adept at schemes to strangle people (i.e. destroy their 'Eeman).
4. It is indeed grave and highly dangerous to give up one's Math-hab for a worldly motive, e.g. a Shaafi becomes a Hanafi or a Hanafi becomes a Shaafi merely for some worldly reason.

5. There is no difference of opinion (among the authorities of the Shariah) regarding the Nuzool (decent from heaven) of Nabi Isaa (A). There is Ijma' (Consensus) on this belief. Only the Qawdiani who himself claimed to be Nabi 'Eesa (A) has denied the Nuzool of Nabi 'Eesa (A).
6. Do not commit sins and death will be easy for you. Do not incur debt and you will lead a free life on earth.
7. During these times, some people are proclaimed as pious and learned. However, they divert their children into the pursuit of secular education. I am sure that such people regret even the fact that they are Aalim. They must be wondering: 'Why did we acquire this (Deeni) knowledge? Why did we not acquire English education?' Indeed, this condition is highly dangerous, for they are denigrating and despising the Knowledge of the Deen in their hearts. May Allawh Ta'ala have mercy on them and may He guide them.
8. In their mission of proclaiming the Haqq, the pious 'Ulama and Auliya whom we follow never feared the criticism of those who insult. There is only one attribute in our Ulama that people dislike, viz., and their stand of proclaiming the Truth. Truth is always bitter. This is what we love so much. Thus, there is no scope for detestation.
9. In this time, the women of most nations have been overtaken by the malady of immodesty.
10. Leave alone the public – even Ulama have become entangled in the prevailing political confusion. They too have exceeded the bounds (of the Shariah). Much of the deviation (dhalal) prevailing nowadays has spread because of such Ulama (who violate the Shariah in their political pursuits).
11. Today is the age and reign of atheism and materialism. The poisonous effect is such that respect and honour for Rawsoolullawh (S) are being banished from the hearts (of Muslims).
12. In the majority of cases, corruption is the consequence of increasing association (i.e. striking up unnecessary association and relationship). Association with others should be reduced to the degree of necessity.
13. To cherish long and distant hopes is evil.
14. For liquidation of debt, recite after Isha, Ya Mughni 1100 times. Before reciting this, recite Durood Shareef 11 times and after completing the recital of Ya Mughni again recite Durood Shareef eleven times. This has been prescribed by Hadhrawt Hajee Imdadullawh Sahibb (R'A).
15. Emulating the westerners has become thoroughly ingrained (in Muslims). Appearances, ways and styles of the west have become the lifestyle of Muslims.
16. Nowadays, the ailment of futility (nonsensical and useless acts and talks) has overtaken people.
17. People are excessively obsessed with dreams. Their concern for things that they dream is greater than their concern for things that affect them during their state of wakefulness. How confused are they!
18. The occupation of people of Bid'ah is to perpetually criticise and condemn others. They never speak or do anything beneficial. They lack Deen and they lack understanding.
19. Shariah and Tareeqat is both the same thing. There is no conflict between the two. Thus, Tasawwuf (that is another name for Tareeqawt) is not at variance with the Shariah.
20. Durwaishi (Tasawwuf or Tareeqat) is to obey the Commands of Allawh Ta'ala fully. The gain of Durwaishi is the obtainal of Allawh's Pleasure.
21. Durwaishi requires total obedience to the Commands of Allawh Ta'ala, be such commands external, e.g. Sawlah, Sawm, etc., or internal, e.g. Sawbr, Shukr, etc.
22. Neither kashf (inspirational revelation) nor karawmat (miracle) is a requisite of Durwaishi.
23. Kashf and karaamat are incidental to some Auliya while not to others. It is not necessary that every Wali demonstrate acts of kashf and karaamat

A BRIEF BIOGRAPHY OF HAKIMUL UMMAH MAULANA ASHRAWF ALI THANAWI (R'A)

Hakeem-ul-Ummah Maolana Ashrawf 'Alee Thanwi was born on 5 Rawbi-uth-Thani 1280 AH in the village of Thana Bowan. He lost his mother at a tender age and was brought up by his father in a fairly affluent background. His father took great pains in teaching Maolana and his younger brother discipline and good character. From a young age he had a great desire for namaaz. Even whilst playing he used to imitate the namaazis e.g. he gathered all his friends shoes, placed them in a line, put one shoe in front of the line and expressed his happiness that the shoes were performing namaaz. He also had a great desire to give lectures. On his way to the shops he used to enter any masjid, ascend the mimbar and deliver a khutbah. At the age of 12 he began performing tahajjud and other nafl salaats and wazifahs. His desire for Deen was initiated by his initial ustaad Maolana Fatih Muhammad Sahib. After learning the basic kitaabs by his uncle and Moulana Fateh Muhammed he proceeded to Deoband to complete his studies and qualified at the tender age of 19 or 20 years. From his student days he became famous for his intelligence and sharp wittedness. He never wasted his time in futile play and amusement. He had such a burning desire to obtain knowledge that he learnt certain kitaabs which he could not study during class times, from his ustaads while they were performing wudhu. Moulana's ustaads were all great luminaries of their time. The most important amongst them was Moulana Muhammed Yaqub Saheb from whom he achieved the greatest amount of knowledge and spiritual benefit. He learnt qiraw'at from the well-known Qawri Muhammad Abdullah Saheb Muhajir Makki and mastered it to such an extent that it became difficult for the listener to distinguish between the recitation of the student and the teacher. After qualifying he spent 14 years in Kanpur teaching, writing and propagating to the people. During this period thousands of students quenched their thirst at this ocean of knowledge. Although Moulana was still very young, the people of Kanpur respected and honoured him tremendously and it was at that time that he became famous. His discourses were greatly appreciated and were being printed in the form of booklets. Very few scholars in the history of Islam have had so many of their discourses printed. During his student days in Deoband he desired to make a pledge on the hands of Maolana Rawsheed Ahaed Gangohi who refused, saying that it would harm his studies. Moulana then wrote a letter to Hajee Imdadullah in Makkah urging him to make Moulana Gangohi accept the pledge. Hajee Imdadullah instead by means of a letter accepted Moulana Thanwi as his disciple. When Moulana Thanwi accompanied his father for hajj one year after qualifying he renewed his pledge at the hands of Hajee Imdadullah. After his return from Hijaz, he continued teaching and propagating while his desire for zikr intensified. He used to deliver lectures while standing 5,6 and sometimes even 7 hours continuously. In 1315 AH, he left Kanpur and on the advice of his spiritual mentor Hajee Imadadullah returned to Thana Bowan. This was all part of the divine plan of the Creator so that the Khanqah of Hajee Imdadullah would once again be reinhabited. This was the termination of the first phase of his life which was devoted more to deeni education. The second phase which began with his return to Thana Bowan was devoted more to imparting spritiual benefits to the masses. Moulana has written books in every field whether it be tafseer or tasawwuf, fiqh or tajweed. All his works total more than 1000. In the field of Hadeeth he did not write any voluminous work directly because he had many assistants. In this way the voluminous Ila us Sunan was written under his guidance. Regarding this kitabb he said that if this madressah does no other work besides the writing of this book, it will be a great achievement because it is a unique work. Perhaps very few Muslim homes do not posses Behisti Zewar and Munajaat e Maqbool, two of Moulana's famous books. His tafseer Bayanul Quraan is unparalleled." Moulana Anwar Shah Kashmiri well known for his in-depth knowledge used to say that after reading Bayanul Quraan I developed a desire to read Urdu books. Although Maolana wrote such a large number of books yet he did not earn a cent from them. All his work was solely for the pleasure of Allawh. He has granted full permission to anyone who desires to print his books. Some of his works have been through hundreds of editions. Moulana used to say that Alhamdulillah all the necessary work has been done. The path towards deen has been cleared for centuries. Insha-Allawh, my books, discourses and advices will be of assistance in deeni matters for future generations. This is all due to the blessings of Hajee Imdadullah. On 20 Jamadul Awwal 1346 AH whilst performing Fajr Sawlah he was inspired about the effects of certain acts. If the Muslims practised these acts, their calamities could be overcome. Consequently Maolana gathered 25 principles and had them printed in a booklet namely Hayatul Muslimeen (now available in English). Although Maolana has written over 1000 books yet he had this to say: "I ever had no thought of any of my books being a means of salvation for me. However, with regards to Hayatul Muslimeen, I've a strong feeling it'll be a means of my salvation. I regard it as the earning and capital of my entire life." Moulana Thanwi spent his entire life serving deen in every field. It is for this reason that he has been given the titles Hakimul Ummat and Mujaddid-e-Millat. After blessing the earth for 83 years with his presence, he passed away on 16 Rajab 1362 A.H. (20 July 1943). Namaze Janazah was performed by Moulana Zafar Ahmad Usmani. Moulana Thanwi was buried in the graveyard - Ishqq-Bazaan of Thana Bowan.

BELIEFS

Beliefs concerning Allawh Ta'ala

1. In the beginning, the entire universe was non-existent. Through the creation of Allawh, it came into existence.
2. Allawh Ta'ala is One. He is not dependent on anyone. He has not given birth to anyone, nor was He begotten. He does not have any wife. There is no one equal to Him.
3. He has been since eternity and will remain till eternity.
4. There is nothing similar to Him. He is unique.
5. He is alive. He has power over everything. There is nothing that is beyond His knowledge. He sees and hears everything. He speaks, but His speech is not like ours. He does whatever He wishes and there is no one to stop or reprimand Him. He alone is worthy of being worshipped. He has no partner. He is merciful to His servants. He is the lord. He is free of all blemishes. He is the one who saves His servants from all calamities. He is the possessor of honour and greatness. He is the creator of all things; nothing has created Him. He is the forgiver of sins. He is all-powerful.
He gives in abundance. He is the one who gives sustenance. He decreases the sustenance of whoever He wishes and increases the sustenance of whoever He wishes. He humiliates whoever He wishes and elevates whoever He wishes. He gives honour to whoever He wishes and disgraces whoever He wishes. He is just. He is extremely tolerant and forbearing. He values and rewards service and worship rendered to Him. He accepts duas (supplications). He is all-encompassing. He is the ruler over everyone and no one is a ruler over Him. No work of His is devoid of wisdom. He fulfils the needs of everyone. He is the one who created everyone and He is the one who will bring all back to life on the day of qiyaamah. He is the one who gives life and He causes death.
Everyone knows Him through signs and attributes. No one can know the essence of His being. He accepts the repentance of the sinners. He punishes those who deserve punishment. He is the one who gives guidance. Whatever happens in this universe occurs under His order. Without His order, even an atom cannot move. He does not sleep nor does He slumber. He does not get weary of protecting the entire universe. He is the one who is keeping everything in control. He has all good and beautiful qualities. There is no bad or defective quality in Him, nor is there any blemish in Him.
6. All His qualities are from eternity and will remain till eternity. No quality of His can ever disappear.
7. He is free from the qualities of the creation. Wherever such qualities have been mentioned in the Quran or Hadith, we leave the meanings of them to Allawh. He is the one who knows the reality of these things. We believe in these things without delving into them and have the conviction that whatever their meanings may be, they are correct. And this is the best way of looking at these things. Alternatively, we could give them some appropriate meaning with which we could get an understanding of them.
8. Whatever good or evil that takes place in the world, Allawh Ta'ala knows of it from eternity; and according to His knowledge He brings it into existence. This is what is meant by taqdir (pre-destination). There is a lot of mysterious wisdom in creating even evil things. Everyone is not aware of this wisdom.
9. Allawh Ta'ala has given man an understanding and the power of choice with which he chooses between good and evil. However, man does not have the power to bring anything into existence of his own accord. Allawh Ta'ala is pleased with good deeds and displeased with evil deeds.
10. Allawh Ta'ala has not ordered man to do anything which is beyond his power.
11. Allawh Ta'ala is not bound by anything. Whatever mercy He shows is solely out of His kindness and virtue.

Beliefs concerning the Prophets

1. Allawh Ta'ala has sent down many prophets to guide mankind onto the right path. They are all free from sins. Their actual number is known to Allawh alone. In order to establish their truthfulness, Allawh caused new and difficult acts to happen through them which others cannot do. Such acts are called miracles (mu'jizaat).
The first prophet is Aadam alayhis salaam and the last is Muhammad sallAllawhu alayhi wa sallam. All the others came in between these two. Some of them are famous, such as: Nuh alayhis salaam, Ibrahim alayhis salaam, Is'haaq alayhis salaam, Ismail alayhis salaam, Yaqub alayhis salaam, Yusuf alayhis salaam, Daud alayhis salaam, Sulayman alayhis salaam, Ayyub alayhis salaam, Musa alayhis salaam, Harun alayhis salaam, Zakariyyah alayhis salaam, Yahya alayhis salaam, Isa alayhis salaam, Ilyas alayhis salaam, al-Yasa' alayhis salaam, Yunus alayhis salaam, Lut alayhis salaam, Idris alayhis salaam, Zul Kifl alayhis salaam, Salih alayhis salaam, Hud alayhis salaam, and Shuayb alayhis salaam.
2. Allawh Ta'ala did not show the exact number of prophets to anyone. We should therefore have this belief that we have faith in all the prophets that Allawh sent down; those that we know of and those that we do not know of as well.
3. The status of some prophets is higher than that of others. The highest status is that of our Prophet Muhammad sallAllawhu alayhi wa sallam. No new prophet can come after him. He is the prophet of all mankind and jinn right until the day of Qiyamat.
4. Allawh Ta'ala took our Prophet sallAllawhu alayhi wa sallam physically while he was awake, from Makkah to Baitul Maqdis, and from there to the seven heavens, and from there to wherever Allawh wanted. He then sent him back to Makkah. This journey is known as the Mi'raj.

Beliefs concerning angels and jinn

After creating certain creatures from light, Allawh Ta'ala concealed them from our sight. These creatures are called angels. A lot of work has been given to them. They never do anything contrary to the orders of Allawh Ta'ala. They continue doing whatever work they have been assigned to do. Among them, four angels are very famous. They are: Hadrat Jibra'eel alayhis salaam, Hadrat Mika'eel alayhis salaam, Hadrat Israfeel alayhis salaam, and Hadrat Izra'eel alayhis salaam.
Allawh Ta'ala created certain creatures from fire. We cannot see them as well. They are called jinn. There are all types of jinn; both good and bad. They also have children. The most famous among them is the accursed Iblis, i.e. Shaytaan.

Beliefs concerning the auliya (friends of Allawh)

1. When a Muslim engages in an abundance of ibaadah, abstains from sins, does not become attached to the world, and follows the Prophet sallAllawhu alayhi wa sallam in every way, he becomes the friend and beloved of Allawh Ta'ala. Such a person is called a wali. At times, a wali does certain acts which cannot be done by others. These acts are called karamaat (miracles, or noble and excellent deeds).
2. No matter how high a stage a wali may reach, he will never be equal to a prophet.
3. No matter how beloved to Allawh a wali may become, as long as he is in his senses, it will be incumbent upon him to follow the Shariah. Salaat, fasting, and any other act of worship is not forgiven. Acts which are sinful do not become permissible for him.
4. The person who acts contrary to the Shariah cannot be a friend of Allawh. If he does some miraculous act, then it is either magic or something enacted through the influence of the soul or satan. These things should not be believed in.
5. At times, a wali comes to know of certain mysterious things either in his sleep or while awake. This is known as kashf or ilhaam (manifestations or inspirations). If these things are in conformity with the Shariah, they are acceptable, if not, they have to be rejected.
6. Allawh and His Rasul sallAllawhu alayhi wa sallam have shown all the matters pertaining to the Deen in the Quran and Hadith. To bring some new thing into the Deen is not permitted. Such new things are known as bid'aat (innovations). An innovation is a major sin.

Beliefs concerning heavenly books

Allawh Ta'ala has sent down many small and large books through the angel Jibra'eel alayhis salaam to the prophets so that they may teach the matters of Deen to their respective communities. Among these books, four are very famous: the Torah which was sent to Musa alayhis salaam, the Zabur which was sent to Daud alayhis salaam, the Injil which was sent to Isa alayhis salaam, and the Quran which was sent to our Prophet Muhammad sallAllawhu alayhi wa sallam. The Quran is the last of the books. Now, no new book will be sent from the heavens. The instructions of the Quran will remain valid right until the day of qiyaamah. Misguided people changed a lot of things in the other books. But Allawh Ta'ala has promised the protection of the Quran. No one can change it in any way.

Beliefs concerning the Sahabah (Companions)

1. Those Muslims who have seen our Prophet sallAllawhu alayhi wa sallam and have died as Muslims, are known as Sahabah. Very great virtues have been mentioned with regard to them. We have to love and think good of all of them. If we hear of any dispute or conflict among them, we should regard it as a misunderstanding or a miscalculation. We should not speak any ill of them.

The greatest among them are four Companions: Hadrat Abu Bakr Siddiq radiAllawhu anhu. He took the place of Rasulullah sallAllawhu alayhi wa sallam and supervised the matters of the Deen. He is therefore called the first Khalifah. He is the best person in the entire ummat. After him comes Hadrat Umar radiAllawhu anhu. He is the second Khalifah. After him is the third Khalifah, Hadrat Uthman radiAllawhu anhu. After him is the fourth Khalifah, Hadrat Ali radiAllawhu anhu.

2. The status of the Sahabah is so high that even the greatest of walis cannot reach a stage equal to the lowest Sahabi.

3. All the children and wives of the Prophet sallAllawhu alayhi wa sallam are worthy of respect. Among his children, Hadrat Fatima radiAllawhu anha has the highest status. Among his wives, Hadrat Khadija and Hadrat Aisha radiAllawhu anhuma have the highest status.

General Beliefs

1. One's Imaan (faith) is only complete when one regards Allawh and His Rasul sallAllawhu alayhi wa sallam as true in everything and accepts everything from them. To have a doubt regarding any aspect of Allawh and His Rasul sallAllawhu alayhi wa sallam, or to reject it, or to find faults with it, or to mock at it will cause the Imaan to go away.

2. To reject the clear meanings of the Quran and Hadith, and to twist their meanings by concocting one's own meaning amounts to disbelief.

3. By regarding a sin to be permissible, one's Imaan goes away.

4. No matter how serious a sin may be, as long as it is regarded as a sin, Imaan will remain. However, it (Imaan) does get weaker (diminish).

5. To be absolutely fearless of Allawh Ta'ala, or to despair of His mercy amounts to kufr.

6. To ask someone of unseen things (ghayb) and to have conviction in them is kufr.

7. No one knows the unseen except Allawh Ta'ala. However, certain things are made known to prophets through revelations (wahi), to walis through manifestations and inspirations (kashf and ilhaam), and to ordinary people through signs.

8. To call a person a kafir by name or to curse him is a major sin. However, we can say in general terms: Allawh's curse be on the oppressors, or Allawh's curse be on the liars. If Allawh and His Rasul sallAllawhu alayhi wa sallam have cursed someone specifically by name, or informed us of them being kafir; it will not be a sin for us to call them kafir or mal'un (accursed).

9. When a person dies and if he is buried, then after he is buried; and if he is not buried, then in whatever state he may be in; two angels come to him. One's name is Munkar and the other is Nakeer. They come and ask him: "Who is your creator? What is your Deen?" and pointing to Rasulullah sallAllawhu alayhi wa sallam, "Who is this person?" If the deceased was a strong believer, he will answer all the questions correctly. Thereafter there will be all sorts of comforts for him. They will open a window towards jannah from which a cool and fragrant breeze will continue blowing and he will continue sleeping peacefully. As for the one who was not a believer, to all the questions he will reply that he does not know anything. Thereafter, he will be subjected to great hardships and punishment right until the day of qiyaamah. Allawh Ta'ala exempts some people from this test, but all these things are known to the deceased only. We cannot see these things, just as a sleeping person sees everything in his dream, while a person sitting next to him remains totally unaware.

10. After death, the deceased is shown his abode every morning and evening. A jannati (dweller of paradise) is given glad tidings by being shown his abode in paradise, while a jahannami (dweller of hell) is shown his abode in hell and thereby made more despondent and wretched.

11. By making dua for the deceased and giving in charity on his behalf, rewards reach him and is very beneficial to him.

12. All the signs of qiyaamah as foretold by Allawh and His Rasul sallAllawhu alayhi wa sallam will definitely occur. Imam Mahdi will appear and will rule with absolute justice. The one-eyed Dajjal will appear and cause a lot of corruption in the world. Hadrat Isa alayhis salaam will come down from the heavens in order to kill him and will succeed in killing him. Yajuj and Majuj is a very powerful nation. They will spread throughout the earth and create a lot of disturbance. Then through the power of Allawh they will be destroyed. A strange animal will come out from the ground and converse with people. The sun will rise from the west. The Quran will be raised and within a few days all the Muslims will die and the world will be filled with kuffar. Apart from this, many other incidents will take place.

13. When all the foretold signs are fulfilled, preparations for Qiyamat will commence. Under instruction from Allawh Ta'ala, Hadrat Israfeel alayhis salaam will blow the trumpet. This trumpet will be in the shape of a very large horn. On the blowing of the trumpet, the earth and skies will be blown into smithereens. All the creatures will die, and those that have already died, their souls will become unconscious. But those whom Allawh wishes to protect, will remain as they are. A specific period will pass in this condition.

14. When Allawh wishes the entire universe to arise again, the trumpet will be blown a second time. By the blowing of the trumpet, the entire universe will be re-born. All the dead will be brought to life and they will all gather in the field of resurrection. In apprehension of all the difficulties of qiyaamah, they will all go to the prophets for intercession. Eventually, our Prophet sallAllawhu alayhi wa sallam will intercede. The scales will be raised and all good and bad deeds will be weighed and accounted for. A few people will enter paradise without reckoning. The pious people will be given their book of deeds in their right hands while the sinners will be given in their left hands. Rasulullah sallAllawhu alayhi wa sallam will make his followers drink water from the Haud-e-Kauthar (the fountain of abundance). The water of this fountain will be whiter than milk and sweeter than honey. Everyone will also have to cross the Sirat. Those who were pious, will cross it and enter paradise. Those who were sinners, will fall down into hell.

15. Hell has already been created. It has snakes, scorpions and many other types of punishments. Among the dwellers of hell, those that have even an iota of Imaan will be taken out of hell and admitted into paradise after having been punished for their evil deeds, and after the intercession of the prophets and pious servants of Allawh. This is irrespective of how great sinners they may have been. As for the disbelievers and polytheists (mushrikeen) they will abide therein forever and will not even die.

16. Paradise has also been created. It has various types of comforts and luxuries. The dwellers of paradise will have no sort of fear or concern whatsoever. They will abide therein forever. They will not come out of it, nor will they die.

17. Allawh Ta'ala has the full right to punish over minor sins or to forgive over major sins and not to punish at all.

18. Allawh Ta'ala does not ever forgive kufr or shirk. Apart from this, whatever other sins there may be, He will forgive whoever He wishes out of His mercy.

19. Apart from all those whom Allawh and His Rasul sallAllawhu alayhi wa sallam have taken by name that they will enter paradise, we cannot say with certainty in regard to anyone else that they will enter paradise. However, after looking at good signs, it is necessary to be optimistic and hopeful of His mercy.

20. The greatest bounty in paradise is seeing Allawh Ta'ala. This will be given to the dwellers of paradise. In comparison to this pleasure, all other bounties will appear insignificant.

21. While awake, no one has seen Allawh with his very eyes in this world, nor can anyone see Him.

22. No matter how good or bad a person may have been throughout his life, he will be recompensed according to the state in which he dies.

23. Whenever a person repents or accepts Islam, his repentance or Islam will be accepted by Allawh Ta'ala. However, at the time of death, when he is breathing his last and he sees the angels of death, neither repentance nor his accepting Islam will be acceptable.

INCORRECT BELIEFS AND ACTIONS

After this, it seems appropriate to mention a few incorrect beliefs, evil customs, and major sins which are committed quite often and which cause a shortcoming in one's Imaan. In mentioning these things, it is hoped that people will guard themselves from them. Some of these are absolute kufr and shirk, some are very close to kufr and shirk, others are innovations and delusions, while others are sins. It is therefore necessary to safeguard one's self from all of them. After mentioning these things, a few worldly harms of sinning and worldly benefits of good deeds will be mentioned. Since people tend to give more attention to worldly gains and losses, it is hoped that in this way there will be the desire to do good and abstain from evil.

Kufr and Shirk

This chapter deals with those aspects that have a special connection with kufr and shirk either because these aspects necessitate kufr and shirk, or because they are customs and habits of the kuffar and mushrikeen, or they have traces of shirk, or because they lead to kufr and shirk.

The following are forbidden in the Shariah:

1. To like kufr, to appreciate the things of kufr, and to make someone else commit an act of kufr.
2. To express regret or remorse at one's own Imaan due to some reason or other, e.g. by thinking that if he were not a Muslim, he could have attained such and such a thing.
3. To say the following things out of grief on the death of one's children or close ones: "Allawh wanted to kill him only", "he was the only person left in the world for Allawh to kill", "Allawh should not have done this", "No one perpetrates such brutality as You have done."
4. To think ill of or find fault with any order of Allawh and His Rasul sallAllawhu alayhi wa sallam.
5. To scorn at any prophet or angel, or to find fault with them.
6. To have the belief that a particular saint or pious person has full knowledge of all our conditions at all times.
7. To ask about unknown matters or to cause events to be foretold from an astrologer or person under the influence of a jinn, and then to believe in what they say.
8. To take omens from the speech of a pious person and then to regard them as true.
9. To implore someone from a great distance and to think that he must have definitely come to know of it.
10. To regard someone as having the choice of benefitting or causing harm.
11. To ask someone for the fulfilment of one's needs, sustenance and children.
12. To fast in someone's name.
13. To prostrate to someone.
14. To release an animal in someone's name or to make an offering in someone's name.
15. To make a pledge in the name of someone.
16. To make tawaaf around the grave or house of someone.
17. To give priority to other things or customs over the orders of Allawh Ta'ala.
18. To bow in front of someone or to stand motionless like a statue in front of him.
19. To make an offering of a goat to a jinn, etc.
20. To sacrifice an animal in the name of someone.
21. To make an offering or sacrifice a goat, etc. in order to rid one's self of a jinn, ghost, or evil spirit.
22. To worship the navel-cord of the child so that it may live.
23. To cry out to someone (other than Allawh) for justice.
24. To respect and revere any place as one would do for the Ka'bah.
25. To pierce the ears or nose of a child and to make him wear an ear or nose-ring in the name of someone.
26. To tie a coin on the arm, or a string around the neck in the name of someone.
27. To make children wear garlands, wreaths, to keep locks of hair over their heads, or to make them beggars.
28. To keep names such as Ali Bakhsh (given by Ali), Husayn Bakhsh (given by Husayn), Abdun Nabi (slave of the prophet), etc.
29. To attach the name of a particular saint on an animal and to respect it thereafter.
30. To believe that the affairs of the world are under the influence of the stars.
31. To ask about auspicious and inauspicious days and dates and to take omens from them.
32. To regard certain months and dates as unlucky.
33. To recite the name of a particular saint in the form of remembrance or incantations.
34. To say that if Allawh and His Rasul sallAllawhu alayhi wa sallam wish such and such a thing, it will be done.
35. To take an oath in the name or on the head of someone.
36. To keep pictures of animate objects. Especially to keep pictures of a particular saint as a source of blessing and to respect it.

Apart from this, there are many other things. These have been mentioned in order to serve as an example.

Innovations and Evil Customs

To introduce something which has no basis in Shariah into the Deen, to regard it as part of Deen, and to act upon it with the hope of reward, is called a bid'ah (innovation). An innovation is a major sin.

The following innovations and customs should be abstained from:

1. To organize and hold grand fairs at graves, to light lamps there, for women to visit them, and to cover graves with sheets.
2. To construct tombs over the graves.
3. To go to extremes in revering the graves with a view to please the saint of the grave.
4. To make ta'zias, to kiss the graves and rub its dust on one's face.
5. To make tawaaf and sajdah to the graves.
6. To read salaat towards the graves.
7. To make offerings of sweetmeats, rice, etc. to the graves.
8. To keep ta'zias or emblems on the graves, and to keep sweets, etc. on them.
9. To salute graves and regard them as unique and incomparable.
10. To abstain from the following acts in the month of Muharram:

a) eating betel leaves,
b) applying henna (mehendi),
c) the company of the husband,
d) wearing red clothes,
e) eating out of the dish named after Hazrat Fatimah (R.A.).

11. To observe the third and fortieth days as compulsory after death ceremonies.
12. To regard the second marriage of a woman as a blemish despite there being a need for it.
13. To perform the different ceremonies of Nikah (marriage), Khatna (circumcision), Bismillah (beginning of education), etc., inspite of lack of means, especially by putting oneself in debt and making arrangements for music and dances.
14. To observe the festivals of Holi and Diwali.
15. To greet in any way other than the greeting of As salaamu alai kum, or to just bow by raising the hand to the head.
16. To appear before one's brother-in-law, sister-in-law, cousins, or any other strangers, etc. without any modesty or bashfulness.
17. To bring water from the river while singing.

18. To listen to music or play musical instruments, or to make dancing girls dance and to reward them for it.
19. To be boastful or proud of one's lineage or family, or to consider any connection with any saint to be sufficient for salvation.
20. To taunt someone on account of his lower lineage, or to regard any permissible occupation to be despicable or below your dignity.
21. To go to extremes in praising someone.
22. To spend extravagantly in marriages and other senseless ceremonies.
23. To follow Hindu customs.
24. To make the bridegroom wear clothes which are contrary to the Shariah, to adorn him with garlands, to apply henna (mehendi) on him, to light fireworks and make unnecessary decorations.
25. To bring the bridegroom among the women and in front of them, or to peep at him.
26. To bring the mature (baaligh) sister-in-law (bride's sister) in front of the bridegroom, to joke with her, or to hold "chauthi" (a ceremony on the fourth day of the marriage).
27. To go and listen to the conversation of the bride and bridegroom while they are in their privacy, to peep at them or to eavesdrop; and if you hear something, to tell it to others.
28. To make the bride attend the feast given by the bridegroom and to force her to sit there to the extent that even her salaat is missed.
29. To fix exhorbitant mehr (dowry) out of pride and boastfulness.
30. To weep aloud out of sorrow, or to beat the face and chest, or to cry in a shouting manner.
31. To break the containers which were in use at the time of death, or to get the clothes washed which touched the body of the dead.
32. Not to prepare pickles, etc. in the house of mourning for about a year or so.
33. Not to celebrate any happy or joyous occassion.
34. To revive the sorrow or mourning on certain fixed dates.
35. To excessively occupy one's self in make-up and self-beautification and to look down upon simplicity.
36. To hang pictures and photographs in the house.
37. To use gold or silver utensils.
38. To wear thin or flimsy clothing, or to wear jingling and tinkling jewellery.
39. To wear short skirts.
40. To attend the gatherings of men, eg. processions and fairs.
41. To adopt the dressing of the opposite sex.
42. To tatoo the body.
43. To practise witchcraft and cast spells.
44. To hang and suspend carpets from walls and ceilings merely for decoration and beautification.
45. To embrace and hug ghayr mahrams (those with whom hijaab is necessary) at the time of departing or returning from a journey.
46. To pierce the nose or ear of a male child as an omen for long life.
47. To make the male child wear a nose or ear ring, or silk, or saffron-dyed clothes, or any jewellery on the neck, feet or wrists.
48. To feed the children with opium (and other similar drugs) in order to keep them quiet.
49. To give someone the meat or milk of a lion because of some illness.

There are many other similar incorrect beliefs, customs, and innovations. These have been mentioned to serve as an example.

A few major sins regarding which severe warnings have been mentioned

1. To ascribe partners to Allawh.
2. To shed the blood of someone unjustly.
3. To practise witchcraft and charms by childless women during the confinement of another woman so that the child of that woman may die and she may have a child. This also amounts to murder.
4. To taunt or torment one's parents.
5. To commit adultery.
6. To devour the wealth of orphans, eg. many women usurp the wealth and belongings of the deceased husband and deprive the children of their share.
7. To deprive the daughters of their share in the inheritance.
8. To accuse a woman of adultery even on the slightest doubt.
9. To oppress or persecute someone.
10. To backbite or slander someone.
11. To despair of the mercy of Allawh Ta'ala.
12. To act contrary to one's promise.
13. To betray a trust (amaanah).
14. To discard any fard (compulsory duty) enjoined by Allawh Ta'ala, eg. salaat, fasting, hajj, zakaat, etc.
15. To forget the Holy Quran after having memorized it.
16. To speak lies. Especially to take false oaths.
17. To swear by the name of anyone other than Allawh.
18. To take an oath with such words that the person is deprived of the kalimah at the time of death, or may die without Imaan.
19. To prostrate before anyone other than Allawh Ta'ala.
20. To miss salaat without a valid excuse.
21. To call any Muslim a kafir, or non-believer, or to invoke the wrath or punishment of Allawh on him, or to call him an enemy of Allawh.
22. To complain against someone, or to hear such a complaint.
23. To steal.
24. To take interest (usury).
25. To express joy on the rise and inflation of the value of commodities or goods.
26. To insist on reducing the price after having agreed to it.
27. To sit in seclusion with ghayr mahrams (those with whom the observance of hijaab is necessary).
28. To gamble. Some women and girls play certain games with stakes on them. This is also a kind of gambling.
29. To like and be attracted to the customs of the kuffaar.
30. To find fault with food.
31. To enjoy dancing and listening to music.
32. To abstain from giving advice inspite of having the power to do so.
33. To ridicule someone with a view to humiliating and embarrassing him.
34. To look for faults in others.

The Worldly Harms of Sinning

1. Deprival of knowledge.
2. Decrease in one's sustenance (rizq).
3. Trembling and shuddering at the mention of Allawh Ta'ala.
4. Feeling uneasy in the presence of men, especially good and pious men.
5. Experiencing difficulty in most affairs.
6. Loses purity of the heart.
7. Feels weakness of heart, and at times, weakness of the entire body.
8. Gets deprived or bereft of obedience (doing good deeds).
9. His life is shortened.
10. Deprived of the capability to repent (make taubah).
11. After some time, the seriousness of sins comes out of his heart.
12. Becomes despicable in the sight of Allawh.
13. His immorality or wrongdoing affects other people and he is thereby cursed by them.
14. His intellect becomes weak or deficient.
15. He is cursed by Rasulullah sallAllawhu alayhi wa sallam.
16. Is deprived of the duas of the angels.
17. Faces a shortage in crops.
18. Loses modesty and a sense of self-respect.
19. The greatness of Allawh Ta'ala comes out of the heart.
20. Is deprived of all bounties and blessings.
21. Is engulfed or inundated by difficulties and calamities.
22. The shayateen are deputed over him.
23. His heart is always in turmoil.
24. Is unable to read the kalimah at the time of death.
25. Despairs of the mercy of Allawh Ta'ala, and because of this, dies without having repented.

The Worldly Benefits of Obedience

1. Sustenance is increased.
2. Receives blessings and bounties of all kinds.
3. Problems and difficulties distance themselves.
4. Experiences ease in fulfilling his needs.
5. Experiences a life of contentment.
6. Rains become plentiful.
7. All types of calamities are warded off.
8. Allawh Ta'ala becomes very kind and helpful.
9. Angels are commanded to keep his heart strong.
10. Gets true respect and honour.
11. His status is raised.
12. Everyone has love for him in their hearts.
13. The Quran becomes a source of deliverance on his behalf.
14. If he experiences any material loss, he is compensated with something better.
15. Experiences an increase in blessings day by day.
16. There is an increase in his wealth.
17. Experiences comfort and tranquility in his heart.
18. All these benefits pass on to the next generation.
19. Experiences unseen glad tidings in this very world.
20. Hears and receives the glad tidings of the angels at the time of death.
21. There is an increase in his life-span.
22. Experiences abundance in things which are in small quantity.
23. Removal of Allawh Ta'ala's anger.

BOOK II
PURITY AND CLEANLINESS

RULES PERTAINING TO THE USE OF WATER

1. Any impure water whereby all three of its qualities, i.e. taste, smell and colour, have changed because of some impurity cannot be used under any circumstances. It cannot be given to animals for drinking purposes, nor can it be used to prepare mud for building or plastering. If all three qualities have not changed, it could be given to animals, could be used for building purposes, and could also be used for watering in the house. However, mud of this sort should not be used to plaster the walls of the musjid.
2. The sea, rivers, that pond which is not on some private property, and that well which has been made waqf (given in Allawh's name) - the water of all these can be used by the general public. No one has the right to stop anyone from using water from these places, nor does anyone have the right to use it in such a way that it causes harm to the general public. For example, a person digs a canal from a river or pond and draws water from it in such a way that it becomes dry, or there is the fear of flooding a tract of land or village. To use it in such a way is not proper, and everyone has the right to stop him from this improper way.
3. A person has a well, fountain, pond, or spring on his private property. He cannot stop others from doing the following: drinking water from there, giving water to their animals, making wudu, ghusl or washing clothes, and filling buckets in order to water their trees and gardens. The reason for this is that everyone has a right in it. However, if on account of there being too many animals, there is a fear that the water will get finished, or the pond will get damaged; then he has the right to stop them. If he wishes to stop anyone, they will have to see whether they could get their work done by obtaining water from elsewhere, (eg. there is another well within 1.6 kilometres and it is not on any private property); or the work will not get done and they will have problems. If their work could get done from some other place, well and good. If not, the owner will be told that he should allow this person to draw water on the condition that he will not break the well, etc. or alternatively, he (i.e. the owner) should draw the water for him or get someone to draw it for him and give it to him. However, the water that he receives for his farm or garden cannot be given to anyone else without the owner's permission. The owner has the right to stop him from this. The same rule applies to grass and all those plants that have no trunks. However, trees that have trunks are the property of the land-owner.
4. A person wishes to irrigate his farm with water from someone else's well or reservoir and the owner of these wants to charge him for the water. The Ulama differ as to whether it is permissible or not. The Ulama of Balkh have passed a fatwa that it is permissible.

5. If a person fills sea-water, water of a pond or well, etc. into a utensil of his, he will become the owner of that water. No one can use it without his permission. But if a person becomes extremely restless due to thirst, it will be permissible to take that water forcefully from that person if he knows that the water is more than what the owner will require. However, he will have to give compensation for the water.
6. Wudu and ghusl cannot be made with water that has been kept aside for drinking purposes - as is normally kept aside during summer. However, if a lot of water has been kept aside, it can be used. Water that has been kept aside for wudu can be used for drinking purposes.
7. If one or two bits of a goat's excreta fall into a well, and they come out whole, then the well will not become impure (najis). Irrespective of whether the well is in a jungle or in a town, or whether it is covered or not.

ISTINJA

1. On awakening from sleep, a person should not put his hands in the water (container) until and unless he washes his hands upto his wrists irrespective of whether the hands are pure or impure. If water has been kept in a small container, such as a pitcher or jug, then it should be carried with the left hand and poured onto the right hand and washed three times. Thereafter, the utensil should be taken into the right hand and the left hand should be washed three times. If the water is not kept in a small container, but in a big drum, etc., then it should be taken out with a small utensil, such as a jug. Care should be taken that the fingers do not touch the water. If there is no small utensil, then water should be taken out with the palm of the left hand. As far as possible, very little of the fingers should be put in the water. On taking out the water, first the right hand should be washed, and thereafter, as much of the right hand can be put in the water. On taking out water, the left hand should be washed. This method of washing the hands is only permissible if the hands are not impure. If they are impure, then under no condition should the hands be put in the drum. Water should be taken out in such a way that it does not become impure. For example, a clean handkerchief could be dipped in the water and whatever comes onto the handkie could be used to purify the hands. Alternatively, any other possible method could be used to purify them.
2. It is sunnah to make istinja of those impurities emitted from the anterior or posterior private parts.
3. If the impurity does not stick to the sides (or anywhere else), and a person does not use water for istinja, but instead uses pure stones or lumps of clay, and wipes in such a way that the impurity goes away and the body gets clean; then this will also be permissible. But this method is contrary to purity consciousness. If there is no water or a shortage of it, then there is no alternative but to cleanse oneself in this way.
4. There is no special method for using stones. But care should be taken that the impurity does not spread and the body gets thoroughly cleaned.
5. After having made istinja with stones, it is sunnat to make istinja with water. But if the impurity spreads more than the size of a fifty cents coin, it will be wajib to wash with water. Without washing, salaat will not be valid. If the impurity has not spread, then even after purifying with stones alone, salaat will be valid, but this is contrary to the sunnat.
6. When making istinja with water, first the hands upto the wrists should be washed. Thereafter go to a secluded spot, and after loosening the clothes, sit down. Wash until you are thoroughly satisfied that the body is clean. But if a person is always in doubt and he uses a lot of water, and still he is not fully satisfied, then he should wash three or seven times and not more than this.
7. If a secluded place cannot be found, then for the sake of making istinja with water, one should not expose one's private parts, neither to women nor men. In such a case, istinja should not be made with water (but stones). Salaat should be offered without having made istinja (with water). This is because the exposing of one's body is a major sin.
8. Making istinja with the following objects is a sin and prohibited, and should be abstained from: bones, impurities such as cow-dung and droppings of goats, coal, coarse limestone, glass, baked bricks, edibles, paper, etc. It is also sinful to make istinja with the right hand. But if someone does this, the body will be cleaned.
9. It is prohibited to stand and urinate.
10. It is prohibited to face or turn one's back towards the qiblah when passing stool or urinating.
11. It is also prohibited and makruh to make small children to face the qiblah and pass stool or urinate.
12. It is permissible to use the left-over water of istinja for wudu. It is also permissible to use the left over water of wudu for istinja, but not to do so is better.
13. When entering the toilet, Bismillah should be read outside, and then the following dua should be read:
"Allawhumma inni a'udhu bika minal khubusi wal khabaa'is."
Translation: "O Allawh! I seek refuge with You from the impure male and female jinn."
One should not enter the toilet bare-headed. If one is wearing any ring, etc. on which is the name of Allawh or His Rasul sallAllawhu alayhi wa sallam, it should be removed. One should enter with the left foot. Allawh's name should not be taken inside. If one sneezes, then Alhamdulillah should be recited in the heart only and nothing should be said with the tongue. Nor should one talk or say anything in the toilet. When leaving the toilet, one should step out with the right foot first. After leaving the toilet, the following dua should be read:
"Ghufraanaka, alhamdulillahil lazi az'haba anni al-adha wa aafaani."
Translation: "I seek Your forgiveness, O Allawh! Praise be to Allawh who has removed from me this discomfort and granted me tranquility."
After making istinja, the left hand should rubbed on the ground or washed with sand (or soap).

Things that one should abstain from when passing stool or urinating

1. To talk.
2. To cough unnecessarily.
3. To read some verse of the Quran, Hadith, or respected thing.
4. To take something to the toilet on which the following things are written: the name of Allawh, any prophet, any angel, or any respected person; any verse of the Quran, Hadith, or dua. But if these things are in the pocket, or wrapped in a ta'wiz (amulet), then there's no harm in this.
5. To relieve one's self in a standing or lying down position without any genuine excuse.
6. To remove all the clothes and relieve one's self completely naked.
7. To make istinja with the right hand.
8. To face the moon or sun, or to turn one's back towards them while one is passing stool or urinating is makruh. It is also makruh to do the same on the bank of a river, pond, etc. even if the impurity does not fall inside. Similarly, it is makruh to do this under trees in whose shade people sit, or under fruit and flowering trees where people sit in winter in order to get some sunshine. It is makruh tahrimi (extremely detestable) to do this in the following places: among animals, very close to the musjid or eid-gah whereby the foul smell disturbs the musallis, in a grave yard, at a place where people make wudu or ghusl, on the road, in the direction of the wind, in a hole, on the road-side, near a caravan or some gathering. In other words, it is makruh to relieve one's self in such a place where people move around and thereby cause them discomfort; and also in such a place where the impurity can flow back towards the person.

Unsuitable items for instinja

1. Bones, edibles, excreta and all impure substances.
2. That stone or clay which has already been used for istinja.
3. Baked bricks, small pieces of broken earthenware, glass, coal, limestone, steel, silver, gold, etc.
4. Those things that do not clean impurities, such as vinegar.
5. Those things that are eaten by animals, such as straw and grass.
6. Those things that are of value, irrespective of whether they are of little or great value, such as clothing or the extract of some plants.
7. Parts of a human, such as hair, bone, meat.

8. The mat, dirt, or broom of a musjid.
9. The leaves of trees.
10. Paper, irrespective of whether something is written on it or not (this excludes toilet paper).
11. Zam zam water.
12. Someone else's possessions without their permission, irrespective of whether it be water, clothing, or anything else.
13. Cotton and all similar things from which humans and their animals derive benefit.

Suitable items for istinja

1. Water.
2. Clods of earth.
3. Stones.
4. Clothes that have no value (rags).
5. All those things that are pure, that can remove impurities, that are not regarded as possessions, and are not respected.

PURIFICATION OF IMPURITIES

1. Najaasat (impurity) is of two kinds: one that is very thick or hard, and even if a little touches a person, it will have to be washed. This najaasat is called najaasat-e-ghaleezah (heavy impurity). The other is a little less and lighter, and is called najaasat-e-khafeefah (lighter impurity).
2. The following substances are regarded as najaasat-e-ghaleezah:
blood; stool, urine and semen of humans; intoxicating drinks; the excreta and urine of cats and dogs; the meat, hair, bones, and everything else of pigs; the dung of horses, donkeys, mules, cattle, oxen, buffaloes, etc; the droppings of goats and sheep; in other words the excreta of all animals; the droppings of fowls, ducks and wild ducks; and the urine of donkeys, mules and all haraam animals.
3. The stool and urine of a small child that is still being breast-fed is also najaasat-e-ghaleezah.
4. The excreta of haraam birds and the urine of halaal animals, such as goats, cows and buffaloes. The urine of horses is najaasat-e-khafeefah.
5. With the exception of fowls, ducks and wild ducks, the excreta of all other halaal birds such as pigeons, sparrows, etc. is pure. The urine and stool of bats is pure.
6. If a najaasat-e-ghaleezah that is thin and flowing falls on the body or clothes, it will be excused if the area on which it falls is equal to or less than a fifty cents coin in extent. If the person performs his salaat without washing it off, his salaat will be valid. But to refrain from washing it and to continue offering his salaats in this way is makruh. If it is more than a fifty cents coin, then it will not be excused. Salaat will not be valid if it is not washed off.
If a najaasat-e-ghaleezah is thick and solid, for example stool or the excreta of fowls, etc. and its weight is equal to or less than about 4 grams, then performing salaat without washing it off will be valid. But if it is more than this weight, salaat will not be valid.
7. Najaasat-e-khafeefah falls on the body or clothing. If it is less than a quarter of the area on which it fell, it will be excused. But if it is equal to a quarter or more, it will not be excused. In other words, if it falls on one sleeve, it is less than a quarter of that sleeve. If it falls on one panel of a shirt, it is less than a quarter of it. If it falls on a scarf, it is less than a quarter of that scarf. Only if it is less than a quarter of all these it will be excused.
Similarly, if the najaasat-e-khafeefah falls on one hand or on a leg, then if it is less than a quarter of that hand or leg, salaat will be valid if it is not washed. In other words, on whichever limb the najaasat falls, less than a quarter of that limb will be considered. If it is equal to a quarter or more, then it will not be excused. It will have to be washed. Salaat that is performed without washing it will not be valid.
8. The water in which najaasat-e-ghaleezah falls also becomes najas-e-ghaleez; and the water in which najaasat-e-khafeefah falls also becomes najas-e-khafeef.
9. Impure oil fell on one's clothing but the extent of it was less than three centimetres in diameter. However, after some time it spread and became more than three centimetres in diameter. As long as it was less, it will be excused. But once it spreads beyond the limit, it will not be excused. Washing it off will be wajib. If it is not washed off, salaat will not be valid.
10. The blood of fish is not impure. There is no harm if it falls on a person. The same applies to the blood of flies, bugs and mosquitos.
11. If a drop of urine equal to the eye of a needle falls, and it cannot be seen except after very careful examination, then there's no harm in it. It is not obligatory to wash it off, but to do so is preferable.
12. If a najaasat which can be seen, such as stool or blood, falls on the clothing, it should be washed until the najaasat is removed and no stain remains. There is no limit to the number of times it should be washed - the moment the najaasat is removed, it will become pure. The same rule applies when it falls on the body.
However, if the najaasat is removed in the first instance, it will be better to wash it two more times. And if it is removed in the second time, it will be better to wash it one more time. In other words, it is preferable to wash it three times.
13. If the najaasat is such that despite washing it several times and despite it being removed, the foul smell still remains or some stain is still there. Even in this instance, the clothing will be purified. It is not necessary to use any soap or detergents in order to get rid of the smell or stain.
14. If any impurity similar to urine which cannot be seen, falls on the clothing; then it should be washed three times. Each time that it is washed, the water should be squeezed out of it. After washing it the third time, the cloth should be wrung with full force - only then will it be purified. If it is not wrung with full force, the cloth will not be purified.
15. If any impurity falls on such a thing which cannot be wrung or squeezed, such as a bed, mat, jewellery, sand, utensils, bottles, shoes, etc., then the method of purifying these things is as follows: the item should be washed once and then the person should wait. When the water stops dripping from it, it should be washed a second time. When the water stops dripping, it should be washed a third time. In this way it will be purified.
16. If anything is thin and pure like water, it can also be used to wash off any impurity. If a person uses rose-water, or the extract of any herb, or vinegar; even then that thing will be purified. However, it is not permissible to use ghee, oil, milk and other similar substances which are sticky or fatty. That thing will remain impure.
17. Semen fell on the body or clothes and got dried. The body and clothes can be purified by scraping it off and rubbing it thoroughly. But if it has not dried as yet, it will have to be washed. But if a person did not wash himself after passing urine, and at that time semen came out; it will not become purified by rubbing it off. It will have to be washed.
18. If najaasat which can be seen, eg. dung, stool, blood, semen, etc., falls on one's shoes or leather socks, it could be removed and purified by rubbing it thoroughly on the ground. Similarly, it can also be purified by scraping it off. Even if it is not dry, and it is thoroughly scraped and rubbed off to such an extent that no sign of the najaasat remains, it will be purified.
19. If any najaasat like urine which is not seen, falls on the shoes or leather socks, then it cannot be purified except by washing.
20. As for clothing and the body, these can only be purified by washing. This is irrespective of whether the najaasat can be seen or not.
21. If mirrors, knives, gold and silver jewellery, copper, brass, steel, etc. become impure, they can be purified by wiping them thoroughly, or scraping them, or rubbing them with sand. But if these items have been engraved, they cannot be purified except by washing.
22. Some najaasat fell on the ground and got dried in such a way that there is no sign of it - there is no stain nor any foul smell of that najaasat. If it gets dry in this way, the ground will be pure. However, tayammum on such a piece of ground will not be permissible. However, it will be permissible to perform salaat there. The same rule applies to bricks and stones that have been embedded with limestone or mortar into the ground in such a way that these cannot be removed except by digging them out. That is, once the najaasat dries and no sign of it remains, they will be purified, but tayammum will not be permissible.
23. Those bricks that have just been placed on the ground without being embedded with lime or cement will not get purified with the drying of the najaasat. They will have to be washed.

24. Grass which is growing on the ground also becomes purified with the drying and disappearance of the najaasat. But if the grass is cut, it will not be purified without washing.
25. If impure knives, earthen and copper utensils are placed on a blazing fire, they will also get purified.
26. There was some impurity on one's hand. Someone removed this najaasat by licking it off three times. It will become purified, but it is prohibited to lick it. A child vomitted milk on one's chest, and thereafter it licked the vomit and drank it up. The chest will be purified.
27. If an unused earthenware utensil becomes impure, and it is such that it absorbs the impurity, then it will not become purified by merely washing it. Instead, it should be filled with water and when traces of the impurity appear in the water, the utensil should be emptied. It should be filled again, and emptied again. This should be continuously done until no sign of the impurity remains - neither its colour nor its smell. Only then will it be purified.
28. The utensils which a potter makes with impure clay will remain impure as long as they are unbaked. Once they get baked, they will become pure.
29. Honey, syrup, ghee or oil became impure. Whatever the amount may be, add the same amount or more of water to it and keep it to boil. Once the water has evaporated, add more water and do the same three times. In this way it will get purified.
Alternatively, add the same amount of water and stir the contents. Once it comes on top of the water, remove it in some way or another. Repeat the process three times and it will be purified. If the ghee is gone hard, add water to it and heat it. Once it melts, remove it.
30. Clothes were dyed in an impure dye. It should be washed until clean water begins to come out of it. It will now be purified, irrespective of whether the dye comes out of the clothes or not. However it is preferable to wash it at least three times.
31. The ashes of dung-cakes, droppings of goats and other impure things are pure. Their smoke is also pure. If it comes onto one's bread, there is no harm in it.
32. One corner of a mat is impure and the balance of it is pure. It will be permissible to offer salaat in the corner that is pure.
33. Land that has been plastered by dung is impure. Salaat on it is not permissible without having laid some pure thing over it.
34. If the land which has been plastered by dung is dry, then it is permissible to spread even a wet cloth over it and offer salaat. But it should not be so wet that some soil from that ground comes onto one's clothing.
35. After having washed his feet, a person walked bare-footed on some impure place and his foot-prints were visible on that place. His feet will not become impure. However, if due to the wet feet, the ground gets so wet, that some sand or impurity from that ground comes onto the feet; then they will become impure.
36. A person slept on an impure carpet and due to perspiration his clothes became damp. The same rule applies here, i.e. his clothes and body will not become impure. However, if they get so wet that some impurity from the carpet gets onto his clothes or body, they will be rendered impure.
37. A woman applied impure henna (mehendi) on her hands or feet. By washing them thoroughly until clean water flows out of them, the hands and feet will be purified. It is not obligatory to remove the colour.
38. A person applied surmah (antimony) or kajal (eye-pencil) which was impure. It is not necessary to wipe or wash it off. However, if it spreads and comes out of the eye, it will be obligatory to wash it.
39. If one applied impure oil onto one's head or body, then according to the normal procedure, it should be washed off three times. It is not necessary to remove it by putting soap or any such thing.
40. A dog put its mouth in flour or a monkey ate some of it. Whatever portion of the flour got dirty should be removed. It is permissible to eat the rest of it. If the flour was dry, then wherever its saliva is, that place should be removed. The balance of it is pure.
41. The saliva of a dog is impure, but the dog itself is not impure. So if a dog touches anyone's body or clothes, they will not become impure irrespective of whether the dog's body is dry or wet. However, it will be a different case if there is some najaasat on the dog's body.
42. A person passed wind at a time when his underclothing were wet. His clothing will not become impure by passing wind in such a state.
43. The clothes that got wet with impure water were wrapped with clean clothes. The wetness from the impure clothes got into the clean clothes, but no colour or smell of the impurity got into them. If these clean clothes got so wet that by wringing them one or two drops of water fall down, or at the time of wringing them, the hands get wet - then these clean clothes will also become impure. However, if they are not so wet, they will remain pure. And if the clothes that got wet with some specific impurity such as urine, were wrapped with clean clothes, then even if a little dampness or smell of those clothes gets into the clean clothes, they will also become impure.
44. A wooden plank is impure on one side and pure on the other side. If it is so thick that it can be sawed off in the centre, he can turn it over and perform salaat on the pure side. But if it is not so thick, it will not be permissible.
45. A particular cloth is double-folded - one fold is impure and the other is pure. If both the folds are not stitched, it will be permissible to offer salaat on the fold that is pure. But if both folds are stitched, salaat will not be permissible even on the fold that is pure.

RULES REGARDING PURITIES AND IMPURITIES

1. At the time of threshing out the grain, an ox urinates on the grain. Because of necessity, this will be excused. In other words, the grain will not become impure. But if it urinates on it at some other time, the grain will become impure because there is no necessity now.
2. The food prepared by a disbeliever, his utensils, and his clothes will not be regarded as impure until and unless there is some proof or indication of its impurity.
3. It is wrong of some people to use the fat of lions, etc. and to regard it as pure. However, if a religious-minded doctor says that there is no cure other than the fat, then in such a case, some Ulama say that it will be permissible. But it will be necessary to purify oneself from it when performing salaat.
4. Mud and dirty water that is on the roads is excused on condition that the impurity is not seen on the body or clothes. This is the fatwa on this matter. However, caution demands that the person who does not travel to the markets and on the roads very often, should always try and cleanse his body and clothes from this mud and dirty water even if he does not see any impurity.
5. When any impurity is burnt, its smoke becomes pure. If it becomes hard and something is made out of it, then it will also be pure. As has been said of sal ammoniac, that it is made out of impure smoke.
6. Sand and dust that is on top of some impurity is pure on condition that the dampness of the impurity does not make them damp as well.
7. Gases that rise from impurities are pure. Worms that emerge from fruits are pure, but it is not proper to eat them if they are alive (or even dead). The same rule applies to the worms of wild figs, etc.
8. When edibles such as meat, sweetmeats, etc. get stale and begin to stink, they do not become impure. But when taking into consideration the harm that can be caused, it will not be proper to consume them.
9. Musk and the bag from which it is extracted is pure. The same applies to amber.
10. The saliva which comes out from a person's mouth while he is sleeping is pure.
11. An egg whose colour has changed is pure as long as it is not broken.
12. The skin of a snake is pure.
13. The water with which impure clothes were washed is also impure, irrespective of whether the water was used to wash the first, second or third time. However, the difference in these three waters is that if the water which was used to wash the first time falls on some clothing, this clothing will be purified after it is washed three times. If the water of the second time falls, then the clothing will be purified after it is washed twice. And if the water of the third time falls, then it will be purified after washing it once.
14. The water with which a dead person is given a bath is impure.
15. The skin of a snake is impure, i.e. the skin which is still attached to its body. The skin which it sheds is pure.
16. The saliva of a dead person is impure.

17. On one side of a cloth an excusable amount of impurity falls and seeps through the other side. The impurity that seeps through is also of an excusable amount. However, if both these excusable amounts are added together, they exceed the excusable limit. Even then it will be regarded as less and therefore excusable. But if the cloth is double-folded or two cloths have been placed together, and when added together they exceed the limit, it will not be excusable.
18. If one or two pieces of dung or excreta of a cow or goat fall into the milk while they are being milked, it is excusable as long as the dung or excreta is removed immediately. If it falls at some time other than the time of milking, the milk will become impure.
19. If a four to five year old boy who does not understand what wudu is, makes wudu; or an insane person makes wudu, then the water will not be considered to be musta'mal (in other words that water can be used for wudu by someone else).
20. Water that is used to wash clean clothes, utensils and other pure items can be used for wudu and ghusl as long as its density does not change and as long as it is still referred to as water in normal conversation. But if there was some food or drink in the utensils, then using that water for wudu or ghusl will only be permissible if at least two of the three qualities of water remain unchanged. If two qualities change, wudu or ghusl will not be permissible.
21. It is makruh to drink used water, or to use it in cooking. Wudu and ghusl with such water is not permissible. However, it can be used to wash impurities.
22. The one who is in need of wudu should not make wudu with zam zam water. Nor should it be used by the one who has to have a bath. To wash impurities with it and to make istinja with it is makruh.
However, if one is compelled to use it, in the sense that water cannot be found within 1.6 kilometres, and one cannot purify one's self in any other way, then all these things will be permissible with zam zam water.
23. The water that is left behind by a woman after she made wudu or ghusl should not be used by a man to make his wudu or ghusl. Although this is permissible according to the Hanafi Mazhab, it is not permissible according to Imam Ahmad (Hanbali Mazhab). It is therefore better to abstain from those matters in which there is difference of opinion.
24. To make wudu or ghusl with the water of those places where some nation was punished by Allawh Ta'ala, such as the people of Thamud and Aad, is not proper. There is also difference of opinion in this matter. It is therefore better to abstain from this. But if one is compelled, then the same rule as that for zam zam water will apply.
25. An oven which has become impure can be purified by lighting a fire in it on condition that after it gets hot, no traces of the impurity remain.
26. If an impure piece of ground is covered with sand and the impurity gets concealed in such a way that even its smell does not come, then the surface of the sand will be pure.
27. Soap made with impure oil or fat will become pure.
28. If the place of venesection (cutting of veins) or any other wound from which blood or pus came out became impure and washing it will be harmful, then it will be sufficient to wipe it with a wet cloth. It will not be necessary to wash the place after it has healed.
29. If an impure dye falls on the body or clothes or the hair gets coloured with this dye, it will be sufficient to wash them until clear water begins to flow even if the colour is not removed.
30. If a tooth which broke off is refitted with some pure or impure substance; or a broken bone is replaced by an impure bone; or a wound is filled with some impure substance; and all these get healed; then they (i.e. the impure substances) should not be removed. They will automatically become pure.
31. If any sticky substance which is impure, such as oil, ghee, the fat of a dead animal, gets stuck to something and is washed until clear water begins to flow, it will be purified even if the stickyness of that impurity remains.
32. Some impurity falls into pure water. By its falling, the water splashes and a few drops fall on someone. These drops are pure on condition that there are no traces of that impurity on the person.
33. If a cloth having two folds or a cloth that is filled with cotton (such as duvets) becomes impure on one side and is pure on the other side, then the whole cloth will be regarded as impure and salaat on it will not be permissible. This is only if the impure area of the impure side is the area on which the musalli will stand or prostrate. Another condition is that both the cloths must be sewn together.
If they are not stitched together, then impurity on one side will not render the other side impure. In fact, salaat will be permissible on the pure side on condition that the cloth is so thick that the traces and smell of the impurity underneath do not come on top.
34. If a chicken or any other bird is boiled in water before its stomach, intestines and other filth can be removed, as is the custom today, it can in no way be regarded as pure.

WUDU - ABLUTION

1. The person making wudu should face the qiblah and sit on an elevated place so that the water does not splash on him.
2. When commencing wudu, Bismillahir Rahmaanir Raheem should be recited.
3. First of all, the hands should be washed upto the wrists three times.
4. Thereafter, rinse the mouth three times and use a miswaak.
5. If there is no miswaak, a thick cloth or even the fore-finger could be used so that all the dirt is removed.
6. If the person is not fasting, he should gargle the mouth thoroughly. However, if he is fasting, he should not gargle thoroughly because there is a possibility that water will go down the throat.
7. Thereafter, rinse the nose three times and clean it with the left hand. However, the fasting person should not allow the water to go beyond the soft-bone of the nose.
8. Wash the face three times: from the hair-line till below the chin, and from one ear-lobe to the other. Water must reach all these places. Water must also reach below the eye brows - no place should remain dry.
9. Wash the right hand upto and including the elbows.
10. Thereafter wash the left hand upto and including the elbows.
11. Make khilaal of the fingers. That is, pass the fingers of one hand through the fingers of the other hand.
12. If there is a ring or any such jewellery on the fingers, it should be removed so that no part is left dry.
13. Thereafter make masah of the head (passing wet hands over the head).
14. Make masah of the ears by inserting the forefingers into the ears and making masah of the back of the ear-lobes with the thumb of each hand.
15. Make masah of the neck with the back of the fingers of both hands. However, masah of the fore-neck/throat should not be made as this is prohibited.
16. Fresh water need not be used for making masah of the ears. Whatever water is left over after making masah of the head will be sufficient.
17. Thereafter wash the right foot upto and including the ankles. Do the same for the left foot. Make khilaal of the toes of the feet with the little finger of the left hand. When making khilaal, commence with the little toe of the right foot and end with the little toe of the left foot.
This is the correct method of performing wudu. However, there are certain acts, which if even a part is left out or not completed, then the wudu will be regarded as incomplete. In fact, it will be as if wudu was not performed at all. Such acts are called fard. There are other acts, which if left out, the wudu will be regarded as complete. Carrying out these acts will entail reward (thawaab) and these have been emphasised in the Shariah. It is a sin to leave out such acts unnecessarily. Such acts are called Sunnats. There are other acts, which if carried out entail reward, and if left out, entail no sin. Neither have they been emphasised in the Shariah. Such acts are called mustahab.

Fard (compulsory) acts of Wudu

There are four fard acts in wudu:-
1. To wash the entire face once.

2. To wash both hands upto and including the elbows once.
3. To make masah of one-quarter of the head once.
4. To wash both feet upto and including the ankles once.
These are the fard acts of wudu. Even if one of these acts is left out, or even if a place equal to a hair's breadth is left dry, wudu will not be complete.

Sunnah acts of Wudu

1. To say Bismillahir Rahmaanir Raheem.
2. To wash both hands upto the wrists.
3. To rinse the mouth.
4. To wash the nose.
5. To use miswaak.
6. To make masah of the entire head.
7. To wash each part three times.
8. To make masah of the ears.
9. To make khilaal of the fingers and toes.

Apart from this, the balance of the acts are mustahab.

1. Once the four fard acts of wudu are carried out, wudu will be regarded as complete, irrespective of whether one intended to make wudu or not, eg.: (a) at the time of bathing, one pours water on the entire body, or (b) falls into a well, or river , or (c) stands in the rain. In all these conditions, if the limbs of wudu get wet, wudu will be regarded as complete. However, one will not obtain the reward (thawaab) of wudu.
2. Sunnah is to make wudu exactly as has been mentioned above. But if anyone alters or reverses the procedure of wudu, eg. by washing the feet first, then making masah, and then washing the hands, and thereafter washing the face, or alters the procedure in any other way - then wudu will still be regarded as complete. However, it will not be considered to be in accordance with the sunnah, and there is always the fear of having sinned.
3. Similarly, if the left hand or the left foot is washed first, wudu will be completed, but it will be contrary to being mustahab.
4. After washing one part, one should not delay in washing the next part to such an extent that the first part gets dry. Instead, he should wash the next part as quickly as possible. If, after washing the second part, the first part gets dry, then wudu will be regarded as complete, but it will be contrary to the sunnah.
5. It is also sunnah to pass the hand on the part that is being washed so that no place is left dry.
6. It is better and mustahab to prepare for wudu and salaat well before the time.
7. As long as there is no genuine excuse, one should perform wudu with one's very own hands and should not seek assistance from someone else.
8. While making wudu, worldly talk should be avoided. Instead, Bismillah and the kalimah should be read on washing each and every part.
9. No matter how freely water may be available, it should not be wasted. Even if one is at the sea-shore, one should not use more than necessary. At the same time, one should not use so little water that one has problems in washing the parts thoroughly.
10. The parts should not be washed more than three times.
11. When washing the face, water should not be splashed with great force, nor should one splash water by making hissing sounds.
12. One should not close one's eyes and mouth very tightly. All these things are makruh and prohibited. The reason for this is that if the mouth and eyes are shut so tightly to the extent that the lips or eye lashes remain dry, then the wudu will not be regarded as complete.
13. If rings, bangles, bracelets, etc. are so loose that water will reach under them without having to remove them, it will still be mustahab to remove them. If they are so tight that there is a possibility of water not reaching under them, then it will be necessary and wajib to remove them. A similar rule applies to the nose ring: that is, if it is loose, then it will be mustahab to move it, and if it is tight, then while one is washing the face it will be wajib to move it around so that water reaches everywhere.
14. If some dough or similar substance got stuck under the nails and got dried, and water did not reach there, the wudu will not be complete. If one sees the flour and realizes that water did not reach there, then water should be poured over it. However, if salaat was performed prior to pouring the water, it will be necessary to repeat the salaat.
15. If one has applied tinsel or some other decorative paint on the forehead and does not wash it thoroughly, but just pours water over it, then wudu will not be completed. It should be removed before washing the face.
16. After having performed the wudu, Surah al-Qadr should be recited.

Thereafter the following dua should be recited:

"O Allawh! Make me of the repentants, and make me of the purified, and include me among Your pious servants".

17. After having performed the wudu, it is preferable to read two rakaats of nafl salaat. This salaat is called Tahiyyatul Wudu. Great reward and merit has been mentioned in the Hadith in regard to this salaat.
18. If one had made wudu for a particular salaat, and thereafter the next salaat time entered without the wudu having broken, then it will be permissible to read salaat with that same wudu. However, if the person repeats the wudu, he will be greatly rewarded.
19. Once wudu has been made and has not broken as yet, then as long as no act of worship (ibaadat) has been performed with that wudu, it will be makruh to make a new wudu. Based on this, if a person makes wudu while bathing, then he should read his salaat with that same wudu. Without that wudu breaking, he should not make a new wudu. However, if a person has read even just two rakaats of salaat with that first wudu, then there will be no problem in making a second wudu. In fact, there is reward in making a second wudu.
20. If someone's hands or feet are cracked and he filled them with wax, an ointment, or some other medicine (and he fears some harm by removing it) then his wudu will be regarded as complete if he just poured water over it without having removed the medicine.
21. If water did not reach the heels or some other place while making wudu, and only after completing the wudu one realized that a particular place is dry, it will not be sufficient to merely pass the hand over that place. Instead, water will have to be poured over it.
22. If there is a sore or some other wound on the hands, feet, etc. and one fears that it would be harmful to pour water over it, then water should not be poured. Instead, the wet hand should be passed over the wound. This is called masah. If this is harmful, masah should not be made and that place should be left out.
23. If a wound has been bandaged and it will be harmful to open the bandage and make masah over the wound, or it will be difficult and painful to open the bandage, then in both cases it will be permissible to make masah on the bandage. But if this is not the case, the bandage will have to be removed and masah will have to be made on the wound.
24. If the wound is not under the entire bandage, then after opening the bandage, that portion which is not wounded should be washed if possible. However, if it is not possible to open the bandage, masah should be made on both the portions - the wounded and the unwounded portions.
25. In case of a fracture where splints and pads are applied, the above directions will apply. That is, as long as the splints cannot be opened, it will be sufficient to make masah over it. The same rule will apply to plasters - that is, if masah cannot be made on the wound, the plaster should be removed and masah should be made on the gauze. But if there is no one to help in opening and closing the plaster, then it will be sufficient to make masah on the plaster itself.
26. In the case of bandages, splints, plasters, etc. it is preferable to make masah on the entire covering. If this is not possible, then it will be permissible to make masah on more than half of the covering. However, it is not permissible to suffice with masah on half or less of the covering.

27. If after performing masah, the bandage, plaster, etc., opens up and one sees that the wound has not healed as yet, then it should be re-tied and the previous masah will suffice. However, if the wound has healed and there is no need to bandage it again, then the masah will be broken. That portion should be washed and salaat performed. There is no need to repeat the entire wudu.
28. Khilaal (passing of wet fingers) of the beard should be made three times after having washed the face. Khilaal should not be made more than three times.
29. It is fard to wash the chin as long as there is no hair of the beard on it, or if there is, it is so little that the skin can be seen.
30. It is fard to wash that part of the lips which can be seen after the lips are closed.
31. If the hair of the beard, moustache and eyebrows is so thick that the skin cannot be seen, then it is not fard to wash that skin which is hidden. That hair is actually in place of the skin. To pour water over it is sufficient.
32. If the hair of the eyebrows, beard, or moustache is so thick that the skin cannot be seen, then in such a case it is wajib to wash that hair which falls within the boundaries of the face. It is not wajib to wash the hair that is beyond the boundaries of the face.
33. If a person's piles come out, his wudu will break irrespective of whether it went back inside on its own, or by pushing it back with a stick, a cloth, or his hand.
34. If semen comes out without any desire, wudu will break. For example, a person carried a very heavy weight, or jumped from an elevated place and due to this shock semen came out without any desire.
35. If there is some defect in one's senses, but this defect does not reach the stage of insanity or unconsciousness, his wudu will not break.
36. If a person sleeps away and laughs (in his sleep) while in salaat, his wudu will not break.
37. By laughing in a janaza salaat or in a sajdah tilaawat wudu will not break irrespective of whether the person is mature or immature.

Factors that break and do not break Wudu

1. The passing of stool, urine and wind breaks wudu. However, if one passes wind from the forepart, as it occassionally happens because of sickness, wudu will not break. If some worms or stones come out from the front or back, then too wudu will break.
2. If a worm comes out from a wound, or from the ear, or if a piece of flesh falls off from a wound and no blood comes out; then in all these cases wudu will not break.
3. If one was bleeding, or his nose was bleeding, or is injured and begins to bleed, or blood comes out from small boils (and pimples,etc.), or bleeds from any other part of the body, or some matter or pus comes out - then in all these cases wudu will break. However, if the blood or pus remains on the mouth of the wound and does not flow over it, wudu will not break. Based on this, if a person is pricked by a pin and blood comes out, but does not flow, then wudu will not break.
4. If a person sneezes and some clotted, dry blood comes out, wudu will not break. Wudu will only break if it is thin and flows. If a person inserts his finger in his nose, and after removing it sees a spot of blood which is more like a stain on his finger but does not flow, wudu will not break.
5. If a pimple or boil in the eye bursts, or the person bursts it himself - and its liquid flows within the eye, wudu will not break. But if it flows out of the eye, wudu will break. In the same way, if a pimple or boil bursts in the ear, then as long as the pus remains in the canal and does not flow to a place whose washing is necessary when making ghusl, wudu will not break. But if it flows to such a place which is necessary to wash when making ghusl, wudu will break.
6. If someone scratches the skin of his boil or pimple and he sees some blood or pus underneath it, and it remains in the same place without flowing out, wudu will not break. But if it flows out, wudu will break.
7. If a wound is very deep, then as long as the blood or pus from it remains there and does not come out and flow onto the body, wudu will not break.
8. If the blood of a sore does not come out on its own, but is forced out, then wudu will also break if it flows.
9. If blood oozes out of a wound and it is covered with some dust, or dabbed with a cloth, and again it oozes out, and again he dabs it - and this is done repeatedly - then he should think for himself and deduce that had he not dabbed at it, the blood would have flowed, and therefore wudu would break. And even if he did dab at it, it would not have flowed, then wudu will not break.
10. Someone notices blood in his saliva: if the blood is very little and the colour of the saliva is whitish or yellowish, wudu will not break. But if the blood is equal to or more than the saliva, and the saliva is reddish in colour, wudu will break.
11. If something is bitten with the teeth and a blood stain is found on that thing, or if the teeth were brushed and some redness is seen on the brush - and despite all this no blood or redness is seen in the saliva then wudu will not break.
12. If one is bitten by a leech and so much of blood flows into it that if the leech is dissected, blood will begin to flow, wudu will break. But if the leech has sucked out very little blood, wudu will not break. If a mosquito, fly, bee, or bug sucks out blood, then wudu will not break.
13. If someone has an ear-ache and, on account of that, water comes out of it continuously - then this water will be regarded as impure even if there is no sore or pimple. The mere flowing of that water will break wudu if it flows to a place which is fard to wash during ghusl. Similarly, if water flows from the nose and this is accompanied by pain, then too wudu will break. Similarly, if there is pain in the eyes and they are sore, and in addition to this they water or tears come out, then too wudu will break (as in the case of pink eyes). But if there is no pain in the eyes nor are they sore, then wudu will not break by the mere flowing of tears.
14. If water comes out from the nipple (of a male or female) and this is accompanied by pain, then this water is also regarded as impure and wudu will therefore break. But if this is not accompanied by pain, the water will not be impure and wudu will not break.
15. If someone vomits out food, water or bile, and it is a mouthful, wudu will break. But if it is not a mouthful, wudu will not break. "Mouthful" here means that the vomit cannot stay in the mouth except with difficulty. If a person vomits phlegm only, wudu will not break irrespective of the amount and irrespective of whether it was a mouthful or not. If blood comes out in the vomit and it is thin and flowing, then wudu will break irrespective of whether it is less or extra, and irrespective of whether it is a mouthful or not. But if the blood comes out in clots or bits and pieces, then wudu will only break if it is a mouthful.
16. If one vomits small quantities several times and all these quantities would have equalled a mouthful, and in addition to this the person still feels nauseous after each time that he vomits, wudu will break. But if a person does not feel nauseous after vomitting the first time, but feels better, and later feels nauseous and vomits a little, and again feels better, and then feels nauseous a third time and vomits a little again - then wudu will not break.
17. If one falls asleep while lying down, or falls asleep while leaning on something for support and gets into such a deep sleep that if that support is removed, he will fall - wudu will break. If one falls asleep while sitting or standing in salaat, wudu will not break. But if one falls asleep while in sajdah, wudu will break.
18. If one is not in salaat and falls asleep while sitting down with his buttocks pressed on his heels and without leaning against a wall or anything else - then wudu will not break.
19. While sitting, if one is suddenly overcome by sleep and falls down, then wudu will not break if the person's eyes open immediately after falling down. But if even a few moments lapse for the eyes to open, wudu will break. But if, in the sitting position, the person sways from side to side without falling down, wudu will not break.
20. If one falls unconscious, or loses his senses because of insanity, then wudu will break even if the unconsciousness or insanity was for a few moments. Similarly, if some drug or intoxicant is consumed and one is intoxicated to the extent that he cannot walk properly and his steps are unsteady - then too wudu will break.
21. If one laughs so loudly in salaat that he hears the laughter himself and those near him hear it as well, then both wudu and salaat will break. If only the one who laughed hears the laughter and those near him do not hear it, then only salaat will break and not the wudu. But if one only smiles without any sound coming out, neither the wudu nor the salaat will break. However, if an immature person (na-baaligh) laughs aloud in the salaat, or if a mature person (baaligh) laughs while making sajdah-e-tilawat - then wudu will not break. However, the sajdah-e-tilawat (of the mature person) and the salaat (of the immature person) will break.
22. If liquid comes out from the front organ by touching a person of the opposite sex or merely having such thoughts, wudu will break. This liquid which comes out at the time of excitement or passion is called mazi (pre-coital fluid).

23. If, due to illness, some sticky fluid similar to mucus, comes out from the front organ, then as a precaution it should be regarded as impure. By it coming out, wudu will break.
24. If a drop of urine or pre-coital fluid comes out from the urinary passage, but remains within the foreskin, even then wudu will break. In order for wudu to break, it is not necessary for any liquid to come out from the foreskin.
25. If a man's organ touches the private part of a woman and there is no cloth or any such barrier between them, wudu will break. Similarly, if the private parts of two women touch each other, wudu will break. But to indulge in such acts is a very serious sin. In both instances, whether any fluid comes out or not, wudu will break.
26. If after performing wudu, one clipped one's nails, or scratched the dead skin of a wound - then no harm comes to the wudu. It is not necessary to repeat the wudu, nor does one have to wet that place.
27. If after performing wudu, one sees the private area (aurah) of someone, or one's own private area gets exposed, or one had a bath or made wudu while being naked - then in all these cases wudu will remain and there will be no need to repeat it. However, it is a great sin to intentionally look at someone's private area, or to intentionally expose one's own private area.
28. That substance whose discharge causes wudu to break is regarded as najis (impure) and that which does not break wudu will not be najis. Based on this if a little blood oozes out but does not flow out of the mouth of the wound, or if vomitting takes place and it is not a mouthful, and food, water, pus or clotted blood came out - then this blood and this vomit will not be najis. If it falls on the clothing or the body, it will not be obligatory to wash it off. If vomitting was a mouthful, or if blood flowed out of the wound, both will be regarded as impure and necessary to wash. If (immediately) after vomitting a mouthful, one touched a utensil of water with one's mouth, then that utensil will also become impure. It is therefore advisable to take water in one's palms.
29. The same rule will apply to a small child who has been fed with milk and thereafter vomits it out. That is, if it is not a mouthful, it will not be impure, and if it is a mouthful, it will be impure. If the mother performs her salaat without washing out that vomit from her clothing, her salaat will not be in order.
30. If one remembers making wudu but is unsure as to whether the wudu is still intact or broken, the wudu will be regarded as not broken. Salaat with that wudu will be proper but it is preferable to repeat the wudu.
31. If someone is in doubt as to whether a particular limb has been washed in wudu or not, then that part should be washed. But if the doubt crops up after completing the wudu, he should not worry, wudu is complete. But if he is certain that a particular thing has been left out, he should complete it.
32. It is not permissible to touch the Quran without wudu. But if it is touched with a cloth which the person is not wearing, then it will be permissible. To touch it with a scarf or sleeve of a shirt while it is being worn will not be permissible. But if he touches it while it (i.e. the scarf or shirt) is not being worn, it will be permissible. It is permissible to read the Quran from memory without wudu. If the Quran is open and one looks into it and reads from it without touching it, then this is also permissible. In the same way, it is not permissible to touch an amulet (ta'wiz) or a plate on which the verses of the Quran are written without wudu.
33. To touch any page of the Quran is makruh tahrimi (not permitted) irrespective of whether he touches that part where something is written or that part which is blank. But if it is not the whole Quran, but one complete verse written on a page, or cloth, or thin skin, and the balance of it is blank; then it is permissible to touch the blank portion if the hand does not touch the verse.
34. It is not makruh to write the Quran (without wudu) as long as the written portion is not touched and only the blank places are touched. But according to Imam Muhammad (rahmatullahi alayhi) even the blank place cannot be touched. As a precaution, this is best. The first ruling was according to Imam Abu Yusuf (rahmatullahi alayhi). The same difference of opinion exists in the previous mas'ala as well. This rule only applies to anything other than the Quran, such as a piece of paper, cloth, etc. on which some verse is written and the balance of it is blank.
35. It is not makruh to give the Quran to immature children if they are in a state which requires wudu.
36. As regards heavenly books other than the Quran, such as Torah, Zabur and Injil; it is makruh to touch only those places where something is written without wudu. To touch the blank places is not makruh. The same rule applies to those verses of the Quran whose recitation has been abrogated or cancelled.
37. After having made wudu one has a doubt that a part has not been washed but he does not know exactly which part it was. In order to get rid of this doubt, he should wash his left foot. Similarly, if in the midst of making wudu he has a doubt, then in such a case, he should wash the last part. For example, if after washing the hands upto the elbows he has a doubt, then he should wash his face. Or, while washing the feet he has a doubt, then he should wash his hands upto his elbows. All this will apply when a person has such doubts occasionally. As for the person who experiences these doubts most of the time, he should not worry about them but regard his wudu as complete.
38. It is not proper to make wudu on the floor of the musjid. But if it is made in such a way that it does not fall on the floor of the musjid, then there is no harm in it. The carelessness of dropping water on the musjid floor is prevalent in many places.

RULES CONCERNING THE MA'ZUR

1. If someone's nose begins to bleed in such a way that it does not stop, or has a wound from which blood flows continuously, or is afflicted by the sickness of urine dripping continuously - and in all these cases he does not have such a time wherein he could offer his salaat with (complete) purity - then such a person is called a ma'zur (excused). The rule in regard to him is that he should make wudu for the time of every salaat. As long as that salaat time remains, his wudu will remain. However, if apart from this sickness, some other matter crops up which causes wudu to break, then his wudu will break and he will have to repeat it. An example of this is: a person's nose began to bleed continuously and refused to stop. At Zuhr time he made wudu. As long as the Zuhr time remains, his wudu will not break as a result of the bleeding nose. However, if (in that Zuhr time) the person went to the toilet, or pricked himself with a needle and blood flowed, wudu will break and will have to be repeated. When this time passes and the next salaat time enters, another wudu will have to be made (for this second salaat time). In like manner, wudu should be made for every salaat time. With this wudu, one can read any number and any type of salaat - irrespective of fard or nafl salaat.
2. If wudu was made at Fajr time, salaat cannot be read with that wudu after sunrise. A fresh wudu will have to be made. If wudu was made after sunrise, it will be permissible to read Zuhr with that wudu and there is no need to make a fresh wudu for Zuhr. When Asr time enters, then only will it be necessary to make a fresh wudu. However, if wudu breaks for some other reason (eg. urinating or passing stool), then fresh wudu will have to be made (as mentioned above).
3. A person had a wound which bled continuously. He therefore made wudu. Thereafter another wound emerged and began to bleed. The wudu will break and will have to be made again.
4. A person will only be classified as a ma'zur and this ruling will only apply to him when one complete time passes wherein the blood flows continuously, and he is unable to read the salaat of that time in complete purity. If such a time is found wherein salaat could be offered with complete purity, he will not be classified as a ma'zur. The rules that have been mentioned will not apply to him. However, if one complete time passed wherein he did not get the opportunity to offer salaat in total purity, he will be classified as a ma'zur. Now, the same rules apply to him, i.e. make a fresh wudu for every salaat time. When the next salaat time enters, it is not a pre-requisite that blood should flow all the time. In fact, if in that entire period, blood only flows once and stops flowing for the rest of the time - then too the person will be classified as a ma'zur. However, if after this, an entire time passes in which no blood at all flowed, the person will not remain a ma'zur. Now the ruling will be that each time blood flows, wudu will break.
5. Zuhr time had already entered and only after that the blood of the wound began to flow. He should therefore wait till the end of the time. If it stops, well and good. If it does not stop, he should make wudu and offer his salaat. Now if it continued flowing during the entire time of Asr and to the extent that he could not perform his Asr salaat, then only when the Asr time passes, he will be classified as a ma'zur. If the blood stops flowing in the very time of Asr, he will not be regarded as a ma'zur and whatever salaats he may have read in this time will not be proper and will have to be repeated.
6. On account of urinating or passing stool, a ma'zur made wudu. At the time of making wudu, the bleeding had stopped. After completing wudu, the blood started to flow again. By the flowing of this blood, wudu will break. However, that wudu which was made on account of the bleeding of the nose, etc.; that particular wudu will not break on account of bleeding of the nose.

7. If this blood falls on the clothing, etc. then check: if it will fall again before he can complete his salaat, it will not be wajib to wash it off. But if he knows that it will not fall again so quickly and that salaat could be performed in purity, then it will be wajib to wash it off. If the extent of the blood is more than the size of a fifty cents coin salaat will not be complete without washing it off.

GHUSL (BATH)

1. The person taking a bath should first of all wash both hands upto the wrists. Then wash the private parts. The hands and private parts should be washed irrespective of whether there is any impurity on them or not. Both these have to be washed under all conditions. Thereafter, any impurity found on the rest of the body should be washed. Then make wudu. If one is sitting on a stool or stone while bathing, then the feet should also be washed when making wudu. But if one is sitting in a place where the water accumulates and he will have to wash the feet again after completing the ghusl, then the entire wudu should be made but the feet should not be washed. After performing wudu, pour water on the head three times. Thereafter pour water over the right and left shoulders three times each in such a way that water reaches the entire body. Thereafter move from this place and go to a clean spot and wash the feet. If the feet were washed when making wudu there will be no need to wash them again.
2. Whilst pouring water over the body the first time, rub the body well so that water reaches everywhere properly and no place remains dry.
3. The above method of ghusl is according to the sunnah. Some of the items explained above are fard without which ghusl will not be complete and the person will remain impure. Some other items are sunnah. Observing them entails reward, and by not carrying them out, ghusl will still be complete. The fard acts are only three:

(a) To gargle the mouth in such a way that water reaches everywhere.
(b) To wash the nose upto the soft bone.
(c) To pour water over the entire body.

4. While bathing, one should not face the qiblah. Too much of water should not be used, nor should so little be used, that one is unable to wash thoroughly. The bath should be taken at such a place that no one can see the bather. One should not talk while bathing. After bathing, the body should be wiped with a cloth or towel. The person should hasten to cover his body to the extent that if the feet were not washed when making wudu, then when he moves from the place of ghusl, he should cover himself up first and then wash the feet.
5. If the bathing place is secluded where no one can see, then it is permissible to bath naked, irrespective of whether one is standing or sitting and irrespective of whether the roof is covered or not. However, it is better to sit and bath because there is more modesty in this. To expose the body from the navel to below the knees before anyone is a sin. Many women bath completely naked in the presence of other women. This is a very evil and shameful act.
6. Once water reaches the entire body, and the mouth and nose are washed; ghusl will be complete irrespective of whether one made intention for ghusl or not. Based on this, if someone stands in the rain in order to cool himself, or falls in a pool, etc. and in doing so the entire body gets wet and the mouth and nose are also washed - then ghusl will be complete. Similarly, it is not necessary to read the kalimah or to read it and blow on the water at the time of making ghusl. Whether one reads the kalimah or not, one will still get purified. In fact, it is better not to read the kalimah or any other dua while bathing.
7. Even if an area equal to a hair's breadth is left dry, ghusl will not be complete. In the same way, if one forgets to gargle the mouth or wash the nose, ghusl will not be complete.
8. If after having a bath, one remembers that a particular area was left dry, then it is not necessary to repeat the entire ghusl. Instead, only that dry area should be washed. However, it is not sufficient to merely pass the wet hand over that area. Some water should be taken and poured over that area. If a person forgets to gargle the mouth, he should gargle it. And if a person forgets to wash the nose, he should wash it. In other words, whichever part has been left out, should be washed. It is not necessary to repeat the entire ghusl.
9. If, due to some illness, it would be harmful to pour water on the head, and he left out the head and washed the rest of the body, even then ghusl will be complete. But once the head has healed, it should be washed and it will not be necessary to repeat the entire ghusl.
10. In ghusl it is fard to wash the foreskin of the front organ. If water does not reach there, ghusl will not be complete.
11. If the hair of the head is not plaited, then it is fard to wet all the hair and the roots of the hair. If even one hair is left dry, or water did not reach even one root, ghusl will not be complete. However, if the hair is plaited, it is not necessary to wash it. But it is fard to wet all the roots of the hair. Even one root should not be left dry.
12. Nose, ear and finger rings should be moved so that water reaches the holes. Even if ear-rings are not worn, one should try and put water into the holes. It should not happen that water does not reach and ghusl remains incomplete. If rings are so loose that without moving them water will reach below them, then it won't be necessary to move them. Instead, it will be mustahab to move them.
13. If dough gets stuck under the nails and gets dry and water does not go there, then ghusl will not be complete. When one remembers and sees the dough, it should be removed and water poured there. If any salaat was offered prior to pouring water, that salaat will have to be repeated.
14. If the hands or feet get cracked and some wax, ointment, or some other medication is applied; then it is permissible to suffice with pouring water over the area.
15. Care should be taken that water reaches the nose and the navel. If water does not reach, ghusl will not be complete.
16. If the mouth was not gargled at the time of bathing, but instead a mouthful of water was drunk in such a way that the water reached the entire mouth, ghusl will be complete because the object is that water should reach the entire mouth, irrespective of whether one gargles or not. However, if one drinks water in such a way that water does not reach all parts of the mouth, then this drinking will not be sufficient. One will also have to gargle the mouth.
17. If oil has been applied on the head, hands or feet in such a way that when water is poured, it passes off without wetting those parts, then there is no harm in this. Once water has been poured on the entire head and body, the ghusl will be complete.
18. If betel nut (or other such food particle) gets stuck between the teeth, it should be removed with a toothpick. If, for some reason, water does not reach between the teeth, ghusl will not be complete.
19. If there is tinsel or decorative paint on the forehead, or some sort of gum has been applied in such a way that the hair will not get wet properly, then the gum should be removed and the tinsel washed. If water does not reach under the gum but just flows over it, ghusl will not be complete.
20. If someone has applied a lot of lipstick, etc. it should be removed first and then the mouth should be gargled. If not, ghusl will not be complete.
21. Someone has a very sore eye and because of this a lot of pus came out and became dry in such a way that if it is not removed, water will not reach below it. It will therefore be wajib to remove it. Without removing it neither wudu nor ghusl will be complete.

Things or acts which make ghusl obligatory

1. If semen is discharged out of passion while one is awake or asleep, ghusl becomes wajib irrespective of whether it is discharged by touching a person of the opposite sex, or by having any such thoughts or fantasies, or by any other way -in all cases, ghusl will be wajib.
2. If one awakens and sees semen on his clothing or body, ghusl will be wajib irrespective of whether one sees a dream or not.

Note: At the time of excitement, in the beginning a particular fluid which increases the excitement, comes out. This fluid is called mazi (pre-coital fluid). When climax is reached and one is satiated, the liquid which comes out at that time is called mani (semen). That which distinguishes the two is that when semen comes out, one becomes satisfied and his passion is cooled, while the coming out of mazi does not decrease the excitement but increases it. Furthermore, mazi is thin while semen is thick. The discharge of mazi does not make ghusl obligatory; however, wudu breaks.

3. When the glans of the penis enters the vagina and is not visible, ghusl becomes wajib irrespective of whether semen was discharged or not. The insertion of the penis in the front makes ghusl obligatory irrespective of whether semen is discharged or not. If it is inserted in the anus, then too ghusl will be obligatory. However, it is a major sin to insert or ask someone to insert the penis into the anus.

4. That blood which is discharged monthly is called haid (menstruation, or monthly period). When this blood stops flowing, ghusl becomes obligatory. That blood which is discharged after child-birth is called nifaas. Ghusl also becomes obligatory when this blood stops flowing. In short, ghusl becomes obligatory in four conditions:
(1) Discharge of semen out of excitement.
(2) Entry of the glans of the penis into the vagina (or anus).
(3) At the end of menstruation.
(4) At the end of nifaas.
5. If a person has sexual intercourse with a minor girl, ghusl will not be obligatory on her. But in order to get her into the habit, she should be made to bath.
6. While sleeping, one has a wet dream and even experiences some excitement. However on awakening, one notices that no semen was discharged. Ghusl will therefore not be obligatory. However, if semen was discharged, ghusl will be obligatory. If there is any wetness on the clothing or body, but one is in doubt as to whether it is mazi or semen, then too it will be obligatory to make ghusl.
7. A little semen comes out and one therefore had a bath. After bathing, more semen comes out. It will be obligatory to bath again. If after bathing, the husband's semen comes out of the wife's vagina, the ghusl will be complete and it will not be necessary to repeat it.
8. If, due to some sickness, or some other reason, semen comes out of its own accord, and there was no excitement or desire, then ghusl will not be obligatory, but wudu will break.
9. The husband and wife were sleeping on one bed. When they awoke, they saw stains of semen on the bed-sheet. However, neither the husband nor the wife remember seeing any dream. As a precaution, both of them should have a bath because it is not known as to whose semen it is.
10. If any non-Muslim accepts Islam, it is mustahab for him to have a bath.
11. If someone gives ghusl to a dead person, it is mustahab for that person to have a bath.
12. If one upon whom ghusl is obligatory, wishes to eat or drink something before going for a bath, he should first wash his hands, face and gargle his mouth. Thereafter he should eat and drink. But if he eats or drinks without washing his hands and face, there is no sin in this.
13. It is not permissible for the one on whom ghusl is obligatory, to touch the Quran, read it or to enter a musjid. However, it is permissible to take the name of Allawh, to read the kalimah or to read durood shareef (salutations upon Rasulullah sallAllawhu alayhi wa sallam). Rules similar to these will Insha Allawh be explained in detail in the chapter on menstruation.
14. To touch the books of tafsir (commentaries of the Quran) without bathing or without wudu, is makruh. To touch a Quran with its translation is haraam.(Note: this prohibition is in regard to the one upon whom ghusl is obligatory).

Additional rules concerning ghusl

In order to purify one's self from hadath-e-akbar, ghusl is fard. There are four causes of hadath-e-akbar:

The First Cause

The first cause is the coming out of semen. That is, the coming out of semen from its place and out of the body with desire. This is irrespective of whether it comes out while one is asleep or awake, unconscious or conscious, through sexual intercourse or without sexual intercourse, by thinking or imagining, or by fondling one's private part, or in any other way.
1. If the semen was ejaculated from its place with desire, but at the time of actually coming out of the private part there was no desire, even then ghusl will become fard. For example, the semen came out of its place with desire but he sealed the exit by holding it with his hand or placed cotton wool or something else over it. After some time when his desire or excitement subsided, he removed his hand or the cotton wool from the exit and the semen came out without any desire. Even then ghusl will be fard.
2. Semen came out of his penis and he made ghusl. After having made ghusl, semen came out again without desire. In this case, the first ghusl will be nullified and it will be fard to make ghusl again. This is on the condition that this second semen comes out before sleeping, or before urinating, or before taking forty steps or more. But if he read salaat before this semen could come out a second time, the salaat will be valid and it will not be necessary to repeat it.
3. After urinating, semen came out of a persons penis. Ghusl will be fard on him as long as it came out with desire.
4. If anyone (man or woman) awakens from his sleep and notices some wetness on his body or clothing, then there can be many possibilities in this. From among these possibilities, ghusl will become fard in eight conditions: (a) a person has conviction or is quite sure that it is semen and even remembers having a wet dream, (b) he is convinced that it is semen but does not remember having a wet dream, (c) he is convinced that it is pre-coital fluid (mazi) and even remembers having a wet dream, (d) he is not sure as to whether it is semen or pre-coital fluid but remembers having a wet dream, (e) he is not sure as to whether it is semen or wadi (liquid that precedes urine) but remembers having a wet dream, (f) he is not sure as to whether it is pre-coital fluid or wadi but remembers having a wet dream, (g) he is not sure as to whether it is mani, mazi, or wadi but remembers having a wet dream, (h) he is not sure as to whether it is mani or mazi and does not even remember having a wet dream.
5. A person has not circumcised himself and semen comes out from his penis and goes into that skin which is removed when circumcision takes place. Ghusl will become fard on him even though the semen may not have come out of that skin.

The Second Cause

The second cause of hadath-e-akbar is insertion (eelaaj). That is, the insertion of the glans of the penis with desire into the vagina of a living woman or into the anus of any other person irrespective of whether the person is a man, woman or hermaphrodite and irrespective of whether semen comes out or not. Ghusl will become fard on both of them if the condition is found in both of them, i.e. if both of them have reached the age of puberty. If this condition is only found in one of them, ghusl will only be fard on the one in whom the condition is found.
1. If a woman is under age but not so small that if one has intercourse with her there is a fear of the vaginal tissues tearing to such an extent that the vagina and anus will virtually come together; then by the insertion of the glans of the penis into her vagina ghusl will become fard on the man if he has reached the age of puberty. (However, if there is the aforementioned fear in a very minor girl, then mere insertion of the penis does not render ghusl obligatory.)
2. If a person whose testicles have been cut off inserts his penis into the back part of anyone or the vagina of a woman, ghusl will be fard on both of them if both are mature. Alternatively, it will be fard on the one who is mature.
3. If the glans of a person has been cut off, it will be calculated according to the balance of his organ. That is, if from the balance of his organ, he inserts equal to the extent of the glans, ghusl will be fard. If it is less than that, it will not be fard.
4. If a man wraps his private part with a cloth, etc. and then inserts it, then ghusl will become fard if he can perceive the heat of the body. However caution demands that it becomes fard irrespective of whether one feels the heat or not.
5. If a woman inserts the penis of a man who has no desire, the penis of an animal, a stick or any other object, or her own finger into her vagina out of passion - even then ghusl will become fard on her irrespective of whether seminal fluid comes out or not.

The Third Cause

Purification after menstruation.

The Fourth Cause

Purification after nifaas.

Those conditions when ghusl is not fard

1. If semen does not come out with desire from its actual place, ghusl will not be fard even if it comes out from the exit. For example, a person lifted a heavy weight, fell from an elevated place, or someone hit him and out of this shock semen came out without any desire. In this case ghusl will not be fard.

2. If a man has intercourse with any under-aged woman, ghusl will not become fard on condition that semen does not come out and that woman is so young that one fears that by having intercourse with her, her private parts will become connected.
3. If a person wraps his penis with a cloth and has intercourse, then ghusl will not become fard on condition that the cloth is so thick that he does not feel the heat of the body, nor does he get any enjoyment from the intercourse. But as a precaution, it is best to say that the moment the glans is inserted, ghusl becomes wajib.
4. If a man inserts less than the size of the glans of his penis, ghusl will not be fard.
5. By the emission of mazi and wadi, ghusl does not become fard.
6. Ghusl is not fard in the case of istihaada.
7. If a person has the sickness of continuous flowing of semen, then due to this flowing, ghusl will not be fard on him.
8. On awakening, some wetness is noticed on the clothes. In the following cases ghusl will not be compulsory: (a) he is convinced that it is mazi and does not even remember having a wet dream, (b) he is in doubt as to whether it is semen or wadi and does not even remember having a wet dream, (c) he is in doubt as to whether it is mazi or wadi and does not remember having a wet dream, (d) he is convinced that it is wadi, but remembers having a wet dream, (e) he is convinced that it is wadi and does not even remember having a wet dream, (f) he is in doubt as to whether it is mani, mazi, or wadi and does not remember having a wet dream. Note: As a precaution, it will be wajib to make ghusl in the first, second and sixth cases. If he does not make ghusl, his salaat will not be valid and he will be committing a grave sin. This is because there is a difference of opinion between Imam Abu Yusuf and tarafayn, i.e. Imam Abu Hanifah and Imam Muhammad. Imam Abu Yusuf says that ghusl is not wajib, while tarafayn say that it is wajib and the fatwa is according to what tarafayn say.
9. By injecting something into the anus, ghusl does not become fard.
10. If a man inserts his penis into the navel of a man or woman, ghusl will not become fard if semen does not come out.
11. In his dream a person sees his semen coming out and he even experiences satisfaction upon its emission. However he does not see any wetness or any other traces on his clothing. Ghusl will not be fard in this case.

Those conditions when ghusl is wajib (obligatory)

1. A disbeliever accepts Islam and while he was in the state of kufr he experienced hadath-e-akbar. He did not have a bath, or if he did, it was not considered to be a valid ghusl in Islam. After accepting Islam, ghusl will become wajib on him.
2. If a person reaches puberty before the age of fifteen and he experiences his first wet dream. As a precaution, ghusl will be wajib on him. If he has any wet dreams after this or after the age of fifteen, ghusl will be fard.
3. To give a bath to the dead body of a Muslim is fard-e-kifayah.

Those conditions when ghusl is sunnat

1. It is sunnat to make ghusl on Fridays at any time after Fajr salaat until the time of Jumuah salaat for those upon whom Jumuah is wajib.
2. It is sunnat to make ghusl after Fajr salaat on the days of Eid for those upon whom Eid salaat is wajib.
3. It is sunnat to make ghusl when donning the Ihraam for Hajj or Umrah.
4. It is sunnat for the person performing Hajj to make ghusl after zawaal (mid-day) on the day of Arafah (ninth of Zil Hijjah).

Those conditions when ghusl is mustahab

1. It is mustahab to make ghusl upon accepting Islam if one is pure from hadath-e-akbar.
2. A boy or girl reach the age of fifteen and until now there is no sign that they have reached puberty. It is mustahab for them to make ghusl.
3. It is mustahab to make ghusl after cupping (removing of dirty blood from the body), after recovery from insanity, intoxication, and unconsciousness.
4. After bathing the dead, it is mustahab for the one who gave the bath to make ghusl.
5. It is mustahab to make ghusl on the night of Bara'at, i.e. fifteenth of Sha'baan.
6. Ghusl is mustahab for the one who identifies Lailatul Qadr (the night of power).
7. It is mustahab to make ghusl when one intends entering Madinah Munawwarah.
8. In order to stay in Muzdalifah on the tenth of Zil Hijjah, it is mustahab to make ghusl after Fajr.
9. Ghusl is mustahab for Tawaaf-e-Ziyaarat. (this tawaaf is made during Hajj).
10. Ghusl is mustahab at the time of pelting the shaytaan.
11. Ghusl is mustahab for offering the salaats of Kusuf (solar eclipse), Khusuf (lunar eclipse) and Istisqaa' (salaat read for rains).
12. Ghusl is mustahab for offering the salaat of Khauf (fear and calamities).
13. It is mustahab to make ghusl when repenting for any sin.
14. Ghusl is mustahab for the traveller upon returning to his home or country.
15. Ghusl is mustahab when going to a gathering and when wearing new clothes.
16. Ghusl is mustahab for the one who is about to be killed.

Rules concerning hadath-e-akbar (major impurity)

1. When ghusl becomes fard on a person, it is haraam for him to enter a musjid. However, it will be permissible if there is a dire need. For example, the door of someone's house opens out into the musjid and there is no other way for him to come out nor is there any other place where he could stay. It will be permissible for him to make tayammum and go into the musjid. Or, for example, there is a fountain, well, or pond of water in the musjid and there is no water anywhere else.; To make tayammum and go into that musjid will be permissible.
2. It will be permissible for such a person to go into the Eid-gah, the madrasah, the khanqah, etc.
3. When a woman is in a state of menstruation or nifaas, it is not permissible to look at the area between her navel and knees, it is not permissible to touch that area if it is not covered with any clothing nor is it permissible to have sexual intercourse with her.
4. It is permissible to do the following things with a woman who is in a state of menstruation or nifaas: to kiss her, to drink her left-over water, etc., to sleep next to her, to touch the areas above her navel and below her knees even if there is no clothing on them, to touch the area between her navel and knees if it is covered with a cloth. However, it is makruh to sleep separately or stay aloof from a woman on account of her bleeding.
5. A person awakes from his sleep and sees some wetness on his private part, and prior to sleeping he had an erection. Ghusl will not be fard on him and that wetness will be regarded as pre-coital fluid. This is on the condition that he does not remember having a wet dream, nor is he convinced that the wetness is semen. If there is wetness on his thighs and clothes as well, ghusl will be obligatory on him.
6. If two men, or two women, or one man and one woman slept together on one bed; and after awakening they noticed some stains of semen on the bed and they do not know whose semen it is, nor did anyone else sleep on that bed prior to that; then in such a case ghusl will be fard on both of them. But if someone had slept on that bed prior to this and the semen is dry, then in both these cases ghusl will not be fard.
7. Ghusl became fard on a person but there is no secluded place. It will be wajib on a man to bath naked in front of other men. The same will apply to a woman in front of other women. But for a man to bath in front of women or a woman to bath in front of men is haraam. Instead, they should make tayammum.

SUITABLE AND UNSUITABLE WATER FOR WUDU AND GHUSL

1. It is permissible to make wudu and ghusl with rain-water and water from rivers, canals, springs, wells, dams and seas irrespective of whether the water is sweet or salty.
2. It is not permissible to make wudu with the juice extracted from any fruit, tree, or leaf. In the same way, the water which comes out from a water-melon or sugar-cane, etc. cannot be used for wudu or ghusl.

3. If something is mixed or boiled in water in such a way that it is no more referred to as water but is called by some other name, then wudu and ghusl with it is not permissible. For example, wudu is not permissible with any syrup, juice, soup, vinegar, rose-water, etc.
4. A pure substance falls in the water and some change has taken place in the colour, smell and taste of the water. However, that thing was not boiled in the water, nor was there any change in the density (liquidity) of the water. For example, some sand falls in flowing water, or saffron falls in the water and slightly changes its colour, or soap, or any such thing falls in the water - in all these cases wudu and ghusl will be permissible with such water.
5. If anything has been cooked or boiled in water and it has changed its colour or taste, wudu with such water will not be permissible. However, if any such thing is boiled in the water which purifies it and does not make it thicker, then wudu with such water is permissible. For example, berry leaves are boiled in water to bathe a dead person. There is no harm in this. However, if a large quantity is boiled which causes the water to get thick, then wudu and ghusl will not be proper with such water.
6. Water in which saffron or powder has been dissolved for dyeing a cloth cannot be used to make wudu.
7. If milk is mixed in water and its colour is dominant, wudu is not permissible. But if the milk was very little and did not affect the colour of the water, wudu with it will be permissible.
8. If a small quantity of water is found in a jungle, one can continue using it for wudu as long as its impurity (najaasat) is not established. Wudu should not be abandoned merely on the premise that perhaps it is impure. If, in the presence of such water, one makes tayammum, that tayammum will not be accepted.
9. Some tree-leaves fell in a well, etc. The water began to smell and its colour and taste also changed. Wudu with such water will still be permissible as long as its density does not change.
10. The water in which some impurity falls cannot be used for wudu or ghusl irrespective of whether the impurity is little or plentiful. However, if the water is flowing, it will not be rendered impure by the falling of some impurity in it until and unless its colour, taste or smell changes. If due to the impurity, the colour, taste or smell of the water changes, then even flowing water will be impure and wudu will not be permissible. That water which carries away grass, straws, leaves, etc. will be regarded as flowing water no matter how slowly it flows.
11. A large pond or tank which measures about 5 x 5 metres and is so deep that when a handful of water is scooped from it, its bed is not visible - is also regarded as flowing water. If such an impurity falls into it which cannot be seen after having fallen into it, eg. urine, blood, wine, etc. then wudu can be made from any of the four sides. But if an impurity which is visible, falls into it, eg. a dead dog, then wudu cannot be made from that side in which it fell. Any of the other sides can be used.
But even in such a tank, if some impurity falls and changes the colour, taste or smell of the water, it will become impure.
12. The water of a tank measuring about ten by two and half metres or twelve and half by two metres, is also treated as 5 x 5 metres.
13. Impurity fell on the roof. When it rained, the water came down the drains. If half or more of the roof was impure then that water will be impure. If less than half of the roof was impure, that water will be pure. If the impurity is only near the drain and it is such that all the water comes down from that drain alone, then that water will be impure.
14. If water is flowing very slowly, wudu should not be performed very hastily so that the water which was used does not come back in the hands.
15. If, from a tank measuring about 5 x 5 metres, water is taken from the place where the used water had fallen, this is also permissible.
16. If a non-Muslim or child puts his hand in the water, it will not become impure. However, if it becomes known that there was some impurity in the hands, the water will be impure. But because children cannot be trusted, it would be preferable not to use that water until some other water is not found.
17. If a living creature whose blood does not flow, eg. a mosquito, fly, wasp, gnat, scorpion, bee, etc. dies in the water or falls into it after dying, the water does not become impure.
18. If creatures which are born in water and remain in water all the time die, the water does not become polluted but remains pure. Such creatures are: fish, frogs, turtles, crabs, etc.
If such creatures fall in anything else besides water, eg. vinegar, syrup, milk, etc. then even these liquids will not become impure. The rule is the same for the land and water frogs, i.e. their dead bodies do not pollute the water. However, if the land frog has flowing blood, then by its death the water, etc. will become impure.
Note: The distinguishing feature between the land and water frog is that the feet of the water frog are webbed while those of the land frog are not webbed.
19. Creatures which live in water but are not born in water, such as ducks and water-fowls, if they die, the water becomes polluted and impure. Similarly, if they die outside and then fall in the water, it becomes impure.
20. If a frog, turtle, etc. dies in the water and disintegrates and breaks down into minute fragments and gets completely mixed in the water - even then the water will be pure. However, it is not proper to drink that water or cook food with it. Wudu and ghusl can be made with it.
21. By using water heated directly by the sun there is a fear of contacting leprosy. Therefore, wudu and ghusl should not be made with such water.
22. When the skin of a dead animal is dried or treated chemically in such a way that the water is removed completely and when stored it does not get decomposed - then it becomes purified and salaat can be offered on it. It can also be used for making water bags. However, the skin of a pig can never be purified. All other skins can be purified. But to use or utilise the skin of a human being is a major sin.
23. The skins of dogs, monkeys, cats, lions, etc. which become pure after treating them chemically can also be made pure by reciting Bismillah and slaughtering them. This is irrespective of whether they have been treated chemically or not. However, by slaughtering them, their meat does not become pure nor is it permissible to eat them.
24. The hair, horns, bones and teeth of dead animals are pure. If they fall in water, it will not become impure. However, if the bones, teeth, etc. have some fat of the dead animal on them, they will be regarded as impure, and if they fall in water, it will also be rendered impure.
25. The bones and hair of human beings are also pure. But to use them in any way is not permissible. Instead, they should be buried in the ground with respect.

RULES RELATING TO WELLS

1. When any impurity (najaasat) falls into a well, it becomes impure. By drawing out the water, it becomes purified. Irrespective of whether a little or a lot of impurity falls in it, all the water will have to be drawn out. Once all the water has been drawn out, it will become purified. It is not necessary to wash the gravel and walls of the well. All these will be automatically cleaned. In the same way, the rope and bucket will also be automatically cleaned once the well is purified. There is no need to wash these things.
Note: Drawing out all the water means that so much of water is drawn out that all of it is finished to such an extent that even half a bucket cannot be filled.
2. If the excrement of a pigeon or sparrow falls into a well, it will not be rendered impure. However, the excrement of chickens and ducks will render it impure and all the water will have to be drawn out.
3. If a dog, cat, cow or goat passes urine in a well, or some other impurity falls into it, all the water will have to be removed.
4. If a human being, dog, goat, or any similar animal falls into a well and dies in it, all the water will have to be drawn out. If it dies outside and then falls into the well, the same rule will apply, i.e. all the water will have to be drawn out.
5. If any living creature, big or small, dies in a well and gets bloated or bursts, even then all the water will have to be drawn out. Based on this, if a rat or sparrow dies and gets bloated or bursts, all the water will have to be drawn out.
6. If a rat, sparrow, or any similar sized creature falls and dies, but does not get bloated or does not burst, then it is obligatory to draw out twenty buckets of water from the well. But drawing out thirty buckets is preferable. However, first the dead rat, etc. should be taken out, then only should one commence drawing out the water. If the rat was not taken out first, then whatever water was drawn out will not be considered. After removing the rat, that amount of water will have to be drawn out again.

7. The same rule applies to a chameleon which has flowing blood, i.e. if it dies without getting bloated, twenty buckets will have to be drawn out and thirty will be preferable. However, the death of a lizard which does not have flowing blood does not render the water impure.
8. If a pigeon, fowl, cat, or any similar sized creature falls and dies without getting bloated, then it is obligatory to draw out forty buckets of water and preferable to draw out sixty buckets.
9. The water will be drawn out according to the bucket which is normally used for that well. If a bucket larger than the normal one is used, water should be drawn out proportionately: if it equals two buckets, it should be estimated accordingly. And if it equals four buckets, it should be estimated accordingly as well. In short, the water will be drawn out in proportion to the number of buckets that can be accomodated by this one bucket.
10. If there is such a large spring in the well that all the water cannot be drawn out and as you draw out of it, it begins to fill again - then in this case one should estimate the amount of water that is presently in the well and then draw out accordingly. Note: There are several ways of estimating the amount of water. One method is that for example the depth of the water is equal to five hands. So draw out 100 buckets continuously and then see the extent to which the water level has decreased. If it has decreased by one hand, then accordingly, five hands will equal 500 buckets. Another method is to call two pious Muslims who have knowledge about water and are able to estimate it. Water should be drawn out according to whatever estimate they give. However, if it is not possible to employ these methods, 300 buckets should be drawn out.
11. If a dead rat or any other creature came out of the well and it is not known as to when it fell into the well, nor has it burst or bloated, then whoever made wudu from this well should repeat his salaat of one day and one night. And the one who washed his clothing in this well, should re-wash them. But if that dead creature got bloated or burst, then the salaat of three days and three nights should be repeated. However, those who have not made wudu from this well do not have to repeat their salaat. All this is done as a precaution. Some ulama say that the well should be regarded as impure from the time its impurity has been established and all the previous wudu and salaat will be proper. If anyone acts on this, it will also be proper.
12. If anyone upon whom ghusl is necessary goes down a well in search of its bucket and there is no impurity on his body or clothes, the well will not be rendered impure. Similarly, if a non - Muslim goes down and there is no impurity on his body or clothing, the well will remain pure. But if there is some impurity, the well will become impure and all the water will have to be drawn out. If one is in doubt as to whether the clothing is clean or not, even then the well will be regarded as pure. However, there is no harm if 20-30 buckets are drawn out in order to keep one's heart at ease.
13. If a goat or rat falls into a well and comes out alive, the water will be pure and there is no need to draw out anything.
14. If a rat is caught and wounded by a cat biting at it, thereafter it is left free and in this bleeding condition it falls into a well - then all the water will have to be drawn out.
15. A rat comes out of a drain and its body is covered with impurity. Thereafter it falls into a well. All the water will have to be removed irrespective of whether it dies in the well or not.
16. The tail of a rat was cut off and it fell into a well - all the water will have to be drawn out. The same rule applies to the tail of that lizard which has flowing blood.
17. If the thing with which the well becomes impure cannot be removed despite trying to do so, then the nature of the thing should be established. If the object is pure in itself, but is rendered impure by some other impurity, eg. impure clothing, a dirty ball, dirty shoes, etc. then one is excused from removing the object. Only the water should be drawn out. If the thing is impure by nature, eg. a dead creature, a rat, etc. then as long as it is not established that that thing has decomposed and turned into mud, the well cannot become pure. But once this has been established, all the water should be drawn out and the well will now be pure.
18. The quantity of water which has to be drawn out could be drawn out all at once or little by little. It will be purified in any way.

THE LEFTOVER WATER OF ANIMALS

1. The leftover water of human beings is pure irrespective of whether the person is a disbeliever, or a woman is in her monthly period, or in nifaas. In all cases it will be pure. In the same way, the perspiration of all these persons is pure. However, if there is any impurity on the hands or mouth, that leftover water will become impure.
2. The leftover water of a dog is najis. If a dog puts its mouth in a utensil, it will become purified after washing it three times irrespective of whether the utensil is of clay or copper, etc. All these will be purified once they are washed. However, it is preferable to wash it seven times and thereafter to scrub it once with sand (or soap) so that it is thoroughly washed.
3. The leftover water of a pig is also impure. In the same way, the leftover water of lions, wolves, monkeys, jackals and all other ferocious animals is impure.
4. The leftover water of a cat, although pure, is makruh. In the presence of other water, it should not be used for wudu. However, if no other water is found, it can be used for wudu.
5. If a cat puts its mouth in milk or curry, etc. then a man whom Allawh Ta'ala has bestowed with wealth should not consume it. But if a man is poor, he can consume it. There is no harm or sin in this. In fact, for such a person, its consumption is not even makruh.
6. A cat killed a rat. Immediately thereafter it put its mouth in a utensil. This will render it impure. But if it does so after some time, after having licked its mouth, it will not be impure but will remain makruh.
7. The leftover water of a fowl which is not encaged and which eats filth and dirty things is makruh. The leftover water of a fowl that is encaged is pure.
8. The leftover water of birds of prey such as hawks and falcons is also makruh. But those that are domesticated and are unable to eat dead animals, nor is there any doubt about any impurity being on their beaks - their leftover water is pure.
9. The leftover water of halaal animals such as sheep, goats, cows, buffaloes, antelopes, etc.; and halaal birds such as nightingales, parrots, doves, sparrows, etc., is all pure. Similarly, the leftover water of horses is also pure.
10. The leftover water of creatures which inhabit houses, such as snakes, scorpions, rats, lizards, etc. is makruh.
11. If a rat nibbles at a piece of bread, it will be better to break off that portion and then consume it.
12. The leftover water of a donkey or mule is pure but doubtful for wudu. If only this water is present and no other water can be found, wudu as well as tayammum will have to be made. One has the choice to make any one of the two first.
13. The sweat of animals whose leftover water is impure is also impure. And the sweat of those whose leftover water is pure is also pure. And those whose leftover water is makruh, their sweat is also makruh. The sweat of a donkey or mule is pure. If it comes on the clothing, washing it will not be obligatory but preferable.
14. If a domesticated cat comes and sits on someone or licks the hands or some other part of the body, then where ever it licks or where ever its saliva goes - all these will have to be washed. If it is not washed, but left as it is, then this is makruh and detestable.
15. The leftover food and drink of an unrelated person of the opposite sex is makruh if it is known that it is of a particular person. But if it is not known by whom it has been left behind, it will not be makruh.

TAYAMMUM

Purifying with dust or sand where water is not available

1. If someone is in a jungle and does not know where water could be found, nor is there anyone from whom he could find out, then in such a case he should make tayammum.

But if he found someone who pointed out water within 1.6 kilometres and he is confident that this person is speaking the truth, or the person himself feels confident of finding water within 1.6 kilometres - then it will be necessary to search for water in such a way that it does not cause any harm or inconvenience to him or to his fellow companions. It is not permissible to make tayammum without searching for water. If one is definite that there is water within 1.6 kilometres, it will be obligatory to bring the water.
2. If water is available, but it is beyond 1.6 kilometres, it is not obligatory to go for the water. It will be sufficient to make tayammum.

3. If a person is about 1.6 kilometres from an inhabited area and water cannot be found before that, it will still be permissible to make tayammum. This is irrespective of whether one is a musaafir (traveller) or just came out for a short distance.
4. If one found a well on the way, but there is no bucket or rope to draw the water nor is there anyone from whom he can ask, even then tayammum will be permissible.
5. If water was found somewhere, but it is so little that the face, hands and feet can only be washed one time each, then tayammum will not be permissible. Instead, these parts should be washed once and masah of the head should be made. The other sunnah acts of wudu could be left out. But if even this much is not available, tayammum should be made.
6. If, due to some illness, water is harmful and wudu or ghusl will increase the illness or delay its healing, tayammum will be permissible. But if cold water is harmful and warm water is not, it will be obligatory to use warm water. However, if warm water is not available, tayammum may be performed.
7. If water is near, i.e. definitely within 1.6 kilometres, then it is not permissible to make tayammum. It is obligatory to bring the water and make wudu. It is not permissible for women to abstain from going for the water and sufficing with tayammum merely because of shyness or hijaab. Hijaab of this sort which causes one to forego any ruling of the Shariah is not permissible and haraam. It will be obligatory for her to cover herself with a veil or sheet and bring the water. However, she should not make wudu nor open her face and hands in front of others.
8. As long as wudu cannot be made, one can continue making tayammum. No matter how many days pass, one should not allow any doubts or misgivings to creep in. Whatever purity is obtained from wudu and ghusl, the same purity is obtained from tayammum. One should not think that by making tayammum the same purity is not obtained.
9. If water is being sold and one does not have the money, tayammum is permissible. If one has the money and it is more than what one will require for the fare, freight etc. of the journey, then to purchase the water will be obligatory. However, if the price of the water is so exorbitant that no one can afford it, then it will not be obligatory to purchase the water. Tayammum will be permissible. If one does not have any spare money, it will not be obligatory to purchase the water. Tayammum will be permissible.
10. If it is extremely cold somewhere and there is a fear of dying or falling ill if one takes a bath and there is no blanket or any such warm thing with which one could warm one's self after bathing, then in such dire circumstances tayammum could be made.
11. If someone has wounds on more than half of his body, or is suffering from small-pox, then it is not obligatory on him to bath. Instead, tayammum could be made.
12. If tayammum was made in a field and there was water nearby but he did not know about it, then both the tayammum and the salaat are proper. When he comes to know about the water, there is no need to repeat the tayammum and salaat.
13. While on a journey, if someone else has water, then one should judge for oneself and see what one's heart says: "If you ask for the water the person will give you." In such a case it will not be permissible to make tayammum without asking for the water. And if the heart says: "If you ask for the water, that person will not give you." In such a case it will be permissible to make tayammum even without asking for water. But if after performing the salaat, he asked for the water and the person gave it, then the salaat will have to be repeated.
14. If zam-zam water is kept in cans, tayammum is not permissible. It will be obligatory to open the cans and make wudu and ghusl with it.
15. A person has got water with him, but the journey is so bad that no water is obtainable. He therefore has the fear of death or illness on account of thirst. Wudu should not be made. Tayammum will be permissible.
16. If making ghusl is harmful and wudu is not, then instead of ghusl, tayammum should be made. If wudu breaks after the tayammum of ghusl, then for this broken wudu, tayammum should not be made. Instead, for the broken wudu, wudu should be made. If before making the tayammum for ghusl, one experiences something which breaks wudu and thereafter one made tayammum for ghusl, then this tayammum will be sufficient for both wudu and ghusl.
17. The method of making tayammum is as follows: Both palms should be placed on pure ground and the entire face must be wiped with them. Place the palms on the ground for a second time and wipe each hand upto and including the elbows. The areas under the bangles, bracelets, etc. should be thoroughly rubbed. If, according to the person, even a place equal to a nail is left out, tayammum will not be complete.
18. After placing the palms on the ground, they should be dusted so that no dirt goes on the face and hands thereby making them unsightly.
19. Tayammum is also permissible with things other than soil if they also have the same qualities, eg. sand, lime-stone, lime, sulphurate of arsenic, antimony (surmah), brick dust, etc. Those things which do not have the qualities of soil cannot be used for tayammum, eg. gold, silver, tin, wheat, wood, clothing, corn, etc. However, if dust or sand has fallen on these things, tayammum on them will be permissible.
20. Matter which neither burns in fire nor melts, possesses the qualities of earth and tayammum with it will be permissible. Tayammum is not permissible on that which burns and turns into ash or melts. In the same way, tayammum with ash is not permissible.
21. Tayammum is not permissible on copper utensils, pillows, mattresses and other clothing. However, if there is so much of dust on them that if by striking them with the hands, a lot of dust comes on the palms, tayammum will be permissible. If very little dust comes on the palms by striking them, tayammum will not be permissible. Tayammum on clay pots and pitchers is permissible irrespective of whether they are filled with water or not. But if something is written or painted on them, tayammum will not be permissible.
22. If there is no dust whatsoever on a stone, even then tayammum will be permissible. In fact, even if it is thoroughly washed with water, tayammum will be permissible. It is not necessary for the dust to come on the hands. Similarly, tayammum on a baked brick is permissible irrespective of whether there is dust on it or not.
23. Tayammum with mud is permissible but not desirable. If one cannot find anything besides mud, one should fill a cloth with the mud and once it dries, make tayammum with it. However, if the salaat time is about to expire, he should not worry about the mud being wet or dry. He should make tayammum and should not allow the salaat to be missed.
24. If urine or some other impurity fell on the ground, got dried by the sun and even the foul smell is gone, then that place is pure, salaat can be read there. However, tayammum is not permissible on such a place when one knows that it is impure. But if one does not know about its state, one should not have doubts about it.
25. Just as tayammum can be made in place of wudu, it can also be made in place of ghusl when one is constrained to do so. In the same way, the woman that has just completed her monthly periods or the after-birth bleeding (nifaas), at the time of necessity she too can make tayammum. There is no difference in the tayammum of wudu and ghusl - the procedure for both is the same.
26. If one demonstrated the procedure of tayammum to another person but had no intention of making tayammum in his heart - a mere demonstration was intended - then this tayammum will not be considered. The reason is that for tayammum to be proper, it is necessary to have the intention of tayammum in the heart. If one has no intention of tayammum and merely intends a demonstration, then tayammum will not be considered.
27. At the time of making tayammum one should merely have this intention in his heart: "I am making tayammum in order to purify myself." Alternatively: "I am making tayammum so that I can perform my salaat." Tayammum will be complete. To make intention that I am making tayammum for wudu or for ghusl is not necessary.
28. If tayammum was made specifically to touch the Quran, it will not be permissible to read salaat with that tayammum. If tayammum was made for a particular salaat, the next salaat could be read with that same tayammum. Even the Quran may be touched with that same tayammum.
29. A person has to have a bath and he does not even have wudu. He should make only one tayammum, it is not necessary to make a separate tayammum for each one.

30. A person made tayammum and even performed his salaat with it. Thereafter, he found water and the salaat time has not expired as yet. It is not obligatory to repeat the salaat, the salaat performed with that tayammum is complete.
31. The water is within 1.6 kilometres but the time is so short that if he went for the water, he will miss his salaat. Even then tayammum is not permissible. He will have to go for the water and read the salaat later.
32. In the presence of water, it will not be permissible to make tayammum in order to be able to touch the Quran.
33. While on a journey, one has the hope of finding water further along the way. He should therefore not hasten to read his salaat in the beginning but should wait until he comes to the water. However he should not delay to the extent that the makruh time of salaat enters. If the person did not wait for the water at all but performed his salaat in the beginning, then too it will be proper.
34. If one has water with him but fears that if he gets off the train he will be left behind, tayammum will also be permissible. If there is a snake or any other animal near the water and one cannot go there, tayammum will be permissible.
35. A person had kept water together with all his belongings but forgot about it and made tayammum and also read his salaat. Thereafter he remembered that his water is with his belongings. Now it is not obligatory on him to repeat his salaat.
36. All those things and acts which break wudu also break tayammum. In addition to this, tayammum also breaks once water is found. Similarly, if, after making tayammum, one proceeds further and reaches a place where water is within 1.6 kilometres - then too tayammum will break.
37. If one made tayammum for wudu, then upon finding sufficient water for wudu, tayammum will break. If one made tayammum for ghusl, then upon finding sufficient water for ghusl, tayammum will break. If less water was found, tayammum will not break.
38. There was water on the way but one just passed by and did not know about it and had no knowledge that it is there - even then tayammum will not break. Similarly, if one finds water or comes to know of it but is unable to get down from the vehicle, tayammum will not break.
39. A person made tayammum on account of illness. Once he recovers and making wudu or ghusl will not cause any harm, then tayammum will break. Now it will be obligatory to make wudu and ghusl.
40. One could not find water so he made tayammum. Thereafter he was afflicted with a sickness which is aggravated by water. After being afflicted with this sickness, he finds water. Now, that tayammum which he had made on account of not finding water will break and he will have to make tayammum again.
41. One had to take an obligatory bath. After bathing, a particular area was left dry and all the water had got finished as well. Such a person has not purified himself as yet. Tayammum will have to be made. When he finds water anywhere, he should wash that dry area and it will not be necessary to have a bath all over again.
42. If the person finds water at such a time that even his wudu broke, then he should first wash that dry area and make tayammum for the wudu that broke. If the water is so little that wudu could be made but that dry area cannot be washed, then wudu should be made. And for that dry area, the tayammum for ghusl should be made. But if the tayammum for ghusl has already been made, there is no need to make tayammum again. The first tayammum will still be intact.
43. A person's body and clothing are impure and he also has to make wudu. And the water for all this is not sufficient. He should therefore wash his body and clothing and make tayammum in place of wudu.
44. There is nothing with which one could draw water from a well nor does he have a cloth which he could dip into the well and after wringing it purify himself. Alternatively, there is water in a big drum but he does not have anything with which he could draw the water nor can he take out water by tilting the drum. Alternatively, his hands are impure and there is no one else who could draw the water for him or wash his hands for him. Tayammum will be permissible in all such cases.
45. If the reason for which tayammum was made was caused by a human being, then once that cause is removed or goes away, the person will have to repeat all the salaats that were offered with that tayammum. For example, a person was in prison and the warden refused to give him water or someone told him that if you make wudu I will kill you. Whatever salaats he offers with this tayammum will have to be repeated.
46. It is permissible for several persons to make tayammum one after the other from one spot of ground or from one lump of earth.
47. If a person is unable to use water or sand, irrespective of whether they are not available or it is because of some sickness; then he should offer his salaat without purifying himself. Once he purifies himself later, he should repeat his salaat. For example, a person is travelling by train and salaat time enters. He does not have any water nor anything with which he could make tayammum, such as sand, clay utensils, or dust, etc. and the salaat time will expire soon. In such a condition he should offer his salaat without purifying himself. Similarly, a person is in prison and does not have any clean water or sand. He should offer salaat without having made wudu or tayammum. In both cases salaat will have to be repeated.
48. It is mustahab for the person who is definitely sure or convinced of finding water until the last time of the salaat to delay his salaat until the last mustahab time of the salaat. For example, he does not have anything with which he could draw water from the well but he is sure or convinced that by the last mustahab time he will obtain a bucket or rope. Or, for example, a person is travelling by train and is sure or convinced that by the end of the time the train will stop at such a station where he will find water. In such a case it is mustahab to delay the salaat until the last mustahab time (of that salaat).
49. A person was travelling by train and on account of not having any water, he made tayammum. On the course of his journey, while the train was moving, he saw a spring, or pond of water. His tayammum will not break because in this case he is unable to use that water. The train cannot stop nor can he jump off a moving train.

RULES CONCERNING MASAH ON LEATHER SOCKS

1. If one wears leather socks after having made wudu and his wudu breaks thereafter, then when he makes his wudu again, it will be permissible for him to make masah (passing of wet hands) on the leather socks. However it is preferable to remove the leather socks and wash the feet.
2. If the socks are so short that they do not cover the ankles, masah on them is not permissible. Similarly, if a person is not in a state of wudu and wears the leather socks, masah on them will not be permissible. He will have to remove them and wash the feet.
3. The person who is on a journey can make masah on the leather socks for a period of three days and three nights (72 hours). As for the one who is not travelling, for him the period is one day and one night (24 hours). This period of one day and night or three days and three nights will be calculated from the time the wudu breaks and not from the time when the leather socks were worn. For example, a person made wudu at the time of Zuhr and then wore his leather socks. Thereafter his wudu broke at the time of sunset. It will now be permissible for him to make masah right until the sunset of the following day. And if he is on a journey, then right until the sunset of the third day. Once the sun sets, it will not be permissible for him to make masah.
4. If ghusl becomes obligatory on a person he should first remove the leather socks and then have a bath. Making masah on the leather socks when bathing is not permissible.
5. Masah should be made on the top section of the leather socks and not of the soles.
6. The method of making masah is that after wetting the fingers, they should be placed in the front. Place the fingers flat on the socks with the palms away from them. Thereafter, draw or pull the fingers towards the ankles. If the palms are also placed flat on the socks together with the fingers, it will be permissible.
7. If instead of drawing the fingers from the front to the ankles, one draws them from the ankles to the front, then this will be permissible but contrary to the mustahab method. Similarly, if masah is made on the width of the leather socks and not on the length, it will be permissible but contrary to the mustahab method.
8. Masah on the soles, heels or sides of the leather socks is not permissible.
9. If the fingers were not placed flat on the leather socks but only the finger tips were placed, then this masah will not be permissible. However, if water drips continuously on the fingers and it could wet an area equal to three fingers, it will be permissible.
10. When making masah, the mustahab method is that it should be made with the palm-side of the hands. But if someone makes masah with the back of the hands, it will also be permissible.

11. A person did not make masah but went outside in the rain or walked on wet grass whereby the leather socks got wet. Masah will be complete.
12. It is fard to make masah equal to three fingers of the hands on each leather sock. Masah will not be complete with anything less than this.
13. Whatever breaks wudu also breaks masah of the leather socks. In addition to this, removing the leather socks also breaks masah. If a person is in a state of wudu and he removes his leather socks, masah will break. He will have to wash both his feet again and there is no need to repeat the entire wudu.
14. If the leather sock of only one foot was removed, it will be wajib to remove the other foot as well and to wash both feet.
15. Masah also breaks with the expiry of the period of masah. If the person is still in a state of wudu after the expiry of the period, then only the feet will have to be washed. There is no need to repeat the entire wudu. But if wudu has also broken, then after removing the leather socks, the entire wudu will have to be repeated.
16. After having made masah on the leather socks, the person's foot got immersed in water. On account of the leather socks being loose, water went inside and the entire foot or more than half of the foot got wet. Masah will break, the socks will have to be removed and both the feet will have to be thoroughly washed.
17. If the leather socks are torn to the extent that when one walks, an area equal to three fingers of the feet becomes exposed, then masah on them will not be permissible. But if less than three fingers get exposed, it will be permissible.
18. If the stitches of the leather socks got opened but the foot is not visible from them, masah will be permissible. But if it is such that while walking they become visible and when one is not walking they cannot be seen, then masah will not be permissible.
19. If the leather socks gets open on one foot equal to two fingers, and equal to one finger on the other foot, masah will be permissible. If one foot is torn in several places and all this equals three fingers, masah will not be permissible. But if these several places do not add up to three fingers, masah will be permissible.
20. A person who was not on a journey began making masah on the leather socks. Before the expiry of one day and one night, he embarked on a journey. He can now continue making masah for three days and three nights. But if one day and one night passes before he can embark on the journey, the time will be expired. He will have to wash his feet and then wear the leather socks.
21. If a person was on a journey and then went home and one day and one night had already expired, then the leather socks will have to be removed. Masah on them will not be permissible. But if one day and one night is not over as yet, he can complete this period and cannot go beyond it.
22. If leather socks are worn over ordinary socks (cotton or woollen socks, etc.), masah will also be permissible.
23. To make masah on ordinary socks alone is not permissible. However, if they have been covered with leather, or covered in leather in the shape of men's shoes (in other words there are leather soles upon ordinary socks), or they are so thick and hard that they can stay on without being tied, and one can walk about four to six kilometres with them - then in all these cases masah on ordinary socks is permissible.
24. Masah is not permissible on a burqah (head cover), gloves, hat or turban.
25. Masah on boots is permissible with the following conditions:
(1) that they cover the entire feet together with the ankles.
(2) the lace (or zip) closes them in such a way that the skin of the feet do not get exposed to such an extent which would make masah impermissible.
26. A person who was making tayammum had his leather socks on. When he makes wudu, he cannot make masah on those socks because tayammum is not a complete purity. This is irrespective of whether the tayammum was for ghusl only, for wudu and ghusl, or for wudu only.
27. The person who is making ghusl cannot make masah irrespective of whether it is a compulsory or sunnat bath. For example, a person raises his feet in such a way, that he washes his entire body except his feet, and after having washed his entire body, he makes masah on his feet. This is not permissible.
28. Just as the wudu of a ma'zur breaks on the expiry of a salaat time, in the same way his masah also breaks. It is wajib on him to remove his leather socks and wash them. However, if at the time of making wudu and masah of the socks, that sickness of his was not present then he will be regarded as any normal person.
29. If a major portion of his foot got wet in some way or another, the leather socks will have to be removed and the feet will have to be washed.

THE VIRTUES AND REWARDS OF WUDU AND GHUSL

It is mentioned in a Hadith that whoever reads Bismillah when commencing with wudu (and to read Bismillahi wal hamdolillah is better), and when washing every limb he reads:
"Ash hado al la ilaha illa Allawho wahdaho la shareeka laho, wa ash hado anna Muhammadan abduhu wa rasuluh", and on completing his wudu he reads:
"Allawhumma ij'alni minat tawwaabeena waj'alni minal mutatahhireen." Translation: "O Allawh! Make me among the repenters and among the purified ones."
then after he dies, the eight doors of paradise will be opened for him and he can enter from whichever one he wishes. If immediately after that, he reads two rak'ats of nafl salaat, reciting the Quran therein with full concentration, and he also reads all his other salaat in this way, i.e. with presence of mind, then when he completes his salaat, he will be purified of all his sins just as the day when his mother had given birth to him. He will be told to start with his deeds from the beginning, and until now, all his past sins will be forgiven. The ulama say that here it refers to minor sins. How will he know that he has been told to start his deeds again? The answer to this is that by Rasulullah sallAllawhu alayhi wa sallam mentioning this in the Hadith, we have come to know of it. To mention it in this way and to get glad tidings and practise on it is sufficient.
It is mentioned in a Hadith: "That person's wudu is not complete who does not send salutations (durood) upon me." And in another Hadith, the time for sending durood is after completing the wudu.
It is related in a Hadith that: "When a person makes wudu and washes his face, all those sins which he committed with his eyes are washed off with the water or the last drop of water. When he washes his hands, all those sins which he had committed with his hands are washed off with the water or the last drop of water. When he washes his feet, all those sins which he had committed with his feet are washed off, until he is completely purified from all sins." (Muslim) Here sins refer to minor sins as explained by the ulama. The sin of the eyes is to look at something evil. The sin of the hands, for example, is to touch someone with an evil intention. The sin of the feet is to go somewhere with an evil intention. Ensure that you make wudu thoroughly. Value the virtues and rewards that have been mentioned in regard to wudu.
Hadrat Anas radiAllawhu anhu (he is a senior Sahabi who had remained in the service of Rasulullah sallAllawhu alayhi wa sallam for ten years) has related a lengthy Hadith. He says that Rasulullah sallAllawhu alayhi wa sallam said: "O Anas! wash thoroughly when you are making ghusl of janabat (major impurity). If you do this, then without doubt you will come out from that place of bathing in such a state that no sin will remain on you.(here too it refers to minor sins) I asked: "O Rasulullah! how does one wash thoroughly?" He replied: "It means that you wet the roots of the hair and clean the body thoroughly." (it is mustahab to cleanse the body by rubbing it. It cannot be cleaned properly without rubbing it. "Thoroughly" means to wash it very well as has been explained by Rasulullah sallAllawhu alayhi wa sallam). Rasulullah sallAllawhu alayhi wa sallam then said: "O my dear son! (here son is used out of love) if you have the strength, try to be in a state of wudu all the time. The one who dies while he is in a state of wudu will get the reward of martyrdom." (Abu Ya'la).

BOOK III
HAID AND ISTIHADA

(Menstruation and Bleeding Out of the Normal Period)

1. Blood which flows out of the vagina every month is called haid (menstruation or monthly periods).
2. The minimum period of haid is three days and three nights and the maximum period is ten days and ten nights. Blood which flows for less than three days and three nights is not haid but is referred to as istihaada (flowing of blood out of the normal period). This happens on account of some sickness. If blood flows for more than ten days and ten nights, then all those days beyond ten days will be regarded as istihaada.

3. If blood flows for three days and not three nights,it will not be haid but istihaada. For example, if blood started to flow on Friday morning and stopped flowing on Sunday after sunset, then this is not haid but istihaada. If it flows slightly less than three days and three nights, it will not be haid. For example, if blood started to flow at sunrise on Friday morning and stopped flowing slightly before sunrise on Monday morning, then it is not haid but istihaada.
4. Whatever colour flows in the period of haid, such as red, yellow, green, brown, will all be regarded as haid until the pad is completely white in colour. When it is white and remains as it was when it was placed, the woman will be cleansed from her haid.
5. A woman does not get haid before the age of nine and after the age of fifty five. Therefore, if blood flows from a girl who is under nine years, it will not be haid but istihaada. If blood flows after the age of fifty five, it will only be regarded as haid if it is extremely red or black. If it is yellow, green or brown, it is not haid but istihaada. However, if yellow, green or brown blood used to flow from this woman before she turned fifty five, then after the age of fifty five, these colours will also be regarded as haid. But if it happens contrary to her habit, it will not be haid but istihaada.
6. A woman used to bleed for three or four days every month. Thereafter, in a particular month she bled for more than her normal period but not more than ten days. All the days that she bled will be haid. But if she bled for more than ten days, then all the days which are more than her normal period will be regarded as istihaada. For example, a woman always had a habit of bleeding for three days. However, in a particular month she bled for nine days or ten days and ten nights. All these days will be regarded as haid. But if she bled for even a moment more than ten days and ten nights, then her first three days are haid and the balance of the days will be regarded as istihaada. It will be wajib for her to make qada of her salaat for the balance of these days.
7. A certain woman has no fixed period. At times she bleeds for four days, at times for seven days and at times for ten days. All this will be regarded as haid. If at a certain time she bleeds for more than ten days and ten nights, check the number of days she bled for the previous month. That same number will be regarded as haid (for this month) and the balance will be istihaada.
8. A certain woman always bled for four days. Then one month she bled for five days. The following month she bled for fifteen days. Out of these fifteen days, five days will be haid and the balance ten days will be istihaada. Her first normal habit will not be considered and it will be regarded that her first habit has changed and that now her habit is five days.
9. A certain woman bled for more than ten days and she completely forgot her previous habit - that is, for how many days she bled the previous month. Her problem is a very intricate one and is extremely difficult to explain. In addition to this, such a problem is very rare. We are therefore not going to explain the ruling in regard to her problem. When the need arises, she should consult a learned aalim and abstain from asking anyone who is not sure of himself.
10. A girl sees blood for the first time. If she bleeds for ten days or less, it will all be haid. If she bleeds for more than ten days, the ten days will be haid and whatever extra days she bleeds will be regarded as istihaada.
11. A girl sees blood for the first time and she continues bleeding for several months. From the day that she started to bleed till ten days and ten nights will be regarded as haid. Thereafter, the next twenty days will be istihaada. In this way, she will continue regarding ten days as haid and twenty days as istihaada.
12. The minimum period of purity between two haid periods is fifteen days. There is no maximum period. If, for some reason, she stops bleeding, then no matter how many months blood does not flow, she will remain pure.
13. If a woman bleeds for three days and three nights and thereafter remains pure for fifteen days and again bleeds for three days and three nights, then the former and latter three days and three nights will be the periods of haid and the fifteen days will be the days of purity.
14. If she bleeds for one or two days and then remained pure for fifteen days, and thereafter bled for one or two days again, then the fifteen days will be the period of purity and the former and latter one or two days will not be haid but istihaada.
15. If she bled for one or several days and then remained pure for less than fifteen days, then these will not be considered. Instead, the first day till the last day will be regarded as if she bled continuously. Whatever her normal period of bleeding may have been will be regarded as haid and all the balance of the days will be regarded as istihaada. An example of this is as follows: a woman had the habit of bleeding on the first, second and third day of every month. In a certain month it happened that she bled on the first day and thereafter remained pure for fourteen days. Thereafter she bled for another day. It will be regarded as if she bled continuously for sixteen days. Out of these sixteen days, the first three days will be of haid and the thirteen days will be regarded as istihaada.
If she had a habit of bleeding on the fourth, fifth and sixth of every month, then these dates will be the days of haid and the first three days and the last ten days will be of istihaada. If she had no habit and this was the first time that she bled, then the first ten days will be of haid and the last six days of istihaada.
16. Whatever blood that flows while a woman is pregnant is not the blood of haid but of istihaada - irrespective of how many days she bleeds.
17. Whatever blood that comes out prior to the delivery of the child is also the blood of istihaada. In fact, as long as more than half the child does not come out, until then whatever blood that flows will be that of istihaada.

Rules concerning haid

1. During haid, it is not permissible to offer salaat or to fast. The only difference is that she is completely excused from salaat. After the haid, it is not wajib on her to make qada of her salaat. However, she is not excused from fasting. After her haid she will have to keep her missed fasts.
2. If she begins to bleed while offering her fard salaat, that salaat will also be excused. After her haid she does not have to make qada of it. If she was offering an optional or sunnah salaat, she will have to make qada of it.
If she begins to bleed while fasting, that fast will break and she will have to make qada of it. Even if she bleeds while keeping an optional fast, she will have to make qada of it.
3. If she begins to bleed at the end of a salaat time and had not offered her salaat as yet, even then she is excused from that salaat.
4. During haid, sexual intercourse is not permissible. Apart from sexual intercourse everything else is permissible. In other words, they can eat, drink, and sleep together.
5. A certain woman had a habit of bleeding for five or nine days. According to her habit, she bled for that number of days and thereafter she stopped bleeding. As long as she does not have a bath, sexual intercourse will not be permissible with her until one salaat time passes whereby the qada of one salaat becomes wajib on her.
6. If she had a habit of five days and she stopped bleeding after four days, she will have to have a bath and salaat will be wajib on her. But as long as five days do not pass, sexual intercourse with her will not be permissible because it is possible that she will start bleeding again.
7. If she bled for a full ten days and ten nights, then the moment she stops bleeding, sexual intercourse with her will be permissible irrespective of whether she had a bath or not.
8. If she stopped bleeding after one or two days, it is not wajib on her to have a bath. She can make wudu and offer her salaat but intercourse is not permissible. If she starts to bleed again before fifteen days, it will now be established that those days were the days of haid. According to calculation, whichever days were of haid should be regarded as haid. Now she will have to have a bath and offer her salaat. However, if fifteen days pass and she did not bleed, it will now be established that those one or two days were of istihaada. Since she did not read her salaat for that one or two days on account of bleeding, she will now have to make qada of those missed salaats.
9. She has the habit of bleeding for three days. But in a particular month, three days passed and she still had not stopped bleeding. She should not have a bath nor should she offer any salaat. If on the completion of ten days and ten nights, or before that, she stops bleeding; then the salaat for all these days will be excused. She will not have to make any qada and it will be said that now her habit has changed and all these days will therefore be of haid. But if she bled on the eleventh day as well, it is now established that only three days were of haid and all the rest were of istihaada. She has to have a bath on the eleventh day and make qada for the salaats of the seven days. She should not leave out her salaat now.
10. If she had haid for less than ten days and she stopped bleeding at such a time that so little time was left to offer her salaat that if she had to rush and have a bath, and after bathing so little time is left that she could only say Allawhu Akbar and make her intention and could not read anything further; even then the salaat of that time will become wajib on her. She will have to make qada of it. If the time left is even less than this, that salaat will be excused and she does not have to make qada.

11. If she had haid for the full ten days and ten nights and she stopped bleeding at such a time that she only has time to say Allawhu Akbar and nothing else, nor has she the time to even have a bath; then even in this case salaat will become wajib on her and she will have to make qada.
12. If she stopped bleeding in Ramadaan during the day, it will not be proper for her to eat or drink for the rest of the day. It will be wajib on her to behave like all other fasting persons until sunset. However, this day will not be counted as a fast. She will have to make qada of it.
13. If she stopped bleeding in Ramadaan at night and she had haid for the full ten days and ten nights, then if such a little time of the night is left that she cannot even say Allawhu Akbar once, it will still be wajib on her to keep fast the next day.
If she had haid for less than ten days, then if she has so much time of the night whereby she could have a quick bath but after bathing she does not have the time to say even one Allawhu Akbar; even then she will have to keep fast the next day. If she had the time, but did not have a bath, she should not break her fast. Instead, she should make her intention (for fasting) and have a bath in the morning. If she has even less time than this, that is she does not have the time to have a bath, then it will not be permissible for her to fast the next day. However, it will not be proper for her to eat or drink anything. She will have to spend the entire day like all other fasting persons and even make qada of that fast.
14. Once blood flows into the external skin of the vagina, haid commences. This is irrespective of whether it flows out of the skin or not. So if some cotton wool or something similar is inserted into the vagina whereby the blood cannot flow out, then as long as the blood remains in the vagina and no spot of blood comes onto the cotton wool (or pad) that is outside; until then we cannot say that haid has commenced. When a spot of blood comes onto the external skin of the vagina or if the cotton wool which was inserted is removed; then haid will be calculated from that time.
15. A woman who was not in haid inserted a tampon in the internal vagina at night. In the morning, she saw a spot of blood on the pad. Haid will be calculated from the time that she saw the spot of blood.

Rules concerning istihaada

1. The rule in regard to istihaada is the same as for the one whose nose bleeds continuously. Such a woman should offer her salaat, fast and should not leave out these. It is also permissible to have sexual intercourse with such a woman.

Note: The rules for istihaada are the same as those of the ma'zur. (Rules concerning the ma'zur have already been mentioned previously).

NIFAAS

(Bleeding after Child Birth)

1. After childbirth, the blood that comes out of the vagina is called nifaas. The maximum period of nifaas is forty days and there is no limit for the minimum period. Even if the blood stops flowing after half an hour or so, it will still be regarded as nifaas.
2. If after the birth of the child no blood comes out at all, even then it will be wajib to have a bath after the delivery.
3. If more than half the child came out but it has not come out completely as yet, then whatever blood comes out at that time will also be regarded as nifaas. If less than half the child came out, then whatever blood comes out at that time will be regarded as istihaada. If the mother is conscious and in her senses, then even at that time she has to offer her salaat. If she does not do so she will be sinful. If she cannot offer her salaat, she should read through gestures (ishaarah) and should not postpone her salaat. However, if by engaging in salaat, she fears for the life of the child, she should not offer her salaat.
4. A certain woman miscarried. If a few parts of the child have been formed, then whatever blood comes out after miscarrying will also be nifaas. But if no part at all has been formed, it will not be nifaas. If that blood could be regarded as haid, it will be haid. If not, it will be istihaada, e.g. the blood flows for less than three days or she has not completed the full fifteen days of purity as yet - it will be regarded as istihaada.
5. If the blood flows for more than forty days and this is the first time that she gave birth, then the forty days will be of nifaas and whatever extra days she bleeds will be istihaada. After the fortieth day she must have a bath and continue offering her salaat. She should not wait for the bleeding to stop.
If this is not the first time that she has given birth and she knows her previous habit as to how many days she had nifaas, then whatever may have been the number of days of nifaas will be regarded as nifaas and whatever is more than that will be istihaada.
6. A certain woman had the habit of nifaas for thirty days. However, thirty days passed and she did not stop bleeding as yet. She should not have a bath now. If the blood stopped on the fortieth day, then all these days will be regarded as nifaas. However, if it exceeds forty days, only thirty days will be of nifaas and all the rest of the days will be of istihaada. She should therefore immediately have a bath and make qada for the salaat of ten days.
7. If the blood of nifaas stops before forty days, she should immediately have a bath and commence offering her salaat. If bathing will be harmful to her, she should make tayammum and start offering her salaat. Under no circumstances should salaat be abandoned.
8. During nifaas, one is completely excused from offering salaat. Fasting is not excused. She will have to make qada of all missed fasts. The rules concerning fasting, salaat and sexual intercourse during haid are the same for nifaas.
9. If twins are born within a period of six months of each other, then the period of nifaas will be calculated from the birth of the first child. For example, if the second child is born after ten to twenty days or one or two months, nifaas will not be calculated from the second child but from the first.

Rules concerning nifaas and haid

1. The woman who is in haid or nifaas and bathing is wajib on her, then it is not permissible for her to enter a musjid, to make tawaaf of the Ka'bah, to read the Quran or to touch it. However, if the Quran is in a casing, or wrapped in a cloth, or covered with a cloth jacket which is not stitched to the Quran and which can be removed; then in such a case, the Quran could be touched and could also be carried.
2. The person who does not have wudu, even he cannot touch the Quran. However, he could recite it out of memory.
3. Touching a coin, saucer, amulet (ta'wiz), etc. on which some Quranic verse is written is also not permissible for the above mentioned persons. However, if these things are kept in a packet or container, it is permissible to carry that packet or container.
4. It is not permissible to hold or carry the Quran with the sleeve of the kurta or the edge of a scarf. However, if it is a cloth that is not attached to the body, it will be permissible to carry it with that cloth.
5. It is permissible to read a word from a verse (ayat) or half a verse. However, that half verse should not equal any full verse in length.
6. If the entire Surah Fatihah is recited with the intention of dua, or if any other duas in the Quran are recited with the intention of dua and not with the intention of tilaawat (recitation); then it will be permissible and there is no sin in this. For example, the dua:
"Rabbana aatina fid dunya hasanataw wa fil aakhirati hasanataw wa qinaa adhaaban naar." and the dua:
*" "Rabbana la tu'aakhidhna in naseena aw akhta'naa.*till the end which is towards the end of Surah Baqarah or any other dua which is in the Quran. It will be permissible to read all such verses with the intention of dua.
7. It is also permissible to read Dua-e-Qunoot. (the dua which is read in Witr salaat).
8. If a woman is teaching the Quran to girls, then in such a case it will be permissible for her to spell out the words. When she is teaching them to read with fluency, she should not recite the entire verse, but should read one or two words at a time and after every word or two, she should break her breath. She should teach them to read fluently by stopping regularly.
9. It is permissible to read the kalimah, durood, to take the name of Allawh, to read istighfaar (repentance), or any other remembrance (dhikr) such as:
"La hawla wa la quwwata illa billahi al-aliyyil azeem."
10. In the period of haid, it is mustahab for a woman to make wudu at the time of salaat, to sit in a clean place and take the name of Allawh Ta'ala so that she does not forget the habit of offering her salaat, and when she gets pure she is not reluctant to offer her salaat.

11. Ghusl was wajib on a woman. But before she could have a bath, she started bleeding (haid started). It is not wajib on her to have a bath. On completion of her haid she must have a bath. One bath will suffice for both conditions.

BOOK IV
CLOTHING

1. It is not permissible to adorn boys with bracelets, necklaces, and other types of jewellery. Nor is it permissible to make them wear silk. It is also not permissible to make them wear amulets (ta'wiz) that are wrapped in silk, gold or silver. It is not permissible for them to wear clothing that has been dyed with safflower or saffron. In short, whatever is not permissible for men, should not be worn by young boys as well. If the woof is made of yarn and the warp is made of silk, it will be permissible to make them wear such clothing. Similarly, if the fur of velvet is not made of silk, it will be permissible to wear it. Such clothing can be worn by men as well. If the border of the garment is of silk, it will be permissible to make boys wear such clothing as long as the border is not more than four fingers in width.
2. A hat or any other garment which has gold or silver embroidery work done on it will only be permissible for boys if the embroidery is not very dense. If the embroidery is so dense that only the embroidery and not the cloth is visible from a distance, then it is not permissible to make boys wear such garments. Similar is the case with silk embroidery. If it is very dense, it will not be permissible to make boys wear it.
3. There is no difference in remaining naked and wearing very flimsy clothing such as muslin, lace, and other similar fabrics with which lingerie is made. It is mentioned in the Hadith that women who wear such flimsy clothing will be regarded as naked on the day of judgement. It will be more deplorable if the dress and head gear are both made of such flimsy fabric.
4. It is not permissible for women to adopt the dress and appearance of men, nor is it permissible for men to adopt the dress and appearance of women. Rasulullah sallAllawhu alayhi wa sallam has cursed such men and women.
5. It is permissible for women to wear jewellery. However, it is preferable not to wear too much of jewellery. A woman who wears very little jewellery in this world will be given a lot of jewellery in the hereafter. It is not permissible to wear tinkling jewellery such as those that are worn around the ankles. It is not permissible for little girls to wear such jewellery as well. It is also permissible to wear jewellery that is made with anything other than gold or silver. For example, it is permissible to wear jewellery that is made with brass, gilt, tin, etc. However, rings that are made of anything other than gold or silver are not permissible.
6. Women are ordered to cover their bodies from head to toe. It is not permissible for them to expose their bodies to ghayr mahrams. However, it is permissible for an old woman to expose her face, palms, and feet below the ankles. It is not permissible for her to expose the rest of her body. At times the head covering falls off slightly and she goes in the presence of ghayr mahrams in this way. This is not permissible. Not a single strand of hair should be exposed in the presence of ghayr mahrams. In fact, the hair that falls off her head while combing her hair, and the nails which she has clipped should be left in such a place where ghayr mahrams will not be able to see them. If a woman is not cautious in this regard, she will be sinful. Similarly, it is not permissible for a woman to allow any part of her body to touch any part of a man's body. This rule applies to men as well.
7. It is not permissible for a young woman to expose her face in the presence of ghayr mahrams, nor should she stand in a place where she could be observed. We learn from this, that the custom of exposing the bride's face in public where all the men can observe her is also not permissible. To do so is a major sin.
8. If a woman's face, head, chest, arm or calf gets exposed in front of her mahram, there will be no sin on her. However, her stomach, back, and thighs cannot be exposed in front of her mahram as well.
9. It is not permissible for a woman to expose her body from her navel till below her knees even before another woman. Some women bath naked in the presence of other women. This is a very shameless and forbidden act. It is also forbidden to force a woman to expose her body and to bathe her on the ceremonies that are held on the sixth day after child birth, and the fortieth day after child birth. Under no condition should she expose her body from her navel till below the knees.
10. If there is a dire need, it will be permissible to expose that part of the body which is necessary to expose. For example, if a woman has a boil on her thigh, it will be permissible for her to expose just that area where the boil is situated. Under no condition should she expose more than that area. This could be done by wearing a very old pants or sheet and cutting that area of the pants where the boil is situated. The doctor can then inspect that area. However, it is not permissible to show that area to anyone other than the doctor. This is irrespective of whether the person is a male or a female. But if this boil or wound is not in the area between the navel and below the knees, it will be permissible to expose it to another woman. In the same way, at the time of some inspection, it will only be permissible to expose that part which is necessary. The same rule applies to a mid-wife. That is, at the time of need it will be permissible to expose the body to her, but it will not be permissible to expose more than what is necessary. During child birth or at the time of taking some medicine, it will not be permissible to expose more than what is necessary. It is not permissible for a woman to be completely naked. The method of doing this is to wrap a sheet around the body and whenever the need arises, the woman could open the sheet for the mid-wife. The thighs and private parts should not be exposed. Apart from the mid-wife, it is not permissible for anyone else to see her body. To be completely naked and to sit or lie down in the presence of all the other women is absolutely haraam. Rasulullah sallAllawhu alayhi wa sallam said: "Allawh's curse is on the one who looks at the satr of another person, and the one who exposes her satr to others." One has to be very cautious with regard to mas'alas of this nature.
11. During pregnancy, if the mid-wife wishes to inspect the stomach, it will not be permissible for the woman to expose her body below her navel. She should cover herself with a sheet or any other covering. It is not permissible to unnecessarily expose the area below the navel even to a mid-wife. The custom of exposing this area to the mid-wife when she is carrying out her inspection, and exposing it to one's house members; is not permissible.
12. It is not permissible to touch those parts of the body which one cannot even look at. The parts of a woman's body which cannot be looked at, cannot be touched by others as well. Therefore, it is not permissible for a masseuse (female who massages) to massage the thighs, etc. even if she inserts her hands beneath the clothing whilst massaging. However, if she wears a glove and massages the thighs by inserting her hand beneath the clothing, it will be permissible.
13. It is wajib to make purdah with the kaafir women who come into one's home. This also applies to maids and domestic servants who are not Muslims. The purdah that has to be made with them is the same as that which has to be made with ghayr mahram males. The exception is that the face, wrists, and feet can be exposed to them. The head should also be covered. Remember this rule very well because the majority of women do not act according to the rules laid down by the Shariah in this regard. In other words, do not expose the head, the entire hands and the calves in front of them. It should also be remembered that if the mid-wife is a kaafir, then at the time of delivery, it will be permissible to expose the private parts. However, it will not be permissible for her to look at the other parts of the body. (Because there is no need for her to do so)
14. It is permissible for a woman to expose her entire body to her husband. It is also permissible for the husband to expose his entire body to his wife. However, it is not good to do so unnecessarily.
15. Just as it is not permissible for a woman to appear in the presence of a man or to expose her body in front of him, it is also not permissible for a woman to look at a man. Some women are under the misconception that although it is not permissible for men to look at them, it is permissible for them to look at men. This is absolutely wrong. To stand at the door way and look at men, to look at them from an elevated place, to come in the presence of the bride-groom, etc. are all not permissible.
16. It is not permissible to sit or lie down with a ghayr mahram in solitude or in private. Even if both man and woman are sitting separately at a distance, it will not be permissible to do so in private.
17. Just as it is not permissible to expose oneself in the presence of a ghayr mahram male, it is also not permissible to expose oneself in the presence of one's spiritual guide. Similarly, an adopted son is regarded as a ghayr mahram. By adopting him, he does not become one's real son. Purdah will have to be made with him just as purdah is made with a ghayr mahram male. Purdah will also have to be observed with all one's ghayr mahram relatives. These include, the husband's younger and elder brothers, sister's husband, husband of the husband's sister, and also one's cousins irrespective of whether they are the children of one's maternal or paternal uncles and aunts.

18. It is not permissible for women to come in the presence of hermaphrodites, castrated persons, and even blind persons.
19. Some women offer their hands to bangle-vendors (and jewellers) so that they may pass the bangles through their hands. This is a shameless and prohibited act.

MISCELLANEOUS MASA'IL

1. It is mustahab to remove the hair of the pubic region and the armpits once a week. If one does not remove these hairs weekly, one should at least remove them every fortnight. If one cannot even do this, one should remove them before forty days. If a person leaves these hairs for more than forty days, he will be sinning.
2. It is makruh for women to call their husbands and parents by name as this shows disrespect. However, certain occasions may demand that they be called by name. In such circumstances it will be permissible to call both the husband and parents by name. Under all conditions and in all circumstances, one should always be mindful of being respectful to one's husband and parents.
3. It is not permissible to burn any living creature, e.g. it is not permissible to smoke bees in order to get rid of them. It is also not permissible to catch bugs, flies, mosquitoes, etc. and to throw them into a fire. However, if there is no other way of getting rid of them, it will be permissible to do so, e.g. at times it is difficult to get rid of bees. In such a case, it will be permissible to smoke them. It will also be permissible to get rid of bed-bugs by pouring boiling water on the bed if there is no other way of getting rid of them.
4. It is not permissible to take bets, e.g. a person says: "If you eat a full kilo of sweets, I will give you R1. But if you cannot do that, you will have to give me R1." In other words, it is not permissible to take two-sided bets. However, one-sided bets are permissible.
5. When two persons are talking in privacy, one should not go and sit near them. It is a major sin to try and listen to their conversation. It is mentioned in a Hadith that on the day of judgement, boiling lead will be poured into the ears of the person who tries to listen to the private conversation of others despite their disapproval. We learn from this that it is a major sin to spy on the bride and bride groom or to try and listen to their private conversation.
6. It is not permissible for the wife to discuss or announce the private affairs and conversations that transpired between herself and her husband. It is mentioned in a Hadith that Allawh Ta'ala becomes extremely angry when a person discusses or mentions all that transpired between him and his wife.
7. It is not permissible to joke with a person to such an extent that he feels insulted or angered by the joke. One should only joke to the extent that the other person laughs and is amused.
8. It is not permissible to wish for death or to curse oneself when afflicted by any problem or calamity.
9. It is not permissible to play dice games, cards, etc. If these are played for money, they will be regarded as gambling and will therefore be absolutely haraam.
10. Once boys reach the age of ten, they should not be allowed to sleep or lie down next to their sisters, brothers or mothers. Once girls reach the age of ten, they should not be allowed to sleep or lie down next to their brothers and fathers. However, the son can sleep next to his father and the daughter can sleep next to her mother.
11. When a person sneezes, he should say Alhamdolillah. It will be wajib on the person who hears him saying Alhamdolillah to say Yarhamu kumullah. If the latter person does not say this, he will be sinful. Upon hearing this reply, the person who sneezed should say Yaghfirullahu lanaa wa lakum. However, it is not wajib, but mustahab on the person who sneezed to give this reply.
12. After sneezing, a person said Alhamdolillah which was heard by several persons. It will not be wajib on all of them to give a reply to it. If one of them gives a reply, it will be sufficient. However, if none of them gives a reply, all will be sinful.
13. If a person sneezes continuously, it will be wajib to say Yarhamu kumullah up to three times and not more.
14. When a person mentions the name of Rasulullah sallAllawhu alayhi wa sallam, hears it or reads it, it becomes wajib upon him to send salutations to Rasulullah sallAllawhu alayhi wa sallam. The person will be sinning if he does not do so. But if his name is mentioned several times, it will not be wajib to recite the durood each time. It will be sufficient to recite it once. But if a person moves from his place and takes his name or hears it again, it will be wajib to recite the durood again.
15. It is not permissible to shave the head of a child in such a way that a certain portion is entirely bald and another portion is left long. Either shave the entire head bald or leave all the hair unshaven.
16. It is not permissible for women to apply perfumes or any other fragrant creams, lotions, etc. in such a way that ghayr mahrams get the smell of the fragrance.
17. It is not permissible to give clothing which is not permissible to wear, e.g. it is not permissible for the husband to purchase clothing that is not permissible for his wife to wear. Similarly, it is not permissible for a tailor or dressmaker to sew clothing which is not permissible for Muslims to wear.
18. It is not permissible to read short stories, novels, novels based on love and beauty which are of a fictitious nature. It is also not permissible to look at books and magazines that have pictures of men and women in shameless clothing or no clothing at all. Books containing love poems should also be abstained from. Books and magazines of this sort should not even be purchased. If they are found in the possession of one's children, they should be burnt.
19. The custom of making salaam, shaking hands, embracing each other is also sunnah for women. Women should adopt these Islamic customs among themselves.
20. If a person is a guest at someone's house, he should not give any food or anything else to a beggar from his host's house without the permission of the latter.

Sub'haanAllawh: Means "glory to Allawh".
Sufis: A term used to refer to mystics or saints. Such persons are also known as the auliyaa of Allawh, i.e. the close friends of Allawh. These are the persons who have dedicated their entire lives in the ibaadah of Allawh Ta'ala.
Surmah: Antimony. A black powdery substance that is applied to the eyes. It is sunnah to apply surmah.
Tasbeeh: Saying "sub'haanAllawh". A rosary that is used to glorify Allawh Ta'ala is also called a tasbeeh.
Umrah: Commonly referred to as the lesser pilgrimage. It is similar to hajj with the exception that many of the rites of hajj are left out and that it could be performed throughout the year.
Wajib: Literally means "obligatory'. In Islamic jurisprudence it refers to that act which has not been established by an absolute proof. Leaving out a wajib without any valid reason makes one a faasiq and entails punishment.
Zikr: The remembrance of Allawh Ta'ala.
Zil Hijjah: The last month of the Islamic calendar.
Zil Qa'dah: The eleventh month of the Islamic calendar.

BOOK V

THE CALL TO SAWLAH

1. If the adhaan is being called out for any salaat, it is necessary that it be given in the time of that salaat. If the adhaan is given before the commencement of the time, it will not be valid. When the time enters, the adhaan will have to be repeated irrespective of whether it was for fajr salaat or any other salaat.
2. The adhaan and the iqaamah have to be in Arabic and in exactly the same words as conveyed to us from Rasulullah sallAllawhu alayhi wa sallam. If the adhaan is given in any other language, or in Arabic but in different words; then this will not be valid even if, upon hearing it, people understand it as adhaan and the purpose of adhaan is fulfilled (i.e. even if people respond to the adhaan by coming to offer their salaat).
3. It is necessary for the mu'azzin to be a male. The adhaan of a female is not proper. If a woman gives adhaan, it should be repeated. If salaat is offered without it being repeated, it will be as if salaat was offered without any adhaan.
4. It is necessary that the mu'azzin be of sound intellect. If a child who has not reached the age of understanding, a lunatic or an intoxicated person gives adhaan; it will not be considered.
5. The sunnah method of calling out adhaan is that the person calling out adhaan should be pure from the major and minor impurities. He should go to an elevated place away from the musjid, face the qiblah, insert his forefingers into both his ears, and say the following words as loud as possible without overstraining himself: Allawhu Akbar four times, Ash hadu an la ilaaha illa Allawhu twice, Ash hadu anna Muhammadar Rasulullah twice, Hayya alas salaat twice, Hayya alal falaah twice, Allawhu Akbar twice again, and La ilaaha illa Allawhu once. When saying Hayya alas salaat, he should turn his face towards the right in such a way that his chest and feet do not turn away from the qiblah. When saying Hayya alal falaah, he should turn his face towards the left in such a way that his chest and feet do not turn away from the qiblah.

In the fajr adhaan, after saying Hayya alal falaah, he should add the words as-Salaatu khayrum minan naum two times.
The total phrases of adhaan are therefore fifteen while there are seventeen words for the adhaan of fajr.
The words of the adhaan should not be uttered in a singing tune, nor should they be uttered in such a way that some of the words are said loudly while others are said softly.
After saying Allawhu Akbar twice, he should wait to the extent that the person who is listening to the adhaan can reply to it. Apart from Allawhu Akbar, even for the other words, he should wait for a similar period before continuing with the next words.
6. The method of iqaamah is also the same. The difference is that it is preferable to call out the adhaan outside the musjid, while the iqaamah is called out inside. Adhaan is called out in a loud voice while iqaamah is called out in a comparatively softer voice. In iqaamah one does not say as-salaatu khairun minan naum. Instead, for all the five salaats one has to say Qad qaamatis salaat two times. When saying the iqaamah one does not have to insert one's fore-fingers into one's ears. The reason for inserting the fingers into the ears is to raise the voice, and this is not necessary when saying the iqaamah. In the iqaamah, it is not necessary to turn right and left when saying Hayya alas salaat and Hayya alal falaah. However, some jurists are in favour of this.

Rules Concerning Adhaan and Iqaamah

1. For every fard-e-ayn salaat, it is sunnat-e-mu'akkadah for men to call out adhaan once. This is irrespective of whether a person is a traveller or not, whether he is reading in congregation or alone, or whether he is reading a qada salaat or not. For jumu'ah salaat, the adhaan should be called out twice.
2. If a salaat was missed for a reason in which all the people were involved, then the adhaan for that salaat should be given aloud. If it was missed for some specific reason, it should be given secretly in a soft voice so that people do not come to know of any missed salaat by hearing the adhaan aloud. The reason for this is that missing a salaat is a sign of negligence and laziness, and to be negligent and lazy in affairs of the Deen is a sin. And it is not good to announce or expose one's sins.
If several salaats were missed and all are being read at one time, it will be sunnah to call out the adhaan for the first salaat only. As for the other salaats, only the iqaamah is sunnah. However, it is mustahab to call out adhaan for each salaat separately.
3. If a person is travelling and all his companions are present with him, then it will be mustahab, and not sunnat-e-mu'akkadah, for him to give the adhaan.
4. If a person offers his salaat at home, whether alone or in congregation, then both the adhaan and the iqaamah will be mustahab for him on condition that the adhaan and iqaamah of the musjid of that area or town has already been called out. This is so because the adhaan and iqaamah of the area is sufficient for all the residents of that area.
5. If a person goes to a musjid in which the adhaan, iqaamah and salaat has already been performed,it will be makruh for him to give adhaan and iqaamah when offering his own salaat. However, if that musjid does not have any appointed imam or mu'azzin, it will not be makruh, but preferable.
6. A person is in a place in which all the conditions for jumu'ah salaat are found and jumu'ah is even performed there. Despite this, he offers zuhr salaat instead of jumu'ah salaat. It will therefore be makruh for him to call out adhaan and iqaamah. This is irrespective of whether he offers the zuhr salaat due to some excuse or not, or whether he offers it before the completion of the jumu'ah salaat or after its completion.
7. It is makruh for women to call out adhaan and iqaamah irrespective of whether they are offering their salaat in congregation or individually.
8. Apart from fard-e-ayn salaat, adhaan for any other salaat is not prescribed - irrespective of whether it is a fard-e-kifaayah salaat, such as janaazah salaat; or a wajib salaat, such as witr salaat, the salaats of eid; or whether it is a nafl salaat.
9. It is mustahab on the person who hears the adhaan to reply to it irrespective of whether he is a man or woman, in a state of purity or impurity. Some ulama have even said that it is wajib. But the preferred opinion is that it is mustahab.
Replying to the adhaan means that the words which the mu'azzin says should be repeated. However, when replying to Hayya alas salaat and Hayya alal falaah, he should say La hawla wa la quwwata illa billahil aliyyil azeem. For As-salaato khairun minan naum he should say Sadaqta wa bararta.
After the adhaan he should send salutations to Rasulullah sallAllawhu alayhi wa sallam and then read the following dua:
!!!

2. The mu'azzin has to be of sound mind. The adhaan and iqaamah of a lunatic, intoxicated person or immature child is makruh. Their adhaan will have to be repeated and not their iqaamah.
3. The mu'azzin must know the necessary rules applicable to him and he must also know the times of the different salaats. If an ignorant person calls out the adhaan, he will not get the same reward as that of a mu'azzin.
4. The mu'azzin must be pious and religiously-minded and he must be aware of the condition of the people - reminding those who do not attend the congregation. He must do this if he has no fear of anyone causing harm to him.
5. The mu'azzin must have a loud voice.

Sunnats related to the adhaan and iqaamah

1. The adhaan should be called out at an elevated place outside the musjid. The iqaamah should be called out inside the musjid. To call out the adhaan inside the musjid is makruh-e-tanzihi. However, it is not makruh to call out the second adhaan of jumu'ah inside the musjid in front of the pulpit (mimbar). In fact, this is practised in all Muslim countries.
2. The adhaan has to be called out standing. If anyone calls it out while sitting, this will be makruh and it will have to be repeated. However, if a traveller is on his mount or a person gives adhaan for his own salaat, it will not have to be repeated.
3. The adhaan has to be called out in a loud voice. However, if a person is calling out adhaan for his own salaat, he has the choice to say it aloud or softly. Even then, there is more reward in saying it aloud.
4. It is mustahab to insert the fore-fingers into the ears at the time of calling out the adhaan.
5. The words of the adhaan should be said with a pause between them, while the iqaamah should be said quickly. In other words, when saying the takbeers of the adhaan, the mu'azzin should pause after every two takbeers so that those who are listening to the adhaan can repeat the words. Apart from the takbeers, he should pause after every sentence and thereafter continue with the next word. If, due to some reason, he does not pause in this way, it will be mustahab to repeat the adhaan. If the iqaamah was called out by pausing, it is not mustahab to repeat it.
6. When calling out adhaan, it is sunnah to turn towards the right and left when saying Hayya alas salaat and Hayya alal falaah. This is irrespective of whether the adhaan is for a salaat or for some other reason. However, his chest and feet should not turn away from the qiblah.
7. Adhaan and iqaamah should be called while facing the qiblah as long as he is not mounted on an animal. It is makruh-e-tanzihi to call out adhaan and iqaamah while one is not facing the qiblah.
8. At the time of calling out the adhaan it is necessary for the person to be pure from hadath-e-akbar (major impurity) and mustahab to be pure from both the major and minor impurities. At the time of calling out the iqaamah, it is necessary to be pure from both the impurities. If a person calls out adhaan while in a state of hadath-e-akbar, this will be makruh-e-tahrimi and it will be mustahab to repeat that adhaan. Similarly, if a person calls out iqaamah while in a state of major or minor impurity, this will be makruh-e-tahrimi but it is not mustahab to repeat the iqaamah.
9. It is sunnah to say the words of the adhaan and iqaamah in the sequence shown to us. If a person says a latter word first, for example, he says Ash hado anna Muhammadar Rasulullah before Ash hado an la ilaaha illa Allawhu, or he says Hayya alal falaah before Hayya alas salaat; then in such a case, just the latter word should be repeated. In the first example, after saying Ash hado an la ilaaha illa Allawhu he should repeat Ash hado anna Muhammadan Rasulullah. In the second example, after saying Hayya alas salaat, he should repeat Hayya alal falaah. It is not necessary to repeat the entire adhaan.
10. While calling out the adhaan and iqaamah, no other words should be spoken, even if they be a greeting or a reply to a greeting. If a person speaks while calling out adhaan or iqaamah and he spoke considerably, he should repeat the adhaan and not the iqaamah.

preference is given to the muqeem over the musafir. Thereafter, the person who was born as a free person. Thereafter, the person who made tayammum for hadath-e-asghar is given preference over the person who made tayammum for hadath-e-akbar. But according to some, the person who made tayammum for hadath-e-akbar is given preference.

The person in whom two qualities are found is given preference over the person in whom only one quality is found. For example, the person who knows the masa'il of salaat and also recites the Quran correctly has preference over the person who only knows the masa'il of salaat and cannot read the Quran correctly.

3. If jama'at is made in a house, the person whose house it is has more right of imaamat over the others. Thereafter, the person whom he appoints as an imam. However, if the owner of the house is a jaahil, and the other persons have knowledge of the masa'il, they will have the right of imaamat.
4. If there is an imam who is appointed in a particular musjid, then in his presence no one else has the right of imaamat. However, if he appoints anyone else as the imam, there will be no harm in this.
5. In the presence of the Qadi, i.e. the ruler of the Islamic state, no one else has the right of imaamat.
6. It is makruh-e-tahrimi to make imaamat without the happiness of the people. However, if that person is the most qualified person for imaamat, i.e. no one else has the qualities of imaamat as he possesses, then it will not be makruh for him. Instead, whoever is unhappy with his imaamat will be in the wrong.
7. It is makruh-e-tahrimi to appoint a faasiq or a bid'atee as an imam. However, if (Allawh forbid) there is no one else apart from these people, then it will not be makruh. In the same way, if the bid'atee or the faasiq is a powerful person and they are unable to remove him, or there is a fear of great discord or dissension, even then it will not be makruh on the muqtadis.
8. It is makruh-e-tanzihi to appoint the following persons as an imam: (a) a slave who is regarded as a slave in Islamic jurisprudence and not the one who is bought at the time of a famine,etc. even if he has been freed, (b) a villager, (c) a blind person who is not conscious of the laws of purity and impurity, (d) a person who cannot see well at night, (e) a waladuz zina, i.e. a person who was born out of an illicit relationship. However, if all these persons are possessors of knowledge and virtue, and people do not mind appointing them as imams, then it will not be makruh. It is also makruh-e-tanzihi to appoint a handsome youth whose beard has not appeared as yet, and also a person who has no intellect.
9. It is wajib on all the muqtadis to be in conformity with the imam in all the fara'id and wajibaat of salaat. However, it is not wajib to be in conformity with him in the sunnats. Based on this, if the imam is a follower of the Shafi'i school of thought and he raises his hands at the time of going into ruku and coming up from ruku, then it is not necessary for the Hanafee muqtadis to raise their hands. This is because the raising of the hands is sunnah even according to them. Similarly, if the Shafi'i imam reads the qunut in the fajr salaat, it is not necessary for the Hanafee muqtadis to do the same. However, since qunut is wajib in witr salaat, and the Shafi'i imam will read it after standing up from ruku, the Hanafee muqtadis should also read it after the ruku.
10. It is makruh-e-tahrimi for the imam to recite very long Surahs which are more than the recommended amount, or to stay for very long periods in the ruku and sajdah postures. Instead, the imam should take into consideration the need, necessities, and weakness of the muqtadis. He should make his qira'ah after taking into consideration the condition of the person who is the weakest of all of them. In fact, if there is a great urgency, it will be preferable for him to make his recitation even shorter than the recommended amount. This is so that people do not find any difficulty which could be a cause for a decrease in the jama'at.
11. If there is only one muqtadi who is a male or an immature boy, he should stand in line with or slightly behind the imam to the right of the imam. It is makruh to stand on the left hand side of the imam (or directly behind him - in this case).
12. If there is more than one muqtadi, they should stand behind the imam. If there are two muqtadis, it would be makruh-e-tanzihi for them to stand on either side of the imam. And if there are more than two muqtadis, it would be makruh-e-tahrimi to do so. This is because when there are more than two muqtadis, it is wajib for the imam to stand in front.
13. At the time of commencing the jama'at there was only one muqtadi and he stood to the right of the imam. Thereafter, more muqtadis joined the jama'at. The first muqtadi should step back so that all the muqtadis could get together and stand behind the imam. If he does not move back, the other muqtadis should pull him back. But if the muqtadis unintentionally stand to the right and left of the imam and do not pull the first muqtadi back, then in this case the imam should step forward so that all the muqtadis could get together and stand behind him. Similarly, if there is no place to move backwards, it will be the duty of the imam to step forward. But if the muqtadi is unaware of the masa'il, as is generally the case today, then it will not be advisable to move him because it is possible that he may do something which may break his salaat.

14. If the muqtadi is a woman or an immature girl, she should stand behind the imam irrespective of whether there is only one woman or several women.
15. If there are different types of muqtadis, i.e. a few men, a few women and a few children, then it is the duty of the imam to arrange their saffs in the following order: firstly he should arrange the saffs of the men, thereafter the saffs of the immature boys, thereafter the saffs of the women, and lastly the saffs of the immature girls.
16. It is the duty of the imam to straighten the saffs. That is, he should stop the people from standing unevenly, and he should order them to stand straight. They should stand next to each other and should not leave any gaps within the saff itself.
17. It is makruh for a person to stand alone in a saff. Instead, in such a case, he should pull a person back who is standing in the saff in front of him and make him stand in line with him. But if there is the possibility that the person will disrupt his salaat or take this unkindly, then he should not do this.
18. It is makruh to stand in a new saff if there is place in the first saff. Once the saff is complete, then only should one stand in a new saff.
19. It is makruh-e-tahrimi for a man to make imamat of women in a place where there is no other man or where there is no mahram female such as his wife, mother, sister, etc. If there is another man or mahram female, it will not be makruh.
20. A person is offering the fard of fajr, maghrib or esha salaat alone and he is offering his salaat silently. If a person joins him and follows him while he is in this salaat, then there are two alternatives in this: (i) this person makes this intention in his heart that he is now becoming the imam so that his salaat may be offered with jama'at, (ii) he does not make this intention but continues thinking to himself that although this person has come and stood behind me, I am still offering my salaat alone. In the first case, the moment he makes his intention, it will be wajib for him to start reciting in a loud voice. If he had already recited a part of Surah Faatihah or any other Surah silently, he should start reciting them aloud the moment he makes his intention. This is because it is wajib on the imam to make the qira'at in a loud voice for the fajr, maghrib and esha salaats. As for the second case, it is not wajib to make the qira'at in a loud voice and even the salaat of that muqtadi will remain valid. This is because it is not necessary for the imam to make an intention of imamat in order for the salaat to be valid.
21. If the imam or the munfarid is offering his salaat at home or in an open field, it is mustahab for him to place an object which is equal to one arm or more in length and equal to one finger or more in thickness in front of him either on his right or left side. This object is called a sutra. However, if he is offering his salaat in a musjid or in a place where people will not pass in front of him, then there is no need to do this. The sutra of the imam will suffice for all the muqtadis. Once the sutra has been placed, there is no sin in walking beyond the sutra. But if someone walks within the sutra, he will be committing a sin.
22. A laahiq is that muqtadi who misses a few or all his rakaats after having joined the jama'at, irrespective of whether he has an excuse or not. Example where he has an excuse: he falls asleep in his salaat and thereby misses a few rakaats, or he is unable to make ruku and sajdah because of the large number of people, or his wudu breaks and while he is gone to make his wudu he misses a few rakaats. (In salaatul khauf, the first group is regarded as the laahiq. Similarly, the muqeem who follows an imam who is a musafir and who is making qasr, is regarded as a laahiq after the completion of the salaat of the imam). Example where he has no excuse: he goes into ruku or sajdah before the imam and even comes up before him, on account of which his rakaat is not considered to be valid. With regard to that rakaat, he will be regarded as a laahiq. It is wajib on the laahiq to complete the rakaats which he had missed first. After completing them, he should join the jama'at if it is still in progress, if not, he should offer the balance of his salaat as well.
23. The laahiq will also be regarded as a muqtadi for the rakaats which he had missed. That is, just as a muqtadi does not make qira'at but merely stands silently, the laahiq will also do this. And just as the muqtadi does not make sajdah-e-sahw when he makes any mistake, so is the case with the laahiq.
24. The masbuq, i.e. the one who has missed a few rakaats, should join the imam and offer whatever is left of his salaat with the jama'at. Once the imam completes his salaat, the masbuq should stand up and complete the rakaats which he had missed.
25. The masbuq has to offer his missed rakaats as a munfarid with qira'at. And if he makes any mistake in these rakaats, it is also necessary for him to make sajdah-e-sahw.
26. The masbuq should offer his missed rakaats in the following order: he should first offer those rakaats in which there is qira'at and then those which have no qira'at. As for the rakaats which he has offered with the imam, he should sit for them accordingly. That is, after counting the rakaats, he should make his first qa'dah after the one that is second. He should make his last qa'dah after his third rakaat if the salaat is a three rakaat salaat (such as maghrib). Examples: a person joined the jama'at for zuhr salaat when three rakaats had already been completed. When the imam makes salaam at the end of the salaat, this person should stand up and offer the three rakaats which he missed in the following manner: in the first rakaat he should recite Surah Faatihah, another Surah, make his ruku and sajdahs and then sit down for his first qa'dah. He has to sit down because this rakaat is regarded as his second rakaat after combining it with the rakaat that he had offered with the imam. Thereafter, he should offer his second rakaat and recite Surah Faatihah and another Surah in it as well. After this second rakaat he should not sit down because this rakaat is regarded as his third rakaat after joining it to the previous two. Thereafter, he should offer his third rakaat without reciting another Surah after having recited Surah Faatihah because this rakaat was not a rakaat of qira'at. After this rakaat, he should sit down because this is his last qa'dah.
27. A person is a laahiq and a masbuq as well. Example, he joined the jama'at after a few rakaats and after joining in, he also misses some rakaats. He should first offer those rakaats which he missed after joining, i.e. in which he was a laahiq. However, he should offer these as if he is following the imam, i.e. he should not make qira'at and he should offer his salaat in the same order as that of the imam. Thereafter, if the jama'at is still in progress, he should join it. If not, he should also offer the balance of his salaat after having read those rakaats in which he was a masbuq. Example: a person joined the asr salaat after one rakaat. Upon joining the jama'at, his wudu broke so he went to repeat his wudu. In the meantime, the salaat ended. He should first offer those three rakaats which he missed out after having joined the jama'at. Thereafter, he should offer the one rakaat which he had missed before joining the jama'at. He should offer those three rakaats as a muqtadi, i.e. he should not make qira'at and he should sit down after the first of those three rakaats. This is because this is the second rakaat of the imam and he (imam) had sat in this rakaat. Thereafter, he should not sit in the second rakaat because this is actually the third rakaat of the imam. Thereafter, he should sit down in the third rakaat because this is actually the fourth rakaat of the imam and he had sat in this rakaat. Thereafter, he should offer that rakaat which he had missed before joining the jama'at, and he should also sit in this rakaat because it is his fourth rakaat. He also has to make qira'at in this rakaat because he is a masbuq in this rakaat and a masbuq is regarded as a munfarid in the rakaats which he missed.
28. It is sunnah for the muqtadis to follow the imam in all the postures without any delay. The takbeer-e-tahreemah, ruku, standing after ruku, sajdahs - all have to be carried out with the imam. In other words, every act has to be carried out simultaneously with every act of the imam. However, if the imam stands up from the first qa'dah before the muqtadis could complete their at-tahiyyaat, the muqtadis should complete their at-tahiyyaat first and then stand up. Similarly, if the imam makes salaam in the last qa'dah before the muqtadis could complete their at-tahiyyaat, they should complete their at-tahiyyaat first and then make salaam. However, if the muqtadis have not read their tasbeehs in the ruku and sajdahs, they should still stand up with the imam.

GLOSSARY

Explanation of Islamic Terms

Adaa: Literally means performance, execution or discharge of a duty. "Adaa salaat" refers to a salaat which is offered at its specified time. "Adaa" is the opposite of "qada".

BOOK VI

SAWLAH

In the sight of Allawh Ta'ala, salaat has a very great distinction. No other act of ibaadah is dearer to Allawh than salaat. Allawh Ta'ala has made five times salaat compulsory on His servants. There is a great reward in offering salaat and a great sin in omitting it.

It is mentioned in a Hadith that the one who performs his wudu properly and offers his salaat with full concentration; then on the day of resurrection Allawh Ta'ala will forgive all his minor sins and grant him paradise. Rasulullah sallAllawhu alayhi wa sallam is reported to have said: "Salaat is a pillar of Deen - the one who has offered his salaat in a proper manner has upheld Deen, and the one who has demolished this pillar (i.e. did not offer his salaat), has in fact destroyed the Deen." Rasulullah sallAllawhu alayhi wa sallam has also said: "The first thing to be reckoned on the day of resurrection will be salaat. The hands, feet, and face of those who used to offer their salaat regularly will shine like the sun on the day of resurrection. As for those who did not offer their salaat, they will be deprived of this blessing." Rasulullah sallAllawhu alayhi wa sallam has further stated: "On the day of resurrection, those who used to offer their salaat will rise with the prophets, martyrs, and saints. Those who used to omit their salaat will rise with these notorious disbelievers: Pharaoh, Haamaan, and Qaarun."

It is therefore essential to offer salaat. By not offering salaat, great damage is caused in both this world and in the hereafter. What can be more worse than the person who does not offer his salaat to be raised with the disbelievers. The one who does not offer his salaat has been regarded as equal to a disbeliever. How serious it is not to offer salaat!

However, salaat is not wajib on the following persons: a lunatic, a young boy and a young girl who have not reached the age of puberty as yet. As for the rest of the Muslims, it is fard on them. However, the parents have been commanded that when their children reach the age of seven, they should be made to offer their salaat. And when they reach the age of ten, they should be punished and compelled to offer their salaat.

Under no condition is it permissible to discard salaat. As far as possible, salaat should most certainly be offered. However, if a person completely forgot to offer his salaat and only remembered after the time of that salaat had passed or slept away in such a way that his eyes did not open and he missed his salaat; then in such instances there will not be any sin. However, when the person remembers or wakes up from his sleep, it will be fard on him to immediately make his wudu and offer his missed salaat. But if it is a makruh time of salaat, he should wait for a little while so that the makruh time passes. Similarly, there is no sin on those salaats that were missed on account of unconsciousness. However, after regaining consciousness, one should immediately offer those salaats that one missed.

THE TIMES OF SALAAT

1. Fajr (morning) Salaat

In the last part of the night, at the approach of dawn, some whiteness can be noticed on the length of the horizon towards the east, i.e. from the direction in which the sun rises. After a little while, whiteness can be noticed on the breadth of the horizon. This whiteness begins to spread very rapidly. After a little while, it becomes completely bright. From the time that this broad whiteness becomes visible, the time of fajr salaat commences and remains until the rising of the sun. The moment a small portion of the sun appears, the time of fajr salaat ends. However, it is preferable to read it in its early time when it is still dark.

2. Zuhr (mid-day) Salaat

On the declining or descending of the zenith, the time of zuhr salaat commences. An indication that the zenith is declining is that the shadow of long objects begins to decrease from the west towards the north. When it comes exactly to the north and begins to turn towards the east, then one should know that noon has declined. By standing towards the east, the direction on ones left hand is the north. Another easier method of deduction is that as the sun rises, the shadow of everything begins to decrease. Once this decreasing stops, exactly at this time is mid-day or noon. Thereafter, once the shadow begins to increase, it should be understood that noon has declined and from this time, the time of zuhr salaat has commenced. Excluding the extent to which the shadow was at exactly mid-day, till the shadow of everything remains twice its size, the time of zuhr will remain. For example, the shadow of a stick which is one arm in length, was equal to four fingers at mid-day. So as long as its shadow does not spread to two arm-lengths and four fingers, zuhr time will remain. Once it reaches two arm-lengths and four fingers, asr time will commence.

3. Asr (afternoon) Salaat

Based on the previous example, once the shadow reaches two arm-lengths and four fingers, asr time will commence. Asr time will remain until sunset. However, it is makruh to offer asr salaat when the colour of the sun changes and the sun's rays change to yellow. If due to some reason one gets delayed, salaat in this makruh time should be offered and not allowed to be missed out. In future it should not be delayed. Apart from this asr salaat, it is not permissible to offer any other salaat in this time. No missed salaats nor any nafl salaat can be offered.

4. Maghrib (evening) Salaat

Once the sun sets, maghrib time commences. Maghrib time remains as long as the redness on the western horizon remains. However, maghrib salaat should not be delayed to the extent that many stars begin to appear in the sky. To delay it till such a time is makruh.

5. Esha (night) Salaat

Once the redness on the western horizon disappears, esha time commences and remains until dawn. However, after mid-night, esha salaat becomes makruh and the reward is reduced. Therefore, esha salaat should not be delayed till such a time. It is preferable that esha salaat be offered before one third of the night passes.

Rules Related to the Times of Salaat

1. In summer, one should not hasten towards reading zuhr salaat. It is mustahab to offer zuhr salaat after the intense heat rays elapse. In winter, it is preferable to offer zuhr salaat at the beginning of zuhr time.
2. Asr salaat should be delayed till such a time that if after the entry of asr time one wishes to offer any nafl salaat, he can do so, because it is not permissible to offer any nafl salaat after having offered asr salaat irrespective of whether it is in summer or in winter. However, one should not delay to such an extent that the sun turns yellow and its rays change in colour. It is mustahab to hasten towards offering maghrib salaat and to offer it immediately after sunset.
3. The person who is in the habit of waking up for tahajjud salaat in the latter part of the night and has full confidence of definitely waking up; then it is better for him to offer his witr salaat after having offered his tahajjud salaat. But if he is not confident of waking up and fears that he will remain asleep; then he should offer his witr salaat after his esha salaat before going to sleep.
4. It is preferable to delay the fajr, zuhr and maghrib salaats on a cloudy day, while it is mustahab to offer asr salaat a bit early.
5. No salaat is valid at the times of sunrise, mid-day and sunset. However, if asr salaat has not been offered as yet, then it could be offered even at the time of sunset. In these three times, even sajdah-e-tilaawat is makruh and not permissible.
6. It is makruh to offer any nafl salaat after offering fajr salaat until sunrise. However, the offering of any qada salaat and sajdah-e-tilaawat before the sun rises is permissible. But once the sun rises, then as long as some light does not appear, even qada salaat will not be permissible. Similarly, it is not permissible to offer any nafl salaat after the asr salaat. However, qada salaat and sajdah-e-tilaawat is permissible. But once the rays of the sun become weak or faint, then even this is not permissible.
7. At fajr time, a person only offered his fard salaat out of fear that the sun will rise very soon. So as long as the sun does not rise considerably and does not get quite bright, the sunnah salaat should not be offered. Once some light appears, sunnah salaat and any other salaat may be offered.
8. Once dawn breaks and fajr time enters, then apart from the two rakaats sunnah and two rakaats fard of fajr salaat, it is makruh to offer any other nafl salaat. However, it is permissible to offer any qada salaat and to make sajdah-e-tilaawat.
9. If the sun rises while one is offering one's fajr salaat then this salaat will not be valid. When the sun becomes a bit bright, one should make qada. But if the sun sets while one is offering asr salaat, then this salaat will be valid and there will be no need to make qada of it.
10. It is makruh to sleep before offering esha salaat. One should offer ones salaat and then sleep. However, if due to some sickness or travelling, one is very tired and tells someone to wake him up at the time of salaat and that person promises to wake him up; then in this case it will be permissible to sleep.
11. It is mustahab for men to offer fajr salaat at a time when the light spreads considerably and there is so much of time left that in the salaat itself about forty to fifty verses could be read properly; and after offering the salaat, if for some reason one has to repeat the salaat, then in the same way he could read forty to fifty verses again. It is mustahab for women to offer fajr salaat throughout the year when it is dark. And it is mustahab for men and women who are performing hajj to offer fajr salaat when it is dark when they are in Muzdalifah.

12. The time for jumu'ah salaat is the same as the time for zuhr salaat. The only difference is that it is mustahab to delay zuhr salaat in summer irrespective of whether it is hot or not. And it is mustahab to offer zuhr salaat early in winter, while it is sunnah to offer jumu'ah salaat early throughout the year. This is the opinion of all the ulama.
13. The time for the eid salaats commences when the sun rises considerably and remains until just before mid-day. The sun rising considerably means that the yellowness of the sun disappears and its light is so bright that one cannot look at it. In establishing this, the jurists have said that it must rise to the extent of one spear. It is mustahab to offer the eid salaats early. However, the salaat of Eid ul-Fitr should be delayed slightly after the time commences.
14. When the imam gets up from his place to perform the khutbah of jumu'ah, the eid salaats or for hajj, etc. then it is makruh to offer any salaat in these times. It is also makruh to offer any salaat at the time of the khutbah of nikah or at the time of the completion of the Quran.
15. It is also makruh to offer any salaat when the iqaamah for a fard salaat is being called out. However, if one has not offered the sunnah of fajr salaat and one is sure or convinced that one will get one rakaat with the congregation, then it will not be makruh to offer the sunnah of fajr salaat. And the one who has already commenced with any sunnah-e-mu'akkadah, should complete it first.
16. It is makruh to offer any nafl salaat prior to the salaats of eid irrespective of whether one offers it at home or at the eid-gah. As for offering it after the eid salaats, it will only be makruh to offer it at the eid-gah.

THE PREREQUISITES OF SALAAT

1. Before commencing with salaat, several things are wajib. If one does not have wudu, then wudu should be made. If there is a need to have a bath, then a bath should be taken. If there is any impurity on the body or clothes, it should be purified. The place where salaat is being offered should also be pure. Apart from the face, hands and feet, the entire body from head to toe should be well covered. One should face the qiblah. An intention should be made for the salaat which one wishes to offer. The salaat should be offered after the entry of that salaat time. All these are prerequisites or conditions for salaat. If any one of these prerequisites are not found, salaat will not be valid.
2. It is not permissible to offer salaat with a very thin, flimsy or lacy scarf.
3. If a quarter of a woman's calf, thigh or arm gets exposed while offering salaat and it remains exposed to the extent that she can read Sub'haanAllawh three times; then her salaat will break and she will have to repeat it. But if she covers that part the moment it is exposed, her salaat will still be valid. In the same way, if a quarter of any part that is supposed to be covered when offering salaat gets exposed, then the salaat will not be valid. For example, if a quarter of the ear, head, hair, stomach, back, neck, bosom, chest, etc. gets exposed; then the salaat will not be valid.
4. If the scarf of a girl who has not reached the age of puberty as yet slips off while offering salaat and her head gets exposed, her salaat will still be valid.
5. If there is any impurity on the body or clothing but water cannot be found anywhere, then the salaat should be offered with the impurity.
6. If the entire clothing is impure, or most of it is impure,i.e. less than a quarter of it is pure and the balance of it is impure, then in such a case one could either offer the salaat while wearing those impure clothes or remove those clothes and offer the salaat while naked. However, it is preferable to offer the salaat with the impure clothes. If a quarter or more of the clothes are pure, it will not be permissible to offer the salaat naked. It will be wajib to offer the salaat in those impure clothes.
7. If a person offering salaat is wrapped in a sheet which is so large that its impure section does not move about with the standing and sitting movements of the person, then there is no harm in it. Similarly, the thing which a person offering salaat is carrying also has to be pure. This is on the condition that it does not hold on to the person of its own accord. For example, a person offering salaat is carrying a child and that child did not come onto him out of its own accord, then it is a prerequisite that the child be also pure for the validity of salaat. If that child's clothing or body is impure to an extent which does not permit salaat, then in such a case, that person's salaat will not be valid. But if that child sits on him or clings to him of its own accord, then there is no harm in this because the child sat on him of its own accord and of its own will. So this impurity on the child will be attributed to the child and will not be connected to the person offering salaat.
Similarly, if there is such an impurity on the person offering salaat which is still in its actual place of formation and whose traces have not come outside as yet, then there is no harm in this. For example, a dog comes and sits on the person offering salaat and there is no saliva coming out of its mouth - there is no harm in this. This is so because its saliva is inside its body, and that is where it is formed. It is the same as that impurity which is in the stomach of man and for which purity is not a prerequisite.
Similarly, if there is an egg whose yolk has turned into blood and it is on the person offering salaat, there is no harm in this. This is so because its blood is in that very place from where it was formed and its effect has not come out as yet.
On the contrary, if urine has been filled in a bottle and it is on the person offering salaat, then this is not proper even if the bottle is completely sealed. This is so because this urine is not in its actual place of formation.
8. The place on which salaat is being offered has to be pure of all impurities (such as urine, stool, semen, etc.). However, if the impurity is of an excusable amount, there is no harm in this. The "place on which salaat is being offered" refers to that place where the feet are placed and also those places which touch the ground when in sajdah, i.e. wherever the knees, hands, forehead and nose are placed.
9. If the place of only one foot is pure and the person lifts his other foot, this will be sufficient.
10. If a person is offering salaat on a piece of cloth, even then the same extent as mentioned above will have to be pure. It is not necessary for the entire piece of cloth to be pure. This is irrespective of whether the cloth is big or small.
11. If a cloth is spread out over an impure place and salaat is offered on it, then it is also a prerequisite that the cloth must not be so thin that whatever is under it can be clearly seen.
12. If the clothing of a person offering salaat touches any impure place which is dry, there is no harm in this.
13. If a person has no clothes at all, he should offer his salaat naked. However, the salaat should be offered at such a place where no one can see him. Furthermore, the salaat should not be offered standing, but sitting; and he should make gestures (ishaarah) for the ruku and sajdah. But if he offers his salaat while standing and even goes down for his ruku and sajdah, his salaat will still be valid. However, it is preferable to offer the salaat sitting.
14. If a person is excused from wearing clothes because of some reason which has been caused by a human being, he will have to repeat his salaat when this excuse is no more. For example, a person is in prison and the wardens have removed his clothes, an enemy has removed his clothes or an enemy tells him that if you wear your clothes I will kill you - in all the above cases he will have to repeat his salaat. But if it is not because of a human being, he does not have to repeat his salaat. For example, if he has no clothes at all.
15. A person has only one piece of cloth and has the choice of either covering himself or spreading it on the floor and offering salaat on it. He should rather cover himself with it and offer salaat on the impure place if no clean place can be found.
16. A person is travelling and has so little water that if he had to wash off the impurity he will not have sufficient water for wudu. And if he had to make wudu first, he will not have sufficient water to wash off the impurity. Such a person should utilise the water to wash off the impurity and make tayammum for his wudu.
17. A person offered zuhr salaat. On completing his salaat, he realized that the zuhr time had already expired and asr time had already entered. He will not have to make qada of that salaat. The salaat which he had offered will come under the rule of qada and it will be considered to be a qada salaat.
18. But if he offered a salaat even before the entry of its time, it will not be valid.
19. It is not necessary to make a verbal intention. If a person thinks in his heart that I am reading the fard of zuhr for today, or if it is a sunnah, then I am reading the sunnah of zuhr; then this will be sufficient. All those lengthy intentions which are popular among the people are not necessary at all.

20. If one wants to make a verbal intention, it is sufficient to say thus: I am making intention for todays fard of zuhr, or, I am making intention for the sunnah of zuhr. To say: I am reading four rakaats for zuhr salaat, facing the qiblah, etc. is not necessary. If one wishes, he could say so, if not, then he does not have to.
21. In his heart a person has the intention of zuhr salaat, but when he utters his intention, he mistakenly says asr salaat. Even then his salaat will be valid.
22. If he mistakenly says six rakaats or three rakaats instead of four rakaats, his salaat will still be valid.
23. If a person has missed several salaats and decides to make qada of them, he should specify the time of the salaat when making his intention. That is, he should make intention in this way: I am offering the fard of fajr salaat. If it is the qada of zuhr, then he should say: I am offering the fard of zuhr salaat. In the same way, he should make the intention of whichever salaat he wishes to make qada of. If in his intention he merely said: I am offering qada salaat, and did not specify which salaat it is, then this qada will not be valid. It will have to be repeated.
24. If salaat of several days has been missed, one should also specify the day and date when making the intention. For example, a person missed the salaats of Saturday, Sunday, Monday and Tuesday. When making his intention it will not be proper for him to merely say that he is making qada of fajr salaat. Instead he will have to make intention in the following way: I am making qada for the fajr salaat of Saturday. When zuhr time comes, he must say: I am making qada for the zuhr salaat of Saturday. In this way he should continue making intention. Once he completes making the qada of all the salaats of Saturday, he should say: I am making the qada for the fajr salaat of Sunday. In this way he should offer all his qada salaats. If he is making qada for several months or years, he should also specify the month and year and say: I am offering the qada of fajr salaat of a particular day in a particular month and in a particular year. Without saying it in this way, the intention will not be correct.
25. If a person does not remember the date, month or year, he should make his intention as follows: Of all the fajr salaats that I have to make qada of, I am making qada of the first one that I had missed, or, of all the zuhr salaats that I have to make qada of, I am making qada of the first one that I had missed. He should make his intention in this way and continue offering his qada salaat. Once the heart is satisfied that qada of all the missed salaats has been made, he can stop offering qada salaat.
26. For sunnah, nafl and taraweeh salaats; it will be sufficient to merely say: I am offering salaat. It will be proper even if he does not mention whether it is a sunnah or nafl salaat. However, caution demands that he makes a specific intention for the sunnah of taraweeh salaat.
27. It is a prerequisite for the muqtadi to make the intention of following the imam.
28. As for the imam, he has to make intention for his own salaat only and does not have to make an intention for imaamat. But if a woman wishes to follow him in salaat, and she is standing in line with the men, and the salaat is not a janaazah, jumu'ah, or eid salaat, then in order for her iqtidaa to be correct, he will have to make the intention of imaamat for her. But if she is not standing in line with the men, or the salaat is a janaazah, jumu'ah, or eid salaat; then this will not be a prerequisite.
29. The muqtadi does not have to specify the imam by name, that he is following Zayd or Umar. Instead, it is sufficient for him to say that I am offering salaat behind this imam. If he specifies the imam by name, and later learns that he was someone else then his salaat will not be valid. For example, a person made intention that he is offering salaat behind Zayd when in actual fact the imam is Khalid, then this person's salaat will not be valid.
30.The following intention should be made for the janaazah salaat: I am offering this salaat for the pleasure of Allawh Ta'ala and as a dua for this deceased person. But if the person does not know whether the deceased is a male or female, it will be sufficient for him to say: For whomever my imam is offering this salaat, I am also offering it.
According to some ulama, the correct procedure is that apart from fard and wajib salaats, it is sufficient to make a general intention for all the other salaats. It is not necessary to specify that it is a sunnah or mustahab salaat. Nor is it necessary to specify that the sunnah is for fajr time or zuhr time, or that this sunnah is tahajjud, taraweeh, kusuf or khusuf. However, the preferred opinion is that one should make a specific intention.

RULES RELATED TO FACING THE QIBLAH

1. If a person is at a place where he does not know in which direction the qiblah is, nor is there anyone whom he could ask, then he should think in his heart. Whichever direction his heart tells him to face, he should turn in that direction. If he offers his salaat without thinking, his salaat will not be valid. However, if, in this case where he did not think, he later learns that the direction in which he had offered his salaat was the correct direction, then his salaat will be valid. If there was a person whom he could ask, but because of hijaab and shyness, he did not ask and continued with his salaat, it will not be valid. In such cases, one should not feel shy, but should ask and then offer the salaat.
2. If there was no one who could show him the direction and he offered his salaat according to what his heart told him, and later he learnt that the direction in which he had offered his salaat was wrong; even then his salaat will be valid.
3. If a person was offering his salaat in the wrong direction and in his very salaat he learns that this is the wrong direction and that the correct direction is the other way, he should turn towards the qiblah in his very salaat. If after learning the correct direction, he did not turn towards the qiblah, his salaat will not be valid.
4. It is permissible for a person to offer salaat inside the Ka'bah. The person offering salaat inside the Ka'bah has the choice to face in whichever direction he wishes.
5. Both fard and nafl salaats are permissible in the Ka'bah.
6. If the qiblah is not known and salaat is being offered in congregation, then the imam and those following him - all of them will have to act according to their conviction. If the conviction of a particular muqtadi is contrary to that of the imam, his salaat will not be valid behind that imam. This is so because according to him that imam is in error, and it is not permissible to follow someone while considering him to be in error. Therefore, in this case, the muqtadi will have to offer his salaat on his own according to his own conviction.

THE METHOD OF OFFERING FARD SALAAT

1. After making the intention for salaat, say Allawhu Akbar. While saying Allawhu Akbar, raise both the hands upto the shoulders. However, one should not take out the hands out of the headgear or scarf (or burqah). Thereafter, the hands should be clasped onto the chest with the palm of the right hand placed on the back of the left hand. Thereafter, the following dua should be read:
!!!

14. A person did not sit properly in-between the two sajdahs, he merely lifted his head slightly and went down for the second sajdah. If he does this, he has in fact made only one sajdah and did not complete the two sajdahs. His salaat is not valid. But if he lifted his head in such a way that he was near the sitting position, he will be absolved of his duty but it will be worthless. He should therefore repeat his salaat. If he does not do so, he will be sinful.
15. If a person makes sajdah on something made out of straw or cotton wool, he should press his head down firmly and make sajdah. He should press it down in such a way that he cannot press any further. If he does not press it down firmly but merely places his head lightly, his sajdah will not be considered.
16. If a person adds another Surah after Surah Faatihah in the latter two rakaats of a four rakaat fard salaat, then no harm will come to the salaat. His salaat will be perfectly correct.
17. If a person does not read Surah Faatihah in the latter two rakaats but merely reads Sub'haanAllawh three times, even then his salaat will be proper. However, it is preferable to recite Surah Faatihah. And if he reads nothing at all and merely remains silent, even then there is no harm and the salaat will be proper.
18. It is wajib to read a Surah after Surah Faatihah in the first two rakaats. If a person only recites Surah Faatihah in the first two rakaats or does not even read Surah Faatihah but merely reads Sub'haanAllawh; then in the latter two rakaats he should read a Surah after Surah Faatihah. If he did this intentionally he will have to repeat his salaat. And if he did this unintentionally, he will have to make sajdah-e-sahw.
19. In her salaat, a woman must recite Surah Faatihah, another Surah, and all the other duas softly and silently. But she should recite them in such a way that her voice reaches her own ears. If she cannot hear her own voice, her salaat will not be valid.
20. One should not set aside or specify a particular Surah for a particular salaat. Instead, one should read whatever one wishes. To set aside a particular surah is makruh.
21. In the second rakaat, one should not recite a Surah that is longer than the one that one recited in the first rakaat.
22. Women should offer their salaat individually and not in congregation. They should not go to the musjid to offer their salaat in congregation with the men. If a woman offers her salaat in congregation with her husband or any other mahram, she should find out the relevant rules in this regard. This occurs very seldom. We have therefore not gone into details in this regard. However, it should be noted that if such an occasion arises, the woman should not stand in line with the man. She should stand behind him. If not, her salaat and even his salaat will not be valid.
23. If one's wudu breaks while offering salaat, one should make wudu and repeat the salaat.
24. It is mustahab to fix the eyes on the spot of sajdah when one is standing. In ruku the eyes should be fixed on the feet, in sajdah on the nose, and when making salaam on the shoulders. If one yawns, one should close one's mouth tightly. If it does not stop in any other way, it should be stopped with the back of the hand. If one feels an irritation in the throat, then as far as possible, one should try to stop the cough or subdue it.

A few rules related to Fard Salaat

1. The "alif" of aameen should be lengthened and read. Thereafter, any Surah of the Quran should be read.

!!!!!!!!!!!!!!!!!!!!!!!!!!!!!!!!

2. If a person is travelling or he has some other necessity to fulfil, then after reading Surah Faatihah, he has the choice of reading any other Surah. But if he is not travelling or has no other necessity to fulfil, then in fajr and zuhr salaat, he should recite any Surah from Surah Hujurat till Surah Burooj. The Surah of the first rakaat of fajr should be longer than that of the second rakaat. As for the rest of the salaats, the Surahs of both the rakaats should be more or less equal. If they are longer or shorter by one or two verses, there is no harm in this. In asr and esha salaats, any Surah from Surah Tariq till Surah Lam Yakun could be recited. In maghrib salaat, from Surah Zilzal till the end of the Quran.
3. Whilst standing up from ruku, the imam should only say Sami Allawhu liman hamidah and the muqtadi should only say Rabbana lakal hamd. The person offering salaat on his own should read both. While saying the takbeer, the person should place his hands on his knees and then go into sajdah. The termination of his takbeer and the beginning of his sajdah should be done simultaneously. In other words, the moment he reaches the sajdah posture, his takbeer should end.
4. When going into sajdah, the knees should first touch the ground. Thereafter, the hands, nose, and forehead. The face should be in-between both the hands and the fingers should be together pointing towards the qiblah. The toes should be upright pointing towards the qiblah. The stomach should be away from the thighs and the arms away from the sides. The stomach should be so high from the ground that a small kid (young goat) could pass through.
5. In the first two rakaats of fajr, maghrib, and esha; the imam should recite Surah Faatihah, any other Surah, Sami Allawhu liman hamidah, and all the other takbeers in a loud voice. The one offering salaat on his own has the choice of reciting the Quran aloud or softly while Sami Allawhu liman hamidah and all the other takbeers should be read softly.

As for zuhr and asr, the imam should only read Sami Allawhu liman hamidah and all the takbeers in a loud voice. The one offering salaat on his own should read everything softly.

As for the muqtadi, he should always say the takbeers, etc. softly - irrespective of what salaat it is.

6. On completing the salaat, both the hands should be raised upto the chest and dua to Allawh Ta'ala should be made for oneself. And if he is an imam, he should make dua for all those following him as well. On completing the dua, both hands should be passed over the face. The muqtadis could make their individual duas or, if they can hear the dua of the imam, they could say aameen to it.
7. One should not make very lengthy duas after those salaats that are followed by sunnah salaats, eg. zuhr, maghrib and esha. The person should make a brief dua and occupy himself with the sunnah salaats. One could lengthen the duas for as long as one wishes for those salaats that are not followed by sunnah salaats, such as the fajr and asr salaats. If the person is the imam, he should turn towards his right or left, facing the muqtadis. Thereafter, he should make the dua on condition that there is no masbuq facing him.
8. It is preferable to read the following after the fard salaat:

!!!!!!!!!!!!!!!!!!!

6. In ruku, men should keep their elbows away from their sides while women should keep them close to their sides.
7. In sajdah, men should keep their stomachs away from their thighs and their arms away from their sides while women have to keep all these parts close together.
8. In sajdah, men should raise their elbows above the ground while women should place them on the ground.
9. In sajdah, men should keep the toes upright while women should not do this.
10. In the sitting posture, men should sit on their left leg and the fingers of the right leg should be upright. Women have to sit on their left buttock and both their legs should point towards the right hand side in such a way that the right thigh comes over the left thigh and the right calf over the left calf.
11. Women do not have the choice of offering their salaat aloud under any circumstances. They should always offer all their salaats in a soft voice.

Acts that Nullify Salaat

1. If a person speaks in salaat intentionally or unintentionally, his salaat will be nullified.
2. If a person utters the following sounds in salaat, his salaat will be nullified: for example he says: aah, ooh, oof, etc. or he cries out aloud. However, if his heart is overcome by emotion out of thinking of jannah or jahannam and he utters these sounds, then his salaat will not break.
3. By clearing one's throat unnecessarily whereby even half a letter is uttered, salaat will break. However, it is permissible to do this when one is compelled to do so - salaat will not break.
4. A person sneezes in salaat. After sneezing he says Alhamdulillah. His salaat will not break, but it is preferable not to say anything. But if someone else sneezed and this person said YarhamukAllawh while he was in salaat, his salaat will break.
5. Continuously looking into the Quran and reading nullifies the salaat. (A glance or two will not break the salaat)
6. Salaat will break if a person turns to such an extent that his chest turns away from the qiblah.
7. If a person replies to someone's salaam by saying Wa alaykumus salaam, his salaat will break.
8. If a woman plaits her hair while offering salaat, her salaat will break.
9. Eating or drinking anything in salaat will break the salaat. So much so that if a person picks up a sesame seed or a small piece of betel leaf, and eats it, his salaat will break. However, if a food particle was stuck in-between his teeth and he swallowed it, his salaat will break if that particle was larger or equal to a gram seed. If it was less than a gram seed, his salaat will not break.
10. If a betel leaf is placed in the mouth and its juice goes down the throat, salaat will break.
11. A person ate something sweet. He then rinsed his mouth and commenced offering his salaat. However, some taste of that sweet thing is still in the mouth and goes down the throat together with his saliva. In this case, his salaat will be in order.
12. While in salaat, a person hears some good news and therefore says Alhamdo lillah. Alternatively, he hears of the death of someone, so he says: Inna lillahi wa inna ilayhi raaji'un. In both cases his salaat will break.
13. A child or something fell down. At the time of its falling the person uttered Bismillah. His salaat will break.
14. While a woman was offering salaat, a child came and drank milk from her. Her salaat will break. However, if the milk did not come out, her salaat will not break.
15. At the time of saying Allawhu Akbar, the person lengthened the alif of Allawh and said "AaAllawh" or Allawhu "Aaakbar", or lengthened the baa of Akbar and said "Akbaaar" - in all these cases his salaat will break.
16. While offering salaat, a person's eyes fell on a letter or a book. He did not read it verbally but merely understood its meaning with his heart - his salaat will still be valid. However, if he reads it verbally, his salaat will break.
17. If a person, dog, cat, goat or any other animal walks across the person who is offering salaat, his salaat will not break. But the person who walked across will be committing a sin. One should therefore offer ones salaat at such a place where no one walks in front and people do not have any difficulty in walking about. But if a person cannot find such a secluded spot, he should fix a stick in front of him which is at least one arm's length and equal to a finger in thickness. The person should then stand behind that stick. The stick should not be directly in front of him but should be slightly to the right or left of his eyes. If a person does not fix a stick, he could place anything else which is similar to it, such as a stool. In doing so, it will be permissible to walk across (beyond the stick) and there will be no sin.
18. If, due to some necessity, a person steps slightly forward or backwards without his chest turning away from the qiblah, his salaat will be valid. But if he moves beyond the place of sajdah, his salaat will break.

Acts that are Makruh in Salaat

1. Makruh is that act with which salaat does not break but the reward diminishes and it is sinful.
2. It is makruh to play with one's clothing, body, jewellery, or to remove pebbles. However, if one cannot make sajdah because of the pebbles, he could move them once or twice with his hands.
3. It is makruh to do the following in salaat: to crack one's fingers, to rest one's hands on one's hips, to turn one's head and look to the left or right. However, if one looks at something by glancing sideways without turning one's head, then this is not makruh. However, to do this without any real need is also not good.
4. It is makruh to sit in salaat in the following ways: to sit on one's heels, to squat, to sit like a dog. However, if a person cannot sit in the prescribed way because of some sickness or pain, then he can sit in whichever position that is comfortable to him. In this case, nothing will be makruh.
5. It is makruh to raise one's hands in reply to a salaam or to reply to a salaam by moving one's hands. And if one gives a verbal reply, salaat will break - as has been mentioned before.
6. It is makruh to gather one's clothes in order to prevent them from getting dirty with soil.
7. It is makruh to offer salaat at a place where one fears that someone will cause one to laugh while in salaat, one's attention will be diverted or one will make a mistake in salaat.
8. If someone is sitting in front and talking or occupied in some other work, then it is not makruh to offer salaat facing that person's back. But if the person who is sitting down is discomforted by this, and gets agitated by this interruption, then in such a case salaat should not be offered behind such people. If that person is talking so loudly that the person fears forgetting something in his salaat, then it will be makruh to offer salaat near him. It is makruh to offer salaat facing someone who is also facing you.
9. If there is a Quran or sword suspended in front of the person offering salaat, there is no harm in this.
10. Salaat is permissible on a floor on which there are pictures. However, it is makruh to make sajdah on the picture itself. It is also makruh to have a musAllawh which has pictures (of animate objects) on it. It is a major sin to have pictures in the house.
11. If the picture is above one's head, i.e. on the ceiling or canopy, in front of the person, on his right or left, then his salaat will be makruh. But it will not be makruh if it is under his feet. If the picture is so small that if the person keeps it on the floor and stands up, he will not be able to see it clearly, or if the head of the picture is cut off, or the head is erased, then there is no harm in this. Salaat will not become makruh with a picture of this sort, no matter where it is kept.
12. It is makruh to offer salaat with clothing that has pictures on it.
13. It is not makruh to have a picture of a tree, house or any other inanimate object.
14. While in salaat, it is makruh to count any verse or anything else with one's fingers. However, there is no harm in counting by pressing one's fingers down lightly.
15. It is makruh to make the second rakaat longer than the first rakaat.
16. It is makruh to specify or set aside a particular Surah for a particular salaat in such a way that he recites that Surah only and never ever reads any other surah.
17. It is makruh to place a scarf or any other clothing over the shoulders and offer salaat.

18. It is makruh to offer salaat with clothes that are very dirty and soiled. But this will be permissible if he has no other clothes.
19. It is makruh to offer salaat with a coin, etc. in the mouth. And if the thing is such that it prevents one from reciting the Quran in salaat, then the person's salaat will break.
20. It is makruh to offer salaat when one has the urge to go and relieve oneself.
21. If person is very hungry and the food is already prepared, he should partake of his meal first and then offer his salaat. It is makruh to offer salaat without eating. But if there is very little time left, he should offer his salaat first.
22. It is not good to close one's eyes and offer salaat. But if by closing his eyes, a person is able to concentrate better, then there is no harm in doing this.
23. It is makruh to spit or clean one's nose unnecessarily in salaat. But if there is a need to do this, it will be permissible. For example, a person coughs and phlegm comes into his mouth - it will be permissible for him to spit on his left hand side or wipe it into a cloth. However, he should not spit on his right hand side or towards the qiblah.
24. If a bug bites a person while offering salaat, he should catch it and throw it aside. It is not good to kill it while in salaat. But if it has not bitten one as yet, one should not even catch it because it is makruh to do so.
25. When offering a fard salaat, it is makruh to lean against a wall or anything else unnecessarily.
26. A person did not complete the Surah that he was reciting - there were a few words still left to be read. Without completing these few words, he rushed into ruku and completed the Surah in his ruku. In such a case, his salaat will become makruh.
27. If the spot of sajdah is higher than his feet, for example a person makes sajdah on the porch, we will have to check how much higher it is. If it is more than a span, the salaat will not be proper. But if it is equal to a span or less than that, the salaat will be valid. However, it is makruh to do so unnecessarily.
28. It is makruh-e-tahrimi to offer salaat while wearing clothes in a disorderly manner. That is, to wear them in a way that is contrary to the norm or contrary to the way in which cultured people dress. For example, one covers oneself with a sheet but does not throw both the corners over one's shoulders. Alternatively, he is wearing a kurta but his hands are not in the sleeves. In doing so, the salaat becomes makruh.
29. It is makruh to offer salaat bare-headed. However, if one does this with the intention of humility or submissiveness, there is no harm in this.
30. If a person's hat or turban falls off while in salaat, it is preferable to pick it up and wear it. But if wearing it will require a lot of movement, it should not be picked up.
31. It is makruh-e-tahrimi for men to place their elbows on the ground when in sajdah.
32. It is makruh-e-tanzihi for the imam to stand in the mihraab. But if he stands out of the mihraab and makes his sajdah in the mihraab, this will not be makruh.
33. It is makruh-e-tanzihi for the imam to stand alone unnecessarily on an elevated place which is equal to or higher than one arm's length. But if there are a few muqtadis with the imam, it will not be makruh. And if there is only one muqtadi with the imam, it will be makruh. Some scholars have said that if it is less than one arm's length and the imam is distinguishable merely by glancing at him, it will also be makruh.
34. It is makruh-e-tanzihi for all the muqtadis to be higher than the imam unnecessarily. However, if there is some need, for example, there are many people and the place is not sufficient, then in such a case it will not be makruh. It is also permissible for some muqtadis to be on the same level as the imam, and for others to be on a higher place.
35. It is makruh-e-tahrimi for the muqtadi to start any act prior to the imam.
36. It is makruh-e-tahrimi for the muqtadi to read any dua, verse from the Quran or even Surah Faatihah while the imam is standing and busy with recitation.

Conditions which Permit the Breaking of Salaat

1. A person is offering his salaat and the train on which his belongings or family is, is about to leave. In such a case, it will be permissible for him to break his salaat.
2. A snake appears in front of a person. Out of fear for it, it will be permissible for him to break his salaat.
3. At night, a fowl was left open and a cat came to attack it. Out of fear of the consequences, it will be permissible to break the salaat.
4. While in salaat, someone picked up one's shoes and he fears that if he does not break his salaat his shoes will get stolen. It will be permissible for him to break his salaat.
5. A person is in salaat and the pot which costs about R1 - R2 begins to boil. So it will be permissible to break the salaat and move the pot. In other words, if there is a fear of losing anything which costs even R1 - R2, it will be permissible to break the salaat and save that thing.
6. If a person has a very urgent need to go and relieve himself, he should break his salaat, relieve himself and repeat his salaat.
7. A blind man or woman is walking and there is a well ahead and there is a fear that he or she will fall into it. In such a case, it will be fard to break the salaat and go and save them. If he did not break his salaat, and that person fell and died, he will be sinful.
8. A child's or anyone else's clothes caught on fire and they started to burn. It will also be fard to break the salaat.
9. A person's parents or grand-parents are in some sort of difficulty and they call for him while he is offering his fard salaat. It will be wajib to break the fard salaat. For example, one of his parents is sick and he went to the toilet. While going to the toilet or returning from it, he slipped and fell. He should break his salaat and go and pick him up. But if there is someone else who could pick him up, he should not unnecessarily break his salaat.
10. If he did not fall as yet, but fears that he will fall and he called out for him, even then he should break his salaat.
11. If he called him without any real reason, it is not permissible for him to break the fard salaat.
12. If the person is offering a nafl or sunnah salaat and his parents or grand-parents do not know what salaat he is offering and they call for him, even then it will be permissible to break the salaat and answer to their call. This is irrespective of whether they call the person because of a need or for no apparent reason. It will be a sin not to break the salaat and respond to their call. But if they know that the person is in salaat, and yet they call him, he should not break his salaat. But if they call him out of a need and there is a fear of some harm, he should break his salaat.

A few Masa'il Related to Fard and Wajib Salaats

1. The mudrik does not have to make any qira'at. The qira'at of the imam is sufficient for all the muqtadis. According to the Hanafee school of thought, it is makruh for the muqtadis to make qira'at behind the imam.
2. It is fard on the masbuq to make qira'at for the rakaats which he missed.
3. In other words, the muqtadi should not make qira'at in the presence of the imam. However, the masbuq has to make qira'at because the imam is not present for the rakaats which he missed.
4. The spot on which sajdah will be made should not be higher than half metre than the spot at which the feet are placed. If sajdah is made at a spot that is higher than half metre, this will not be permissible. However, if there is a need to do this, it will be permissible. For example, the congregation is very large and the people are standing so close to each other that it is not possible to make sajdah on the ground. It will be permissible to make sajdah on the backs of those offering salaat. This is on condition that the person on whose back sajdah is being made is also offering the same salaat as the person making the sajdah.
5. It is wajib to offer six extra takbeers apart from the normal takbeers in the eid salaats.
6. It is wajib for the imam to make qira'at in a loud voice in the following salaats: both the rakaats of fajr, the first two rakaats of maghrib and esha irrespective of whether it is a qada or an adaa salaat, jumu'ah, eid, taraweeh, and the witr of Ramadaan.
7. The munfarid has the choice of reciting the two rakaats of fajr and the first two rakaats of maghrib and esha, in a loud or soft voice. In order to differentiate between loud and soft, the jurists have written that "loud" will mean that someone else can hear the recitation, and "soft" will mean that only the person reciting can hear his own voice.
8. It is wajib on the imam and the munfarid to make the qira'at softly in all the rakaats of zuhr and asr, and the latter rakaats of maghrib and esha.

9. The nafl salaats that are offered during the day should be offered softly. As for those at night, one has a choice between reciting loudly or softly.
10. If a munfarid offers qada salaat of fajr, maghrib, and esha during the day, it will also be wajib to make the qira'at softly in them. But if he makes qada of them at night, he has a choice.
11. If a person forgets to recite another Surah after the Surah Faatihah in the first two rakaats of maghrib or esha, he will have to recite it in the third and fourth rakaats after Surah Faatihah. It will be wajib to make the qira'at loudly in these rakaats as well. At the end of the salaat, sajdah-e-sahw will also be wajib.

Acts which Invalidate Salaat

1. To give luqmah to anyone other than the imam while one is in salaat makes that salaat invalid. To give luqmah means to correct someone who has made a mistake in reciting the Quran. Note: Since there is a difference of opinion among the jurists with regard to the masa'il of luqmah, some ulama have written special books on this subject. We are therefore mentioning a few details over here.
2. If the muqtadi gives a luqmah to his imam, his salaat will not become invalid. This is irrespective of whether the imam has recited the specified amount or not. The "specified amount" in this context refers to that amount of qira'at which is the recommended amount. But in this case, it will be better for the imam to go into ruku, as will be mentioned in the next mas'ala.
3. If the imam has recited the specified amount, he should go into ruku and should not force the muqtadis to give him luqmah. (To do so is makruh) The muqtadis should also note that as long as there is no genuine need, they should not give luqmah to the imam. (To do so is also makruh) Here "genuine need" means that the imam wishes to continue forward despite making a mistake, or that he does not go into ruku, or that he keeps silent and remains standing. Even if they correct him without any "genuine need", the salaat will not become invalid - as has been mentioned in the previous mas'alas.
4. If a person gives luqmah to another person who is in salaat and the person who gave the luqmah was not his muqtadi - irrespective of whether he was offering any salaat or not - then if the person accepts the luqmah then his salaat will become invalid. However, if the person remembers on his own, either at the same time when the luqmah was given or prior to that, or he was not influenced by the luqmah from the back, but reads from his memory, then the salaat of the one to whom luqmah was given will not become invalid.
5. If a person who is offering salaat gives luqmah to someone who is not his imam, irrespective of whether the latter is offering salaat or not, then the former's salaat will become invalid.
6. If the muqtadi gives luqmah to the imam by hearing the recitation of someone else or by looking into the Quran, his salaat will become invalid. And if the imam accepts this luqmah, his salaat will also become invalid. If after looking into the Quran or by hearing the recitation of someone else, the muqtadi remembers the verse and gives the luqmah based on his memory, then the salaat will not become invalid.
7. Similarly, if a person is offering his salaat and recites one verse after looking into the Quran, his salaat will still become invalid. And if he had known this verse before looking into the Quran, his salaat will not become invalid. Alternatively, he did not remember this verse previously, but looked at less than the complete verse, then too his salaat will not become invalid.
8. If a woman stands near a man in such a way that any part of her body comes in line with any part of the body of the man, then the salaat will become invalid. So much so that when she goes into sajdah and her head comes in line with his feet, even then the salaat will become invalid. However, for the salaat to become invalid, the following conditions have to be found:

i) The woman is mature (irrespective of whether she is young or old), or she is immature but old enough for sexual intercourse. If a very young immature girl is in line with a man in salaat, the salaat will not become invalid.
ii) Both, man and woman, have to be in salaat. If any one of them is not in salaat and they come in line, the salaat will not become invalid.
iii) There must be no barrier between the two. If there is a curtain between the two, a sutra, or there is such a gap between the two that one person can stand there without any difficulty, the salaat will not become invalid.
iv) All the prerequisites for the salaat to be valid have to be found in the woman. If a woman is a lunatic, in the state of menstruation or nifaas, then her coming in line with the man will not make the salaat invalid because she herself will not be considered to be in salaat.
v) The salaat must not be a janaazah salaat. Being in line with a man in janaazah salaat will not invalidate the salaat.
vi) Being in line has to be to the extent of one rukn of salaat. If it is any less, the salaat will not become invalid. For example, they stand in line for such a short period of time that the ruku or anything else cannot be made, and thereafter she goes away. This little while will not invalidate the salaat.
vii) The takbeer-e-tahreemah of both is the same. That is, this woman is a muqtadi of that man, or this man and woman are the muqtadis of a third person.
viii) At the time of commencing the salaat, the imam had made the intention of imamat for the woman or made this intention in the midst of his salaat when she joined the jama'at. If the imam did not make an intention of imamat for her, the salaat will not become invalid. Instead, only her salaat will not be valid.

9. If the imam's wudu breaks and he leaves the musjid without appointing anyone as his deputy, the salaat of all the muqtadis will become invalid.
10. The imam appointed such a person as his deputy who does not possess the requirements to be an imam. For example, he appointed a lunatic, an immature child or a woman. In this case, everyone's salaat will become invalid.
11. If a woman kisses her husband while he is in salaat then his salaat will not become invalid. However, if at the time of being kissed, the man is overtaken by passion, then his salaat will become invalid. If a woman is in her salaat and a man kisses her, then her salaat will become invalid irrespective of whether he kissed her with desire or not, and irrespective of whether she was overcome by passion or not.
12. If a person tries to pass in front of a musalli, it is permissible for the musalli to push him aside or to stop him from this act. This is on condition that this act of stopping him does not involve a lot of movement. If it involves a lot of movement, his salaat will become invalid.

The Experiencing of Impurity in Salaat

If a person experiences hadath in his salaat, his salaat will become invalid if he experienced hadath-e-akbar, whereby ghusl becomes wajib. If he experiences hadath-e-asghar, it will either be two things: this hadath-e-asghar will either be ikhtiyaari or ghair ikhtiyaari. Ikhtiyaari means it was caused or brought about by the will of man. Ghayr ikhtiyaari means that it was not caused or not brought about by the will of man.

If it is ikhtiyaari, the salaat will become invalid. For example, a person laughs loudly in his salaat, he hurts his body and thereby draws out blood, he forces himself to pass wind, a person walks on the roof and by walking there a stone or anything else falls down on the head of a musalli and he starts to bleed - in all these cases the salaat will become invalid. This is because all these actions are carried out through the will of man.

If it is ghayr ikhtiyaari, then there are two conditions in this. It is either something that occurs very rarely, such as madness, unconsciousness or the death of the *imam,*or something that occurs often, such as passing of wind, urinating, passing stool or the emission of pre-coital fluid, etc. If it is something that occurs very rarely, the salaat will become invalid. And if it is something that occurs often, the salaat will not be invalidated. Instead, after having made his wudu, the person has the choice and the permission to either continue his salaat from where his wudu had broken or to repeat the entire salaat. However, it is better to repeat the entire salaat. There are certain prerequisites in the case where he wishes to continue his salaat from where his wudu had broken:

i) he should not offer any rukn in the state of hadath.
ii) he should not offer any rukn while walking, for example, while he is going towards or returning from wudu, he should not recite the Quran because recitation of the Quran is a rukn of salaat.
iii) he should not do any act which negates salaat nor should he do anything which is possible to refrain from.
iv) once he experiences any hadath, he should not delay in stopping any rukn without any valid excuse. Instead he should immediately go to make his wudu. However, if there is a valid excuse, there is no harm in delaying. For example, there are many saffs and he is standing in the first saff and it is difficult to break through the saffs.

1. If a munfarid experiences hadath, it is permissible for him to make wudu immediately, and he should complete his wudu as quickly as possible. But this should be done with due consideration to all the sunnahs and mustahabs of wudu. In the meanwhile, he should not engage in any conversation. If water is available nearby, he should not go to any place that is further away. In short, he should not do anything more than what is necessary. On completing his wudu, he could continue with his salaat at that very place of wudu, and this is preferable; or he could go back to his original place. It is preferable to break his first salaat by making salaam for it, and after completing his wudu, to repeat his entire salaat.
2. If the imam experiences hadath, he should immediately go to make his wudu even if he is in the last qa'dah. It is preferable for him to choose the one whom he feels to be most suitable for imamat from among the muqtadis. It is better to make the mudrik his deputy. It is also permissible to make the masbuq his deputy. He should indicate to the masbuq as to the number of rakaats he still has to perform. He should do this by means of his fingers: if he has one rakaat left, he should lift one finger, and if two rakaats, two fingers. If he has to make a ruku, he should place his hand on his knees. If he has to make a sajdah, he should place his hand on his forehead. If it is qira'at, he should place his hand on his mouth. If it is sajdah-e-tilaawat, he should place his hand on his forehead and mouth. If it is sajdah-e-sahw, then on his chest. All this is if the masbuq understands. If he does not understand, he should not make him his deputy. Once the imam has repeated his wudu, he should join the jama'at and become a follower of his deputy, that is if the jama'at is still in progress. If he did not go and join the jama'at, but instead stood and followed his deputy from the very place where he made his wudu, then this will only be permissible if there is no barrier between them, or if he is not very far away from the jama'at. If this is not the case, it will not be permissible to follow his deputy from the place of wudu. However, if the jama'at is already over, he can complete his salaat wherever he wishes; either at the place of wudu or at his original place.
3. If water is available inside the actual musjid, then it is not necessary to appoint anyone as his deputy. He has the choice to either appoint or not to appoint. If he does not appoint a deputy, he should go and make his wudu and come back and lead the jama'at. In the meantime, the muqtadis should wait for him.
4. Once a person appoints a deputy, he no more remains an imam but becomes a muqtadi of his deputy. Therefore, if the jama'at is over, the imam should complete his salaat as a laahiq. If the imam does not appoint anyone as his deputy, but the muqtadis appoint someone from among them or one of the muqtadis steps forward of his own accord and goes and stands in the place of the imam and makes the intention of imamat, then all this is permissible on condition that the original imam has not gone out of the musjid as yet. And if the salaat is not performed in the musjid, then on condition that he has not stepped beyond the saffs or beyond the sutra. If he has already stepped out of these boundaries, the salaat will become invalid. Now, another person cannot become an imam.
5. If a muqtadi experiences hadath, he should also immediately go to repeat his wudu. On completing his wudu, he should join the jama'at if it is still in progress. If not, he should complete his salaat on his own. If the jama'at is still in progress, he should go and stand in his original place. However, if there is nothing between him and the imam which can prevent him from following the imam, then it will also be permissible for him to stand at the place of wudu and follow the imam from there. If the jama'at is over, he has the choice of going to his original place and offering his salaat, or of offering it at the place of wudu. This latter option is preferable.
6. If the imam appointed a masbuq as his deputy, he should perform the balance of the rakaats for the imam and thereafter appoint a mudrik so that this mudrik could make the salaam and the masbuq could offer the rakaats which he had missed.
7. If a person becomes a lunatic, experiences hadath-e-akbar, experiences hadath-e-asghar unintentionally or becomes unconscious; and any of the above occurs after having sat in the last qa'dah to the extent of at-tahiyyaat - then his salaat will become invalid and he will have to repeat his salaat.
8. Because these masa'il are complicated, and because of a lack of knowledge - the possibility of mistakes is inevitable. It is therefore better not to continue the salaat. Instead, one should break the salaat by making salaam and repeat the entire salaat.

WITR SALAAT

1. Witr salaat is wajib. The status of wajib is very close to that of fard. To leave out a wajib is a major sin. If a wajib is missed out, one should make qada of it as soon as possible.
2. Witr salaat comprises of three rakaats. After offering two rakaats, one should sit down and read the at-tahiyyaat. The durood should not be read. Instead, one should immediately stand up after the at-tahiyyaat. One should then read the Surah Faatihah and another Surah. Thereafter, one should say Allawhu Akbar and raise one's hands upto one's ears (and upto the shoulders if it is a woman). The hands should be clasped again, and thereafter, the dua-e-qunoot should be recited. Thereafer, he should go into ruku, complete the third rakaat, sit down for at-tahiyyaat, durood, and a dua and then make the salaam.
3. The dua-e-qunoot is as follows:
!!!!!!!!!!!!!!!!!!!!!!!!!!!!!!!!!!!!
4. After the Surah Faatihah, another Surah should also be recited in all the three rakaats of witr salaat as has been mentioned above.
5. If a person forgets to recite dua-e-qunoot in the third rakaat, and remembers it when he goes into ruku, he should not recite it now. Instead, he should make sajdah-e-sahw at the end of his salaat. If a person reads the dua-e-qunoot after standing up from ruku, even then his salaat will be valid, but it is preferable not to do so. In any case, it will still be wajib on him to make sajdah-e-sahw.
6. If a person forgetfully reads dua-e-qunoot in the first or second rakaat, this is not considered. He will still have to recite it in the third rakaat and also make sajdah-e-sahw.
7. If a person does not know the dua-e-qunoot, he should recite the following dua:
!!!!!!!!!!!!!!!!!!!!!!!!!!!!!!!!!!!!
or the following dua three times:
!!!!!!!!!!!!!!!!!!!!!!!!!!!!!!!!!!!!
or the following dua three times:
!!!!!!!!!!!!!!!!!!!

When he offers these five qada salaats, he should offer them in the same order as he had missed them, i.e. the one that he missed first should be offered first and the one that he missed second should be offered second, and so on. For example, if a person misses the salaats of an entire day: fajr, zuhr, asr, maghrib and esha. When he is offering his qada, he should offer it in the same order. If he does not offer fajr first, but zuhr or asr or any other salaat, then this will not be proper. He will have to repeat it.

7. If a person has to make qada of six salaats or more, he can offer any other salaat without having offered the six qada salaats. And when he offers these six salaats, he does not have to offer them in the order that he missed them. He can offer them in any order that he wishes. It is no longer wajib to offer them in order.

8. Several months or several years have passed and the person has not offered those six or more salaats. However, thereafter he always offered his salaats on time and did not allow himself to miss any salaat. After all these months or years, he now misses one salaat. Even in this case it will be permissible to read all other salaats without making qada of those that he missed. When offering these salaats, he does not have to follow any set order.

9. A person had to offer six or more qada salaats and therefore did not have to offer them in the order that he missed them. However, he offered these salaats by reading one or two at a time and thereby completed all of them. No salaat is left which he has to make qada of. If he now misses out one to five salaats again, he will have to make qada of them in the order that he missed and it will not be permissible for him to offer any other salaat without offering these qada salaats first. But if he misses out six salaats or more again, he will once again be excused from offering them in the order that he missed them. He will also be able to offer other salaats without having offered his qada salaats first.

10. A person had many qada salaats to offer. He commenced offering them and gradually completed all of them with the exception of four or five. It is not wajib to offer these four or five salaats in order. He has the choice of offering them as he wishes. It is also permissible for him to offer other salaats without having offered these qada salaats.

11. A person missed out witr salaat and does not have any other qada salaat to offer. It is therefore not permissible for him to offer the fajr salaat without having offered the qada of witr salaat first. If he knows that he has to make qada of the witr salaat first and still offers the fajr salaat, he will have to offer the qada salaat of witr and repeat the fajr salaat.

12. A person offered only his esha salaat and slept away. He then awoke for tahajjud, made wudu and offered his tahajjud and witr salaats. In the morning he remembered that he had forgetfully offered his esha salaat without wudu. He will now have to make qada of the esha salaat only, and not the witr salaat.

13. Qada is only made for the fard and witr salaats. There is no qada for the sunnah salaats. However, if a person misses out his fajr salaat and makes qada of it before mid-day, he should also make qada of the sunnah of fajr salaat. And if he makes the qada after mid-day, he should only make qada of the fard salaat.

14. If there was very little time left for fajr and he therefore only read the fard salaat, it is preferable to offer the sunnah salaat after the sun has risen considerably. But he has to read it before mid-day.

15. A person who rarely used to offer his salaats made taubah. It will now be wajib for him to make qada of all the salaats which he had missed throughout his life. By making taubah, one is not excused from offering salaats. However, by making taubah, he is forgiven from the sin which he committed by missing out the salaats. Now, if he does not make qada of these missed salaats, the sin will return to him.

16. A person had missed several salaats and did not get the opportunity to make qada of them as yet. At the time of death, it will be wajib for him to make a wasiyyat to pay fidyah for all the missed salaats. He will be sinning if he does not do this. The masa'il related to giving fidyah for missed salaats will be explained in Part Three in the chapter dealing with fidyah for missed fasts - Insha Allawh.

17. If several people have missed a particular salaat, they should make qada of it with jama'at. If it is a salaat in which qira'at is normally made aloud, then when making qada, it should also be recited aloud. If it is normally made softly, it should also be made softly when making qada.

18. If an immature child offers his esha salaat and sleeps away, and after the break of dawn he notices traces of semen which indicates that he had a wet dream, then the preferred opinion is that he should repeat his esha salaat. And if he wakes up before the break of dawn and notices traces of semen, then all the ulama say that he will have to make qada of the esha salaat.

SUNNAH AND NAFL SALAAT

1. At fajr time, it is sunnah to offer two rakaats of salaat before the fard salaat. These two rakaats have been emphasized greatly in the Hadith and should not be left out at any time. If on some day, it gets extremely late and very little time is left for the salaat, then at such a time of necessity; one should only offer the two rakaats of fard salaat. However, when the sun rises considerably, then one should make qada of the two rakaats of sunnah.

2. At zuhr time, one should first offer four rakaats of sunnah, then the four rakaats of fard and again two rakaats of sunnah. These six rakaats of sunnah are also necessary. There is great importance in offering them and it is a great sin to leave them without any valid reason.

3. At asr time, one should first offer four rakaats of sunnah and then the four rakaats of fard. However, the sunnah of asr time is not emphasized. If a person does not offer this sunnah, he will not be sinning. But the person who offers them will be greatly rewarded.

4. At maghrib time, one should first offer the three rakaats of fard and thereafter two rakaats of sunnah. These two rakaats are also necessary. Not offering them will amount to sinning.

5. At esha time, it is better and mustahab to first offer four rakaats of sunnah. Thereafter, the four rakaats of fard and again two rakaats of sunnah. If one wishes, he could also offer two rakaats of nafl thereafter. According to this, there are six rakaats of sunnah. If a person does not offer all these rakaats, then he should first offer the four rakaats of fard, and then two rakaats of sunnah, and thereafter he should offer his witr salaat. These two rakaats of sunnah after the fard salaat are necessary. Not offering them will amount to sinning.

6. In the month of Ramadaan, the taraweeh salaat is also sunnah. It has also been emphasized. Leaving them out and not offering them is a sin. Many women leave out the taraweeh salaat - they should never do this. Twenty rakaats of taraweeh have to be offered after the fard and sunnah of esha salaat. These could be offered either by making intention for two rakaats at a time or for four rakaats at a time. However, it is preferable to offer two rakaats at a time. The witr salaat should be offered after completing these twenty rakaats. Note: Those sunnahs that are necessary to offer are called sunnat-e-mu'akkadah. There are twelve such sunnah rakaats in a day: two rakaats of fajr, four rakaats before zuhr and two rakaats after, two rakaats after maghrib and two rakaats after esha. In Ramadaan, the taraweeh is also sunnat-e-mu'akkadah. Some ulama have also regarded tahajjud to be sunnat-e-mu'akkadah.

7. These are the salaats that have been stipulated by the Shariah. If anyone wishes to offer more than these, then he can offer as much as he wishes and whenever he wishes. However, he has to bear in mind that he should not offer any salaat in those times when it is makruh to do so. Whatever salaats apart from fard and sunnah that he may offer, are known as nafl. The more nafl salaats a person offers, the more reward he will receive - there is no limit to this. There were such great servants of Allawh in the past, who used to offer nafl salaat throughout the night and never used to sleep.

8. There are a few nafl salaats the performance of which is greatly rewarded. It is therefore better to offer these nafl salaats as opposed to the other nafl salaats. Due to a little effort, one is greatly rewarded. These nafl salaats are: tahiyyatul wudu, ishraaq, chaasht, awwaabeen, tahajjud, and salaatut tasbih.

9. Tahiyyatul wudu is that after a person makes wudu, he must offer two rakaats of salaat. Great virtue with regard to this salaat has been mentioned in the Hadith. However, it should not be offered at those times when nafl salaat is makruh.

10. Ishraaq salaat is offered in the following way: after the fajr salaat one should not get up from his musAllawh. Instead, he should sit in the same place and occupy himself in reading durood shareef, or the kalimah, or the remembrance of Allawh Ta'ala. He should not involve himself in any worldly talk, nor in any worldly activity. When the sun rises considerably, he should offer two or four rakaats of salaat. In doing so, he will get the reward of one hajj and one umrah. If a person gets occupied in some worldly activity after the fajr salaat, and after sunrise he offers ishraaq salaat; this will also be permissible. However, the reward will be less.

11. Thereafer, once the sun rises quite high, and it gets quite hot; one should offer at least two rakaats of salaat. If he wishes, he could offer more. That is, four, eight, or twelve rakaats. This is known as chaasht salaat. There is a lot of reward in offering this salaat.

12. After offering the fard and sunnahs of maghrib salaat, one should offer at least six rakaats and at the most, twenty rakaats of nafl salaat. This is called awwaabeen.
13.There is great virtue in getting up in the middle of the night and offering salaat. This is called tahajjud salaat. This salaat is most acceptable in the sight of Allawh, and one gets the most reward for it. The minimum for tahajjud salaat is four rakaats and the maximum is twelve rakaats. If not, even two rakaats will suffice. If one does not have the courage to offer it later, then he could offer it after esha. However, he will not receive the same reward. Apart from tahajjud, one could offer as many nafl salaats as he wishes at night.
14. When one is offering nafl salaat during the day, then he should make intention of offering two rakaats at a time; or if he wishes, four rakaats at time. It is makruh to offer more than four rakaats of nafl at a time (with one salaam) during the day. As for nafl salaat at night, it is permissible to make intention for six or even eight rakaats at a time. To make intention for more than this at night is also makruh.
15. If a person makes intention for four rakaats (of nafl), then when he sits down after the second rakaat, he has the choice of reading durood and a dua after the at-tahiyyaat and then standing up for the third rakaat and commencing with Surah Faatihah after reciting the thanaa' and the ta'awwudh. Alternatively, he could stand up after reciting the at-tahiyyaat only and thereafter commencing with Surah Faatihah in the third rakaat. He should then sit down in the fourth rakaat and recite the at-tahiyyaat, all the other duas, and then make the salaam.
If he made intention for eight rakaats and wishes to offer all eight rakaats with one salaam, then he still has the same two options as mentioned above. He could recite the at-tahiyyaat, durood shareef and a dua, and stand up and thereafter recite the thanaa'; or he could stand up after reciting at-tahiyyaat and commence with Surah Faatihah. He has the choice of doing the same thing for the sixth rakaat as well and thereafter sitting for the eighth rakaat and reciting everything that is necessary therein. In the same way, he has the choice of doing both things in every two rakaats.
16. It is wajib to recite a Surah after Surah Faatihah in every rakaat of a sunnah or nafl salaat. If a person intentionally leaves out a Surah, he will be committing a sin. But if he forgets to recite a Surah, he will have to make sajdah-e-sahw. The masa'il related to sajdah-e-sahw will be explained in a later chapter.
17. Once a person commences with a nafl salaat, it now becomes wajib upon him to complete it. If he breaks it, he will be sinning and he will also have to make qada of it. However, every two rakaats of a nafl salaat are considered separate. If a person makes intention of offering four or six rakaats, then it will only be wajib on him to complete two rakaats. All four rakaats will not become wajib. So if a person makes intention of four rakaats of nafl salaat and then makes salaam after two rakaats, there will be no sin on him.
18. If a person made intention of four rakaats of nafl salaat and thereafter broke it before he could offer even two rakaats, he will only have to make qada of two rakaats.
19. If he made intention of four rakaats and already completed two rakaats and broke his salaat in the third or fourth rakaat, then the following rules will apply: if he had sat down after the second rakaat and recited the at-tahiyyaat, etc., he will only have to make qada of two rakaats. And if he did not sit in the second rakaat and stood up either forgetfully or intentionally without reciting the at-tahiyyaat, then he will have to make qada of all the four rakaats.
20. If a person breaks the four rakaats sunnah of zuhr salaat, then he will have to make qada of all four rakaats irrespective of whether he sat down after the second rakaat for at-tahiyyaat or not.
21. It is permissible to offer nafl salaat while sitting. However, by sitting down, he will only get half the reward. It is better to stand and offer the salaat. The nafl salaats after the witr salaat are also included in this rule. However, if a person cannot stand up because of some sickness, then he will receive the full reward. As for fard and sunnah salaats, as long as a person does not have a valid excuse, it will not be permissible to sit and offer them.
22. A person commenced offering a nafl salaat while standing, but he sat down in the very first or second rakaat. This is permissible.
23. A person stood up and offered his nafl salaat. However, because of some weakness, he got tired. So it will be permissible to lean against a pole or wall and get support from it. This is not makruh.

SAJDAH-E-SAHW

1. If any one or several of the wajib acts of salaat is left out forgetfully, it becomes wajib to make sajdah-e-sahw. By making sajdah-e-sahw, the salaat becomes proper. If one does not make sajdah-e-sahw, the salaat will have to be repeated.
2. If one forgetfully leaves out a fard act of salaat, the salaat will not become proper by making sajdah-e-sahw. It will have to be repeated.
3. The method of making sajdah-e-sahw is that in the last rakaat the person should recite the at-tahiyyaat only and thereafter make salaam towards the right only and thereafter make two sajdahs. He should then repeat the at-tahiyyaat and thereafter recite the durood, dua, make salaam to both sides and thereby complete his salaat.
4. If a person forgetfully makes sajdah-e-sahw before making salaam, even then it will be considered and the salaat will be proper.
5. If a person forgetfully makes two rukus or three sajdahs, it is wajib to make sajdah-e-sahw.
6. While in salaat, a person forgot to recite Surah Faatihah and only recited another Surah, or he first recited a Surah and then recited Surah Faatihah - sajdah-e-sahw will become wajib.
7. A person forgets to recite another Surah (after Surah Faatihah) in the first two rakaats of a fard salaat. He should therefore recite another Surah in the second two rakaats and also make sajdah-e-sahw. If he forgets to recite another Surah in one of the first two rakaats, he should recite it in one of the latter two rakaats and also make sajdah-e-sahw. If he forgets to recite another Surah in the latter two rakaats as well, i.e. he forgets to recite another Surah in the first two as well as in the latter two rakaats, and only remembers at the time of reciting the at-tahiyyaat that he did not recite another Surah in one or two rakaats, the salaat will still become proper if he makes sajdah-e-sahw.
8. To recite another Surah (after Surah Faatihah) in all the rakaats of sunnah and nafl salaat is wajib. If a person forgets to recite another Surah in any of the rakaats, he will have to make sajdah-e-sahw.
9. After reciting Surah Faatihah, a person began thinking as to which Surah he should recite. His thinking took so long that in that time Sub'haanAllawh could be recited three times. Even then sajdah-e-sahw will become wajib.
10. In the last rakaat, after reciting at-tahiyyaat and durood shareef, a person had a doubt as to whether he offered three or four rakaats. While thinking about this, he kept silent and took so long to make the salaam that in that time he could have recited Sub'haanAllawh three times, and after that he remembered that he offered all four rakaats - even in this case it will be wajib to make sajdah-e-sahw.
11. A person recited Surah Faatihah and another Surah, but thereafter he unintentionally began thinking of something. He took so long to go into ruku that in that time he could have recited Sub'haanAllawh three times. Even then, sajdah-e-sahw will become wajib.
12. Similarly, sajdah-e-sahw will become wajib in the following instances: while he was busy with his recitation he stopped and began thinking of something, he sat in the second or fourth rakaat for at-tahiyyaat and did not commence reciting it immediately. Instead, he sat and started thinking of something, when he stood up from the ruku, he stood silently and started thinking of something, when he sat down in-between the two sajdahs, he started thinking of something. In order words, if a person unintentionally delays in executing a particular posture or gets delayed due to thinking of something, then sajdah-e-sahw becomes wajib.
13. In a three or four rakaat fard salaat (irrespective of whether it is a salaat that he is offering for that time, making qada of a salaat which he missed, or it is a witr salaat or the first four rakaats of sunnah of zuhr salaat) when the person sat for the at-tahiyyaat in the second rakaat, he unintentionally recited at-tahiyyaat two times. Even then sajdah-e-sahw will become wajib. And after the at-tahiyyaat if he recited the following from the durood:
or if he recited more than that and only thereafter he remembered that he was supposed to stand up for the third rakaat, even then sajdah-e-sahw will become wajib. But if he recited less than this, sajdah-e-sahw will not become wajib.

14. With regards to nafl salaat (or even a salaat which is offered after the fulfilment of a particular wish) it is permissible to recite the durood after the at-tahiyyaat when sitting for the second rakaat. By reciting the durood in a nafl salaat, sajdah-e-sahw does not become wajib. However, if at-tahiyyaat is recited twice, sajdah-e-sahw will become wajib even in a nafl salaat.
15. A person sat down for at-tahiyyaat but mistakenly recited something else, or he recited Surah Faatihah. Sajdah-e-sahw will become wajib.
16. Upon commencing with his salaat, a person recited dua-e-qunoot instead of reciting the thanaa'. Sajdah-e-sahw will not become wajib. Similarly, if he recited at-tahiyyaat or something else instead of Surah Faatihah in the third or fourt rakaat of a fard salaat, sajdah-e-sahw will not be wajib.
17. In a three or four rakaat salaat, a person forgot to sit down after the second rakaat. Instead, he stood up directly for the third rakaat. While standing up, if he is closer to the sitting posture, he should sit down and recite the at-tahiyyaat and thereafter complete his salaat and there is no need to make sajdah-e-sahw. But if he is closer to the standing posture, he should not sit down. Instead, he should continue with his salaat without sitting down. He should only sit down at the end. In this case, sajdah-e-sahw will become wajib. If after standing up, he still went back and sat down; he will be committing a sin and even in this case he will still have to make sajdah-e-sahw.
18. If a person forgets to sit down after the fourth rakaat, then if he is closer to the sitting posture, he must sit down, recite the at-tahiyyaat, durood, etc. and make his salaam. There is no need to make sajdah-e-sahw. And if he stood up completely, even then he should go back and sit down. In fact, even if he has recited Surah Faatihah, another Surah, and went into ruku, he should still sit down, read the at-tahiyyaat and then make sajdah-e-sahw. But if he still did not remember after the ruku and made the sajdahs for the fifth rakaat, he should repeat his fard salaat. This salaat will now be regarded as a nafl salaat and he will have to offer one more rakaat and thereby complete six rakaats. There is no need to make sajdah-e-sahw. If he did not add one more rakaat, or made salaam after the fifth rakaat, four rakaats will be nafl and the one rakaat will not even be considered.
19. If a person sits down for the fourth rakaat, recites at-tahiyyaat and thereafter stands up, he should sit down when he remembers as long as it is before making the next sajdahs. The moment he sits down, he should not recite at-tahiyyaat. Instead, he should immediately make sajdah-e-sahw. But if he makes the sajdahs for the fifth rakaat and only remembers thereafter, he should add one more rakaat and complete six rakaats. The first four rakaats will be for his fard and the other two will be regarded as nafl. He will also have to make sajdah-e-sahw. If he makes sajdah-e-sahw and then salaam in the fifth rakaat, he has committed a sin. In this case, the first four rakaats will be of fard, and the remaining one will not be considered.
20. If a person is offering four rakaats of nafl salaat and he forgets to sit down after the second rakaat, then as long as he remembers before making the sajdahs for the third rakaat, he should sit down. If he has already made the sajdahs for the third rakaat, his salaat will still be valid. But sajdah-e-sahw will be wajib in both cases.
21. A person is in doubt as to whether he offered three or four rakaats. If this doubt was coincidental, i.e. he does not normally have this doubt, then he will have to repeat his salaat. But if these sort of doubts occur quite often, he should ponder in his heart and see what the heart's inclination is. If it is more towards three rakaats, he should offer one more rakaat and sajdah-e-sahw will not be wajib. But if he feels that he offered four rakaats, he should not add another rakaat nor should he make sajdah-e-sahw. If he still cannot make up his mind after pondering over the matter, then he should regard it as if he offered three rakaats and add one more rakaat. But in this case, he should also sit down after the third rakaat and recite the at-tahiyyaat. He should then stand up and offer the fourth rakaat and also make sajdah-e-sahw.
22. If he has a doubt as to whether it is the first or second rakaat, the above rule will also apply. That is, if the doubt was coincidental, he should repeat his salaat. But if such doubts occur quite often, he should act according to that which his heart tells him. But if he is still not sure, he should regard it as one rakaat. However, he has to sit down after the first rakaat and recite the at-tahiyyaat, because it is possible that this is actually his second rakaat. On completing his second rakaat, he should sit down again. He should also recite another Surah after Surah Faatihah in this second rakaat. On completing his third rakaat, he should sit down again because it is possible that this is actually his fourth rakaat. After the fourth rakaat he should sit down again, make sajdah-e-sahw and then make salaam.
23. If he has a doubt as to whether it is the second or third rakaat, the same rule will apply. If he cannot make up his mind, he should sit down after the second rakaat and thereafter offer the third rakaat. On completing the third rakaat, he should sit down again and recite at-tahiyyaat because it is possible that this is his fourth rakaat. He should then offer the fourth rakaat, make sajdah-e-sahw and then complete his salaat.
24. If the doubt occurrs after having completed his salaat, that is, he is not sure as to whether he offered three or four rakaats. Then this doubt is not even considered - the salaat is valid. But if he clearly remembers that he only offered three rakaats, he should stand up and offer one more rakaat and also make sajdah-e-sahw. However, if on completing his salaat, he started speaking or did something else with which salaat breaks, he will have to repeat his salaat. Similarly, if this doubt creeps in after having recited at-tahiyyaat, the same rule will apply. That is, as long as he does not remember clearly, he should not worry about it. However, it will be good to repeat the salaat as a precaution so that the uneasiness of the heart is removed and no doubt remains.
25. If several things occur in salaat, whereby sajdah-e-sahw becomes wajib, then one sajdah-e-sahw will suffice for all the mistakes. Sajdah-e-sahw is not made twice in one salaat.
26. After making sajdah-e-sahw, a person commits another mistake which makes sajdah-e-sahw wajib. The first sajdah-e-sahw will suffice and it will not be necessary to make another one.
27. A person made a mistake in his salaat whereby sajdah-e-sahw had become wajib on him. But he forgot to make sajdah-e-sahw and made salaam on both sides. However, he remained sitting in that place without turning his chest away from the qiblah, neither did he talk nor did he do anything whereby salaat breaks. He should make sajdah-e-sahw at that time. In fact, if he remained sitting in that position and engaged himself in reciting the kalimah, durood or any other zikr, even then there is no harm in this. Once he makes his sajdah-e-sahw, his salaat will be valid.
28. Sajdah-e-sahw was wajib on a person but he intentionally made his salaam on both sides and made this intention that he will not make sajdah-e-sahw. Despite this, as long as he does not do anything which makes the salaat invalid, the choice to make sajdah-e-sahw will remain.
29. In a three or four rakaat salaat, a person unintentionally made salaam after the second rakaat. He should immediately stand up, complete his salaat and make sajdah-e-sahw. However, if after making salaam, he did something which invalidates salaat, he will have to repeat his salaat.
30. A person forgetfully recited dua-e-qunoot in the first or second rakaat of witr salaat. This will not be considered. He should recite the qunoot in the third rakaat again and also make sajdah-e-sahw.
31. While offering witr salaat, a person had a doubt as to whether it is the second or third rakaat. He cannot even make up his mind as to which of the two is more correct. He should recite dua-e-qunoot in that rakaat and after sitting down for the at-tahiyyaat he should stand up and offer one more rakaat. He should recite dua-e-qunoot in this rakaat as well. In the end he should also make sajdah-e-sahw.
32. Instead of reciting dua-e-qunoot in the witr salaat, the person read thanaa'. Later when he remembered, he recited the qunoot. Sajdah-e-sahw will not be wajib.
33. A person forgot to recite dua-e-qunoot in witr salaat. Instead, he went into ruku after reciting a Surah. Sajdah-e-sahw will be wajib.
34. After reciting Surah Faatihah, a person recited two or three Surahs. There is no harm in this and sajdah-e-sahw will not be wajib.
35. In the latter rakaats of a fard salaat, a person recited another Surah after Surah Faatihah in one or both the rakaats. Sajdah-e-sahw will not be wajib.
36. Sajdah-e-sahw is not wajib in the following instances: he forgets to recite the thanaa' in the beginning, he forgets to recite the tasbeeh in ruku, he forgets to recite the tasbeeh in sajdah, he forgets to recite:
!!
when standing up from ruku, at the time of saying takbeer-e-tahreemah he forgets to raise his hands to his ears (or to the shoulders for women), at the end of his salaat he made salaam without reciting the durood and a dua. In all the above cases, sajdah-e-sahw is not wajib.

37. In the latter one or two rakaats of a fard salaat, he forgot to recite Surah Faatihah and went into ruku after standing silently- even then sajdah-e-sahw will not be wajib.
38. If a person intentionally committs those errors which make sajdah-e-sahw wajib, then sajdah-e-sahw will not become wajib. Instead, he will have to repeat the salaat. Even if he makes the sajdah-e-sahw, the salaat will still not be valid. If a person forgets those things which are not fard nor wajib in salaat, his salaat will remain valid and he will not have to make sajdah-e-sahw.
39. If a salaat which has to be offered silently is offered in a loud voice, sajdah-e-sahw will have to be made irrespective of whether the person is a munfarid or an imam. If an imam performs a salaat which has to be offered aloud, silently, then he will have to make sajdah-e-sahw. But if very little qira'at is made in a loud voice in a silent salaat, which is not sufficient for the salaat to be valid, then sajdah-e-sahw will not be wajib. For example, just one or two words come out aloud, or an imam recites one or two words silently in a salaat that is offered aloud, then sajdah-e-sahw will not be wajib.

SALAAT OF THE SICK

1. Under no condition should salaat be left out. As long as a person has the strength to stand up and offer his salaat, he should stand up. If he cannot stand, he should sit down and offer his salaat. He should make his ruku while sitting. After the ruku, he should go down for the two sajdahs. He should make the ruku in such a way that his forehead comes in line with his knees.
2. If he is unable to make ruku and sajdah as well, he should make them by gestures (ishaarah) and he should bow down a little further for the sajdahs.
3. It is not good to keep a pillow or any other high object in order to make sajdah on it. If a person is unable to make sajdah, he should make it through ishaarah - there is no need to make sajdah on a pillow.
4. If a person has the strength to stand up and offer his salaat but there is a lot of difficulty in doing this, or he fears that his sickness will get worse, it is still permissible for him to sit down and offer his salaat.
5. A person can stand up, but is unable to go into ruku and sajdah. If he wishes, he could stand up and thereafter make his ruku and sajdahs through ishaarah. Alternatively, he could sit down and make his ruku and sajdahs through ishaarah. However, it is better to sit down and offer his salaat.
6. If a person does not have the strength to sit, he should lie down with a pillow or large cushion behind him in such a way that his head is raised quite high - in fact, close to the sitting position. His legs should be stretched towards the qiblah. If he has some strength, he should not stretch them, instead, he should raise his knees. He should then offer his salaat by making ishaarah and the ishaarah for the sajdahs should be more lower. If he cannot lie down by having a pillow or cushion behind him in such a way that his head and chest can face the qiblah, he should stretch his legs towards the qiblah and lie flat on his back. However, he should place a pillow under his head so that at least his face could be in the direction of the qiblah and not facing the sky. He should then offer his salaat through ishaarah, and the ishaarah for the sajdahs should be slightly more than the ishaarah for the ruku.
7. If a person does not lie flat on his back, but instead lies on his left or right side while facing towards the qiblah and makes ruku and sajdah with the ishaarah of his head, then this is also permissible. However, it is better to lie flat on the back.
8. If a person does not have the strength to even make ishaarah with his head, he should not offer salaat. If this condition remains for more than twenty four hours, he will be completely excused from offering salaat and will not have to make qada after recovering from his sickness. But if this condition did not last for more than twenty four hours and he regained the strength to offer his salaat with ishaarah, then he should make qada with ishaarah. He should not have this in mind that when he recovers completely, only then will he make his qada. If he passes away (without having made qada), he will die as a sinner.
9. Similarly, if a normal healthy person becomes unconscious and remains in this state for less than twenty four hours, it will be wajib on him to make qada of the salaats that he missed. But if he remained unconscious for more than twenty four hours, he will not have to make qada.
10. When a person commenced his salaat, he was normal and healthy. However, while in salaat, one of his nerves got pinched and he was unable to stand up. He should therefore sit down and offer the remainder of his salaat, and if he can, he should also make ruku and sajdah. But if he cannot, then he should make them with ishaarah of his head. But if his condition is such that he does not even have the strength to sit down, he should lie down and complete the remainder of his salaat.
11. Because of some sickness, a person offered part of his salaat sitting down and also made the ruku in the place of ruku and the sajdah in the place of sajdah. Thereafter, he recovered in that very salaat. He should therefore stand up and complete the remainder of his salaat.
12. A person did not have the strength to make ruku and sajdah because of some sickness and therefore made ishaarah with his head. In the course of his salaat he felt better and was able to make ruku and sajdah - this salaat will become invalid. He should not complete it. Instead, he should repeat this salaat.
13. A person became paralysed and fell so ill that he is unable to make istinja with water. He should wipe himself with a cloth or lumps of sand and offer his salaat in this way. If he cannot make tayammum himself, someone else should make it for him. If he does not have the strength to even wipe himself with a piece of cloth or lumps of sand, he should offer his salaat in this very state and should not allow himself to miss any salaat. It is not permissible for anyone else to look at his body or to touch it - not his father, mother, son nor daughter. However, it is permissible for the husband to look at his wife's body, and the wife to look at her husband's body. Apart from these two, it is not permissible for anyone else.
14. A person missed a few salaats while he was sound and healthy. He then fell ill. He should make qada of these salaats while he is sick, in whichever way he can. He should not wait and think that he will make qada of them when he is able to stand, or when he begins to sit, or when he is able to make ruku and sajdah. These are all thoughts influenced by shaytaan. Piety demands that qada be made immediately and not delayed.
15. If the bed of a sick person is impure and it will cause the sick person much difficulty if it were to be changed, it will be permissible to offer salaat on that very bed.
16. A doctor carried out an eye operation upon a person and prohibited him from moving about. He should continue offering his salaat while lying down.
17. If a sick person made ruku and sajdah with ishaarah and thereafter felt better in that very salaat and is now able to make ruku and sajdah, then that salaat of his will become invalid. It will be wajib on him to repeat that salaat. But if he had not made ishaarah for ruku and sajdah as yet and already felt better, then that salaat of his will be valid and he can continue with it.
18. If a person gets tired because of the qira'at being very lengthy and finds it difficult to stand, it will not be makruh to lean against a wall, tree or pillar. Weak and old people find this necessary especially in taraweeh salaat.

SALAAT ON A JOURNEY

1. If a person travels for a few kilometres, no rule of the Shariah changes because of this journey. According to the Shariah, he will not be regarded as a musafir. He will have to do everything in the same way that he would have done at home. He will have to offer four rakaats for those salaats that are of four rakaats. If he is wearing leather socks, he can only make masah for twenty four hours and thereafter masah will not be permissible.
2. The person who sets out with the intention of travelling three manzils is regarded as a musafir in the Shariah. The moment he comes out of the boundaries of his town or city, he is a musafir according to the Shariah. As long as he moves around within the boundaries of his town or city, he will not be a musafir. If the railway station is within the boundaries of the town, it will fall under the rule of the town. If it is out of the boundaries, then upon reaching it, the person will be regarded as a musafir.
3. Three manzils means that most people who on foot, normally reach that place in three days. Presently, this is estimated at being approximately 77 kilometres.
4. If a place is so far that when it is calculated according to the pace of a man or camel it is three manzils, but when calculated according to a hand-driven cart or a horse and cart, one could reach there in two days. Or, if one travels by train, one would reach there in a short space of time - then in all these cases the person will still be regarded as a musafir.
5. If a person is termed a musafir according to the Shariah, he has to offer two rakaats each for the zuhr, asr and esha salaats. As for the sunnah salaats, the rule is that if he is in a hurry, then apart from the sunnah of fajr salaat, it will be permissible for him to leave them out completely. There will be no sin in leaving them out. If he is not in a hurry and does not fear his companions leaving him behind, he should not leave the sunnahs out and should offer them completely. It is not permissible to reduce the number of rakaats (for sunnah salaats).

6. There is no reduction in the fajr, maghrib and witr salaats as well. He has to offer them completely as he normally does.
7. More than two rakaats should not be offered for the fard of zuhr, asr and esha salaats. To offer four rakaats is a sin just as it is a sin to offer six rakaats for the fard of zuhr salaat.
8. If a person mistakenly offers four rakaats, and he had sat down after the second rakaat and recited the at-tahiyyaat, then the first two rakaats will be regarded as fard and the other two rakaats as nafl. He will also have to make sajdah-e-sahw. But if he did not sit after the second rakaat, all four rakaats will become nafl and he will have to repeat his fard salaat.
9. If a person stopped at a place during the course of his journey, he will remain a musafir if he made the intention of staying at that place for less than fifteen days. He will have to continue offering two rakaats for the four rakaat salaats. But if he made the intention of staying there for fifteen days or more, he will no longer be a musafir. Thereafter if he changes his intention and decides to leave before fifteen days, even then he will not become a musafir and will have to offer all his salaats completely. When he leaves that place, he will become a musafir only if that place where he intends to go to is at a distance of about 77 kilometres. If that place is less than 77 kilometres away, he will not be a musafir.
10. A person left home with the intention of travelling 77 kilometres, but before leaving he also made this intention that he will stop over at a particular place for 15 days. He will not be regarded as a musafir. He will have to offer complete salaat throughout his journey. If on reaching that place he did not stay there for 15 days, he will still not be a musafir.
11. A person intends travelling 77 kilometres but his house falls within this distance - even then he will not be a musafir.
12. A woman left with the intention of travelling approximately 92 kilometres. However, the first half of the journey passed while she was in her haid. Even then she will not be a musafir. She will have to have a bath and offer the full four rakaats. However, if she became pure from her haid and there is still a distance of 77 kilometres or more to cover, or, when she left home she was pure and got her haid in the course of the journey, then she will be a musafir and will have to offer her salaat as a musafir.
13. While offering his salaat, a person made the intention of staying for 15 days. He will no longer remain a musafir and will have to offer this very salaat completely.
14. A person stopped at a particular place for two or three days, but due to certain circumstances he does not leave that place. Every day he makes the intention of leaving the following day or the next day, but does not leave. In this way, he stays at that place for fifteen days, twenty days, a month or even more than that. But he never made the intention of staying there for fifteen days. He will remain a musafir irrespective of how many days he stays there.
15. A person left with the intention of travelling 77 kilometres but after travelling some distance, he changes his mind for some reason or the other and decides to return home. From the moment he makes the intention of returning, he will no longer be a musafir.
16. A woman is travelling with her husband. In the course of the journey, she will stop when he stops and will not stop for a longer period than that without him. In such a case, the intention of the husband will be taken into consideration. If the husband intends stopping at a place for 15 days, the wife will not be a musafir as well irrespective of whether she makes the intention of stopping or not. And if the husband intends staying for less than 15 days, she will also be a musafir.
17. A person travelled 77 kilometres and reached his home. He will not be a musafir irrespective of how long he stays there. If it is not his house and he made an intention of staying there for 15 days or more, then too he will not be a musafir. He will have to offer all his salaats completely. And if it is not his house nor does he intend staying there for 15 days, he will be a musafir even after reaching that place. He will have to offer two rakaats for all the four-rakaat fard salaats.
18. A person intends to stop over at several places during the course of his journey: 10 days here, 5 days there, 12 days at another place - but does not have the intention of stopping over anywhere for 15 days - he will still remain a musafir.
19. A person shifted from his home town and became a resident of another place and he has nothing to do with the first place. So now his former home town and any other place will be the same. If that former place of his falls on any journey of his and he intends staying there for a few days, he will remain a musafir. He will have to offer all his salaats as a musafir.
20. A person missed a few salaats of his while on a journey. Upon reaching home he will have to offer only two rakaats when making qada of zuhr, asr and esha salaats. If he misses any salaat such as zuhr before embarking on a journey, and makes qada of it while on his journey, he will have to offer the full four rakaats.
21. After her wedding, a woman began living solely with her in-laws. So now her actual home will be that of her in-laws. If she travels 77 kilometres and goes to her parents home and does not intend staying there for more than 15 days, she will be a musafir. She will have to offer her salaats and keep her fasts according to the rules laid down for a musafir. But if she did not intend staying with her in-laws forever, then that place which was her former home will still be regarded as her original home.
22. A ship is sailing and salaat time has entered. Salaat will have to be offered in that moving ship. If one feels dizzy by standing, one should sit and offer one's salaat.
23. The same rule applies to a moving train. That is, it is permissible to offer salaat in a moving train. If he feels dizzy by standing or fears that he will fall, he can sit and offer his salaat.
24. While offering salaat, the train turned and the direction of the qiblah also changed. The person will also have to turn in his salaat and face the qiblah.
25. If a woman wishes to travel 77 kilometres or more, then as long as she does not have a mahram from among the males or her husband, it will not be permissible for her to travel. It is a major sin to travel without a mahram. It is not good to even travel less than 77 kilometres without a mahram. Prohibition in regard to this has also been mentioned in the Hadith.
26. It is also not permissible to travel with that mahram who does not fear Allawh and His Rasul sallAllawhu alayhi wa sallam and does not conform to the Shariah.
27. A woman is travelling on a carriage or ox-wagon and salaat time enters. She should get off and offer her salaat in a secluded place. Similarly, if she cannot make her wudu on the carriage, she should get off and make her wudu in a concealed place. If she does not have her head-covering (burqah) with her, she should wrap herself properly with a sheet or something and then get off and offer her salaat. To make very strict purdah whereby she misses her salaat, is haraam. The ruling of the Shariah should be given preference to everything. Even in purdah, the limit which has been specified by the Shariah has to be maintained. To go beyond the limit of the Shariah and to transgress the laws of Allawh is a sign of stupidity and immaturity. However, to be unnecessarily negligent in the matter of purdah is also shameful and sinful.
28. If she is so sick that she has to sit and offer her salaat, even then it will not be permissible to offer salaat in a moving ox-wagon. If the ox-wagon is at a standstill, but it is resting on the shoulders of the oxen - even then it will not be permissible to offer salaat on it. The oxen will have to be removed and then salaat offered. The same rule applies to a carriage, i.e. as long as the horse is not separated from the carriage, salaat in it will not be permissible.
29. If a person is excused from standing and offering salaat, it is permissible for him to offer it sitting down even while he is in a carry couch or palanquin. But this will only be permissible if the carry couch or palanquin is placed on the ground. It will not be permissible to offer salaat if it is still resting on the shoulders of those carrying it.
30. If a person fears for his life or possessions by getting off a camel or ox, his salaat will be valid without getting off.
31. A person makes an intention of staying for 15 days at two different places, and the distance between the two places is such that the adhaan of one place cannot be heard at the other place. For example, he intends staying for 10 days in Makkah and 5 days in Mina which is approximately 5 kilometres from Makkah. In such a case he will be a musafir.

32. If in the above mentioned mas'ala he intends spending the night at one place and the day at the other place, then that place where he spends the night will be regarded as his watan-e-iqaamat. It will not be permissible for him to shorten his salaat over here. As for the place where he intends spending the day, if it is at a distance of 77 kilometres from the first place, then by going there he will be a musafir. If it is less than that distance, he will not be a musafir.
33. If in the above mentioned mas'ala, both places are so close that each others adhaan can be heard, then both places will be regarded as one place. He will become a muqeem in both places by intending to stay there for 15 days.
34. A muqeem can follow an imam who is a musafir under any condition, irrespective of whether it is a salaat for that time or for a qada salaat. When the musafir imam completes his salaat, the muqeem muqtadi should stand up and complete his salaat. He should not make any qira'at, instead, he should remain silent. This is because he is regarded as a laahiq. Since this muqtadi is following this imam, the first qa'dah will also be fard on him. Once the musafir imam makes his salaam, it is mustahab for him to inform his followers that he is a musafir. And even better than this is to inform them before commencing with the salaat.
35. A musafir can also follow an imam who is a muqeem as long as it is within the time of that salaat. If the time has expired, then he can follow him for the fajr and maghrib salaats and not for the zuhr, asr, and esha salaats. This is because if the musafir will follow a muqeem, he will also follow the imam and offer the full four rakaats. And the first qa'dah of the imam will not be fard while his will be fard. In this way, the person offering fard salaat will actually be following one who is not offering a fard salaat. And this is not permissible.
36. If a musafir decides to become a muqeem while he is in his salaat, he will have to offer it completely and it will not be permissible for him to shorten his salaat. This is irrespective of whether he makes this intention in the beginning, middle or at the end - as long as it is made before making sajdah-e-sahw or the salaam. If he made this intention after sajdah-e-sahw or the salaam, this salaat will not be offered completely. If he makes this intention after the expiry of the time or while he is a laahiq, this intention of his will have no effect on this salaat. And if this salaat is going to be a four rakaat salaat, he will have to shorten it. Examples: (1) A musafir commenced zuhr salaat. After offering one rakaat, the time for that salaat expired. Thereafter he made the intention of becoming a muqeem. This intention will not have any effect on his salaat and he will have to shorten his salaat. (2) A certain musafir was a muqtadi of another musafir and became a laahiq. He then began offering the rakaats which he had missed. He then made the intention of becoming a muqeem. This intention of his will have no effect on this salaat of his. If this salaat is a four rakaat salaat, he will have to shorten it and offer only two rakaats.

SALAATUL KUSOOF AND KHUSOOF

1. At the time of solar eclipse (kusoof) two rakaats of salaat are sunnah.
2. Salaatul kusoof has to be offered with jama'at on the condition that it is led by the imam of jumu'ah salaat, the ruler of that time or his deputy. According to one narration, it is permissible for the imam of every musjid to perform this salaat in his musjid.
3. There is no adhaan or iqaamah for salaatul kusoof. But in order to gather the people, this announcement can be made: "as-Salaatu jaami'atun" i.e. the salaat is about to commence with jama'at.
4. It is sunnah to recite lengthy Surahs such as Surah Baqarah in salaatul kusoof, and also to lengthen the ruku and sajdahs. The qira'at should be made silently.
5. After the salaat, the imam should occupy himself in dua and the muqtadis should continue saying aameen to his duas. This dua should continue until the eclipse disappears. However, if in this state, the sun sets or the time of a certain salaat enters, the dua should be stopped and the salaat should be offered.
6. Two rakaats of salaat are also sunnah at the time of lunar eclipse (khusoof). However, jama'at is not sunnah for this salaat. The people should offer this salaat at their homes individually. It is not preferable to go to the musjid.
7. In the same way, if some fear or calamity is experienced, it is preferable to offer salaat. For example: there is a severe hurricane, an earthquake, lightning, thunder storms, a lot of snow falls, very heavy rain falls, a certain disease such as cholera becomes rife or there is a fear of a certain enemy. However, whatever salaat that is offered in this time should not be offered with jama'at. Each person should offer his salaat at home individually. When Rasulullah sallAllawhu alayhi wa sallam experienced any difficulty or sorrow, he used to occupy himself in salaat.
8. Apart from these salaats that have been mentioned, the more optional salaats a person engages in, the more reward he will receive and he will reach higher stages. Especially salaats in those times for which certain virtue has been mentioned in the Hadith. And also in which Rasulullah sallAllawhu alayhi wa sallam has urged us to engage in some ibaadah or the other. For example, in the last ten nights of Ramadaan and the fifteenth of Sha'baan. Many virtues and a lot of reward has been mentioned in the Hadith for engaging in ibaadah in these days and nights. We have avoided going into details so that this chapter does not get too lengthy.

SALAATUL ISTISQAA'

When there is a need for water and there are no rains, then at such a time it is sunnah to make dua and ask Allawh Ta'ala for rains. The mustahab method of making dua for rains is as follows: all the Muslims should get together with their children, elderly people and animals, and walk towards the jungle in a very helpless and humble way, while at the same time wearing very simple clothing. They should renew their repentence, fulfil the rights of those upon whom certain rights are due, and should not bring along any kaafir friend of theirs. They should then offer two rakaats of salaat with jama'at without any adhaan or iqaamah. The imam should recite the salaat in a loud voice. He should then deliver two khutbahs just as they are delivered on Eid day. The imam should then stand up facing the qiblah and raise his hands and make dua to Allawh Ta'ala for rains. All those present should also make dua. This should be done for three consecutive days and not more than that because this has not been established in the Shariah. If the rains begin to fall before they can go out to the jungle, or after offering this salaat for one day - even then the three days should be completed. It is mustahab to fast on these three days. It is also mustahab to give something in charity before going.

SALAATUT TARAWEEH

1. It is preferable to offer the witr salaat after the taraweeh salaat. However, it is permissible to offer it before the taraweeh salaat.
2. After four rakaats of taraweeh, it is mustahab to sit down to the extent that it took to offer the four rakaats. However, if sitting for so long will inconvenience the people and there is a fear that the congregation will decrease, then they should sit for a shorter period. In sitting down, one has the choice of offering nafl salaat on his own, reading some tasbeehs, or if he wishes, he could remain sitting silently.
3. A person completes offering his taraweeh salaat after having offered the esha salaat. After completing both these salaats he realizes that something in his esha salaat occurred which made this salaat invalid. After repeating his esha salaat, he will also have to repeat the taraweeh salaat.
4. If the esha salaat was not offered with jama'at, the taraweeh salaat should also not be offered with jama'at. This is because the taraweeh salaat is subordinate to the esha salaat. However, if a group of people offer their esha with jama'at and thereafter offer their taraweeh with jama'at, then it will be permissible for a person who has not offered his esha with jama'at to join this group in their taraweeh salaat. This is so because he will be regarded as subordinate to these people whose jama'at is valid.
5. If a person enters the musjid at a time when the esha salaat is over, he should first offer his esha salaat and then join the taraweeh salaat. And if in the meanwhile he misses a few rakaats of taraweeh, he should complete them after offering the witr salaat. He should offer the witr salaat with the jama'at.
6. It is sunnah-e-mu'akkadah to recite the entire Quran in the order that it is arranged in the taraweeh salaat in the month of Ramadaan. This should not be left out due to the laziness and negligence of the people. However, if there is the fear that by reciting the entire Quran the people will stop coming for salaat, and there will be no jama'at left, or that this will be extremely unpleasant for them; then it will be better to recite as much as they can bear. If they wish they could recite the ten Surahs from Surah al-Feel till the end. In each rakaat one Surah should be recited. When ten rakaats are completed, the same ten Surahs should be recited in the next ten rakaats. Alternatively, one could recite any other Surah which one desires.
7. More than one Quran should not be recited until the desire of the people is not known.
8. It is permissible to recite the entire Quran in one night on condition that the people are extremely anxious to do this and it will not be difficult for them. If it will be difficult for them and they will be displeased with this, it will be makruh to recite the entire Quran in one night.

9. Bismillahir Rahmaanir Raheem should be recited loudly for any one Surah in the taraweeh salaat. This is because Bismillah is also a verse of the Quran even though it is not a part of any Surah. If Bismillah is not recited, one verse will be short for the completion of the Quran. If it is recited silently, the Quran of the muqtadis will not be complete.
10. It is sunnah to offer taraweeh salaat in the entire month of Ramadaan even if the Quran is completed before the end of the month. For example, if the entire Quran is completed in 15 days, it will be sunnah-e-mu'akkadah to continue offering taraweeh for the rest of the month.
11. Reciting Surah Ikhlaas three times in the taraweeh salaat as is the custom today, is makruh.

SALAATUL KHAUF

When the Muslims are confronted with an enemy, whether it is man or a wild animal, and in such a situation all the Muslims or even a part of them cannot get together and offer their salaat with jama'at, and they do not even get the opportunity of getting off the animals on which they are riding - then all of them should offer their salaat individually while sitting on their animals. In this case, even facing the qiblah is not a prerequisite. However, if two people are seated on one animal, they can offer their salaat with jama'at.
If they cannot even do this, they will be regarded as excused (ma'zur). They should not offer their salaat now. Once they are at ease and have peace of mind, they should make qada of their missed salaat. If it is possible for only a few of them to offer salaat with jama'at, in such a case they should not leave out the jama'at. In this case, salaat should be offered in the following way: all the Muslims should be divided into two groups. One group will remain fighting the enemy while the second group will commence it's salaat with the imam. If it is a three or four rakaat salaat, such as zuhr, asr, maghrib, esha, and these people are not musafirs, then once the imam completes two rakaats and stands up for the third rakaat, this first group should go away. If these people are musafirs, or it is a two rakaat salaat such as fajr, jumu'ah, eid, or the zuhr, asr and esha of a musafir; then this first group should go away after the first rakaat. The second group should come and join the imam for the balance of the salaat. The imam should wait for the arrival of this second group. Once the imam completes the balance of the salaat, he should make salaam and this second group should go to fight the enemy without making salaam. The first group should then return and complete it's salaat without making qira'at. They should then make salaam. This is because this first group is regarded as a laahiq. This group should then go to fight the enemy. The second group should return and complete its salaat with qira'at and then make salaam. This is so because this group is regarded as a masbuq.
1. When these groups go to confront the enemy in their state of salaat or return to complete their salaat, then this going and coming has to be done on foot. If this is done by mounting an animal, their salaat will become invalid. This is because it is regarded as amal-e-katheer, i.e. excessive movement (which invalidates salaat).
2. The second group's offering the balance of the salaat with the imam, the first group's returning and completing it's salaat, and thereafter the second group's returning and completing it's salaat - all this is mustahab and preferable. It is also permissible for the first group to offer it's salaat and go away. Thereafter, the second group comes and offers the remainder of the salaat with the imam and thereafter completes it's salaat on it's own. Only after completing it's salaat, it will go towards the enemy. When this second group reaches there, the first group will complete it's salaat over there and does not have to return to the place where it had offered the first half of it's salaat.
3. This method of offering salaat will only apply if all the people wish to offer their salaat behind one imam, e.g. a person is very pious and all the people wish to offer their salaat behind him. If this is not the case, it is preferable for one group to offer it's entire salaat behind one imam and thereafter to go to confront the enemy. Thereafter, the second group will appoint it's own imam and offer the entire salaat behind him.
4. If there is the fear that the enemy is very close and it will reach here very soon, and in thinking so they offered their salaat as mentioned in the beginning. Later they realized that this fear of theirs was unfounded. In such a case the salaat of the imam will be valid. The muqtadis will have to repeat their salaat. This is because this type of salaat has been stipulated at the time of extreme necessity. So much so that contrary to sound reasoning, even amal-e-katheer has been permitted. Without any extreme necessity, this sort of amal-e-katheer makes the salaat invalid.
5. If the fighting is a forbidden type of fighting, then to offer the salaat in this method is not permissible, e.g. a few renegades rise up against the ruler of the Islamic state or someone fights with another person for a forbidden worldly reason. For such people this amal-e-katheer will not be permitted.
6. If they commenced their salaat without facing the qiblah, and in the meanwhile the enemy flees, they should immediately turn towards the qiblah. If not, the salaat will not be valid.
7. If they commenced their salaat while facing the qiblah, and in this state the enemy arrives, it will be permissible to immediately turn towards the enemy. In this case, facing the qiblah will no longer be a prerequisite.
8. If a person is swimming in the sea and the time of salaat is about to expire, then if it is possible, he should stop moving his hands and legs for a little while and offer his salaat with ishaarah.

SALAATUL ISTIKHAARAH

1.When a person intends doing something, he should seek advice from Allawh Ta'ala. This seeking of advice is called istikhaarah (asking for proper guidance from Allawh Ta'ala). This has been greatly recommended in the Hadith. Rasulullah sallAllawhu alayhi wa sallam said: "Not seeking advice and proper guidance from Allawh Ta'ala is a great misfortune and cause of bad luck." If a person intends sending a proposal somewhere, marrying someone, travelling somewhere or intends doing anything else, and he does not do these things without making istikhaarah, then Insha Allawh he will not regret doing what he did.
2. The method of offering istikhaarah salaat is as follows: first two rakaats of nafl salaat should be offered. Thereafter, the following dua should be made with full concentration:
!!!!!!!!!!!!!!!!!!!!!!!!!!!!
when he reaches the underlined words, he should think of the thing for which he is making istikhaarah. Thereafter, he should sleep on a pure and clean bed with his face towards the qiblah in a state of wudu. Once he wakes up from his sleep, then whatever comes out strongly in his mind will be best for him. He should act according to that which comes to his mind.
3. If he has not made up his mind after the first day, and some doubt still persists, he should do the same the following day. In this way, he could continue doing this for seven days. Insha Allawh, he will come to know of the advantage or disadvantage of that matter.
4. If a person intends going for hajj, he should not make istikhaarah as to whether he should go or not. Instead, he should make istikhaarah to decide as to whether he should go on a particular day or not.

SALAATUT TAUBAH

If a person does something contrary to the Shariah, he should offer two rakaats of nafl salaat and thereafter repent to Allawh Ta'ala with full devotion and humility. He should also express his regret for committing that sin. He should seek forgiveness from Allawh Ta'ala and make a firm intention that he will not commit that sin in the future. Through the virtue and bounty of Allawh Ta'ala, that sin will be forgiven.

TAHIYYATUL MUSJID

1. This salaat is sunnah for the one who enters the musjid.
2. The purpose of this salaat is to show respect to the musjid which in reality is respect to Allawh Ta'ala. This is because showing respect to a place only comes after taking the owner of that place into consideration. So in doing this, showing respect to anyone or anything other than Allawh Ta'ala is not intended. After entering the musjid and before sitting down, two rakaats should be offered. This is on condition that it is not at any makruh time.
3. If it is at a makruh time, the following dua should be read four times:
!!!!!!!!!!!!!!!!!!!!!!!!!!!!!!!!
Thereafter, durood should be recited.
The intention for this salaat is as follows:

!!!!!!!!!!!!!!!!!!!!!!!!!!!!!!
Translation: "I intend offering two rakaats of tahiyyatul musjid."
4. It is not necessary to offer two rakaats. There is no harm in offering four rakaats as well. If a person offers a fard or sunnah salaat immediately after entering the musjid, then that fard or sunnah salaat will take the place of tahiyyatul musjid. That is, he will receive the reward of tahiyyatul musjid even if he did not make the intention for tahiyyatul musjid.
5. A person enters the musjid and sits down. Thereafter he offers tahiyyatul musjid, there is no harm in this. However, it is preferable to offer this salaat before sitting down. Hadith: Rasulullah sallAllawhu alayhi wa sallam said: "When anyone of you enters the musjid he should not sit down until he offers two rakaats salaat."
6. If a person happens to enter the musjid several times, it will be sufficient for him to offer tahiyyatul musjid once only. He could either offer it at the beginning or at the end.

NAFL SALAAT BEFORE EMBARKING ON A JOURNEY

1. When a person intends leaving his home in order to undertake a journey, it is mustahab for him to offer two rakaats of nafl salaat before leaving home. When he returns from his journey, it is mustahab for him to go to the musjid first. He should offer two rakaats of nafl salaat in the musjid and then go to his house.
Hadith: Rasulullah sallAllawhu alayhi wa sallam said: "A person does not leave behind at home anything better than the two rakaats which he offers before embarking on a journey." It is related in another Hadith that when Rasulullah sallAllawhu alayhi wa sallam used to return from a journey, he used to go to the musjid first and offer two rakaats of nafl salaat.
2. It is also mustahab for a musafir to offer two rakaats of nafl salaat when he intends staying over at any place during the course of his journey. These two rakaats should be offered before he can sit down.

SALAATUL-QATL

When a Muslim is about to be killed, it is mustahab for him to offer two rakaats of salaat and make dua to Allawh Ta'ala and ask Him to forgive him his sins. This is so that this salaat and dua of his will be his last act in this world.
Hadith: Once Rasulullah sallAllawhu alayhi wa sallam had sent a few qaaris from among his companions to a certain place in order to teach the Quran. During the course of the journey, the kuffaar of Makkah captured them. Apart from Hadrat Khubayb radiAllawhu anhu, they killed all the other companions at that very spot. They took Hadrat Khubayb radiAllawhu anhu to Makkah in a great procession and they martyred him with great pomp and ceremony. When he was about to be martyred, he asked them for permission and offered two rakaats of salaat. Since then, this salaat became mustahab.

SALAATUT TASBEEH

1. Great virtue has been mentioned for salaatut tasbeeh in the Hadith. One is rewarded abundantly on offering this salaat. Rasulullah sallAllawhu alayhi wa sallam had taught this salaat to his uncle, Hadrat Abbas radiAllawhu anhu, and said to him that by offering this salaat, all your future, past, minor and major sins will be forgiven. He also said to him that if it is possible, he should try to offer this salaat daily. If it cannot be offered daily, then once a week, if not, then once a month, if not, then once a year. And if even this is not possible, then at least once in a lifetime. The method of offering this salaat is as follows: intention should be made for four rakaats of salaat. After reciting the thanaa', Surah Faatihah and another Surah, the person should recite the following dua fifteen times before going into ruku:
!!!!!!!!!!!!!!!!!!!

6. If all of them are outside with the imam on one side and the muqtadis around the Ka'bah from all sides, as it occurs today, this will be permissible. However, the condition for this is that no one else should be closer to the Ka'bah than the imam on the side where he is standing. This is because in this case he will be regarded as being ahead of the imam, and this makes following an imam invalid. However, if the muqtadis at the other sides are closer to the Ka'bah than the imam, there is no harm in this. It can be understood through the following illustration:

a,b,c,d is the ka'bah. e is the imam who is standing 2m away from the ka'bah. f and g are the muqtadis who are standing 1m away from the ka'bah. However f is standing on the same side as e who is the imam and g is standing on the opposite side. The salaat of f will not be valid while that of g will be valid.

BOOK VII

THE VIRTUES OF SAWLAH IN CONGREGATION

1. Offering salaat with jama'at is wajib according to some ulama, and sunnat-e-mu'akkadah according to others. This will be discussed in more detail, Insha Allawh.
2. To offer salaat with jama'at means that at least two people must get together and offer their salaat in such a way that one person leads the salaat and the other person follows him. The person who leads the salaat is called the imam, and the person who follows him is called the muqtadi.
3. If even one person joins the imam, jama'at becomes valid. This is irrespective of whether the person is a man, woman, slave, free person, mature person or a child who has reached the age of understanding. However, for the jumu'ah and eid salaats, there has to be at least three persons apart from the imam.
4. In order for the jama'at to be valid, it is not necessary for the salaat to be a fard salaat. Even if it is a nafl salaat and two people get together and offer it with jama'at, it will be valid. This is irrespective of whether both the imam and the muqtadi are offering nafl salaat, or only the muqtadi is offering nafl salaat and the imam is offering fard salaat. However, it is makruh to make a habit of offering nafl salaat with jama'at or for more than three people to offer nafl salaat with jama'at.

The Virtues and Importance of Jama'at

So many Sahih Ahadeeth have been narrated with regards to the virtues and importance of jama'at that if all of them had to be collected at one place, a large voluminous book would get filled. After examining all these Ahadeeth, one aspect is very apparent, i.e. jama'at is a very important prerequisite for the perfection of salaat. Rasulullah sallAllawhu alayhi wa sallam never ever discarded jama'at. So much so that when he fell ill and did not have the strength to walk on his own, he came to the musjid with the assistance of two people and offered his salaat with jama'at. He used to become extremely angry on the person who did not offer his salaat with jama'at and desired to mete out severe punishment on the abandoning of jama'at. Without doubt, very great importance has been attached to offering salaat with jama'at in the Shariah of Muhammad sallAllawhu alayhi wa sallam. And it ought to have been like this. The high status of salaat demanded that whatever was going to complement it should also be given full importance.

We will now quote a verse which some commentators and jurists have used as a proof on the establishment of jama'at. Thereafter, we shall quote a few Ahadeeth. The verse reads as follows:

Translation: "And bow down (in prayer) with those who bow down." (i.e. with jama'at).

There is an explicit order to offer salaat with jama'at in this verse. But because a few commentators have taken "bow down" (ruku) to mean "humility" (khudu), therefore the fardiyyat (compulsion) of salaat with jama'at cannot be established (from this verse).

Ahadeeth on the Virtues and Importance of Jama'at

1. Ibn Umar radiAllawhu anhu narrates from Rasulullah sallAllawhu alayhi wa sallam on the virtue of offering salaat with jama'at as being 27 times more rewarding than offering it alone.
2. Rasulullah sallAllawhu alayhi wa sallam said: "It is better to offer salaat with another person than to offer it alone. And it is even better to offer it with two people. And the bigger the jama'at, the more beloved it is in the sight of Allawh."
3. Anas bin Maalik radiAllawhu anhu narrates that the Banu Salimah who used to live quite far from the Musjid un-Nabawi decided to shift from their original place and come and settle down somewhere near Rasulullah sallAllawhu alayhi wa sallam. On hearing about this, Rasulullah sallAllawhu alayhi wa sallam asked them saying: "What! Don't you regard your footsteps which touch the ground as being worthy of reward?" From this we can deduce that the further one lives from the musjid, and still comes walking to it, the more reward he will receive.
4. Rasulullah sallAllawhu alayhi wa sallam said: "Whatever time that is spent waiting for salaat will be regarded as though the person was actually in salaat."
5. One night Rasulullah sallAllawhu alayhi wa sallam addressed those companions of his who were present for the esha jama'at saying: "People are offering their salaat and going away to sleep, while whatever time you are spending in waiting for salaat is being calculated as if you are already in salaat."
6. Buraydah Aslami radiAllawhu anhu narrates that once Rasulullah sallAllawhu alayhi wa sallam said: "Glad tidings to those who go to the musjids in the dark of the night in order to attend the jama'at, that they will be bestowed with full light on the day of resurrection."
7. Uthmaan radiAllawhu anhu narrates that Rasulullah sallAllawhu alayhi wa sallam said: "The person who offers esha salaat with jama'at will get the reward of spending half the night in ibaadah. And the one who offers the esha and fajr salaats with jama'at will get the reward of spending the whole night in ibaadah."
8. Abu Hurayrah radiAllawhu anhu reports that once Rasulullah sallAllawhu alayhi wa sallam said: "It crossed my mind that I order someone to gather some firewood, thereafter the adhaan be called out and I order someone to perform the salaat while I go to the houses of those people who do not attend the jama'at and I set fire to their houses."
9. Another narration reads as follows: "Were it not for the little children and women, I would have occupied myself with the esha salaat and ordered the servants to go to the houses and set them alight together with them and their possessions." (Muslim)

The wisdom behind mentioning esha salaat is that it is the time for sleeping and generally most of the people are at home at that time. After quoting this Hadith, Imam Tirmidhi rahmatullahi alayh says that a similar Hadith has been narrated by Ibn Mas'ud, Abu Darda, Ibn Abbas, and Jaabir radiAllawhu anhum. All these people were among the respected companions of Rasulullah sallAllawhu alayhi wa sallam.

10. Abu Darda radiAllawhu anhu reports that Rasulullah sallAllawhu alayhi wa sallam said: "Even if there are only three persons in a particular locality or jungle and they do not offer salaat with jama'at, then shaytaan will most certainly overpower them. O Abu Darda! Regard jama'at as being incumbent upon you. Remember, the wolves attack that sheep which has strayed away from the main flock."
11. Ibn Abbas radiAllawhu anhu narrates that Rasulullah sallAllawhu alayhi wa sallam said: "The person who hears the adhaan and still does not attend the jama'at without any valid excuse, then the salaat which he offers alone is not accepted." The Sahabah asked as to what that excuse was, upon which Rasulullah sallAllawhu alayhi wa sallam replied that it was fear or sickness. In this Hadith fear and sickness have not been explained. In other Ahadeeth some explanation of fear and sickness has been given.
12. Mihjan radiAllawhu anhu narrates: "Once I was with Rasulullah sallAllawhu alayhi wa sallam when we heard the adhaan. Rasulullah sallallhu alayhi wa sallam commenced with his salaat while I went and sat down in my place. After completing his salaat, Rasulullah sallAllawhu alayhi wa sallam asked me: "O Mihjan! Why didn't you offer your salaat with jama'at? Are you not a Muslim?" I replied saying: "O Rasulullah sallAllawhu alayhi wa sallam! I am indeed a Muslim, but I had already offered my salaat at home." Rasulullah sallAllawhu alayhi wa sallam said: "When you come to the musjid and see that the jama'at has commenced, join the people and offer your salaat even if you have already offered your salaat."

Ponder over this Hadith and see how Rasulullah sallAllawhu alayhi wa sallam reprimanded his selected companion, Mihjan radiAllawhu anhu, and asked him: "Are you not a Muslim?"

Sayings of the Sahabah on the Virtues and Importance of Jama'at

A few Ahadeeth have been mentioned to serve as an example. We will now mention the sayings of the companions of Rasulullah sallAllawhu alayhi wa sallam in order to illustrate the importance they attached to the offering of salaat with jama'at, and how they regarded the abandoning of jama'at. Why should they not regard it like this? Who can be more cautious in obeying and seeking the pleasure of Rasulullah sallAllawhu alayhi wa sallam than them?

1. Aswad says that once he was in the company of Hadrat A'ishah radiAllawhu anha when the discussion turned towards the virtues and importance of salaat. In order to substantiate what she was saying, she quoted an incident from the marad ul-maut (the last sickness before death) of Rasulullah sallAllawhu alayhi wa sallam. One day, the time of salaat entered and the adhaan was called out. Rasulullah sallAllawhu alayhi wa sallam said that Abu Bakr radiAllawhu anhu should be told to perform the salaat. I said to him that Abu Bakr is a very soft-hearted person. When he stands to perform the salaat in your place, he will become incapable and will not be able to perform the salaat. However, Rasulullah sallAllawhu alayhi wa sallam repeated the same command, so I gave him the same reply. Upon this, Rasulullah sallAllawhu alayhi wa sallam said: "You are saying the same things which the women of Egypt used to say to Hadrat Yusuf alayhis salaam. Tell Abu Bakr that he should perform the salaat." Anyway, Abu Bakr went out to perform the salaat. In the meantime, Rasulullah sallAllawhu alayhi wa sallam felt some relief from his sickness, so he went towards the musjid with the assistance of two people. I can still picture the scene when Rasulullah sallAllawhu alayhi wa sallam was going with his feet dragging on the floor. That is, he did not even have the strength to lift his feet. Abu Bakr had already commenced performing the salaat and wanted to move back. But Rasulullah sallAllawhu alayhi wa sallam stopped him and made him perform the salaat.

2. Once Hadrat Umar radiAllawhu anhu noticed that Sulayman bin Abi Haythama was not present for the fajr salaat. So he went to his house and asked his mother as to why he did not see Sulayman for fajr today. She replied that he had been offering salaat throughout the night and fell asleep at the time of fajr. Upon hearing this, Hadrat Umar radiAllawhu anhu replied: "I prefer offering fajr salaat with jama'at than spending the entire night in ibaadah. (Muwatta Imam Malik) Shaikh Abdul Haqq Muhaddith Dehlawi rahmatullahi alayhi has written that it is clear from this Hadith that there is more reward in offering fajr salaat with jama'at than tahajjud salaat. It is for this reason that the ulama have written that if spending the night in ibaadah will cause some harm or shortcoming in the fajr salaat, it will be preferable to leave out spending the night in ibaadah. (Ash'atul Lama'aat)

3. Hadrat Ibn Mas'ud radiAllawhu anhu says: "We witnessed ourselves - the Sahabah - that none would leave out offering salaat with jama'at except an open hypocrite or that person who is sick. But even the sick used to come for jama'at with the assistance of two people. Without doubt, Rasulullah sallAllawhu alayhi wa sallam showed us the different paths of guidance. And among them is the offering of salaat in those musjids where the adhaan is called out, i.e. where salaat is offered with jama'at. Another advice that he gave us is that whoever wishes to meet Allawh Ta'ala on the day of resurrection as a Muslim should make a duty of offering his five times salaat regularly in those places where adhaan is called out, i.e. in those places where salaat is offered with jama'at. Without doubt, Allawh Ta'ala has shown the different paths of guidance to your prophet. And this salaat is also among these paths. If you offer your salaat in your homes, as is the habit of the hypocrites, you will most certainly be missing out on the Sunnah of your prophet. And if you leave out the Sunnah of your prophet, you will most certainly be led astray. When a person makes a complete wudu and leaves his home for the musjid, then for every step that he takes he gets one reward, his rank is elevated, and one sin is forgiven. We have noticed that no one except the hypocrite stays away from the jama'at. Our state was such that when we used to fall ill, we used to be taken to attend the jama'at with the assistance of two people and made to stand in the saff" (line in which every one stands to offer salaat).

4. Once a person walked out of the musjid without offering his salaat after the adhaan had been called out. Upon this, Hadrat Abu Hurayrah radiAllawhu anhu said: "This person has disobeyed Abul Qaasim (Muhammad) sallAllawhu alayhi wa sallam and disregarded his noble order." (Sahih Muslim) Just ponder over what Hadrat Abu Hurayrah radiAllawhu anhu said in regard to the person who abandoned the jama'at. After hearing this, can any Muslim still have the audacity of leaving the jama'at without any valid excuse? Can any believing person bear disobeying Hadrat Abul Qasim (Muhammad) sallAllawhu alayhi wa sallam?

5. Hadrat Umme Darda radiAllawhu anha says: "Once Hadrat Abu Darda radiAllawhu anhu came to me in an extremely angry state. So I asked him: 'Why are you so angry today?' He replied: "I swear by Allawh that I do not see anything wrong in the ummah of Muhammad sallAllawhu alayhi wa sallam except that they should offer their salaat with jama'at.' In other words, they have even started leaving this out."

6. Many companions of Rasulullah sallAllawhu alayhi wa sallam report that he said: "The person who hears the adhaan and yet does not attend the jama'at, his salaat will not be accepted." After quoting this Hadith, Imam Tirmidhi says that some ulama have stated that this ruling is for emphasis. The purpose of this is that it is not permissible to leave out the jama'at without any valid excuse.

7. Once, Mujahid said to Ibn Abbas radiAllawhu anhu: "What do you have to say in regard to that person who fasts the entire day and offers salaat throughout the night but does not attend jumu'ah nor the jama'at?" He replied: "He will enter hell." (Tirmidhi) In explaining this Hadith, Imam Tirmidhi says that this rule will apply if a person leaves out jumu'ah and jama'at out of total disregard for them. But if we regard the entry into hell for a few days, then the above explanation will not be necessary.

8. It was the practice of our pious predecessors that if anyone did not come for the jama'at, they used to boycott him for seven days. (Ihya ul-Uloom)

Opinions of the Ulama with regard to the Importance of Jama'at

We have quoted a few sayings of the Sahabah, which in reality portray the words of Rasulullah sallAllawhu alayhi wa sallam. Now let us look at the ulama and mujtahideen and see what they have to say in regard to jama'at and how they understood these Ahadeeth.

1. The Zaahiriyyah and a few followers of Imam Ahmad bin Hanbal rahmatullahi alayh say that jama'at is a prerequisite in order for the salaat to be valid. Without jama'at, the salaat is not valid.

2. The correct opinion of Imam Ahmad is that jama'at is fard-e-ayn even though it is not a prerequisite for salaat. This is also the opinion of a few followers of Imam Shafi'i rahmatullahi alayh.

3. Some of the followers of Imam Shafi'i are of the opinion that jama'at is fard-e-kifaayah. This is also the opinion of Imam Tahaawi rahamatullahi alayhi, a high ranking jurist and muhaddith of the Hanafis.

4. Most of the Hanafi scholars are of the opinion that jama'at is wajib. Ibn Humaam, Halabi, the author of Bahrur Raa'iq, and others are also of this opinion.

5. Some Hanafi scholars say that jama'at is sunnat-e-mu'akkadah but it falls under wajib. So, in reality, there is no contradiction between these two opinions of the Hanafis.

6. Our jurists have written that if the people of a city abandon jama'at and do not establish this noble institution even after instructing them to do so, it will be permissible to wage war against them.

7. It is written in Quniyah and other books that it is wajib on the imam of the time to punish the person who leaves out jama'at without any valid excuse, and that his neighbour will be sinful if he does not reprimand him on this action of his.

8. If a person delays his going to the musjid until the commencement of the iqaamah, he will be committing a sin. This is so because if he is going to go to the musjid only after hearing the iqaamah, there is the danger of him missing a few rakaats if not the entire salaat. It has been reported from Imam Muhammad rahamutAllawhi alayh that it is permissible to rush to the musjid in order to get the jumu'ah salaat and the jama'at. This is on condition that he will not be overburdened.

9. The one who leaves out the jama'at is most certainly committing a sin and his testimony (in an Islamic court) will not be accepted. This is on condition that he left it out without any valid excuse, and due to sheer laziness.

10. If a person is fully occupied in learning or teaching matters of the Deen and does not attend the jama'at, this will not be regarded as a valid excuse and his testimony (in an Islamic court) will not be accepted.

The Benefits and Wisdom of Jama'at

The ulama have written considerably on this subject. But as far as I know, there isn't a more comprehensive and eloquent article than that which has been written by Hadrat Maulana Shah Wali Ullah rahmatullahi alayh. Although it would have been preferable for me to quote his article word for word, for the sake of brevity, I will merely give a summary of what he has written.

1. There is nothing more beneficial or profitable than making a particular form of ibaadah into a second nature to the extent that that ibaadah becomes a necessity and it becomes impossible to leave it just as it is almost impossible to give up a particular habit. And there is no form of ibaadah greater than salaat which could be accorded such importance.
2. In matters of religion, we find all sorts of people - the learned as well as the ignorant. There is therefore great wisdom in this that everyone gets together and fulfils this ibaadah in the presence of each other. If someone makes a particular mistake, another person is there to correct him. It is as if this ibaadah of Allawh Ta'ala is a jewel and all the inspectors are examining it: if there is any defect in it, they point it out, and if there is any merit or excellence in it, they appreciate it. So this is an excellent means for the perfection of salaat.
3. The position of those who do not offer their salaat will also come into the open. In this way, one has the opportunity of advising them.
4. The gathering of a few Muslims who render an ibaadah to Allawh Ta'ala and beseech Him has a special effect for the descending of mercy and acceptance in the sight of Allawh.
5. The aim and object of Allawh Ta'ala with regards to this ummah is that the kalimah must supercede everything and that kufr must be subdued, and that no religion must be able to overpower Islam. This can only be possible if certain steps are adopted whereby all the Muslims - the masses, the learned, the travellers, the inhabitants of places, the young, and the old - get together for a particular ibaadah which is great and famous, thereby exhibiting the grandeur and power of Islam. Because of all these merits and qualities, the entire attention of the Shariah directed itself towards the jama'at, encouraged it, and laid down strict prohibitions on discarding it.
6. Another benefit of the jama'at is that all the Muslims will be fully aware of each others conditions and circumstances, and will be able to share each others difficulties and problems. In this way, religious brotherhood and love which is based on Imaan will be fully exhibited and consolidated. This is one of the great objects of the Shariah and its significance and virtue has been mentioned repeatedly in the Quran and Hadith. It is indeed sad that the discarding of jama'at has become a norm in our times. Let alone the ignorant masses, many learned people are also caught in this evil web. It is extremely sad that these people read the Ahadeeth and even understand their meanings, but the importance of jama'at does not have any effect on their hearts which are harder than stone. What answer will these people give when they will stand in front of Allawh Ta'ala and all the appeals with regards to salaat will be presented before everything else, and investigations will commence with those who discarded salaat entirely or partly?

Conditions which make Jama'at Wajib

1. To be a male - jama'at is not wajib on women.
2. To be mature - jama'at is not wajib on children who have not reached the age of puberty.
3. To be a free person - jama'at is not wajib on a slave.
4. One must be in one's senses - jama'at is not wajib on a person who is intoxicated, unconscious, or a lunatic.
5. To be free from all excuses - in the presence of these excuses, jama'at is not wajib. However, it will be better if he offers his salaat with jama'at despite having an excuse. If he does not offer with jama'at, he will be deprived of the reward. The excuses for leaving out jama'at are fourteen:

a) The absence of sufficient clothing with which one could cover one's aurah (private area).
b) An abundance of mud on the road leading to the musjid which would make walking extremely difficult.. Once Imam Abu Yusuf rahmatullahi alayh asked Imam Abu Hanifah rahmatullahi alayh on his view regarding attending jama'at if there is a lot of mud, etc. on the road. He replied that he does not like the idea of abandoning the jama'at.
c) At the time of a heavy downpour. Imam Muhammad rahmatullahi alayh has written in his Muwatta that although it is permissible not to attend the jama'at in such a case, it will be preferable to go and offer the salaat with jama'at.
d) When it is extremely cold and one fears that by going out towards the musjid, one will fall ill or that the sickness will worsen.
e) There is a fear of his wealth and possessions getting stolen by going to the musjid.
f) There is a fear of meeting an enemy by going to the musjid.
g) By going to the musjid there is a fear of meeting his creditor and he fears some harm from him. This is on the condition that he is unable to fulfil his debt. If he is able to fulfil his debt, he will be regarded as an oppressor and it will not be permissible for him to discard the jama'at.
h) The night is very dark and the road cannot be seen. However, if Allawh Ta'ala has blessed him with those things with which he could see the road, he should not leave out the jama'at.
i) It is the time of night and there is a very severe sand-storm.
j) He is taking care of a sick person and fears that if he goes for the jama'at, some harm may befall the sick person or that he might feel uneasy.
k) The food has been prepared or is on the verge of being prepared and he is so hungry that he fears that he will not be able to concentrate in his salaat.
l) He has an urgent need to go and relieve himself.
m) He intends to embark on a journey and fears that if he goes to offer his salaat with jama'at, he will get delayed and that the caravan will leave him. Travelling by train can also be based on this mas'ala with the exception that when one caravan departs, the following one leaves after many days. While several trains depart in one day - if a person misses one train he can always take the next one. However, if there is an urgency, then there will be no harm in taking the first train. Urgency or any other valid reason is excusable in our Shariah.
n) He is afflicted with such a sickness whereby he cannot walk, or he is blind, crippled or one of his legs have been amputated. However, the blind person who can walk to the musjid without any difficulty should not leave out the jama'at.

Prerequisites for the Validity of Jama'at

1. Islam - the jama'at of a kaafir is not valid.
2. To be in one's senses - the jama'at of an intoxicated, unconscious or lunatic person is not valid.
3. In addition to making the intention of salaat, the muqtadi must also make the intention of following the imam. In other words, he must have this intention in his heart that he is offering a particular salaat behind this imam. The masaa'il related to intention have already been mentioned.
4. The place of the imam and the muqtadi must be the same. This is irrespective of whether being in one place is in reality, such as offering salaat together in one musjid or in one house; or in principle. For example, the imam stands on one end of a bridge over a river and the muqtadis stand behind him with the saffs reaching the opposite end going beyond the bridge. Although there is a river intervening between the muqtadis of the opposite end and the imam, resulting in the place not being the same in reality, but because the saffs inbetween are continuous, therefore their (the imam's and the muqtadis of the opposite end) places will therefor be regarded as the same in principle and the jama'at will be valid.

Masaa'il related to number 4:

a) If the muqtadi is standing on the roof of the musjid and the imam is standing inside the musjid, this will be permissible. This is because the roof of the musjid is considered to be part of the musjid and both places will be regarded as one. Similarly, if someone's roof is attached to the musjid and there is no barrier between the two, then that place will also be regarded as being part of the musjid. It will be permissible to stand on that roof and follow the imam who is in that musjid.
b) If a musjid or house is extremely large or one is in a jungle and there is such an open space between the imam and muqtadi wherein two saffs could stand - then both these places, i.e. where the imam is and where the muqtadi is standing, will be regarded as two separate places and it will not be permissible to follow the imam.
c) Similarly, if there is a river between the imam and the muqtadi and it is so large that a ship can sail on it, or there is such a large pond which the Shariah has ruled as being pure (in other words, the pond measures approximately ten square feet), or there is a public road on which an ox-wagon could pass - and there are no saffs in between, then these places will not be regarded as one and it will not be permissible to follow the imam.

d) Similarly, if there is such a river or such a road between two saffs, it will not be permissible for that saff which is on the other side to follow the imam.
e) It is not permissible for the one who is on foot to follow the person who is mounted. Nor is it permissible for a mounted person to follow another mounted person. This is so because both their places are not the same. However, if both of them are mounted on one animal, jama'at will be permissible.
5. The salaat of the imam and the muqtadi must be the same. If the salaat of the muqtadi is different from the salaat of the imam, it will not be permissible for him to follow the imam. For example, the imam is performing zuhr salaat and the muqtadi makes intention for asr salaat. Alternatively, the imam is performing qada for the zuhr of yesterday and the muqtadi makes intention for the zuhr of today. However, it will be permissible if both make the intention of qada for the zuhr of yesterday or both make the intention of qada for the zuhr of today. If the imam is performing a fard salaat and the muqtadi makes intention for nafl salaat, his following the imam will be valid because the salaat of the imam is "stronger". If the muqtadi wishes to offer taraweeh salaat and the imam is offering nafl salaat, it will not be permissible to follow him because the imam's salaat is "weaker".
6. The salaat of the imam has to be valid. If the salaat of the imam becomes invalid, the salaat of all the muqtadis will also become invalid. This is irrespective of whether the invalidity becomes known while in salaat or after the completion of the salaat. An example of this is that there was najaasat-e-ghaleezah on the imam's clothing which was in excess of a fifty-cent coin and he came to know of this after completing his salaat or while he was in salaat. Another example is that the imam did not have wudu and he only realized this after completing his salaat or while he was in salaat.
If the salaat of the imam becomes invalid due to some reason and the muqtadis do not come to know of this, it is necessary on the imam that as far as possible he should inform the muqtadis so that they could repeat their salaat. This is irrespective of whether he informs them by sending a message to them or by writing letters to them.
7. The muqtadi should not stand in front of the imam. He could stand in line with the imam or behind him. If the muqtadi stands in front of the imam, his following the imam will not be correct. Standing in front of the imam will be considered when the heels of the muqtadi are ahead of the heels of the imam. If the heels are not ahead, but the toes are ahead due to the muqtadi's feet being bigger or his toes being longer, then this will not be regarded as being in front of the imam. In this case, his following the imam will be correct.
8. The muqtadi must have a knowledge of the movements of the imam. Movements such as the bowing, standing, prostrating and sitting postures. This knowledge could either be based on looking at the imam, listening to his voice, the voice of a mukabbir (person who conveys the takbirs of the imam when the congregation is generally very large and there is no mike system) or by looking at another muqtadi. If the muqtadi does not have knowledge of the movements of the imam, either because of a barrier between them or for some other reason, then his following the imam will not be correct. However, if there is a barrier such as a curtain or wall, but the muqtadi has knowledge of the movements of the imam, then following the imam will be correct.
If it is not known as to whether the imam is a musafir or not, but due to certain indications the muqtadi feels that he is not a musafir - on condition that he is in the city or town and he offers his salaat as a musafir, i.e. if it is a four rakaat salaat, he makes salaam after two rakaats, and the muqtadi suspects that this salaam of the imam is for sahw - then in this case, this muqtadi must complete his four rakaats and thereafter it will be wajib on him to find out about the state of the imam as to whether he made salaam because of sahw or because he was a musafir. If after finding out, he learnt that he was a musafir, his salaat will be valid. But if it was for sahw, the muqtadi will have to repeat his salaat. If the muqtadi did not make any inquiries but offered his salaat in that doubt and went away, then even in this case he will have to repeat his salaat.
If the muqtadi feels that the imam is not a musafir, and he is not performing his salaat in the city or town but out of it, and he performs the four rakaat salaat as a musafir - and the muqtadi suspects that the imam made salaam for sahw, then even in this case he should offer his full four rakaats and it will be better for him to inquire about the state of the imam. If he does not make any inquiries, his salaat will not become invalid. This is because the fact that the imam is outside the city or town shows that he is obviously a musafir. As for the muqtadi's suspicion that he made salaam for sahw, this is not something that is obvious or apparent. Therefore, in this case it will not be necessary to make any inquiries.
Similarly, if the imam performs a four rakaat salaat in the city, town or in any jungle, etc. and the muqtadi suspects that he is a musafir - but the imam performs the full four rakaats, it will not be wajib on the muqtadi to make any inquiries. As for the fajr and maghrib salaats, under no circumstances will it be necessary to inquire as to whether the imam is a musafir or not. This is because the musafir and the muqeem are equal for these two salaats.
To put it briefly, it will only be necessary to make inquiries in one instance. That is, when the imam is in the city, town or some other place, and performs only two rakaats for a four rakaat salaat and the muqtadi suspects that he made salaam for sahw.
9. The muqtadi has to be with the imam in all the postures except the qira'at. This is irrespective of whether he carries them out with the imam, after the imam or before the imam - as long as the imam is with him till the end of that posture. Example of the first instance: he makes ruku, sajdah, etc. with the imam. Example of the second instance: the imam makes ruku and stands up. Thereafter the muqtadi makes ruku. Example of the third instance: he goes into ruku before the imam, but stays for so long in ruku that he even gets the ruku of the imam.
If the muqtadi is not with the imam in any particular posture, for example, the imam makes ruku and the muqtadi does not make, or the imam makes two sajdahs and the muqtadi only makes one, or he goes into a particular posture before the imam and does not get the imam till the end of that posture - for example, he goes into ruku before the imam and stands up before the imam can even go into ruku - then in all these cases, his following the imam will not be valid.
10. The state of the muqtadi must be inferior or equal to that of the imam. Examples are as follows:
a) The one who is able to stand can follow the person who is unable to stand and offer his salaat. In the Shariah, the sitting of one who is excused is equal to standing.
b) The one who has made wudu or ghusl can follow the one who has made tayammum irrespective of whether this tayammum was made for wudu or for ghusl. This is because the rule concerning tayammum, wudu, and ghusl is equal in tahaarat. One is not inferior or superior to the other.
c) The one who has washed his limbs can follow the one who has made masah irrespective of whether he made masah on his leather socks or on his bandage. This is because the one who washes and the one who makes masah are equal in purity. No one is higher than the other.
d) The one who is a ma'zur can follow another person who is also a ma'zur on the condition that both are ma'zur for the same reason. For example, both have the sickness of continuous dripping of urine or both have the sickness of continuous passing of wind.
e) An ummi can follow another person who is also an ummi on condition that there is no one who is a qari among the muqtadis.
f) Women and immature children can follow an imam who is mature and a male.
g) A woman can offer salaat behind another woman.
h) An immature male or immature female can follow an immature male.
i) A person who offers a nafl salaat can read behind one who is offering a wajib salaat. For example, a person has already offered his zuhr salaat and he goes and follows another person who is offering his zuhr salaat. Or, for example, a person has already offered his eid salaat and he goes and joins the jama'at again.
j) It is permissible for a person offering nafl salaat to follow another person who is also offering a nafl salaat.
k) A person who is offering a salaat of qasm (oath) can also follow one who is offering a nafl salaat. This is because the salaat of qasm is also regarded as a nafl salaat. For example, a person takes an oath that he will offer two rakaats of salaat and thereafter he goes and offers two rakaats of salaat behind a person who is offering a nafl salaat. His salaat will be valid and he would have fulfilled his oath.
l) It is permissible for the person who is offering the salaat of nazr (vow) to follow another person who is also offering the salaat of nazr on condition that the nazr of both is the same. For example, a person made a nazr and another person says that he is making the same nazr that the other person made. But if this is not the case and one person made a separate nazr for two rakaats for example, and the other person made some other nazr, then none of them can follow the other.
In brief, if the muqtadi is "inferior" or equal to the imam, his following the imam will be valid. We will now mention those instances when the muqtadi is "superior" to the imam, either with certainty or on the possibility that he is "superior" - whereby his following the imam will not be valid.

a) It is not permissible to follow an immature person irrespective of whether the person following is a male or a female.
b) It is not permissible to follow a female irrespective of whether the person following is a mature or immature male.
c) A hermaphrodite cannot offer salaat behind another hermaphrodite. A hermaphrodite is one in whom the male and female characteristics are so conflicting that it is difficult to say with certainty whether he is a man or a woman. This type of creation is very rare and infrequent.
d) A woman who does not remember the period of her haid cannot follow another woman who is like her. In both these instances, there is the possibility that the muqtadi is "superior" to the imam. It will therefore not be permissible to follow them. In the first instance, it is possible that the imam who is a hermaphrodite could be a female; and the hermaphrodite who is the muqtadi could be a male. Similarly, in the second case, it is possible that the woman who is the imam is in her period of haid while the one who is the muqtadi could be in her period of purity.
e) A hermaphrodite cannot follow a woman because there is a possibility of the hermaphrodite being a man.
f) A person who is conscious and in his senses cannot follow the person who is a lunatic, intoxicated, unconscious or mentally deranged.
f) A person who is taahir cannot follow one who is a ma'zur, eg. the person who has the sickness of continuous dripping of urine, etc.
g) A person who is ma'zur on account of one sickness cannot follow the one who is ma'zur on account of two sicknesses. For example, a person who passes wind continuously cannot follow the person who passes wind continuously and who also has the sickness of continuous dripping of urine.
h) A person who is ma'zur because of a particular type of sickness cannot follow the one who is ma'zur because of another type of sickness. For example, a person who has the sickness of continuous dripping of urine cannot follow one who has the sickness of continuous bleeding of the nose.
i) A qari cannot follow an ummi. In this context, a qari refers to that person who can read a certain amount from the Quran whereby salaat will be regarded as valid, and an ummi is one who cannot even do this.
j) It is not permissible for an ummi to follow another person who is also an ummi while there is another muqtadi who is a qari. This is because the salaat of the ummi imam will become invalid, since it was possible to make that qari the imam and his recitation would have been sufficient for all the muqtadis. But now that the ummi imam's salaat has become invalid, all the other muqtadis salaat will also become invalid and among them was that ummi muqtadi as well.
k) It is not permissible for an ummi to follow a person who is dumb. This is because although the ummi cannot recite, he can still get the opportunity to learn while the dumb person does not have the power to even do this.
l) A person who has covered the necessary portions of his body cannot follow one who is naked.
m) A person who is able to go into ruku and sajdah cannot follow one who cannot execute these postures. It is also not permissible to follow one who cannot go into sajdah only.
n) It is not permissible for the one who is offering a fard salaat to follow the person who is offering a nafl salaat.
o) A person who is offering a salaat of nazr cannot follow the person who is offering a nafl salaat. This is because the nazr salaat is wajib.
p) A person who is offering a salaat of nazr cannot follow the person who is offering a salaat of qasm. For example, if a person takes a qasm that he will offer four rakaats of salaat today and another person had made a nazr for four rakaats. If the person who made the nazr follows this person, his salaat will not be valid because the salaat of nazr is wajib while that of qasm is nafl. This is because it is not wajib to fulfil the qasm. It is also possible for him to give kaffarah and not offer the salaat.
q) A person who can pronounce the letters clearly and correctly cannot follow the person who cannot pronounce the letters clearly. For example, he pronounces the "seen" as "thaa" or the "raa" as "ghayn" or any other similar mispronunciation. However, if he mispronounces one or two words in the entire recitation, it will be permissible to follow him.
11. The imam must not be a munfarid as a compulsion (wajibul infiraad). In other words, it is not permissible to follow a person who has to be a munfarid at that particular time. For example, the person who misses one or two rakaats of the congregation has to stand up and complete the rakaats which he missed. It is necessary for him to do this alone. So if another person goes and follows this person, his following him will not be valid.
12. The imam must not be a muqtadi of another person. In other words, a person who is a muqtadi himself should not be made an imam. This is irrespective of whether he is a muqtadi in reality, such as a mudrik; or he is a muqtadi in principle, such as a laahiq. The laahiq is regarded as a muqtadi in those rakaats which he did not offer with the imam. Therefore, if anyone follows a mudrik or laahiq, his following will not be permissible. Similarly, it will not be permissible for a masbuq to follow a laahiq or vice versa.
If any of these twelve conditions are not found in a muqtadi, then his following will not be permissible. And when the muqtadi's following is not valid, then the salaat in which he followed someone will also not be valid.

The Rules of Jama'at

1. Jama'at is a prerequisite for the salaats of jumu'ah and the two eids. In other words, these salaats are not valid when offered alone.
2. Jama'at is wajib for the five daily salaats as long as there is no valid excuse. It is sunnat-e-mu'akkadah for the taraweeh salaat even if one complete Quran has already been recited with jama'at. It is also sunnat-e-mu'akkadah for salaat-e-kusuf. It is mustahab for the witr salaat in Ramadaan. Apart from Ramadaan, witr salaat with jama'at is makruh-e-tanzihi at any other time. This is if it is offered regularly. If it is not offered regularly and occasionally a few persons get together and offer it with jama'at, then it will not be makruh. If salaat-e-kusuf and all the other nafl salaats are offered with the importance that is given to the jama'at of the fard salaats, i.e. by giving adhaan, iqaamah or by gathering the people through any other way - then it will be makruh-e-tahrimi. However, if a few people get together and offer a nafl salaat in jama'at without giving adhaan or iqaamah and without calling the people, then there will be no harm in this. But even then, this should not be done regularly.
3. In the same way, it is also makruh-e-tahrimi to make a second jama'at for the fard salaats with these four conditions:
i) The musjid is a mahalli musjid and it is not on the main road. A mahalli musjid is a musjid in which the imam and musallis are appointed.
ii) The first jama'at was offered with a loud adhaan and iqaamah.
iii) The first jama'at was offered by those people who stay in that residential area and who have some influence over the day to day affairs of that musjid.
iv) The second jama'at is offered in the same position and with the same care and attention as the first jama'at was offered.
This fourth condition is according to Imam Abu Yusuf rahmatullahi alayh. According to Imam Abu Hanifah rahmatullahi alayh, it will remain makruh even if the position was changed.
If the second jama'at is not offered in the musjid but in a house, it will not be makruh. Similarly, if any of these four conditions are not found, it will not be makruh. For example, if the musjid is on the main road and not a mahalli musjid, as has been explained above, then not only a second jama'at, but even a third or fourth jama'at will not be makruh. Or, if the first jama'at was not offered after saying the adhaan and iqaamah with a loud voice, the second jama'at will not be makruh. Or, if the first jama'at was not offered by those who live in that residential area, nor do they have any influence over the day to day affairs of that musjid, then the second jama'at will not be makruh. Or, according to Imam Abu Yusuf rahamatullahi alayh, if the position of the second jama'at was not the same as the first jama'at whereby that place where the imam of the first jama'at had stood, the imam of the second jama'at moved away from that place and performed the salaat on another spot, then the position will be regarded as being changed, and according to Imam Abu Yusuf rahmatullahi alayh, the jama'at will not be makruh. Note: Although the practice of the people is on the opinion of Imam Abu Yusuf rahamatullahi alayh, the opinion of Imam Abu Hanifah rahmatullahi alayh is also based on a strong proof. The laxity and laziness in Deeni matters, especially in regards to the jama'at, also demands that a fatwa be passed making the second jama'at makruh even after changing the position of the second jama'at. If this is not done, people will intentionally miss out the first jama'at and say that they can always make a second jama'at.

Masa'il Connected to the Imam and Muqtadi

1. It is the duty of the muqtadis to choose the person who possesses the best characteristics from among all those who are present and to appoint him as the imam. If there are several people who are worthy of imaamat and they are all equal, then they should act according to the decision of the majority. That is, they should choose the person whom the majority of the people prefer. If they choose someone who is less capable despite there being a person who is more capable, they will be guilty of abandoning the sunnah.
2. The person who is most worthy of imaamat is that person who has a thorough knowledge of the masa'il of salaat as long as he does not have any outward characteristics of fisq (immorality), he knows the specified number of verses for recitation, and recites the Quran correctly. After him, the person who recites the Quran according to the rules that have been laid down. Thereafter, the person who is the most pious. Thereafter, the person who is the most senior in age. Thereafter, the person who is most courteous. Thereafter, the person who is the most handsome. Thereafter, the person who is the most noble. Thereafer, the person who has the best voice. Thereafter, the person who is the most well-dressed. Thereafer, the person who has the largest head as long as it is in proportion to his body. Thereafter, preference is given to the muqeem over the musafir. Thereafter, the person who was born as a free person. Thereafter, the person who made tayammum for hadath-e-asghar is given preference over the person who made tayammum for hadath-e-akbar. But according to some, the person who made tayammum for hadath-e-akbar is given preference.
The person in whom two qualities are found is given preference over the person in whom only one quality is found. For example, the person who knows the masa'il of salaat and also recites the Quran correctly has preference over the person who only knows the masa'il of salaat and cannot read the Quran correctly.
3. If jama'at is made in a house, the person whose house it is has more right of imaamat over the others. Thereafter, the person whom he appoints as an imam. However, if the owner of the house is a jaahil, and the other persons have knowledge of the masa'il, they will have the right of imaamat.
4. If there is an imam who is appointed in a particular musjid, then in his presence no one else has the right of imaamat. However, if he appoints anyone else as the imam, there will be no harm in this.
5. In the presence of the Qadi, i.e. the ruler of the Islamic state, no one else has the right of imaamat.
6. It is makruh-e-tahrimi to make imaamat without the happiness of the people. However, if that person is the most qualified person for imaamat, i.e. no one else has the qualities of imaamat as he possesses, then it will not be makruh for him. Instead, whoever is unhappy with his imaamat will be in the wrong.
7. It is makruh-e-tahrimi to appoint a faasiq or a bid'atee as an imam. However, if (Allawh forbid) there is no one else apart from these people, then it will not be makruh. In the same way, if the bid'atee or the faasiq is a powerful person and they are unable to remove him, or there is a fear of great discord or dissension, even then it will not be makruh on the muqtadis.
8. It is makruh-e-tanzihi to appoint the following persons as an imam: (a) a slave who is regarded as a slave in Islamic jurisprudence and not the one who is bought at the time of a famine,etc. even if he has been freed, (b) a villager, (c) a blind person who is not conscious of the laws of purity and impurity, (d) a person who cannot see well at night, (e) a waladuz zina, i.e. a person who was born out of an illicit relationship. However, if all these persons are possessors of knowledge and virtue, and people do not mind appointing them as imams, then it will not be makruh. It is also makruh-e-tanzihi to appoint a handsome youth whose beard has not appeared as yet, and also a person who has no intellect.
9. It is wajib on all the muqtadis to be in conformity with the imam in all the fara'id and wajibaat of salaat. However, it is not wajib to be in conformity with him in the sunnats. Based on this, if the imam is a follower of the Shafi'i school of thought and he raises his hands at the time of going into ruku and coming up from ruku, then it is not necessary for the Hanafee muqtadis to raise their hands. This is because the raising of the hands is sunnah even according to them. Similarly, if the Shafi'i imam reads the qunut in the fajr salaat, it is not necessary for the Hanafee muqtadis to do the same. However, since qunut is wajib in witr salaat, and the Shafi'i imam will read it after standing up from ruku, the Hanafee muqtadis should also read it after the ruku.
10. It is makruh-e-tahrimi for the imam to recite very long Surahs which are more than the recommended amount, or to stay for very long periods in the ruku and sajdah postures. Instead, the imam should take into consideration the need, necessities, and weakness of the muqtadis. He should make his qira'ah after taking into consideration the condition of the person who is the weakest of all of them. In fact, if there is a great urgency, it will be preferable for him to make his recitation even shorter than the recommended amount. This is so that people do not find any difficulty which could be a cause for a decrease in the jama'at.
11. If there is only one muqtadi who is a male or an immature boy, he should stand in line with or slightly behind the imam to the right of the imam. It is makruh to stand on the left hand side of the imam (or directly behind him - in this case).
12. If there is more than one muqtadi, they should stand behind the imam. If there are two muqtadis, it would be makruh-e-tanzihi for them to stand on either side of the imam. And if there are more than two muqtadis, it would be makruh-e-tahrimi to do so. This is because when there are more than two muqtadis, it is wajib for the imam to stand in front.
13. At the time of commencing the jama'at there was only one muqtadi and he stood to the right of the imam. Thereafter, more muqtadis joined the jama'at. The first muqtadi should step back so that all the muqtadis could get together and stand behind the imam. If he does not move back, the other muqtadis should pull him back. But if the muqtadis unintentionally stand to the right and left of the imam and do not pull the first muqtadi back, then in this case the imam should step forward so that all the muqtadis could get together and stand behind him. Similarly, if there is no place to move backwards, it will be the duty of the imam to step forward. But if the muqtadi is unaware of the masa'il, as is generally the case today, then it will not be advisable to move him because it is possible that he may do something which may break his salaat.
14. If the muqtadi is a woman or an immature girl, she should stand behind the imam irrespective of whether there is only one woman or several women.
15. If there are different types of muqtadis, i.e. a few men, a few women and a few children, then it is the duty of the imam to arrange their saffs in the following order: firstly he should arrange the saffs of the men, thereafter the saffs of the immature boys, thereafter the saffs of the women, and lastly the saffs of the immature girls.
16. It is the duty of the imam to straighten the saffs. That is, he should stop the people from standing unevenly, and he should order them to stand straight. They should stand next to each other and should not leave any gaps within the saff itself.
17. It is makruh for a person to stand alone in a saff. Instead, in such a case, he should pull a person back who is standing in the saff in front of him and make him stand in line with him. But if there is the possibility that the person will disrupt his salaat or take this unkindly, then he should not do this.
18. It is makruh to stand in a new saff if there is place in the first saff. Once the saff is complete, then only should one stand in a new saff.
19. It is makruh-e-tahrimi for a man to make imamat of women in a place where there is no other man or where there is no mahram female such as his wife, mother, sister, etc. If there is another man or mahram female, it will not be makruh.
20. A person is offering the fard of fajr, maghrib or esha salaat alone and he is offering his salaat silently. If a person joins him and follows him while he is in this salaat, then there are two alternatives in this: (i) this person makes this intention in his heart that he is now becoming the imam so that his salaat may be offered with jama'at, (ii) he does not make this intention but continues thinking to himself that although this person has come and stood behind me, I am still offering my salaat alone. In the first case, the moment he makes his intention, it will be wajib for him to start reciting in a loud voice. If he had already recited a part of Surah Faatihah or any other Surah silently, he should start reciting them aloud the moment he makes his intention. This is because it is wajib on the imam to make the qira'at in a loud voice for the fajr, maghrib and esha salaats. As for the second case, it is not wajib to make the qira'at in a loud voice and even the salaat of that muqtadi will remain valid. This is because it is not necessary for the imam to make an intention of imamat in order for the salaat to be valid.
21. If the imam or the munfarid is offering his salaat at home or in an open field, it is mustahab for him to place an object which is equal to one arm or more in length and equal to one finger or more in thickness in front of him either on his right or left side. This object is called a sutra. However, if he is offering his salaat in a musjid or in a place where people will not pass in front of him, then there is no need to do this. The sutra of the imam will suffice for all the muqtadis. Once the sutra has been placed, there is no sin in walking beyond the sutra. But if someone walks within the sutra, he will be committing a sin.

22. A laahiq is that muqtadi who misses a few or all his rakaats after having joined the jama'at, irrespective of whether he has an excuse or not. Example where he has an excuse: he falls asleep in his salaat and thereby misses a few rakaats, or he is unable to make ruku and sajdah because of the large number of people, or his wudu breaks and while he is gone to make his wudu he misses a few rakaats. (In salaatul khauf, the first group is regarded as the laahiq. Similarly, the muqeem who follows an imam who is a musafir and who is making qasr, is regarded as a laahiq after the completion of the salaat of the imam). Example where he has no excuse: he goes into ruku or sajdah before the imam and even comes up before him, on account of which his rakaat is not considered to be valid. With regard to that rakaat, he will be regarded as a laahiq. It is wajib on the laahiq to complete the rakaats which he had missed first. After completing them, he should join the jama'at if it is still in progress, if not, he should offer the balance of his salaat as well.
23. The laahiq will also be regarded as a muqtadi for the rakaats which he had missed. That is, just as a muqtadi does not make qira'at but merely stands silently, the laahiq will also do this. And just as the muqtadi does not make sajdah-e-sahw when he makes any mistake, so is the case with the laahiq.
24. The masbuq, i.e. the one who has missed a few rakaats, should join the imam and offer whatever is left of his salaat with the jama'at. Once the imam completes his salaat, the masbuq should stand up and complete the rakaats which he had missed.
25. The masbuq has to offer his missed rakaats as a munfarid with qira'at. And if he makes any mistake in these rakaats, it is also necessary for him to make sajdah-e-sahw.
26. The masbuq should offer his missed rakaats in the following order: he should first offer those rakaats in which there is qira'at and then those which have no qira'at. As for the rakaats which he has offered with the imam, he should sit for them accordingly. That is, after counting the rakaats, he should make his first qa'dah after the one that is second. He should make his last qa'dah after his third rakaat if the salaat is a three rakaat salaat (such as maghrib). Examples: a person joined the jama'at for zuhr salaat when three rakaats had already been completed. When the imam makes salaam at the end of the salaat, this person should stand up and offer the three rakaats which he missed in the following manner: in the first rakaat he should recite Surah Faatihah, another Surah, make his ruku and sajdahs and then sit down for his first qa'dah. He has to sit down because this rakaat is regarded as his second rakaat after combining it with the rakaat that he had offered with the imam. Thereafter, he should offer his second rakaat and recite Surah Faatihah and another Surah in it as well. After this second rakaat he should not sit down because this rakaat is regarded as his third rakaat after joining it to the previous two. Thereafter, he should offer his third rakaat without reciting another Surah after having recited Surah Faatihah because this rakaat was not a rakaat of qira'at. After this rakaat, he should sit down because this is his last qa'dah.
27. A person is a laahiq and a masbuq as well. Example, he joined the jama'at after a few rakaats and after joining in, he also misses some rakaats. He should first offer those rakaats which he missed after joining, i.e. in which he was a laahiq. However, he should offer these as if he is following the imam, i.e. he should not make qira'at and he should offer his salaat in the same order as that of the imam. Thereafter, if the jama'at is still in progress, he should join it. If not, he should also offer the balance of his salaat after having read those rakaats in which he was a masbuq. Example: a person joined the asr salaat after one rakaat. Upon joining the jama'at, his wudu broke so he went to repeat his wudu. In the meantime, the salaat ended. He should first offer those three rakaats which he missed out after having joined the jama'at. Thereafter, he should offer the one rakaat which he had missed before joining the jama'at. He should offer those three rakaats as a muqtadi, i.e. he should not make qira'at and he should sit down after the first of those three rakaats. This is because this is the second rakaat of the imam and he (imam) had sat in this rakaat. Thereafter, he should not sit in the second rakaat because this is actually the third rakaat of the imam. Thereafter, he should sit down in the third rakaat because this is actually the fourth rakaat of the imam and he had sat in this rakaat. Thereafter, he should offer that rakaat which he had missed before joining the jama'at, and he should also sit in this rakaat because it is his fourth rakaat. He also has to make qira'at in this rakaat because he is a masbuq in this rakaat and a masbuq is regarded as a munfarid in the rakaats which he missed.
28. It is sunnah for the muqtadis to follow the imam in all the postures without any delay. The takbeer-e-tahreemah, ruku, standing after ruku, sajdahs - all have to be carried out with the imam. In other words, every act has to be carried out simultaneously with every act of the imam. However, if the imam stands up from the first qa'dah before the muqtadis could complete their at-tahiyyaat, the muqtadis should complete their at-tahiyyaat first and then stand up. Similarly, if the imam makes salaam in the last qa'dah before the muqtadis could complete their at-tahiyyaat, they should complete their at-tahiyyaat first and then make salaam. However, if the muqtadis have not read their tasbeehs in the ruku and sajdahs, they should still stand up with the imam.

Masa'il Related to Joining and Not Joining the Jama'at

1. If a person reaches the musjid of his area or the musjid nearest to his home at a time when the jama'at is over, then it is mustahab for him to go to another musjid with the intention of getting the jama'at over there. He also has the choice of returning home, getting his house-folk together and making jama'at with them.
2. If a person has already offered his fard salaat alone at home and then sees that the same fard salaat is being offered with jama'at, he should go and join that jama'at. This is on condition that it is the time of zuhr or esha. He should not join the jama'at if it is the time of fajr, asr or maghrib. This is because it is makruh to offer nafl salaat after fajr and asr salaat. And as for maghrib salaat, it is makruh because it will be considered to be a nafl salaat and we do not get a nafl salaat of three rakaats.
3. If a person has already commenced with offering his fard salaat and the jama'at also commences with the same fard salaat, then the following rules will apply: if that fard salaat is a two rakaat salaat, such as fajr salaat, then the rule is that he should break his salaat and join the jama'at if he has not made the sajdah for the first rakaat as yet. If he has made the sajdah for the first rakaat and has not made the sajdah for the second rakaat as yet, he should still break his salaat and join the jama'at. And if he has already made the sajdahs for the second rakaat, he should complete both the rakaats. If it is a three rakaat salaat, such as maghrib salaat, then the rule is that if he has not made the sajdah for the second rakaat as yet, he should break his salaat. If he has already made the sajdah for the second rakaat, he should complete his salaat and should not join the jama'at because it is not permissible to offer a nafl salaat of three rakaats.
If it is a four rakaat salaat, such as zuhr, asr, and esha, then the rule is that if he has not made the sajdah for the first rakaat, he should break his salaat. If he has made the sajdah, he should sit down after the second rakaat, read the at-tahiyyaat, make salaam, and join the jama'at. And if he has commenced with his third rakaat, but has not made the sajdah for it as yet, he should break his salaat. If he has made the sajdah, he should complete his salaat.
In those instances where he completed his salaat, he should not join the jama'at if it is a fajr, asr or maghrib salaat. For zuhr and esha salaats he should join the jama'at. In those instances where he has to break the salaat, he should make one salaam while standing.
4. If a person has already commenced with a nafl salaat and the jama'at commences, he should not break his salaat. Instead, he should make salaam after the second rakaat even if he has made an intention for four rakaats.
5. If a person has already commenced with the sunnat-e-mu'akkadah of zuhr or jumu'ah, and the jama'at commences, then the zaahir-e-madh'hab is that he should make salaam after two rakaats and join the jama'at. But the majority of the jurists feel that it is better to complete the four rakaats. And if he has already commenced with the third rakaat, then it is necessary to complete the full four rakaats.
6. If the jama'at for fard salaat has already commenced, a person should not commence with any sunnah salaat provided that he fears that he will miss a rakaat. However, if he is certain or confident of not missing any rakaat, then he should offer the sunnah salaat. For example, the fard salaat of zuhr commences and he fears that if he had to occupy himself with the sunnah salaat he would miss a rakaat of the fard salaat. He should therefore leave out the sunnah-e-mu'akkadah before the fard salaat. After offering the fard of zuhr and jumu'ah, it will be better for him to offer the sunnah-e-mu'akkadah that is normally offered after these two salaats first, and then to offer those that are normally read before these two salaats.
As for the sunnahs of fajr salaat, since they are more important, the rule in regard to them is that even if the fard salaat has commenced, he should offer the sunnah salaat first. This is on condition that he has the hope of getting at least one rakaat of the fard salaat. But if he has no hope of getting at least one rakaat, he should not offer the sunnah salaat. If he wishes, he could offer it after sunrise.
7. A person offering the sunnah of fajr salaat fears that if he had to offer this salaat with full consideration of all the sunnahs and mustahabs of salaat, he will not get the jama'at, he should suffice with the fard and wajib acts of salaat and leave out the sunnahs and mustahabs.

8. The sunnah salaats that are being offered while the fard salaat is in progress should be offered at a place that is separate from the musjid (main jama'at area) irrespective of whether they are the sunnahs of fajr or of any other salaat,. This is because it is makruh-e-tahrimi to offer any other salaat at the place where a fard salaat is being offered. If there is no such place, it should be offered in the musjid but in some corner away from the saff.
9. If a person gets the last qa'dah of the jama'at and does not get any of the rakaats, he will still receive the reward of the jama'at.
10. If a person gets the ruku of any of the rakaats with the imam, it will be regarded as if he got that rakaat. And if he does not get that ruku, it will be regarded as though he did not get that rakaat.

Acts which Invalidate Salaat

1. To give luqmah to anyone other than the imam while one is in salaat makes that salaat invalid. To give luqmah means to correct someone who has made a mistake in reciting the Quran. Note: Since there is a difference of opinion among the jurists with regard to the masa'il of luqmah, some ulama have written special books on this subject. We are therefore mentioning a few details over here.
2. If the muqtadi gives a luqmah to his imam, his salaat will not become invalid. This is irrespective of whether the imam has recited the specified amount or not. The "specified amount" in this context refers to that amount of qira'at which is the recommended amount. But in this case, it will be better for the imam to go into ruku, as will be mentioned in the next mas'ala.
3. If the imam has recited the specified amount, he should go into ruku and should not force the muqtadis to give him luqmah. (To do so is makruh) The muqtadis should also note that as long as there is no genuine need, they should not give luqmah to the imam. (To do so is also makruh) Here "genuine need" means that the imam wishes to continue forward despite making a mistake, or that he does not go into ruku, or that he keeps silent and remains standing. Even if they correct him without any "genuine need", the salaat will not become invalid - as has been mentioned in the previous mas'alas.
4. If a person gives luqmah to another person who is in salaat and the person who gave the luqmah was not his muqtadi - irrespective of whether he was offering any salaat or not - then if the person accepts the luqmah then his salaat will become invalid. However, if the person remembers on his own, either at the same time when the luqmah was given or prior to that, or he was not influenced by the luqmah from the back, but reads from his memory, then the salaat of the one to whom luqmah was given will not become invalid.
5. If a person who is offering salaat gives luqmah to someone who is not his imam, irrespective of whether the latter is offering salaat or not, then the former's salaat will become invalid.
6. If the muqtadi gives luqmah to the imam by hearing the recitation of someone else or by looking into the Quran, his salaat will become invalid. And if the imam accepts this luqmah, his salaat will also become invalid. If after looking into the Quran or by hearing the recitation of someone else, the muqtadi remembers the verse and gives the luqmah based on his memory, then the salaat will not become invalid.
7. Similarly, if a person is offering his salaat and recites one verse after looking into the Quran, his salaat will still become invalid. And if he had known this verse before looking into the Quran, his salaat will not become invalid. Alternatively, he did not remember this verse previously, but looked at less than the complete verse, then too his salaat will not become invalid.
8. If a woman stands near a man in such a way that any part of her body comes in line with any part of the body of the man, then the salaat will become invalid. So much so that when she goes into sajdah and her head comes in line with his feet, even then the salaat will become invalid. However, for the salaat to become invalid, the following conditions have to be found:

i) The woman is mature (irrespective of whether she is young or old), or she is immature but old enough for sexual intercourse. If a very young immature girl is in line with a man in salaat, the salaat will not become invalid.
ii) Both, man and woman, have to be in salaat. If any one of them is not in salaat and they come in line, the salaat will not become invalid.
iii) There must be no barrier between the two. If there is a curtain between the two, a sutra, or there is such a gap between the two that one person can stand there without any difficulty, the salaat will not become invalid.
iv) All the prerequisites for the salaat to be valid have to be found in the woman. If a woman is a lunatic, in the state of menstruation or nifaas, then her coming in line with the man will not make the salaat invalid because she herself will not be considered to be in salaat.
v) The salaat must not be a janaazah salaat. Being in line with a man in janaazah salaat will not invalidate the salaat.
vi) Being in line has to be to the extent of one rukn of salaat. If it is any less, the salaat will not become invalid. For example, they stand in line for such a short period of time that the ruku or anything else cannot be made, and thereafter she goes away. This little while will not invalidate the salaat.
vii) The takbeer-e-tahreemah of both is the same. That is, this woman is a muqtadi of that man, or this man and woman are the muqtadis of a third person.
viii) At the time of commencing the salaat, the imam had made the intention of imamat for the woman or made this intention in the midst of his salaat when she joined the jama'at. If the imam did not make an intention of imamat for her, the salaat will not become invalid. Instead, only her salaat will not be valid.

9. If the imam's wudu breaks and he leaves the musjid without appointing anyone as his deputy, the salaat of all the muqtadis will become invalid.
10. The imam appointed such a person as his deputy who does not possess the requirements to be an imam. For example, he appointed a lunatic, an immature child or a woman. In this case, everyone's salaat will become invalid.
11. If a woman kisses her husband while he is in salaat then his salaat will not become invalid. However, if at the time of being kissed, the man is overtaken by passion, then his salaat will become invalid. If a woman is in her salaat and a man kisses her, then her salaat will become invalid irrespective of whether he kissed her with desire or not, and irrespective of whether she was overcome by passion or not.
12. If a person tries to pass in front of a musalli, it is permissible for the musalli to push him aside or to stop him from this act. This is on condition that this act of stopping him does not involve a lot of movement. If it involves a lot of movement, his salaat will become invalid.

BOOK IIX

THE SAWLAH OF FRIDAY AND 'EID

JUMU'AH SALAAT

Allawh Ta'ala does not like anything more than salaat. It is for this reason that we do not find such great emphasis for any other form of ibaadah in the pure Shariah. It is for this reason that Allawh Ta'ala has specified this ibaadah five times daily as a form of gratitude for His endless bounties. These bounties which commence from birth right until death - in fact they continue after death and commence even before birth.

Since Friday has been accorded the most amount of merits as opposed to other days, so much so that the father of all mankind Hadrat Aadam alayhis salaam was created on this day, a special salaat was therefore ordered for this day. We have already mentioned the benefits and wisdom of jama'at. It has also been made clear that the bigger the jama'at the more those benefits will become apparent. This will only be possible if the people of all the different areas and the residents of that place get together and offer their salaat collectively. This would have been extremely difficult if it were to be done five times daily. Because of all this, the Shariah has specified such a day in the week in which the people of all the different residential areas and villages can get together and fulfil this ibaadah. Since jumu'ah is the most virtuous and noble of days, this ibaadah has been specified for this day. Allawh Ta'ala had also specified this day as a day of ibaadah for the previous nations. But because of their bad-luck, they disputed and differed with regards to it. The result of this dispute was that they were deprived of this great bounty and this ummah has been favoured with this bounty. The Jews set aside Saturday on the basis that Allawh Ta'ala had completed creating the entire creation on this day. The Christians set aside Sunday thinking that this is the day when Allawh Ta'ala commenced with the creation. Because of this, both these groups make numerous arrangements on both these days - leaving all work on these days and spending it in worship. It is because of this that all the offices are closed on Sundays in Christian countries.

The Virtues of Jumu'ah

1. Rasulullah sallAllawhu alayhi wa sallam said: "Friday is the best of days. It was on this day that Hadrat Aadam alayhis salaam was created, it was on this day that he was granted entry into jannah, it was on this day that he was removed from jannah (which became the cause for man's existence in this universe, and which is a great blessing), and the day of resurrection will also take place on this day." (Sahih Muslim)
2. It is related from Imam Ahmad rahmatullahi alayh that he said that in certain aspects the rank of the night of jumu'ah is even higher than Laylatul Qadr. One of the reasons for this is that it was on this night that Rasulullah sallAllawhu alayhi wa sallam appeared in the womb of his mother. Rasulullah's sallAllawhu alayhi wa sallam appearance in this world was a cause of so much good and blessings both in this world and in the hereafter that they cannot be enumerated. (Ash'atul Lama'aat)
3. Rasulullah sallAllawhu alayhi wa sallam said: "There is such an hour on Friday that if any Muslim makes dua in it, his dua will definitely be accepted." (Bukhari, Muslim) The ulama have differed in specifying that hour which has been mentioned in the Hadith. Shaykh Abdul Haq Muhaddith Dehlawi rahmatullahi alayh has mentioned 40 different opinions in his book Sharh Sifrus Sa'aadah. However, from among all these opinions he has given preference to two opinions: (1) That time is from the commencement of the khutbah till the end of the salaat, (2) That time is towards the end of the day. A big group of ulama have given preference to this second opinion and there are many Ahadeeth which support this opinion. Shaykh Dehlawi rahmatullahi alayh says that this narration is correct that Hadrat Fatimah radiAllawhu anha used to order her maid on Fridays to inform her when the day is about to end so that she could occupy herself in making zikr and duas. (Ash'atul Lama'aat)
4. Rasulullah sallAllawhu alayhi wa sallam said: "Of all the days, Friday is the most virtuous. It is on this day that the trumpet will be blown. Send abundant durood upon me on Fridays because they are presented to me on that day." The Sahabah radiAllawhu anhum asked: "O Rasulullah! How will they be presented to you when even your bones will not be present after your death?" Rasulullah sallAllawhu alayhi wa sallam replied: "Allawh Ta'ala has made the earth haraam upon the prophets forever." (Abu Daud)
5. Rasulullah sallAllawhu alayhi wa sallam said: "The word "shaahid" refers to Friday. There is no day more virtuous than Friday. There is such an hour in this day that no Muslim will make dua in it except that his dua will be accepted. And he does not seek protection from anything except that Allawh Ta'ala will grant him protection." (Tirmidhi) The word "shaahid" appears in Surah Burooj. Allawh Ta'ala has taken an oath of that day. He says in the Quran:
!!!!!!!!!!!!!!!!!!!!!!!!!!!!!!!!
Translation: "By the sky in which there are constellations. By the promised day (of judgement). By the day that witnesses (Friday), and the day that is witnessed (day of Arafah)."
6. Rasulullah sallAllawhu alayhi wa sallam said: "Friday is the "mother" of all days and the most virtuous in the sight of Allawh Ta'ala. In the sight of Allawh Ta'ala it has more greatness than Eid ul-Fitr and Eid ul-Ad'haa." (Ibn Majah)
7. Rasulullah sallAllawhu alayhi wa sallam said: "The Muslim who passes away on the night or during the day of Friday, Allawh Ta'ala saves him from the punishment of the grave." (Tirmidhi)
8. Once Hadrat Ibne Abbas radiAllawhu anhu recited the following verse: "This day, I have completed your Deen for you." A Jew was sitting near him. On hearing this verse being recited he remarked: "If this verse was revealed to us, we would have celebrated that day as a day of eid." Ibne Abbas radiAllawhu anhu replied: "This verse was revealed on two eids, i.e. on the day of jumu'ah and the day of arafah." In other words, what is the need for us to make that day into a day of eid when it was already a day of two eids?
9. Rasulullah sallAllawhu alayhi wa sallam used to say that the night of jumu'ah is a lustrous night, and the day of jumu'ah is a lustrous day. (Mishkaat)
10. After qiyaamah, Allawh Ta'ala will send those who deserve paradise into paradise, and those who deserve hell into hell. The days that we have in this world will also be there. Although there will be no day and night, Allawh Ta'ala will show us the extent of days and nights and also the number of hours. So when Friday will come and that hour when the people used to go for jumu'ah will approach, a person will call out saying: "O dwellers of jannah! Go into the jungles of abundance, the length and breadth of which are not known to anyone besides Allawh Ta'ala. There will be mounds of musk which will be as high as the skies. The prophets alayhimus salaam will be made to sit on towers of light, and the believers on chairs of sapphires. Once everyone is seated in their respective places, Allawh Ta'ala will send a breeze which will carry that musk. That breeze will carry the musk and apply it to their clothing, faces and hair. That breeze will know how to apply that musk even better than that woman who is given all the different perfumes of the world. Allawh Ta'ala will then order the carriers of His throne to go and place His throne among all these people. He will then address them saying: "O my servants who have brought faith in the unseen despite not seeing Me, who have attested My Rasul sallAllawhu alayhi wa sallam, and who have obeyed My laws! Ask Me whatever you wish for. This day is the day of giving abundantly." They will all exclaim in one voice: "O Allawh! We are pleased with You, You also be pleased with us." Allawh Ta'ala will reply: "O dwellers of jannah! If I were not pleased with you all, I would not have kept you in My jannah. Ask for something because this is the day of giving in abundance." They will all say in one voice: "O Allawh! Show us Your beauty, that we may be able to look at Your noble being with our very eyes." Allawh Ta'ala will lift the veil and will become apparent to these people and His beauty will engulf them from all sides. If this order was not given from before hand that the jannatis will never get burnt, without doubt they would not have endured the heat of this light and they would all have got burnt. He will then ask them to go back to their respective places. Their beauty and attractiveness will double through the effects of that Real beauty. These people will then go to their wives. They will not be able to see their wives nor will their wives be able to see them. After a little while, the nur which was concealing them will be removed and they will now be able to see each other. Their wives will tell them that how is it that you do not have the same appearance which you had left with? That is, your appearance is a thousand times better now. They will reply that the reason for this is that the noble being of Allawh Ta'ala was made apparent to us and we saw His beauty with our very eyes. (Sharh Sifrus-Sa'aadah) See what a great bounty they received on the day of jumu'ah.
11. Every afternoon, the heat of jahannam is increased. However, through the blessings of jumu'ah, this will not be done on Fridays. (Ihyaa ul-Uloom)
12. On one Friday, Rasulullah sallAllawhu alayhi wa sallam said: "O Muslims! Allawh Ta'ala has made this day a day of eid. So have a bath on this day, whoever has perfume should apply it, and use the miswaak." (Ibn Majah)

The Aadaab of Jumu'ah

1. Every Muslim should make preparations for jumu'ah from Thursday. After the asr salaat of Thursday, he should make a lot of istighfaar. He should clean his clothes and keep them ready. If he does not have any perfume in his house, then if it is possible he should try and obtain some and keep it ready so that he will not get distracted with these things on jumu'ah. The pious people of the past have stated that the person to receive the most benefit on Friday will be that person who waits for it and who makes preparations for it from Thursday. The most unfortunate person will be he who does not even know as to when Friday will fall, so much so that he will ask the people in the morning as to which day this is. Some pious people used to go and stay in the jaame musjid from the night of jumu'ah in order to make full preparations for the following day. (Ihyaa ul-Uloom, vol. 1, page 161)
2. On the day of jumu'ah, ghusl should be made and the hair of the head and the rest of the body should be thoroughly washed. It is also very virtuous to use the miswaak on this day.
3. After making ghusl, a person should wear the best clothing that he possesses, and if possible he should also apply some perfume. He should also clip his nails.
4. He should try and go very early to the jaame musjid. The earlier a person goes, the more reward he will receive. Rasulullah sallAllawhu alayhi wa sallam said: "On the day of jumu'ah, the angels stand at the entrance of that musjid in which jumu'ah salaat is to be offered. They write down the name of the person who enters the musjid first, and thereafter the name of the person who follows, and they continue doing this. The person who entered first will receive the reward of sacrificing a camel in the path of Allawh, the one who followed him will get the reward of sacrificing a cow, thereafter a chicken, thereafter the reward of giving an egg as charity in the path of Allawh. Once the khutbah commences, the angels close the register and begin listening to the khutbah." (Bukhari and Muslim)

In olden times, the roads and alleys used to be extremely busy in the mornings and at fajr time. All the people used to go so early to the jaame musjid and there used to be such a large crowd that it used to look like the days of eid. Later, when this habit was given up, people began saying that this is the first innovation in Islam. After writing this, Imam Ghazali rahmatullahi alayh says: "Aren't the Muslims ashamed of themselves that the Jews and Christians go so early in the morning to their synagogues and churches on Saturdays and Sundays. Those who are businessmen go so early to the bazaars in order to do their buying and selling. Why don't the Muslims do the same?" The reality of the situation is that the Muslims have totally reduced the value of this blessed day. They do not even know what day this is, and what a high status it has. How sad it is that the day which was more valuable than eid in the eyes of Muslims of the past, which Rasulullah sallAllawhu alayhi wa sallam was proud of and the day which was not granted to the previous nations has become so dishonoured at the hands of Muslims today and it is such a great ingratitude to the favour of Allawh Ta'ala that the consequence of all this can be seen with our very eyes."

5. By going walking for the jumu'ah salaat, one gets the reward of fasting for one year for every step that he takes. (Tirmidhi)

6. On Fridays, Rasulullah sallAllawhu alayhi wa sallam used to recite Surah Alif Laam Meem Sajdah and Surah Hal Ataa, in the fajr salaat. These Surahs should therefore be occassionally recited in the fajr salaat on Fridays. Occassionally they should be left out so that people do not regard their recitation as wajib.

7. For the jumu'ah salaat, Rasulullah sallAllawhu alayhi wa sallam used to recite the following Surahs: al-Jumu'ah and al-Munaafiqun, or al-A'la and al-Ghaashiyah.

8. There is a lot of reward in reciting Surah Kahf either before the jumu'ah salaat or after it. Rasulullah sallAllawhu alayhi wa sallam said: "The person who recites Surah Kahf on Fridays, a nur will appear for him from below the arsh as high as the skies. This light will help him in the darkness of the day of resurrection. And all the sins which he may have committed from the last Friday till this Friday will be forgiven." (Sharh Sifrus-Sa'aadah) The ulama have written that this Hadith refers to minor sins because major sins are not forgiven without making taubah.

9. There is more reward in reciting durood on Fridays than on other days. It has been mentioned in the Hadith that durood should be recited abundantly on Fridays.

The Virtues and Importance of Jumu'ah Salaat

Jumu'ah salaat is fard-e-ayn. It has been established from the Quran, Hadith and the consensus of the ummah. It is one of the most salient features of Islam. The person who rejects jumu'ah salaat is a kaafir. The one who misses it without any valid excuse is a faasiq.

1. Allawh Ta'ala says in the Quran:

!!!!!!!!!!!!!!!!!!!!!!!!!!!!

Translation: "O you who believe! When the call for jumu'ah salaat is made, hasten towards the remembrance of Allawh Ta'ala and leave all transactions. This is best for you if only you know."

In this verse, "remembrance" refers to the jumu'ah salaat and khutbah. "Hasten" means that one should go with great concern and care.

2. Rasulullah sallAllawhu alayhi wa sallam said: "The person who has a bath on Friday, purifies himself as far as possible, applies oil to his hair, applies perfume, leaves for the musjid, when he arrives at the musjid he does not sit down by removing anyone from his place, offers as many nafl salaats as possible, when the imam delivers the khutbah he remains silent - then his sins from the previous jumu'ah till now will be forgiven." (Bukhari)

3. Rasulullah sallAllawhu alayhi wa sallam said: "The person who has a bath on Friday and goes early to the musjid on foot, and not by a vehicle, listens to the khutbah and does not do any foolish act while it is being delivered, will get the reward of one year's ibaadah, one year's fasting, and one year's salaat; for every step that he takes." (Tirmidhi)

4. Hadrat Ibn Umar and Abu Hurayrah radiAllawhu anhuma narrate that they heard Rasulullah sallAllawhu alayhi wa sallam saying: "People should abstain from leaving out jumu'ah salaat. If not, Allawh Ta'ala will put a seal over their hearts whereby they will fall into severe negligence." (Muslim)

5. Rasulullah sallAllawhu alayhi wa sallam said: "The person who misses out three jumu'ah's without any valid reason, Allawh Ta'ala puts a seal over his heart." (Tirmidhi) In another narration it is mentioned that Allawh Ta'ala becomes displeased with him.

6. Taariq bin Shihaab radiAllawhu anhu narrates that Rasulullah sallAllawhu alayhi wa sallam said: "The jumu'ah salaat with jama'at is a duty which is wajib on every Muslim with the exception of the following four persons: (i) a slave, that is the one who is owned by someone according to the rules laid down by the Shariah, (ii) a woman, (iii) an immature boy, (iv) a sick person." (Abu Daud)

7. Ibn Umar radiAllawhu anhu narrates that Rasulullah sallAllawhu alayhi wa sallam said the following in regard to those who leave out jumu'ah: "It is my earnest desire that I appoint someone as imam in my place while I go and burn the homes of those who do not attend the jumu'ah salaat." (Muslim) A similar Hadith has also been related with regard to leaving out jama'at. We have mentioned this Hadith previously.

8. Ibn Abbas radiAllawhu anhu narrates that Rasulullah sallAllawhu alayhi wa sallam said: "The person who leaves out jumu'ah salaat without a valid reason is written down as a hypocrite in a book that is absolutely protected from any changes and modifications." (Mishkaat) In other words, he will be labelled as a hypocrite forever. However, if he repents or Allah forgives him solely out of His mercy, then this is another matter.

9. Hadrat Jaabir radiallahu anhu narrates that Rasulullah sallallahu alayhi wa sallam said: "Jumu'ah salaat becomes obligatory on the person who believes in Allawh Ta'ala and the last day, except for the sick, musafir, woman, child, and a slave. If a person occupies himself in something unnecessary, or in some transaction, Allawh Ta'ala also turns away from him and does not worry about him and Allawh is worthy of all praise." (Mishkaat) In other words, He is not affected by anyone's ibaadah nor does He benefit in any way. His essence and being will remain the same irrespective of whether anyone praises Him and worships Him or not.

10. Hadrat Ibn Abbas radiAllawhu anhu says that the person who leaves out several jumu'ah salaats consecutively has in fact turned away from Islam. (Ash'atul Lama'aat)

11. A person asked Ibn Abbas radiAllawhu anhu regarding a person who passed away and who should not join the jumu'ah and jama'at salaats: "What do you have to say regarding such a person?" He replied: "That person is in jahannam." This person continued asking him this question for a full month and he gave him the same reply. (Ihyaa ul-Uloom)

Even by merely glancing at these Ahadeeth, one can come to the conclusion that the Shariah has laid great stress on jumu'ah salaat and that severe warnings have been given to the one who leaves out jumu'ah. Can a person who claims to be a Muslim still have the audacity of leaving out this fard duty?

The Method of Offering Jumu'ah Salaat

After the first adhaan of jumu'ah and before the second adhaan, four rakaats of sunnah salaat should be offered. This sunnah is sunnah-e-mu'akkadah. After the khutbah, two rakaats fard jumu'ah salaat should be offered with the imam. Thereafter, four rakaats sunnah should be offered. These are also mu'akkadah. Thereafter, another two rakaats should be offered. According to some ulama these two rakaats are also sunnah-e-mu'akkadah.

Prerequisites which make Jumu'ah Salaat Wajib

1. To be a muqeem. Jumu'ah salaat is not wajib on a musafir.

2. To be sound and healthy. Jumu'ah is not wajib on a person who is sick. That sickness which prevents a person from going to the jaame musjid on foot will be considered. If a person is very weak due to old-age, is unable to go to the musjid or is blind, then all these people will fall under the category of the sick and jumu'ah salaat will not be wajib on them.

3. To be a free person. Jumu'ah salaat is not wajib on a slave.

4. To be a male. Jumu'ah salaat is not wajib on a female.

5. To be free from those excuses which allow one from leaving out the jama'at. These have been mentioned previously. If any of these excuses are found, jumu'ah salaat will not be wajib. Examples: (i) It is raining very heavily. (ii) One is taking care of a sick person. (iii) By going to the musjid there is a fear of a certain enemy. (iv) The prerequisites which we mentioned in order for salaat to be wajib are also considered here. That is, to be sane, mature, and to be a Muslim.

All these prerequisites which have been mentioned make jumu'ah salaat wajib. If any of these prerequisites are not found in a person and he still offers jumu'ah salaat, then his salaat will be valid. That is, the duty of offering zuhr salaat will fall off. For example, a certain musafir or woman offers jumu'ah salaat.

Prerequisites for the Jumu'ah Salaat to be Valid

1. The place has to be a city or town. Jumu'ah salaat is not valid in a village or jungle. However, jumu'ah will be valid in a village if its population is equal to that of a town. For example, if there is a population of three to four thousand, jumu'ah salaat will be valid.
2. It has to be at the time of zuhr. Jumu'ah salaat is not valid before zuhr time or after the expiry of zuhr. So much so, that if the zuhr time expires while jumu'ah salaat is being offered, then that salaat will become invalid even if the last qa'dah equal to the tashahhud has been completed. It is for this reason that qada is not made for jumu'ah salaat.
3. The khutbah has to be delivered. That is, to face the people and remind them of Allawh Ta'ala even if it means merely saying Sub'haanAllawh or Alhamdo lillah. However, it is makruh to suffice with this alone because it is contrary to the sunnah.
4. The khutbah has to be before the salaat. If the khutbah is delivered after the salaat, the salaat will not be valid.
5. The khutbah has to be delivered within the time of zuhr. If the khutbah is delivered before the time of zuhr, the salaat will not be valid.
6. Jama'at. That is, there has to be at least three persons apart from the imam who are present from the beginning of the khutbah till the sajdah of the first rakaat. This is irrespective of whether those who were present for the khutbah are different from those who are present for the salaat. But this is on the condition that these three persons are such that they are eligible for imamate. Therefore, if there are only women or immature children, the salaat will not be valid.
7. If the people go away before the sajdah and less than three persons remain or no one remains, the salaat will become invalid. However, if they go after the sajdah, the salaat will not be invalid.
8. To offer jumu'ah salaat openly and with full permission. It will not be permissible to offer jumu'ah salaat in any private and secluded place. If jumu'ah salaat is offered at such a place where the general public is not allowed to come or the doors of the musjid are closed at the time of jumu'ah, the salaat will not be valid.

If a person offers jumu'ah salaat despite any of the above-mentioned prerequisites not being met, his salaat will not be valid. He will have to offer zuhr salaat. Since this salaat of his will become a nafl salaat, and since nafl salaat is not offered with such preparations, in such a case it will be makruh-e-tahrimi to offer jumu'ah salaat.

Rules for the Jumu'ah Khutbah

1. Once all the people have gathered together, the imam should sit on the mimbar and the mu'azzin should call out the adhaan in front of him. Immediately after the adhaan, the imam should stand up and deliver the khutbah.
2. Twelve things are sunnah in the khutbah: (a) The person delivering the khutbah should be standing, (b) Two khutbahs should be delivered, (c) He must sit inbetween both the khutbahs to such an extent that Sub'haanAllawh could be recited three times, (d) He must be pure from hadath-e-akbar and hadath-e-asghar, (e) While delivering the khutbah, he must face the people, (f) He must recite A'udhu billahi minash shaytaanir rajeem in his heart before commencing with the khutbah, (g) He must deliver the khutbah in such a way that all the people can hear his voice, (h) The subject matter of the khutbah must comprise of the following eight things: (i) gratitude to Allawh Ta'ala, (ii) praise to Allawh Ta'ala, (iii) testifying the Oneness of Allawh Ta'ala and the prophethood of Rasulullah sallAllawhu alayhi wa sallam, (iv) salutations to Rasulullah sallAllawhu alayhi wa sallam, (v) admonition and advice, (vi) recitation of verses or a Surah from the Quran, (vii) to repeat all these things in the second khutbah as well, (viii) to make dua for the Muslims instead of giving advice and admonition in the second khutbah. This was a list of the subject matter.

We will now go back to those factors which are sunnah for the khutbah itself. (i) The khutbah should not be too lengthy. Instead, it should be shorter than the salaat. (j) To deliver the khutbah from the mimbar. If there is no mimbar, one should stand up by taking support from a staff or rod. To take support from a staff or rod or to place one hand over the other while one is on the mimbar, which is the habit of some people; has not been reported. (k) Both the khutbahs have to be in Arabic. To deliver the khutbah in any other language or to add any poetry or idioms of another language as is prevalent today at some places is contrary to sunnah-e-mu'akkadah and is in fact makruh-e-tahrimi. (l) Those listening to the khutbah should face the qiblah.

In the second khutbah it is mustahab to make dua for Rasulullah's sallAllawhu alayhi wa sallam family, companions, wives, and specifically for the khulafaa-e-raashidin and Hadrat Hamzah and Abbas radiAllawhu anhuma. It is also permissible to make dua for the leader of the Islamic state. But it is makruh-e-tahrimi to praise him for things which are not true.

3. Once the imam stands up to deliver the khutbah, it is makruh-e-tahrimi to offer any salaat or to speak with each other. However, it is permissible for the saahib-e-tarteeb to offer his qada salaat at that time. In fact, it is wajib for him to offer his qada salaat. As long as the imam does not complete his khutbah, all these things will be prohibited.
4. Once the khutbah commences, it is wajib for all those present to listen to the khutbah. This is irrespective of whether they are sitting near the imam or far away from him. It is also makruh-e-tahrimi to do such a thing which will distract one from listening. Just as eating, drinking, talking, walking, making salaam, answering to a salaam, reading some tasbeeh, showing someone a masa'ala of the Shariah is prohibited while one is in salaat, it is also prohibited while the khutbah is being delivered. However, it is permissible for the one who is delivering the khutbah to show a mas'ala of the Shariah while he is delivering his khutbah.
5. If the khutbah commences while one is offering one's salaat, it is better to complete it if it is sunnah-e-mu'akkadah. If it is a nafl salaat, one should make salaam after two rakaats.
6. It is makruh-e-tahrimi for the muqtadis as well as the imam to raise their hands and make dua inbetween the two khutbahs when the imam is sitting. However, it is permissible to make dua in one's heart without raising one's hands as long as one does not say anything with one's tongue - neither silently nor loudly.

Nothing has been related from Rasulullah sallAllawhu alayhi wa sallam and his companions with regard to delivering khutbahs on the last Friday of Ramadaan which contain matters related to the departure of Ramadaan. Nor is there any mention of this in the books of Islamic jurisprudence. In doing so, there is the danger of the masses thinking that this is necessary. It is therefore a bid'ah. Note: These days undue attention is given to this sort of khutbahs. If anyone does not deliver such khutbahs, he is accused and mocked at. Special preparations are made in listening to such khutbahs.

7. It is permissible to deliver a khutbah while looking into a book.
8. If Rasulullah's sallAllawhu alayhi wa sallam name is mentioned in the khutbah, it is permissible for the muqtadis to send durood to him in their hearts.

The Jumu'ah Khutbah of Rasulullah sallAllawhu alayhi wa sallam

By quoting the jumu'ah khutbah of Rasulullah sallAllawhu alayhi wa sallam it is not intended that people should start restricting themselves to this khutbah. This khutbah should be delivered occasionally as a source of barakah and with the intention of following the sunnah. It was the habit of Rasulullah sallAllawhu alayhi wa sallam that once all the people had gathered, he used to enter the musjid and make salaam to all those present. Hadrat Bilal radiAllawhu anhu used to call out the adhaan. On the completion of the adhaan, he used to immediately stand up and deliver his khutbah. Until the mimbar was not constructed, he used to take support from a staff. Occasionally, he used to place the staff against a pillar which was near the mihraab from where he used to deliver his khutbah, and then lean against it. After the construction of the mimbar, there is no evidence that he used to take support from a staff.

He used to deliver two khutbahs and sit down for a little while in-between the two khutbahs. When sitting down, he did not engage in any conversation nor should he make any dua. On completing the second khutbah, Hadrat Bilal radiAllawhu anhu used to call out the iqaamah and Rasulullah sallAllawhu alayhi wa sallam used to commence the salaat.

While delivering the khutbah, Rasulullah's sallAllawhu alayhi wa sallam voice used to get loud and his blessed eyes used to get red. It is mentioned in Sahih Muslim that when Rasulullah sallAllawhu alayhi wa sallam used to deliver the khutbah his condition used to be as if he is warning the people of an invasion of an enemy that is very nearby. In most of the khutbahs he used to say: "Qiyaamah and I have been sent just as these two fingers are!" And he used to join his middle and forefinger together. Thereafter, he used to deliver the following khutbah:

!!!!!!!!!!!!!!!!!!!!!!!!!!!!!!!!!!!!

At times he used to deliver this khutbah:

!!!!!!!!!!!!!!!!!!!!!!!!!!!!!!!!!!
At times, after saying the praises of Allawh Ta'ala, he used to deliver the following khutbah:
!!!!!!!!!!!!!!!!!!!!!!!!!!!!!!!!!!
A Sahabi says that Rasulullah sallAllawhu alayhi wa sallam used to recite Surah Qaaf very regularly in his khutbahs so much so that I learnt Surah Qaaf merely by listening to Rasulullah sallAllawhu alayhi wa sallam reciting it on the mimbar. At times he used to recite Surah al-Asr, and at times he used to recite the following verses:
!!!!!!!!!!!!!!!!!!!!!!!!!!!!!!!!
Rules Related to Jumu'ah Salaat
1. It is preferable that the person who delivers the khutbah also performs the salaat. However, it is permissible for someone else to perform the salaat.
2. It is sunnah to call out the iqaamah and commence with the salaat immediately after the completion of the khutbah. It is makruh-e-tahrimi to engage in any worldly activity between the khutbah and the salaat. If there is a very lengthy gap between the khutbah and the salaat, it will be necessary to repeat the khutbah. However, if the delay is caused because of a Deeni reason, e.g. to show someone a mas'ala, or the wudu of the imam broke and he went to make wudu, or after delivering the khutbah he realized that he had to have a bath, so he went to have a bath - in all these cases it will not be makruh nor will it be necessary to repeat the khutbah.
3. Jumu'ah salaat should be offered with the following intention: "I intend offering two rakaats fard of jumu'ah salaat."
4. It is preferable for all the people to get together and offer jumu'ah salaat in one musjid. However, it is permissible for the people of one place to offer their jumu'ah salaat in several musjids.
5. If a person joins the salaat in the last qa'dah at the time of reciting the at-tahiyyaat or after sajdah-e-sahw, his joining the jama'at will be correct and he will have to complete his jumu'ah salaat. He will not have to offer zuhr salaat.
6. Some people offer zuhr salaat after the jumu'ah salaat as a precaution. Since the belief of the masses has become corrupted in this regard, they should be strictly stopped from this. However, if a knowledgeable person wishes to offer the zuhr salaat due to some doubt, he should do so without letting anyone come to know of it.
EID SALAAT
1. The first of Shawwaal is known as Eid ul-Fitr, and the tenth of Zil Hijjah is known as Eid ul-Ad'haa. Both these days are days of festivity and celebration in Islam. On both these days it is wajib to offer two rakaats of salaat as a form of gratitude. The prerequisites and conditions that have been mentioned for the validity and compulsion for jumu'ah, apply for the Eid salaat as well. With the exception that for the jumu'ah salaat the khutbah is a prerequisite and fard, while for the Eid salaats it is not fard but sunnah. Furthermore, the jumu'ah khutbah is delivered before the salaat while for the Eid salaats, the khutbah is delivered after the salaat. However, listening to the khutbah of Eid is wajib just as it is wajib for the khutbah of jumu'ah, i.e. while the khutbah is being delivered, it is haraam to talk, walk about or offer salaat.
Thirteen things are sunnah on the day of Eid ul-Fitr:
(i) To adorn oneself according to the Shariah.
(ii) To have a bath.
(iii) To use miswaak.
(iv) To wear the best of clothing which one possesses.
(v) To apply perfume.
(vi) To wake up very early in the morning.
(vii) To go early to the eid-gaah.
(viii) To eat something sweet, such as dates, before going to the eid-gaah.
(ix) To give the sadaqatul fitr before going to the eid-gaah.
(x) To offer the Eid salaat in the eid-gaah. That is, one should not offer Eid salaat in the musjid without any valid reason.
(xi) To return from the eid-gaah taking a route that is different from the one that he had taken when going towards the eid-gaah.
(xii) To go to the eid-gaah on foot.
(xiii) To read the following takbeer softly while walking towards the eid-gaah:
!!!!!!!!!!!!!!!!!!!!!!!!!!!!!!!!!!
2. The method of offering Eid ul-Fitr salaat is as follows: the following intention should be made: "I intend offering two rakaats wajib of Eid ul-Fitr salaat with six wajib takbeers." After making this intention, he should commence his salaat. He must recite the thanaa' and then say Allawhu Akbar three times. Each time that he says Allawhu Akbar, he should raise his hands to his ears just as he does for the takbeer-e-tahreemah. After making the takbeer, he should let his hands rest at his sides. In-between each takbeer, he should pause to such an extent that he can read Sub'haanAllawh three times. After the third takbeer, he should not rest his hands but tie them. He should then read the ta'awwudh and bismillah, Surah Faatihah and another Surah. Thereafter, he should make his ruku and sajdahs and stand up as he normally does. In the second rakaat, he should first recite Surah Faatihah and another Surah. Thereafter, he should make three takbeers but after the third takbeer he should not tie his hands but leave them at his sides. He should then make one more takbeer and go into ruku.
3. After the salaat, the imam has to stand on the mimbar and deliver two khutbahs. He should sit down in-between the two khutbahs to the extent that he sits between the khutbahs of jumu'ah.
4. Dua should be made after the Eid salaat, or even after the khutbah. Although this dua has not been established from the life of Rasulullah sallAllawhu alayhi wa sallam, the Sahabah, Taabi'een and even the Tabe Taabi'een, but because it is sunnah to make a dua after every salaat, it will be preferable to make it after the Eid salaat as well.
5. The khutbahs of Eid should commence with the takbeers. The takbeer should be said nine times in the first khutbah and seven times in the second khutbah.
6. The method of Eid ul-Ad'haa salaat is the same as that mentioned above, and the sunnahs of Eid ul-Fitr will also apply here. The difference is that when making the intention for the salaat, then instead of mentioning the word Eid ul-Fitr, one should say Eid ul-Ad'haa. Before going to the eid-gaah it is preferable to eat something on Eid ul-Fitr. But this is not the case in Eid ul-Ad'haa. On Eid ul-Fitr, it is sunnah to say the takbeers softly while going towards the eid-gaah. But on Eid ul-Ad'haa the takbeers should be said in a loud voice. It is preferable to offer the salaat of Eid ul-Fitr a little late. But for Eid ul-Ad'haa it should be offered early. For Eid ul-Ad'haa there is no sadaqatul fitr. Instead, there is the sacrificing of animals for those who can afford it. There is no adhaan nor iqaamah for both Eid ul-Fitr and Eid ul-Ad'haa.
7. It is makruh to offer any other salaat on that day at the place where eid salaat is offered - not before the salaat nor after it. However, it is not makruh to offer any salaat after the Eid salaat at home. But to do so before the Eid salaat is makruh at home as well.
8. It is makruh for women and those people who do not offer Eid salaat to offer any nafl salaat before the Eid salaat.
9. The rules related to sadaqatul fitr should be mentioned in the khutbah of Eid ul-Fitr. The rules related to qurbaani and takbeer-e-tashreeq should be mentioned in the khutbah of Eid ul-Ad'haa. Takbeer-e-tashreeq is wajib after every fard salaat. The takbeer-e-tashreeq is as follows:
!!!!!!!!!!!!!!!!!!!!!!!!!!!!!!!!!!
This takbeer will be wajib on the condition that the fard salaat has been offered with jama'at and the place is a city. This takbeer is not wajib on a woman and a musafir. But if they are muqtadis of a person on whom this takbeer is wajib, then it will be wajib on them as well. However, if a munfarid, a woman or a musafir recites this takbeer, it will be better for them because according to Imam Muhammad and Imam Abu Yusuf rahmatullahi alayhima it is wajib on them as well.

10. This takbeer should be recited after the fajr salaat of the ninth of Zil Hijjah till after the asr salaat of the thirteenth of Zil Hijjah. This totals 23 salaats after which this takbeer is wajib.
11. It is wajib to recite this takbeer in a loud voice. However, women should recite it in a soft voice.
12. The takbeer should be recited immediately after the salaat.
13. If the imam forgets to recite the takbeer, the muqtadis should immediately commence reciting it. They should not wait for the imam to commence.
14. According to some ulama, it is also wajib to say this takbeer after the salaat of Eid ul-Ad'haa.
15. All the ulama are of the opinion that it is permissible to offer the salaats of Eid at several places.
16. If a person misses his Eid salaat and all the other people have already completed their salaat, this person cannot offer his salaat alone. This is because jama'at is a prerequisite for the Eid salaats. In the same way, if a person joins the jama'at but for some reason or the other his salaat becomes invalid, then he cannot make qada of it nor will qada be wajib on him. However, if a few other people also join him, qada will become wajib.
17. If for some reason the Eid salaat is not offered on the first day, then Eid ul-Fitr salaat could be offered on the second day. And Eid ul-Ad'haa salaat could be offered till the twelfth of Zil Hijjah.
18. If the Eid ul-Ad'haa salaat is delayed till the twelfth without any excuse, it will still be valid. But it is makruh to do so. If the Eid ul-Fitr salaat is delayed without any excuse, the salaat will not be valid at all. Examples of excuses: (i) the imam does not come to perform the salaat for some reason or the other, (ii) it is raining heavily, (iii) the date of the moon has not been established and it only becomes established after mid-day when the time for the salaat has already expired, (iv) salaat was offered on a cloudy day, and after the disappearance of the clouds it is realized that the salaat was not offered in its correct time.
19. If a person joins the Eid salaat at a time when the imam has already completed saying the takbeers, then if he joined the jama'at while they were still in the standing posture, he should immediately make the takbeers even if the imam is busy with his qira'at. If he joins the salaat while the imam is in ruku, he should make his takbeers only if he feels that he will be able to catch up with the imam in his ruku. But if he fears that he will not be able to catch up with the imam, he should go straight into ruku. Instead of reading the tasbeehs in the ruku, he should recite the takbeers. However, when he makes the takbeers in his ruku, he should not raise his hands. If the imam stands up from the ruku before he can complete his takbeers, he should not try to complete them. Instead, he should stand up with the imam. The takbeers which he missed will be forgiven.
20. If a person misses the first rakaat of Eid salaat, when he stands up to complete it, he should first recite Surah Faatihah, another Surah and then make the takbeers. Although, according to the rule, he ought to have made the takbeers first, he should not do this. Because if he does this, then the takbeers of both the rakaats will come one after the other. And this is not the method of any Sahabi. Therefore, the rule has been given contrary to this.
If the imam forgets to say the takbeers and only remembers this while in ruku, he should say the takbeers in his ruku and should not return to the standing posture. But if he returns to the standing posture, it will still be permissible, i.e. the salaat will not become invalid. However, because of the large crowd, sajdah-e-sahw should not be made.

Miscellaneous Masa'il

1. If a person uproots his hair, the root of that hair is regarded as impure because of the stickyness that is found on it. (Shaami)
2. It is makruh for the residents of a place where the eid salaats are wajib to offer any nafl salaat between the fajr and eid salaats. (al-Bahrur Raa'iq)
3. It is makruh to clip the nails, to remove the pubic hair or hair from anywhere else while one is in a state of major impurity. (Aalamgiri)
4. Immature children receive the reward for offering salaat and other acts of ibaadah. The person who teaches them also receives reward for this.
5. It is not makruh to recite the Quran at times when salaat is makruh. Apart from reciting the Quran, one could also recite durood or engage in any other form of remembrance. (Saghiri)
6. It is permissible to recite a certain portion of a Surah in one rakaat and recite the remainder of that Surah in the second rakaat. Similarly, it is permissible to recite the beginning or middle of a particular Surah in one rakaat and the beginning or middle of another Surah or one complete short Surah in the second rakaat. (Saghiri) However, it is not good to make a habit of doing this. It is better to recite a separate Surah in each rakaat.
7. While offering the taraweeh salaat, a person forgets to recite a particular verse or Surah and continues reading ahead. Later he realizes that he had forgotten to recite that verse or Surah. It will be mustahab for him to recite that verse or Surah. After reciting the missed verse or Surah, he should repeat those verses or Surahs which he had continued reciting so that he may be able to complete the Quran in the order that it is written. (Aalamgiri) However, if a person continued reading ahead and recited many verses or Surahs and repeating all these will be very difficult, it will be permissible for him to merely repeat the verse or Surah which he had missed out and continue ahead. This is because this ruling is mustahab (and not wajib).
8. Perspiration on the forehead, watering of the eyes and flaring of the nostrils at the time of death are all signs of a good death. Perspiration on the forehead alone is also a sign of a good death.
9. Mud and impure water on the roads (which splashes on the clothes) can be overlooked as long as the traces of the impurity are not visible on the clothing.
10. It is not permissible to make wudu or ghusl with musta'mal (used) water. The following types of water are regarded as musta'mal water: water that has been used to make wudu or ghusl by a person who was in need of wudu or ghusl, water that has been used by a person who had wudu but made wudu again in order to obtain reward, water that has been used by a person upon whom ghusl was not wajib but made ghusl for reward, e.g. a person makes ghusl on Friday despite ghusl not being wajib on him. It is makruh to use such water for drinking or cooking purposes. (Shaami) When we mentioned the person upon whom ghusl became wajib - this rule with regards to him will only apply if no impurity is found on his body. If there is any impurity on his body, then that used water will not even be permissible for drinking and cooking purposes.

GLOSSARY

Explanation of Islamic Terms

Adaa: Literally means performance, execution or discharge of a duty. "Adaa salaat" refers to a salaat which is offered at its specified time. "Adaa" is the opposite of "qada".

Adhaan: The call to salaat. For further details, refer to the chapter on "Adhaan".

Ahl ul-Kitaab: Literally means "People of the Book". Generally, it refers to the Jews and the Christians.

Arsh: The throne of Allawh Ta'ala.

Asr: Literally means "afternoon". Generally, it refers to the afternoon prayer which is the third of the five daily salaats. It is also referred to as asr salaat or salaatul asr.

Aurah: Literally means "genitals". In Islamic terminology it refers to that area of the body which has to be covered. For men, the aurah is from the navel to below the knees. As for women, their entire bodies are regarded as an aurah.

Barakah: Literally means "blessings". It refers to the experiencing of abundance in things which are apparently insignificant or little, both in value and amount.

Bid'ah: Literally means "innovation". In Islam it refers to introducing new things into religion which have no basis in the Quran or Sunnah, and in addition to this, to regard these new things as acts of ibaadah. A bid'ah is a major sin in Islam.

Dua: Invocation to Allawh, supplication, prayer, request, plea.

Dua-e-qunoot: A special dua that is recited in witr salaat. For further details, refer to the chapter on "Witr Salaat".

Durood: The sending of salutations upon Rasulullah sallAllawhu alayhi wa sallam.

Eid: Literally means "feast, festival". In Islam, it refers to the first day of the month of Shawwaal and the tenth day of the month of Zil Hijjah. Both these days are days of celebration and devotion to Allawh Ta'ala.

Eid-gah: The place where the eid salaat is offered. In Arabic it is referred to as the "musalla".
Eid salaat: The salaat that is offered on the days of eid.
Eid ul-Ad'haa: The tenth of Zil Hijjah. Literally means "the festival of sacrifice". It is referred to as ad'haa because it is on this day that animals are sacrificed in the name of Allawh and for His pleasure alone.
Eid ul-Fitr: The first of Shawwaal. Literally means "feast of breaking the Ramadaan fast". It is referred to as fitr because it is on this day that the month-long Ramadaan fast comes to an end.
Esha: Literally means "evening". Generally, it refers to the evening prayer which is the fifth of the five daily prayers. It is also referred to as esha salaat or salaatul esha.
Faasiq: Literally means "godless, sinful, offender, sinner, adulterer". In Islamic law it refers to the person who does not meet the legal requirements of righteousness.
Fajr: Literally means "dawn". Generally, it refers to the dawn prayer which is the first of the five daily prayers. It is also referred to as fajr salaat or salaatul fajr.
Fara'id: Plural of fard. Fard literally means "compulsory". In Islam it refers to those acts and things which are compulsory on a Muslim. Abandoning or abstaining from a fard act is a major sin. Rejecting a fard act amounts to kufr.
Fard: See fara'id.
Fard-e-ayn: Refers to an act or duty which is incumbent and compulsory on each and every individual.
Fard-e-kifaayah: Refers to an act or duty which is incumbent and compulsory on the community as a whole. If a few members of the community or locality fulfil that act, the entire community will be absolved of that responsibility or duty. And if no one from that community or locality fulfils that responsibility or duty, the entire community will be sinful.
Fatwa: A formal legal opinion or verdict in Islamic law.
Fidyah: Literally means "ransom". In Islamic law it refers to redemption from the omission of certain religious duties by a material donation or a ritual act.

BOOK IX

SAWM

In the Hadith, great rewards have been mentioned for fasting. The fasting person has a very high status in the sight of Allawh Ta'ala. Rasulullah sallAllawhu alayhi wa sallam said: "The person who fasts in the month of Ramadaan solely for the pleasure of Allawh Ta'ala and for gaining His reward, all his past minor sins will be forgiven." Rasulullah sallAllawhu alayhi wa sallam said: "The smell which emanates from the mouth of a fasting person is more beloved in the sight of Allawh Ta'ala than the fragrance of musk." On the day of judgement, one would receive great rewards for fasting.

It is related in a Hadith that a table below the Arsh of Allawh Ta'ala will be laid for the fasting persons on the day of judgement. They will sit at this table and partake of the food while all the other people will still be busy giving their account of deeds. On seeing them, they will say: "How is it that these people are eating and drinking while we are still occupied in giving an account of our deeds?" It will be said to them that they used to fast while you abstained from fasting. This fasting is also a great pillar of Islam. The person who does not fast in the month of Ramadaan commits a major sin, and his Deen shall become weak.

1. Fasting in the month of Ramadaan is fard on every Muslim who is not a lunatic nor an immature person (minor). As long as there is no valid excuse, it is not permissible to abstain from fasting. If a person vows to fast, fasting becomes fard on him on account of this vow. The qada and kaffarah fasts are also fard. Apart from this, all other fasts are nafl - if a person keeps them he will be rewarded, and if he does not do so, there will be no sin on him. However, the fasts of eid ul-fitr, eid ul-ad'haa, and the three days following eid ul-ad'haa are all haraam.

2. Once the time of fajr salaat approaches (i.e. dawn) until the time of sunset, a person should make the intention of fasting and abstain from all food, drink, and sexual intercourse. This is known as fasting in the Shariah.

3. It is not necessary to make a verbal intention. Instead, once a person has this in his heart that today he is fasting and he does not eat or drink anything, nor does he indulge in sexual intercourse - his fast will be valid. If a person makes a verbal intention by saying: "O Allawh! I will fast for Your pleasure tomorrow", or he says the following words in Arabic:
!!!

1. The fasts that have been missed for some reason or the other have to be kept after Ramadaan as soon as possible. One should not delay in keeping these missed fasts. It is a sin to delay in keeping these missed fasts without any reason.
2. When keeping the qada fasts, it is not necessary to specify the date by saying: "I am keeping a qada fast for so-and-so day". Instead, one should merely keep the fasts that have been missed. However, if one has missed a few fasts of two Ramadaans and has to keep the qada for both the years, it will be necessary to specify the year for which he is keeping the qada. That is, he should make the intention in the following way: "I am keeping this qada fast for so-and-so year".
3. When keeping a qada fast, it is necessary to make the intention at night (i.e. before subah saadiq). If the intention is made in the morning (i.e. after subah saadiq), the qada fast will not be valid and it will be regarded as a nafl fast. The person will have to keep the qada fast again.
4. The same rule applies to the kaffarah fasts, i.e. the intention has to be made at night. If the intention is made the following morning, the kaffarah fast will not be valid.
5. When keeping the qada fasts, one has the choice of either keeping them consecutively or at random. Both options are permissible.
6. If a person has not kept the qada fasts of Ramadaan and the following Ramadaan commences without his having made the qada, he should keep the fasts of the present Ramadaan and keep the qada fasts of the previous Ramadaan after Eid. However, it is an evil practice to delay in this manner.
7. In the month of Ramadaan a person became unconscious during the day. This unconsciousness continued for more than a day. Apart from the day on which he fell unconscious, he will have to keep qada of all the other days in which he remained unconscious. Qada of the first day on which he fell unconscious is not wajib because due to his intention of fasting, that fast has become valid. However, if the person was not fasting on that day, or, if he took some medication on that day and this medication went down his throat, qada of this first day will also be wajib on him.
8. If the person fell unconscious at night, it is not wajib on him to make qada of the fast of the following day as well. However, he will have to make qada of the remainder of the days in which he remained unconscious. But if he did not make the intention of fasting on that night for the following day, or if he took some medication the following morning, then he will also have to make qada of that first day.
9. If a person remains unconscious for the entire month of Ramadaan, even then he should make qada of these fasts. He should not think that he is absolved from keeping all these fasts. However, if he became a lunatic, and this lunacy remained for the entire month, he does not have to keep qada for any of the days of this Ramadaan. If his lunacy disappears on any day in the month of Ramadaan and he comes back to his senses, he should commence fasting and keep qada of the days in which he experienced this lunacy.

The Nazr or Vowed Fasts

1. If a person vows to keep a fast, it becomes wajib upon him to fulfil it. If he does not do so he will be sinning.
2. Nazr is of two types. One is that the person takes a vow by specifying the day and date by saying: "O Allawh! If a particular task of mine is fulfilled today, I will keep a fast for Your pleasure tomorrow." Alternatively, he says: "O Allawh! If a certain wish of mine is fulfilled, I will keep a fast on the coming Friday." When taking such a vow, it is permissible to make the intention at night or the following day until an hour before mid-day. In both cases the vow will be completed.
3. A person had taken a vow to fast on Friday. When Friday came, he merely made the following intention: "Today I am fasting", without specifying that this is a nazr fast. Alternatively he made the intention of keeping a nafl fast. Even then, the nazr fast will be fulfilled. However, if a person keeps a qada fast on this Friday and forgets to keep the nazr fast, or, he remembers but intentionally keeps a qada fast, then in such a case the nazr fast will not be fulfilled. Instead, the qada fast will be considered and he will have to repeat the nazr fast.
4. The second type of nazr is that the person does not specify the day and date. He merely says: "O Allawh! If a particular task of mine is fulfilled, I will keep a fast." Alternatively, he did not mention the task but merely said that he will keep five fasts. For such a nazr, it is a prerequisite to make the intention at night. If the intention is made in the morning, the nazr will not be fulfilled and this fast will be regarded as a nafl fast.

The Nafl or Optional Fasts

1. For the nafl fast it is permissible to specify the intention by saying: "I am keeping a nafl fast", or to merely say: "I am keeping a fast". Both are correct.
2. It is permissible to make the intention for a nafl fast until an hour before mid-day. If, for example, until 10am a person did not have the intention of fasting and had not consumed any food or drink until then and thereafter he decided to fast and kept the fast; this fast will also be valid.
3. Apart from the month of Ramadaan, a person may keep nafl fasts whenever he wishes. The more he fasts, the greater the reward. However, it is not permissible to fast on the days of eid ul-fitr, eid ul-ad'haa, and the 11th, 12th, and 13th of Zil Hijjah. In the entire year, it is haraam to fast on these five days only. Apart from these days, it is permissible to fast on all other days.
4. If a person takes an oath that he will fast on the day of Eid, the fast of that day will still not be permissible. In place of that day, he should keep it on some other day.
5. If a person takes an oath that he will fast for the entire year and that he will not leave out a single day, even then he cannot fast on these five days. He should fast on the remainder of the days and thereafter keep qada of these five days.
6. By making the intention of keeping a nafl fast, this nafl fast becomes wajib on the person. If a person makes an intention before subah saadiq that he is going to fast today and later (after subah saadiq) breaks this fast, it will be wajib on him to make qada of this fast.
7. A person made an intention at night that he will fast the following day. However, prior to subah saadiq he changed his intention and did not fast. Qada will not be wajib.
8. It is not permissible to keep a nafl fast without the permission of the husband. If the wife fasts without her husband's permission and he orders her to break it, it will be permissible for her to break it. When he permits her, she must make qada of that fast.
9. A guest went to a person's house, or, a person was invited to a meal somewhere. If the person who was invited feels that by his not partaking of the meal, his host will feel insulted or feel ill at heart, it will be permissible to break the nafl fast. It is also permissible for the host to break his nafl fast on account of the guest.
10. A person made the intention of fasting on Eid day and also kept the fast. Even then he should break his fast and qada will not be wajib on him.
11. It is mustahab to fast on the 10th of Muharram. It is mentioned in a Hadith that the one who fasts on this day will have his sins of the past year forgiven. (In addition to this, it is also mustahab to fast on the 9th or 11th. It is makruh to fast on the 10th alone.)
12. Similarly, there is also a great reward in fasting on the 9th of Zil Hijjah. By fasting on this day, the sins for the past year and the following year are forgiven. If a person fasts from the 1st till the 9th of Zil Hijjah, the rewards will be increased manifold.
13. Fasting on the 15th of Sha'baan and the six days after eid ul-fitr is more virtuous than keeping other nafl fasts.
14. If a person fasts on the 13th, 14th and 15th of every month, it is as if he has fasted for the entire year. Rasulullah sallAllawhu alayhi wa sallam used to fast on these days. He also used to fast on Mondays and Thursdays. If a person tries to fast on these days, he will also be greatly rewarded.

Acts which Break or do not Break the Fast

1. If a fasting person forgetfully eats, drinks or has sexual intercourse, the fast will not break. If he eats and drinks a full-stomach, even then the fast will not break. If he forgetfully eats or drinks several times in the day, the fast will still not break.
2. A person saw a fasting person eating or drinking something. If this fasting person is quite strong and is not greatly affected by fasting, it will be wajib to remind him that he is fasting. But if he is a weak person and is greatly affected by fasting, he should not be reminded that he is fasting. Instead, he should be allowed to continue eating.
3. A person slept away during the day. He saw a dream which made ghusl compulsory on him. (i.e. he had a wet-dream) In such a case, the fast does not break.
4. During the day, it is permissible to apply surmah (antimony), oil, and to inhale any fragrance. The fast is not affected by such acts irrespective of when this is done. In fact, after applying surmah, if the colour of the surmah appears in one's saliva or mucus in the nose, even then the fast will not break nor will it become makruh.

5. It is permissible for a man to sleep next to his wife, to touch her and to kiss her. However, if, due to the passions of youth, there is the fear that these acts would lead to sexual intercourse, they should be abstained from. It will then be makruh to carry out such acts.
6. A fly went down the throat, or some smoke or dust went down the throat on it's own. In such a case, the fast will not break. However, if one did this intentionally, the fast will break.
7. Incense sticks were burnt and the person went and sat near them and inhaled the smoke. The fast will break. In the same way, the fast breaks by smoking cigarettes, cigars, etc. Apart from this smoke, it is permissible to inhale the fragrance of perfumes which do not have any smoke.
8. A fibre of meat or fragments of betel-leaf, etc. was stuck in the teeth. Due to cleansing the teeth, this fibre released itself from in between the teeth and the person ate it. However, he did not remove it from his mouth. It went down his throat on its own. If this fibre is less than the size of a gram-seed, the fast will not break. If it is equal to or more than the size of a gram-seed, the fast will break. However, if the person removed this fibre from his mouth and thereafter swallowed it, his fast will break irrespective of whether it was smaller or larger than a gram-seed. In both cases the fast will break.
9. By swallowing one's saliva, the fast does not break irrespective of the amount swallowed.
10. After eating some betel-leaves, the person washed and gargled his mouth thoroughly. Despite this, the redness of the saliva did not disappear. There is no harm in this. The fast will still be valid.
11. Ghusl became compulsory at night. However, the person did not have a bath and only took a bath during the day. The fast will be valid. In fact, even if he does not bath the entire day, the fast will still be valid. However, he will still be sinning for not bathing.
12. A person sniffed in such a way that the mucus of his nose went down his throat. His fast will not break. Similarly, the fast does not break by sniffing and swallowing the saliva that is in the mouth.
13. A person placed betel-leaves in his mouth and slept away. His eyes only opened the following morning. His fast will not be valid. He will have to make qada of this fast but there will be no kaffarah on him.
14. While rinsing the mouth, water went down the throat and the person knew that he was fasting. His fast will break, qada will be wajib, but there will be no kaffarah on him.
15. A person vomitted unintentionally. The fast will not break irrespective of the amount. However, if he vomitted intentionally, his fast will break if the vomit was a full-mouth. But if it is less than a mouth full, the fast will not break.
16. A small amount of vomit came out but it returned down the throat on its own. The fast will not break. However, if the person swallows it intentionally, his fast will break.
17. A person ate a pebble, a piece of steel or some other object which is not normally eaten nor is it consumed for medicinal purposes. His fast will break but there will be no kaffarah on him. And if he eats or drinks something that is normally consumed, or, it is not normally consumed but is used for medicinal purposes, his fast will break and qada and kaffarah will be wajib on him.
18. When a person has sexual intercourse, the fast will break, qada will become wajib, and it will also be wajib to observe kaffarah. Once the head of the penis enters the vagina, the fast breaks and qada and kaffarah become wajib. This is irrespective of whether ejaculation takes place or not.
19. If the man inserts the head of his penis into the anus of the woman, even then, the fast of both the man and woman will break. Qada and kaffarah will also be wajib on them.
20. When a fast is broken, kaffarah only becomes wajib when the fast of Ramadaan is broken. Kaffarah does not become wajib by breaking any other fast irrespective of the manner in which the fast is broken. This applies even if the fast is a qada of a Ramadaan fast. However, if the intention was not made at night (i.e before dawn) for such a fast, or, a woman gets her haid on that very day after breaking her fast; then by breaking the fast, kaffarah will not become wajib.
21. While fasting, a person took snuff, put some oil in his ears or took an enema without taking any medicine orally. The fast will break. However, only qada will be wajib and not kaffarah. If he puts water in his ears, the fast will not break.
22. While fasting, it is not permissible for a woman to insert any medicine, oil, etc. in her vagina. If she inserts any medicine into the vagina, the fast will break, qada will be wajib but not kaffarah.
23. Because of some reason, the doctor inserts his finger into the vagina, or, the woman inserts her own finger. Thereafter, he or she removes part of the finger or the entire finger and then re-inserts the finger. The fast will break but kaffarah will not be wajib. If the finger was not re-inserted, the fast will not break. However, if the finger was wet or moist before inserting it the first time, and then it is inserted, the fast will break the first time it is inserted.
24. Blood comes out from the mouth. It is then swallowed together with saliva. The fast will break. However, if the quantity of blood is less than that of the saliva and its taste is not felt when it goes down the throat, the fast will not break.
25. If a person tastes something with his mouth and thereafter spits it out, the fast will not break. However, it is makruh to do so unnecessarily. But if one's husband is very hot-tempered and there is the fear that if the salt or water content in the gravy is not in order, he will become extremely angry, it will be permissible to taste and will no longer be makruh.
26. It is makruh to soften any food with one's mouth and feed it to a child. However, if this becomes necessary and there is no alternative, it will not be makruh.
27. It is makruh to cleanse the teeth with coal or tooth-powder. If any of these things go down the throat, the fast will break. It is permissible to clean the teeth with a miswaak. This is irrespective of whether it is a dry miswaak or a fresh one. If the miswaak is obtained from the neem (margosa) tree and one perceives it's bitterness in the mouth, even then it will not be makruh to use such a miswaak.
28. A woman was sleeping or lying down unconscious. A person came and had sexual intercourse with her. Her fast will break, qada will become wajib but she does not have to give any kaffarah. As for the man, qada and kaffarah will be wajib on him.
29. A person ate something forgetfully and thought that since he has eaten, his fast is now broken. He therefore ate something intentionally. His fast will now break, qada will be wajib on him, but not kaffarah.
30. A person vomited involuntarily and thought that his fast is now broken. He therefore consumed some food. His fast will break, qada will be wajib, and not kaffarah.
31. A person applied surmah, underwent blood-letting or applied some oil and thereafter thought that his fast has broken because of any of these causes. He therefore ate some food intentionally. In this case, both qada and kaffarah will be wajib on him.
32. If a person's fast coincidentally breaks in the month of Ramadaan, he cannot eat or drink anything for the rest of the day. It is wajib on him to abstain from consuming anything for the rest of the day just like a normal fasting person.
33. A person had no intention of fasting on any day in the month of Ramadaan. He therefore continued eating and drinking the entire day. Kaffarah will not be wajib on such a person. Kaffarah only becomes wajib when one makes an intention to fast and thereafter breaks the fast.

Sehri and Iftaar

1. It is sunnah to make sehri. If a person is not hungry, he should at least eat a few dates or anything else no matter how little it may be. If he does not want to have anything at all, he should at least drink some water.
2. A person did not make sehri. He merely woke up and ate some betel-leaves. He will still receive the reward of sehri.
3. As far as is possible, sehri should be delayed. However, it should not be delayed to the extent that the time of dawn commences and one begins to have a doubt in one's fast.
4. A person made sehri very early but thereafter he continued having some betel-leaves, tobacco, tea, water, etc. until just before dawn. When there was a little time left, he gargled his mouth. He will still get the reward of delaying his sehri, and the same rule will apply as that which was mentioned with regard to delaying the sehri.

5. If one'e eyes did not open for sehri and all the members of the household fell asleep, they should fast despite not having made sehri. To leave out the fast on account of not making sehri is a sign of lack of dedication and also a major sin.
6. As long as it is not dawn and the time of fajr salaat does not commence, the explanation of which has passed in the chapter on the times of salaat, it is permissible to continue with the sehri. Once this time expires, sehri is not permissible.
7. A person woke up a bit late and thought that there is some time left. On this assumption, he made sehri. Later he learnt that he had actually made sehri after dawn. His fast will not be valid. He should make qada but kaffarah will not be wajib. However, he should still abstain from eating or drinking anything and remain like any normal fasting person.
In the same way, if a person thinks that the sun has set and opens his fast and thereafter the sun appears, his fast will break. He will have to make qada of this but there will be no kaffarah on him. After having learnt that the sun has not set as yet, he should abstain from consuming anything until sunset.
8. If a person gets delayed in waking up for sehri to such an extent that he is in doubt as to whether there is any time left or not, it will be makruh to consume anything. If he eats or drinks anything at such a time, he has committed an evil act and sinned. Later, if he learns that it was already the time of dawn, he will have to keep qada of that fast. But if he does not learn anything and remains in doubt, it will not be wajib to keep the qada fast. However, caution demands that he keep that qada fast.
9. When a person is sure that the sun has set, it is mustahab for him to open his fast immediately. It is makruh to delay in opening the fast.
10. One should delay in opening the fast on a cloudy day. When one is sure that the sun must have definitely set, then only should one open one's fast and make iftaar. Do not depend on watches and clocks until and unless your heart is at ease because it is possible that the watch is incorrect. In fact, even if the adhaan is heard from somewhere and there is still a doubt as to whether the time is really up or not, even in such a case it is not permissible to open the fast.
11. It is preferable to open the fast with dates. If these are not available, any other sweet substance will suffice. And if even this is not available, open the fast with water. Some men and women open their fast with rough salt and regard this to be an act of reward. This is an incorrect belief.
12. As long as there is a doubt as to whether the sun has set or not, it is not permissible to make iftaar.

Kaffarah

1. The kaffarah for breaking the fast of Ramadaan is that the person must fast for two consecutive months. It is not permissible to keep a few fasts, stop fasting for a few days, and recommence fasting. If for some reason or the other, one or two fasts in-between are missed out, then the fast for two months will have to be restarted. However, the fasts that a woman misses due to her monthly haid, are forgiven. By not fasting on these days, no harm is caused to the kaffarah. However, once she is purified from her haid, she should immediately recommence with the fasting and complete the sixty days.
2. If a few fasts are missed because of nifaas, and the full sixty days could not be kept consecutively, the kaffarah will still not be correct. The fasts will have to be started all over again.
3. If a few fasts of kaffarah are missed due to some problem or sickness, even then the fasts will have to be re-started once the person is cured from that sickness.
4. If the month of Ramadaan comes in-between the kaffarah fasts, the kaffarah will not be valid.
5. If a person does not have the strength to keep the fasts, he should feed sixty poor persons twice a day with a full meal. They must be allowed to eat as much as possible.
6. If there are a few children included among these poor persons, this will not be permissible. One will have to feed additional poor persons in place of these children.
7. If there is bread made of wheat, it is permissible to feed it to them even if it is dry. If the bread is made of barley, millet, corn, etc. they should also be given some gravy with which they could eat the bread.
8. If the person does not feed them with any food, but instead he gives grain to sixty poor persons, this will also be permissible. He should give each poor person grain equal to the value of sadaqatul fitr (which is approximately one and a half to two kilos of wheat). Rules concerning sadaqatul fitr will Insha Allawh be discussed in the chapter on zakaat.
9. It is also permissible to give money equal to the value of the grain.
10. If a person asks someone else to fulfil this kaffarah on his behalf by feeding sixty poor persons and the person fulfils his request or he gives the grain, the kaffarah will be fulfilled. But if the person gives the kaffarah without being asked to do so, it will not be valid.
11. If a person feeds one poor person for sixty days every morning and evening, or continues giving him grain for the next sixty days, or gives him money that equals the value of that grain, the kaffarah will be valid.
12. If the person did not feed the poor person for sixty consecutive days, but missed out a few days in between, there is no harm in this. This is also permissible (as long as he completes the sixty days).
13. If a person gives the poor person grain that will last him for sixty days at one time, the kaffarah will not be valid. Similarly, if he gives one poor person sixty times in one day, it will still be regarded as giving for one day only. He will then have to give to 59 additional poor persons. The same rule applies when giving money. That is, it is not permissible to give money to one poor person in one day as a compensation for more than one fast.
14. If he gives a poor person kaffarah that is less than the sadaqatul fitr, the kaffarah will not be valid.
15. If a person breaks a few fasts in the same Ramadaan, only one kaffarah will be wajib. But if two fasts are for the Ramadaans of two different years, he will have to give kaffarah for each fast.

Conditions which Permit the Breaking of the Fast

1. A person suddenly falls ill and fears that if the fast is not broken his life will be in danger or that his health will deteriorate. In such a case it will be permissible to break the fast. For example, a person experiences severe pains in the stomach and becomes extremely restless, or he was bitten by a snake. In such instances, it will be permissible to break the fast and take some medicine. Similarly, if a person feels extremely thirsty and fears for his life, it will be permissible to break the fast.
2. A pregnant woman encounters certain difficulty and thereby fears for her or her child's life. It will be permissible for her to break her fast.
3. On account of her being preoccupied in cooking, a woman feels extremely thirsty and she feels so restless that she fears for her life. It will be permissible to break the fast. But if she intentionally carried out such strenuous work which caused her to feel this way, she will be sinning.

Conditions which Permit one not to Fast

1. A person experiences a sickness which could be aggravated by fasting and he fears that if he had to fast, his sickness would worsen or that his recovery would be delayed or that he would die. In all these instances he should not fast. Once he recovers from his sickness, he must keep qada for the fasts which he missed. However, this concession cannot be obtained by mere thinking and the fast cannot be left out merely on this basis. Instead, when a pious Muslim doctor says that fasting would be detrimental to the sickness, only then will it be permissible to leave out a fast.
2. If the doctor is a kaafir or he is not religiously minded, his advice cannot be relied upon. One cannot leave out a fast merely on his advice.
3. If the doctor did not say anything, and the person has some past experience or noticed certain signs whereby his heart says that fasting will be detrimental to his health, he should not fast. But if he has no past experience, nor does he know anything about this sickness, then his mere thinking is not considered. If a person breaks his fast without consulting a pious doctor or without having any past experience, he will have to give kaffarah. And if he does not fast at all, he will be sinning.
4. A person recovered from his sickness but continued feeling weak and he feels that if he fasts, he will fall ill again. It will be permissible not to fast.

5. If a person is travelling, it is permissible for him not to fast. He must make qada of the missed fast whenever possible. "Travelling" in this context is the same as that mentioned in the chapter on offering salaat while travelling, i.e. one must have the intention of travelling approximately 77 kilometres or more.
6. If by travelling, a person will not experience any difficulties by fasting, e.g. he is travelling by train and feels that he will reach his destination by the evening or he has all the necessary items which will give him comfort during the course of the journey, in such a case it will be preferable to fast even though he is still regarded as a musafir. But if he does not fast despite all these comforts, even then there will be no sin on him. However, he will be deprived of the virtue of fasting in the month of Ramadaan. If a person experiences difficulties because of fasting during the course of his journey, in such a case it will be better not to fast.
7. A person did not fast due to some sickness and passed away in that very sickness, or a traveller did not fast and passed away before he could reach his destination or before he could return home - in both cases they will be absolved from making qada and will not be taken to task for this on the day of judgement. This is because they did not get the opportunity to make qada of the fasts which they had left out.
8. A person left out 10 fasts on account of sickness. Thereafter his health returned to normal for 5 days and he passed away. However, he did not keep any of the missed fasts in these 5 days. He will therefore be accountable for not keeping qada for 5 days of missed fasts and will be absolved from the other 5 days. If the person returned to normal for 10 days but did not make qada of the 10 fasts which he had missed, he will be accountable for all 10 days. It is therefore necessary for the person to advise his near ones before he can pass away to pay fidyah on his behalf for all the fasts which he will be accountable for. This is if he has any money to be given as fidyah. The masa'il related to fidyah will be mentioned in a later chapter - Insha Allawh.
9. Similarly, if a person misses a few fasts on account of travelling and passes away after reaching his house, he will only be accountable for the number of days that he was at his house. It is also necessary on this person to make a bequest that fidyah be paid on his behalf. If the number of fasts missed are more than the duration of his stay at home, there is no accountability for them (i.e. for the number of fasts which exceed the duration of his stay at home).
10. During the course of his journey, a person stopped over at a place with the intention of staying there for 15 days or more. It will not be permissible for him to miss out any fast because he is no more regarded as a musafir according to the Shariah. However, if he made the intention of stopping over for less than 15 days, it will be permissible for him not to fast.
11. A pregnant or a breast-feeding woman is permitted not to fast if she fears for the life of her child or her own life. She must make qada of the missed fasts at a later date. However, if her husband is wealthy and he can afford to pay a wet nurse to breast-feed his child, it will not be permissible for her to miss out any fast on account of breast-feeding. However, if the child is such that he refuses to drink the milk of anyone other than his mother's, it will be permissible for the woman not to fast on account of breast-feeding.
12. A wet nurse accepted the job of breast-feeding before Ramadaan. When Ramadaan commenced, she feared over the life of the child by her fasting. It will also be permissible for this wet nurse not to fast.
13. A woman experienced the monthly haid or gave birth and was therefore in a state of nifaas. As long as the state of haid or nifaas remains, it will not be permissible for such a woman to fast.
14. If a woman becomes pure from her haid or nifaas during the night, she should not leave out fasting the following day. Even if she did not have a bath at night, she should fast and have a bath in the morning. If a woman becomes pure after dawn, it will not be permissible for her to make the intention of fasting. In addition to this, it will not be permissible for her to eat or drink anything. She will have to spend her entire day like normal fasting persons.
15. Similarly, when a person accepts Islam during the day or reaches the age of puberty during the day, he should abstain from eating or drinking anything for the rest of the day. If such a person eats or drinks something during the day, qada fast will not be wajib on him.
16. A traveller had the intention of not fasting. However, he reached his house one hour before noon, or, one hour before noon he made the intention of staying over at a place for 15 days or more. In addition to this, he had not consumed any food or drink since dawn. Such a person should make the intention of fasting and fast for the rest of the day.

Fidyah

1. The person who is extremely old and does not have the strength of fasting, and the person who is extremely ill and does not have any hope of recovering nor the strength to fast will have to give grain to a poor person equivalent to the amount stipulated for sadaqatul fitr in place of every fast that such people miss. Alternatively, they could feed one poor person with two complete meals for each fast that they miss. In the Shariah this is known as fidyah. It is also permissible for such persons to give the value of the grain in cash.
2. It is also permissible to distribute this grain of fidyah among several poor persons.
3. If the old person happens to regain some of his strength, or the sick person recovers from his illness, they will have to keep qada for all the fasts which they had missed. As for the fidyah which they had paid, they will be rewarded separately for that.
4. A person had to keep qada of several fasts. At the time of death he made a bequest that fidyah be paid in place of all his missed fasts. This fidyah will have to be paid by his inheritors from his wealth. After paying for the deceased person's funeral arrangements, his debts, etc. if one third of his left over wealth will be sufficient to pay the fidyah, then it will be wajib to pay this fidyah.
5. If the person did not make a bequest but his inheritors paid the fidyah out of their own wealth, even then one should have the hope that this act will be accepted by Allawh Ta'ala and that He will not make one accountable for the missed fasts. It should be borne in mind that it is not permissible for the inheritors to pay the fidyah from the deceased person's wealth if the latter did not make a bequest in that respect. Similarly, if the fidyah is more than one third of his wealth, then despite his making a bequest in this regard, it will not be permissible to utilise the balance of his money without the permission and consent of all the inheritors. If all the inheritors express their consent and happiness, it will be permissible to pay the fidyah in both cases. However, it should be remembered that the consent of immature inheritors is not considered in the Shariah. If the mature inheritors separate their inheritance and pay the fidyah from their share, it will be permissible to do so.
6. The same rules will apply if a person had several salaats which he had to make qada of and made a bequest that fidyah be paid for the salaats that he missed.
7. The fidyah that will have to be paid for each missed salaat will be the same as that paid for each missed fast. Fidyah will have to be paid for the five fard salaats plus the witr salaat; totalling six salaats a day. According to this calculation, approximately 12 kilos of grain will have to be paid.
8. A person had not paid his zakaat. By his making a bequest, the paying of this zakaat will become wajib on his inheritors. If the person did not make a bequest but his inheritors paid the zakaat on his behalf out of their own good will and happiness, even then the zakaat will not be fulfilled.
9. It is not permissible for the inheritors to offer qada salaats or keep qada fasts on behalf of the deceased. If they do so, the deceased will not be absolved of his accountability to Allawh Ta'ala.
10. It is not permissible to miss out the fasts of Ramadaan without any valid reason. To do so is a major sin. A person should not be under the misconception that he will keep qada of the missed fast at a later date. It is mentioned in a Hadith that if a person misses a single fast of Ramadaan and thereafter fasts the entire year as a compensation for that one missed fast, he will not receive the reward that he would have received for that one fast of Ramadaan.
11. If a person does not fast on a particular day, he should not eat or drink in the presence of others. Nor should he inform anyone that he is not fasting on that day. This is because to commit a sin and thereafter to expose it is also a sin. The person will get a double sin if he informs others that he is not fasting - one sin for not fasting and another for informing others. It is wrong to think that when we cannot conceal anything from Allawh Ta'ala, why should we conceal it from others? In fact, even the person who does not fast due to some valid excuse, should not inform others, nor should he eat or drink in their presence.
12. When a young boy or girl becomes capable of fasting, they should also be commanded to fast. When they reach the age of ten, they should be beaten and made to fast. If they cannot keep all the fasts, they should be made to keep as many as possible.
13. When an immature girl or boy keeps a fast and thereafter break it, they should not be made to keep qada of it. However, if they commence offering a salaat and thereafter break it, they should be made to repeat that salaat.

The Virtues of Fasting

1. Rasulullah sallAllawhu alayhi wa sallam said: "The sleep of a fasting person is regarded as an act of ibaadah, his remaining silent is regarded as a tasbeeh, the reward for his good deeds is multiplied, his duas are accepted, and his sins are forgiven."

2. It is mentioned in a Hadith that fasting is a shield and a strong fortress in order to save oneself from hell. In other words, just as a person seeks refuge in a strong fortress or by means of a shield from an enemy, in the same way, one gets salvation from hell by fasting. By fasting, a person's power of committing sins gets weak, and his power to do good gets stronger. When a person fasts in the proper manner and implements all the etiquette of fasting, he will free himself of sins and gain salvation from hell.

3. It is mentioned in a Hadith that fasting is a shield as long as it is not destroyed by lies and backbiting. In other words, fasting works as a shield as explained above. But this is on the condition that the person abstains from sinning. If a person fasts and still speaks lies, backbites, and commits other sins, then although he will be absolved of the fard of fasting, he will be committing a major sin. Furthermore, he will be deprived of the barakah of fasting.

4. It is mentioned in a Hadith that fasting is a shield. The person who awakens in the morning in a state of fasting should not commit any act of ignorance. If a person approaches him in an ignorant way, he should not reply him in the same ignorant manner nor should he address him disrespectfully. Instead, he should inform him that he is fasting. By him in whose control is the life of Muhammad sallAllawhu alayhi wa sallam, the smell that emanates from the mouth of a fasting person is more beloved in the sight of Allawh Ta'ala than the fragrance of musk. In other words, on the day of judgement, the smell that emanates from the mouth of a fasting person will be replaced with a fragrance even better than musk. This fragrance will emanate from the mouth of the fasting person and it will be most beloved in the sight of Allawh Ta'ala. This foul smell that emanates from a fasting person in this world will actually be a source of attaining that fragrance in the hereafter.

5. It is mentioned in a Hadith that at the time of opening the fast, the person is permitted to make a dua whose acceptance is promised.

6. It is mentioned in a Hadith that Rasulullah sallAllawhu alayhi wa sallam addressed two persons saying: "You should fast because fasting is a shield in order to save oneself from hell and in order to save oneself from the difficulties of time." In other words, one will be saved from hell and also from the difficulties and calamities of this world.

7. It is mentioned in a Hadith that on the day of judgement, three persons will not have to give an account of the food that they ate, immaterial of what they ate as long as it is halaal. They are: the fasting person, the person who makes sehri, and the person who is stationed on the borders of the Islamic state safeguarding it from being invaded by the kuffaar. This is a great concession for these three persons that they have been absolved from giving an account of their eating. It should be borne in mind that despite this concession, one should not spend a lot of money and time in preparing very exquisite meals. Spending a lot of time in preparing delicacies turns one away from the remembrance of Allawh Ta'ala and gives impetus to one's power of committing sins. This should always be borne in mind. One should value the bounties that Allawh Ta'ala has blessed one with. The best way of showing gratitude to Allawh Ta'ala is that one should obey all His commands and orders.

8. It is mentioned in a Hadith that the person who feeds a fasting person at the time of opening fast will receive the same reward as that of the fasting person without there being any decrease in the reward of the fasting person. In other words, through the mercy and generosity of Allawh Ta'ala, both of them will receive the same reward. This will apply even if the person feeds him with a very simple or insignificant meal. Even if he merely gives him some water to drink.

9. It is mentioned in a Hadith that Allawh Ta'ala multiplies the rewards of His pious servants by ten times up to 700 times except for the reward of fasting. In other words, there is no limit for the reward of fasting. As regards fasting, Allawh Ta'ala says: "It is for Me alone and I will give the reward for it." From this we can gauge how great the reward of fasting is that there is no limit to the rewards. In addition to this, Allawh Ta'ala will give the reward for fasting Himself and will not delegate this task to the angels. Glory be to Allawh Ta'ala for attaching such importance to this little effort on our part. However, it should be borne in mind that all these virtues and benefits of fasting will only come into effect when we fulfil this duty as it ought to be fulfilled, and only when we abstain from speaking lies, backbiting, and all other sins. In the month of Ramadaan, some people leave out their salaats completely while others miss out the fajr salaat. In doing so, they are depriving themselves of the numerous blessings and rewards of fasting. Furthermore, by reading this Hadith, one should not have this misconception that fasting is more virtuous than salaat because salaat is the most virtuous of all the different acts of ibaadah. The meaning of this Hadith is that there is a very great reward for fasting and it does not mean that fasting is the most virtuous act of ibaadah. The above-mentioned Hadith continues that there are two times of extreme happiness for the fasting person. The first time of happiness is when he opens his fast and the second time is on the day of judgement. That is, when he meets Allawh Ta'ala, as mentioned in other Ahaadith.

10. It is mentioned in a Hadith that on the first night of Ramadaan the doors of heaven are opened. These doors remain open right till the end of Ramadaan. There is no Muslim who offers salaat in any of the nights of this month except that he receives 2500 rewards for every rakaat that he offers. In addition to this, Allawh Ta'ala will construct a palace of rubies. This palace will have sixty doors. Each of these doors will have a golden chamber which will be decorated with rubies.

When the person keeps the first fast of Ramadaan, all the minor sins that he had committed during the past year since the first fast of the last Ramadaan will be forgiven. In addition to this, 70 000 angels will make dua for his forgiveness daily from morning till sunset. For every rakaat of salaat that he offers in Ramadaan, whether it be during the day or at night, he will be rewarded with a tree in paradise. The shade of this tree will be such that a traveller will be able to travel beneath it for a journey of 500 years.

How great is the virtue of fasting! O Muslims! Never allow yourself to miss any fast. In fact, if you have the strength, then keep nafl fasts as well. Show total love for Allawh Ta'ala who is so merciful that He is rewarding us so abundantly in exchange for a little effort on our part. At least make Allawh Ta'ala your beloved for your own benefit in that you will receive the abundant benefits of jannah.

11. It is mentioned in a Hadith that jannah is decorated from the beginning of the year till the end of the year especially for Ramadaan. In addition to this, the large-eyed Hoors of jannah decorate and beautify themselves from the beginning of the year till the end of the year especially for the fasting persons. When Ramadaan commences, jannah says to Allawh Ta'ala: "O Allawh! Enter your pious servants into me in this month." As for the large-eyed Hoors, they say: "O Allawh! Appoint husbands for us from among your pious servants."

The person who did not slander anyone in this month and did not consume any intoxicants shall have all his sins wiped out. As for the one who slanders someone or consumes any intoxicant, all his good deeds for the past year will be wiped out. In other words, he will be committing a major sin. It should be borne in mind that just as rewards are multiplied in a holy month, punishment is also increased if a sin is committed in a holy month. One should ponder over the warning in this Hadith.

Fear the month of Ramadaan because it is the month of Allawh Ta'ala. In this month, Allawh Ta'ala has ordered His servants to emulate His practice by abstaining from food and drink. Since Allawh Ta'ala is pure from food and drink all the time, this month of Ramadaan has been specially attached to Him. As for the other months, they all belong to Him as well. Allawh Ta'ala has given you eleven months in which you can eat, drink, and indulge in other halaal pleasures. He has set aside just one month for Himself in which He has ordered you to abstain from food, drink, and other halaal pleasures. Therefore, fear the month of Ramadaan, for most certainly, it belongs to Allawh Ta'ala.

Obey Allawh Ta'ala in this month and abstain from sins. Although obedience to Allawh Ta'ala is necessary all the time, it's importance is stressed in particular places such as Makkah al-Mukarramah and Madinah al-Munawwarah; and at particular times such as in the month of Ramadaan. Special attention should be paid to abstaining from sins at such places and at such times because just as rewards are multiplied at these times and places, so too is punishment.

12. It is mentioned in a Hadith that when food is presented to you at the time of iftaar, then prior to opening your fast you should recite the following dua:

!!

Translation: "In the name of Allawh. All praise is due to Allawh. O Allawh! I have fasted for Your pleasure, it is with Your sustenance that I am opening my fast, and I have placed complete trust in You. Glory be to You and praise be to You. Accept this fast from me for most surely You are All-Hearing, All-Knowing."

13. It is mentioned in a Hadith that when you open your fast, it is preferable to open it with dry dates because there is a lot of blessing in this. If you do not have dates, open your fast with water because water is a great purifier. In certain Ahadeeth it is also mentioned that the fast should be opened with milk.
14. It is mentioned in a Hadith that the person who keeps fast for 40 days solely for the pleasure of Allawh Ta'ala shall have whatever dua he makes to Allawh Ta'ala accepted. In other words, this person will become so beloved in the sight of Allawh Ta'ala that whatever dua he makes will be accepted by Allawh Ta'ala if He feels that it will be to the benefit of that person. The respected sufis, may Allawh Ta'ala be pleased with them, have laid down a system of cutting off all relations with this world for forty days and engaging in the ibaadah of Allawh Ta'ala in a musjid. In addition to this, the person must fast for these forty days while he is in the musjid. By doing this, the person will benefit tremendously and will also develop the strength to do good deeds. Through the barakah of this, he will receive special knowledge from Allawh Ta'ala and he will also be blessed with a deep understanding of things.
15. It is mentioned in a Hadith that the person who fasts on Thursdays, Fridays and Saturdays of every sacred month, he will receive the reward of making ibaadah for 700 years. There are four months which are sacred. They are: Rajab, Zul Qa'dah, the first ten days of Zul Hijjah, and Muharram. However, it should be borne in mind that it is haraam to fast on the 10th, 11th, 12th and 13th of Zul Hijjah.
16. It is mentioned in a Hadith that the person who keeps three fasts in the sacred months, on Thursday, Friday and Saturday, he will receive the reward of making ibaadah for two years. That is, on the day of judgement it will be written in his book of deeds that he had made ibaadah for two years in return for these three days of fasting.

Surmah: Antimony. A black powdery substance that is applied to the eyes. It is sunnah to apply surmah.
Tasbeeh: Saying "sub'haanAllawh". A rosary that is used to glorify Allawh Ta'ala is also called a tasbeeh.
Umrah: Commonly referred to as the lesser pilgrimage. It is similar to hajj with the exception that many of the rites of hajj are left out and that it could be performed throughout the year.
Wajib: Literally means "obligatory'. In Islamic jurisprudence it refers to that act which has not been established by an absolute proof. Leaving out a wajib without any valid reason makes one a faasiq and entails punishment.
Zikr: The remembrance of Allawh Ta'ala.
Zil Hijjah: The last month of the Islamic calendar.
Zil Qa'dah: The eleventh month of the Islamic calendar.

BOOK X
ZAKAH

The person who has some wealth and still does not take out zakaat for it is regarded as a great sinner in the sight of Allawh Ta'ala. He will be severely punished on the day of judgement. Rasulullah sallAllawhu alayhi wa sallam said: "The person who possesses gold and silver and does not give zakaat for it, then on the day of judgement, slabs of fire will be made for him. These slabs will be heated in the fire of jahannam and his sides, forehead and back will be branded with them. When these slabs become cool, they will be re-heated and the entire process will be repeated." Rasulullah sallAllawhu alayhi wa sallam said: "The person who has been given wealth by Allawh Ta'ala and despite this does not give zakaat for it, then on the day of judgement this wealth of his will be turned into a huge poisonous snake which will encircle his neck. It will then tear the sides of his mouth apart and tell him: 'I am your wealth and I am your treasures.'" We seek refuge in Allawh Ta'ala. Who can bear such severe punishment? It is the height of foolishness and stupidity that we are prepared to pay such a great penalty for a little greed and selfishness on our part. It is extremely foolish and improper to refuse to spend in the path of Allawh the wealth that Allawh Himself has granted to us.

1. If a person possesses 612.35 grams of silver or 87.479 grams of gold or any currency that equals the value of this amount of gold or silver, and this wealth remains in his possession for a complete year, then on the expiry of this year it will be wajib on him to give zakaat for it. If his wealth is less than this, zakaat will not be wajib. If it is more than this, zakaat will still be wajib.
2. A person possessed the complete nisaab for about four to six months. Thereafter, this nisaab decreased, and after about three months he acquired some other wealth (and he once again possesses the complete nisaab, even in such a case zakaat will be wajib on him. In other words, if a person possesses the nisaab at the beginning and at the end of the year, zakaat will be wajib on him. By the nisaab decreasing during the course of the year, one is not absolved of giving one's zakaat. However, if his entire wealth is lost and he finds it later, then the beginning of the year will be calculated from the time that he finds his wealth. (The period prior to that will not be calculated).
3. A person possessed the nisaab but prior to the expiry of one year all his wealth is lost and it was not in his possession for the complete year. In such a case zakaat will not be wajib.
4. A person possesses the full nisaab and also has debts which equal the nisaab. In such a case zakaat will not be wajib.
5. If his debts are such that if he were to fulfil his debts he will have a remainder of wealth which will equal the nisaab, then zakaat will be wajib on him.
6. Zakaat is wajib on jewellery, utensils, ornaments, and brocades that have been made with gold or silver. This is irrespective of whether these items are in use or not. In other words, zakaat is wajib on everything that is made of gold or silver. However, if they are less than the nisaab, zakaat will not be wajib.
7. If the gold or silver is not pure but has been mixed with another metal, then one will have to check as to which is more in content. If the gold or silver is more, then the rules which are applicable to both will apply here as well. That is, if they equal the nisaab, zakaat will be wajib. If the content of the other metal is more than that of the gold or silver, it will not be regarded as gold or silver. The rules that apply to brass, copper, steel, tin, etc. will also apply to this metal. These rules will be discussed later.
8. A person does not have the complete nisaab of gold nor of silver. Instead, he has a bit of gold and a bit of silver. If both are added together and their value equals the nisaab of gold or silver, zakaat will be wajib. But if they do not equal the nisaab of either gold or silver after adding them together, zakaat will not be wajib. If the nisaab of gold or silver is complete, there is no need to obtain their value.
9. Assuming that the price of 11.664 grams of gold is R25, and for R1 we can get 17.496 grams of silver and a person possesses double this amount of gold (i.e. 23.328 grams) plus R5 both of which is over and above his needs. Furthermore, he has this gold and cash in his possession for a full year. In such a case, zakaat will be wajib. This is because the 23.328 grams of gold equals R50, and for R50 one can purchase 874.8 grams of silver (50x17.496g). In addition to this, if the R5 were to be added together, this will result in a lot of wealth upon which zakaat will be wajib. However, if he only possesses the 23.328 grams of gold and does not have any cash or silver; zakaat will not be wajib.
10. Assuming that we get 23.328 grams of silver for R1 and a person only possesses R30. Zakaat will not be wajib and we will not calculate and say that R30 equals 699.84 grams of silver (i.e. 30 x 23.328 = 699.84) based on the fact that the rand is actually in place of the silver and when we only have gold or silver, then we will take the weight into consideration and not the value. (This rule will only apply when the coins used to be made of silver. These days, coins are made of copper and other cheap metals. We even receive them in return for currency notes. Now the ruling will be that the person who possesses coins or notes equal to the current value of the nisaab of gold or silver, zakaat on this will be wajib.)
11. A person had money equal to the nisaab which was over and above his needs. Prior to the expiry of the year, he received an additional amount. This additional amount will not be calculated separately. Instead, it will be added to the original amount and upon the expiry of the year, zakaat will be wajib on the entire amount and it will be regarded as if the original amount and the additional amount was in his possession for one full year.
12. A person had silver which was equal to the nisaab. Prior to the expiry of the year, he received an amount of gold (whether more or less than the amount of nisaab). This amount will not be calculated separately. Instead, it will be added to the original amount of silver and zakaat will be wajib on the total amount upon the expiry of that year.

13. With the exception of gold and silver, the rule regarding all other metals such as steel, copper, brass, etc., the utensils that are made of these metals, clothing, footwear, and all other such items is that if these items are for the purpose of trade, zakaat will be wajib on them if they reach the nisaab of either gold or silver and are in the possession of the person for a period of one year. However, if these items do not reach the nisaab, zakaat will not be wajib. If these items are not for the purpose of trade, zakaat will not be wajib irrespective of the amount one possesses. Even if the value of these items reaches thousands of rands, zakaat will not be wajib as long as they are not for the purpose of trade.
14. Zakaat is not wajib on household effects such as utensils, pots, big pots, trays, basins, crockery and glassware, the house in which one lives, the clothes which one wears, jewellery made of pearls, etc. This is irrespective of the amount and irrespective of whether they are being used daily or not. However, if they are kept for the purpose of trade, zakaat will be wajib on them as well. In short, zakaat is not wajib on all items apart from gold and silver if they are not for the purpose of trade. But if they are for trade, zakaat will be wajib on them as well.
15. A person owns several homes from which he collects rent. Zakaat is not wajib on these homes irrespective of their value. Similarly, if a person purchases some utensils and hires them out, zakaat will not be wajib on these utensils. In short, by hiring or renting something out, zakaat does not become wajib on that thing.
16. Zakaat is not wajib on clothes irrespective of how expensive they may be. However, if they are embroidered with gold or silver thread and if this thread were to be removed and weighed it will be equal to the nisaab, then in such a case zakaat will be wajib. But if it does not reach the nisaab, zakaat will not be wajib.
17. A person possesses some gold or silver, and some goods for trade as well. All these will have to be calculated together. If they reach the nisaab of either gold or silver, zakaat will be wajib. If they do not reach the nisaab, zakaat will not be wajib.
18. Goods for trade will only be regarded as such if they have been purchased with the intention of re-sale. If a person purchases some rice or any other item for his domestic needs or for a wedding, etc. and thereafter decides to sell this item, zakaat will not be wajib on this.
19. Zakaat is also wajib on the money that is owed to a person by his debtors. Debts are of three types:
The First Type: The person loaned some gold, silver or money, or sold some tradeable goods to another person. He is owing this money and only repays his debt after a year or two. If whatever he loaned is equal to or more than the nisaab, zakaat will be wajib for all the years that he had loaned the money.
He did not repay the debt at once, but in instalments. The moment he pays an amount equal to the value of 128.304 grams of silver, zakaat will become wajib on him. But if the person repays the value of 128.304 grams of silver in instalments as well, zakaat will only become wajib on the completion of this amount. Each time that this amount is paid, zakaat on it will have to be given. Whenever the person gives the zakaat, he will also have to pay for all the previous years in which the zakaat was not paid.
If the money owed is less than the nisaab, zakaat will not be wajib on the person. However, if the person has some other wealth upon which zakaat is necessary, then this wealth should be added to the money owed. If, after adding them together, they equal the nisaab, zakaat will be wajib on the total amount.
20. The Second Type: A person did not loan any cash nor did he give (on credit) any goods for trade. Instead, he sold something which was not originally purchased for re-sale, eg. he sold some of his personal clothing or some household goods, and the person is still owing him the money for these items. In addition to this, the amount that he is owing is equal to or more than the nisaab and he only repays this amount after several years. Zakaat will be wajib for all the years. If he does not repay this debt at once, but repays it in instalments, then as long as the paid up instalments do not reach the current nisaab of silver or gold, zakaat will not be wajib on the amount that he collected. The moment an instalment reaches the current nisaab, zakaat becomes wajib for all the years in which zakaat was not paid.
21. The Third Type: The husband owes his wife the mahr (dowry) which had been stipulated at the time of marriage. He only pays this mahr after several years. Zakaat will only be calculated from the day that she actually receives her mahr. Zakaat for the previous years will not be wajib. If the mahr remains with her for a period of one year after having received it, zakaat will become wajib on her upon the expiry of one year. But if she does not have the mahr (for example, if she spends it), zakaat will not be wajib.
22. A rich person upon whom zakaat is wajib gives his zakaat before the expiry of one year and does not wait until the end of the year. This is permissible and his zakaat will be considered to be fulfilled. But if the person is not rich and envisaged receiving some money in the near future, and therefore gave his zakaat before the expiry of the year, this zakaat of his will not be considered to be fulfilled. When he receives the money and thereafter a year passes, he will have to give his zakaat again.
23. It is permissible for a rich person to give zakaat for several years beforehand. But if his wealth increases in any given year, he will have to give zakaat for the extra wealth that he obtained.
24. A person has R1000 over and above his basic needs. He also envisages receiving another R1000 from somewhere. Before the expiry of the year, he gives zakaat for the total R2000. This is also permissible. However, if his money gets less than the nisaab at the end of that year, then zakaat will not be wajib on him and the zakaat which he had already given will be regarded as a voluntary charity (sadaqah-e-naafilah).
25. A person had some wealth for a full year but before he could give the zakaat, all his wealth was stolen or disappeared in some other way. He will be absolved from giving zakaat. But if the person gives his wealth away or causes it to be destroyed in some way or the other, then he will not be absolved from giving the zakaat. It will remain wajib upon him.
26. After the expiry of the year, a person gave all his wealth in charity. Zakaat will not be wajib on him.
27. A person had R2000. After the expiry of one year, R1000 was stolen or he gave it in charity. He will be absolved from giving the zakaat of R1000. He will now only have to give zakaat for R1000.

The Paying of Zakaat

1. Upon the expiry of the year, zakaat should be given immediately. It is not a good habit to delay in carrying out good deeds because it is possible that death may overcome a person and this duty will still remain on his shoulders. If the paying of zakaat is delayed to such an extent that the second year also expires, the person will be a sinner but he can still repent for this sin and pay the zakaat immediately. In other words, he should pay the zakaat that is incumbent upon him at some time or the other in his life and should not leave it out.
2. Zakaat is wajib on 1/40th of all the wealth which a person possesses. That is, R2-50 for every R100 or R1 for every R40.
3. At the time of giving the zakaat to a poor person, one must have the intention in his heart that he is giving this money as zakaat. If he merely gives it without making any intention, the zakaat will not be fulfilled. He will have to give the zakaat again, and he will be rewarded separately for the money that he had already given.
4. If the person did not make the intention of giving zakaat at the time of giving it to the poor person, then as long as that money is still in the possession of the poor person, he will be able to make the intention. By making the intention at this stage, his zakaat will be fulfilled. But if the poor person has already spent that money, then the intention that is made at this stage will not be considered. He will have to repeat the payment of his zakaat.
5. A person set aside R2 to be given as zakaat and decided that when he comes across a deserving person he will give it to him. However, when he gave it to the poor person he forgot to make the intention of zakaat. In this case, zakaat will be fulfilled. But if he did not make the intention of zakaat at the time of setting it aside, his zakaat will not be fulfilled.
6. A person has taken out his zakaat for distribution. He has the choice of giving all his zakaat to one person or distributing it among several persons. He also has the option of giving all the zakaat on one day or distributing it over several months.
7. It is better to give one poor person an amount which will be sufficient for him for that day so that he will not have to ask anyone else.
8. It is makruh to give one poor person an amount which makes the giving of zakaat wajib. However, if it is given, the zakaat will be fulfilled. It is permissible and not makruh to give an amount that is less than this.

9. A person comes to borrow some money and it is known that he is so poor and hard-pressed that he will be unable to fulfil this debt or that he is a very bad payer and never fulfils his debts. If the person gives him some zakaat money and also makes this intention in his heart that he is giving zakaat, then in such a case zakaat will be fulfilled despite the poor person regarding it as a debt.
10. If a poor person is given something as a gift, but in his heart the person has the intention of giving zakaat, even then zakaat will be fulfilled.
11. A poor person is owing you R10. You also have to pay zakaat for a sum of R10 or more. You forgave the poor person the R10 which he is owing you with the intention of it being zakaat. In such a case, zakaat will not be fulfilled. However, if you give him another R10 with the intention of zakaat, zakaat will be fulfilled. It will now be permissible to take this R10 from him as a fulfilment of his debt.
12. If a person has so much of silver in his possession that the zakaat on that silver amounts to 33 grams of silver and the market value of this 33 grams is two silver coins, then it is not permissible to give two silver coins in zakaat because these two coins do not weigh 33 grams. And if silver is paid in zakaat against silver goods, then the weight of the silver being paid is considered and not the price. However, in the aforementioned case, if gold, metal-base coins, clothing, etc. to the value of two silver coins is purchased and given as zakaat, or 33 grams of silver is paid as zakaat, then the zakaat will be fulfilled.
13. It is permissible for a person to appoint someone else to give the zakaat on his behalf. If the person to whom the money has been given does not make the intention of zakaat at the time of giving the money to a poor person, the zakaat will still be fulfilled.
14. You gave a person R2 to be given to another person as zakaat. However, this person did not give the very same R2 which you had given to him. Instead, he gave another R2 which was in his personal possession and thought in his mind that he will take the R2 that you had given him. Even in this case the zakaat will be be fulfilled. However, this is on the condition that your R2 is in his possession and he is now taking your R2 in place of his R2. But if he spends your R2 first and thereafter gives his own R2 to a poor person, zakaat will not be fulfilled. Alternatively, he has your R2 in his possession, but at the time of giving his R2 he did not make the intention of taking your R2 later. Even in this case, zakaat will not be fulfilled. He will now have to give R2 in zakaat again.
15. If you did not give him any money but merely asked him to give some zakaat on your behalf and he does this for you, the zakaat will be fulfilled. He should now take whatever amount he had paid from you.
16. If a person pays some zakaat on your behalf without your asking him to do so or without your permission, the zakaat will not be fulfilled. Now, even if you agree or accept his payment on your behalf, it will not be permissible. He does not even have the right to collect or ask you for that money.
17. You have given a person R2 to be given on your behalf as zakaat. This person has the choice of giving it to a poor person himself or asking a third person to give it on his behalf. When giving it to this third person he does not have to mention your name that this zakaat must be given on behalf of so and so person. If that person gives the money to a relative of his, or to his parents if he finds them in need, this is also permissible. However, if the person who was asked to distribute the zakaat is poor himself; he cannot take this money for his personal use. But, at the time of giving the money to him, if you told him to do whatever he likes with the money and that he could give it to whomsoever he wishes, it will be permissible for him to keep it for his personal use.

Zakaat on Produce of the Land

1. A particular place was in the control of the kuffaar. These kuffaar used to live there and lead their normal lives in that place. Thereafter, the Muslims invaded that place, waged war with the inhabitants, captured the place and propagated Islam therein. The Muslim ruler confiscated all the land of that place and distributed it among the Muslims. In the Shariah, such land is referred to as "ushri" land. If all the inhabitants of that place accepted Islam willingly and there was no need to wage a war against them, all the land of that place will still be regarded as ushri land. All Arab lands are also ushri lands.
2. If a person owns an ushri land which has come down to him from his forefathers or purchases it from a Muslim who inherited it from his forefathers, zakaat will be wajib on whatever produce that comes out of this land. The method of paying zakaat for such a land is that the person will have to see how the land was irrigated. If it was irrigated entirely by rain water or if the crops were planted on the banks of a river or stream and these crops grew without having to irrigate them, then one tenth of the total produce of such a plantation will have to be given as zakaat. However, if the plantation was irrigated through any other mechanical means, one twentieth of the total produce will have to be given as zakaat. The same rule applies to an orchard which is on such a land. This is irrespective of the amount of produce, i.e. zakaat will be wajib irrespective of whether the produce is of a considerable amount or very little.
3. The same rule applies to corn, vegetables, esculent vegetables, fruit, flowers, etc.
4. If honey is obtained from an ushri land, from the jungle or a mountain, zakaat on this honey will also be wajib.
5. A person planted a tree in his yard or planted vegetables or some other seed and later it bore some fruit. Zakaat on such produce is not wajib.
6. An ushri land does not remain ushri when it is purchased by a kaafir. Later, if a Muslim repurchases it or obtains it in some other way, it will not become an ushri land.
7. This one tenth and one twentieth which we have mentioned, is it wajib on the person who owns the land or on the person who owns the produce of the land? There is a difference of opinion among the ulama in this regard. In order to facilitate matters, we generally say that it is wajib on the person who owns the produce of the land. If the land is given out on lease, zakaat will be wajib on the person who owns the produce. This is irrespective of whether he pays the rent in cash or gives some produce of the land as a form of payment. But if the seeds were provided by the land owner, zakaat will be wajib on both the land owner and the person who owns the produce according to their respective shares.

Zakaat on Livestock

1. The passing of one full year is a prerequisite for zakaat on all livestock.
2. Zakaat is fard on livestock. Livestock refers to the animal in which the following factors are found:

(a) It must graze freely for a major portion of the year. It must not be fed in its stable. If it spends half the year grazing freely and half the year in it's stable; it will not be regarded as livestock. Similarly, if hay or straw is brought to its stable and it feeds on that hay or straw, it will not be regarded as livestock irrespective of whether this hay or straw was purchased or not.

(b) It must be kept for its milk, for the purpose of pro-creation, or in order to fatten it. If it is not kept for any of these purposes, and instead, is kept for its meat or as a means of transportation, it will not be regarded as livestock.

3. The prerequisite for zakaat on livestock is that it must be a camel, bull, buffalo, goat, or sheep. The female of each is also included. Zakaat is not wajib on wild animals such as buck. However, if these wild animals are kept for the purpose of trade, then the zakaat of tradeable goods will be wajib on them as well. The animal that is born through copulation between a domestic animal and a wild animal will fall under the classification of its mother. That is, if the mother was a domestic animal, it will also be regarded as a domestic animal. But if the mother was a wild animal, it will also be regarded as such, e.g. if an animal is born from a buck and female goat, the animal will be classified as a goat. If an animal is born from a white antelope and a cow, the animal will be classified as a cow.
4. An animal which was from among one's livestock was sold during the course of the year with the intention of trade. Zakaat will not have to be given on that animal for that year. The year for that animal will be calculated from the time that the person intended to use it for the purpose of trade.
5. There is no zakaat on young animals which are alone. However, if one is in possession of older animals together with younger animals, zakaat will be obligatory on both young and old animals. Furthermore, the zakaat itself will be paid with the older and not the younger animals. However, if the older animals die after the expiry of one year, zakaat will be waived.
6. There is no zakaat on animals which have been made waqf for the sake of Allawh.
7. Zakaat is wajib on horses which graze if both the male and the female of the species are together. One dinar per horse will have to be given. Alternatively, the value of all the horses should be calculated and one fortieth of the total be given as zakaat.
8. Zakaat is not wajib on donkeys and mules if they are not for trade.

The Nisaab for Camels

It should be remembered that zakaat becomes fard on five camels. If a person possesses less than five camels, zakaat will not be fard. In order to understand the zakaat on camels easily, the following table should be consulted:

1. If the number of camels is more than 200, the same method of calculation as has been followed from 150 onwards should be continued.
2. If a person possesses camels and gives a camel as zakaat, then this camel which he is giving as zakaat will have to be a female camel. However, if a male camel is of the same value as that of a female camel, it will be permissible to give a male camel.

The Nisaab for Cattle

Bulls and buffaloes fall under the category of cattle. The nisaab for both is also the same. If the nisaab of cattle can be completed by adding both together, then both will have to be added and zakaat given accordingly. For example, if there are 20 bulls and 10 buffaloes, both will be added together thereby completing the nisaab of 30. However, when paying the zakaat, the animal that is more in number will have to be given. In other words, if there are more bulls, then bulls will have to be given. If there are more buffaloes, buffaloes will have to be given as zakaat. But if the buffaloes and bulls are equal in number, then the cheap animal of the category which is regarded as more valuable should be given or the expensive animal of the category which is regarded as less valuable should be given. The following table may be consulted for zakaat on cattle:

The Nisaab for Sheep and Goats

As regards zakaat for sheep and goats, the nisaab for both is the same. If the number of goats and the number of sheep reaches the nisaab individually, the zakaat of both will be given together and the number of sheep and goats will be added together and zakaat given of the total number. If the number of each does not reach the nisaab, even then both will be added together in order to complete the nisaab. The animal that is more in number will be given as zakaat. But if both are equal in number, one has the choice of giving whichever one wishes. The following table may be consulted for zakaat on sheep and goats:

Who is Entitled to Receive Zakaat

1. The person who possesses the nisaab of either gold or silver, or trade goods which equal the nisaab of either gold or silver is regarded as a rich person in the Shariah. It is not permissible to give zakaat money to him. Nor is it permissible for him to accept or consume zakaat money. Similarly, the person who has belongings which are not for the purposes of trade but are over and above his basic needs, is also considered to be a rich person. It is not permissible to give zakaat money to such a person as well. Furthermore, although he is regarded as a rich person, zakaat is not wajib on him.
2. The person who has very little wealth or has no wealth at all to the extent that he does not have sufficient food for one day is regarded as a poor person. It is permissible to give zakaat to such a person. It is also permissible for him to accept zakaat money.
3. Large utensils, expensive carpets, etc. which are very occasionally used in weddings and other functions are not regarded as necessary items.
4. The following things are regarded as necessities of life: a house to stay in, clothes that are worn, slaves for domestic purposes, and furniture that is in use. If a person possesses these things, he will not be regarded as a rich person irrespective of the value of these items. It is therefore permissible to give zakaat to such a person. In the same way, the books and other essentials of a learned person are also included among the necessities of life.
5. A person owns several properties from which he receives rent. The income of these properties is used to run his own home. Alternatively, a person possesses a few cows from which he receives a certain amount of income. Despite this, he has a very large number of dependents whereby he cannot live a comfortable life and always finds himself in difficulties. Nor does he have any wealth upon which zakaat could be wajib. It is therefore permissible to give zakaat to such a person as well.
6. A person has R1000 in cash with him. However, he is also in debt for an amount of over a thousand rands. It is permissible to give him zakaat as well. However, if his debt is less than R1000, then this amount that he is owing will be subtracted from the cash that he possesses. Thereafter we will have to see whether the balance that he has is more than the nisaab of zakaat or less than it. If the balance is more than the nisaab, zakaat cannot be given to him. But if it is less, then zakaat can be given to him.
7. A person may be a very rich person at home. However, while on a journey, all his money got stolen or exhausted in some other way to such an extent that he does not even have sufficient funds to reach his eventual destination. It will be permissible to give zakaat to such a person. Similarly, a person who is travelling for hajj and who may be a rich person can also be given zakaat money if all his money gets spent.
8. Zakaat cannot be given to a kaafir. It will have to be given to a Muslim. All forms of charity can be given to a kaafir except the following: zakaat, ushr, sadaqatul fitr, nazr, and kaffarah.
9. Zakaat funds cannot be used for the building of a musjid, for the shrouding and burial of a deceased person, for the payment of debts on behalf of a deceased person, or for any other noble purpose. As long as zakaat is not given to the rightful person, it will not be considered to be fulfilled.
10. Zakaat cannot be given to one's ascendents. That is, to one's parents, maternal and paternal grand-parents and even great grand-parents. In the same way, zakaat cannot be given to one's descendants. That is, to one's children, grand-children, great grand-children, etc. In the same way, the husband and wife cannot give zakaat to each other.
11. Apart from the above mentioned, it is permissible to give zakaat to all other relatives such as one's brothers, sisters, nephews, nieces, maternal and paternal uncles and aunts, step father or step mother, step grandfather, father-in-law, mother-in-law, etc.
12. It is not permissible to give zakaat to immature children if their father is rich. If the children are mature and poor, but their father is rich, it will be permissible to give zakaat to them.
13. If the father of an immature child is not rich but the mother is, it will be permissible to give zakaat to that child.
14. It is not permissible to give zakaat to the progeny of Hadrat Faatimah radiAllawhu anha, the progeny of Hadrat Ali radiAllawhu anhu, Hadrat Abbas radiAllawhu anhu, Hadrat Ja'far radiAllawhu anhu, Hadrat Aqeel radiAllawhu anhu, Hadrat Haarith bin Abdul Muttalib radiAllawhu anhu. Similarly, the charities which have been made wajib by the Shariah cannot be given to the progeny of the above Sahabah. Such charities are, nazr, kaffarah, ushr, sadaqatul fitr. Apart from these, all other charities can be given to them.
15. It is permissible to give zakaat to one's Muslim servants, workers, employees, etc. However, this zakaat should not be included in their wages or salaries. Instead, it should be given separately as a gift. At the time of giving this gift to them, one should have the intention in his heart that he is giving zakaat.
16. It is permissible to give zakaat to one's foster mother and foster children.
17. The mahr of a woman was fixed at R1000. However, the husband cannot fulfil this due to poverty. It will be permissible to give zakaat to such a woman. It will also be permissible to give zakaat to her if her husband is rich but refuses to give, or if she has absolved him from giving the mahr. If the woman knows that if she had to ask her husband for her mahr, he will give it to her without hesitation, it will not be permissible to give zakaat to her.
18. A person gave zakaat to another person thinking that he is poor. Later, he learnt that this person was rich or he was a sayyid. Alternatively, he gave it to someone on a dark night and later realized that the person to whom he had given the zakaat was actually his mother or daughter, or any other relative to whom zakaat is not permissible. In all these cases, zakaat will be considered to be fulfilled and there will be no need to repeat the payment of zakaat. However, if the person to whom the zakaat was given learns that this was actually zakaat money and that he is not eligible to receive zakaat, he should return the zakaat money. If the person who gave the zakaat learns that the person to whom he had given the zakaat was actually a kaafir, he will have to give zakaat again.
19. A person has a doubt as to whether a certain person is rich or poor. Zakaat should not be given to him until it has been ascertained whether he is eligible to receive zakaat or not. If zakaat is given to him without ascertaining his financial position, the person should check with his heart and see to which side his heart is more inclined. If his heart tells him that the person is poor, zakaat will be fulfilled. If his heart tells him that the person is rich, zakaat will not be fulfilled and will therefore have to be repeated. But if he establishes the fact that he is indeed a poor person after having given the zakaat to him, then he does not have to give the zakaat again.

20. At the time of giving zakaat and all other forms of charity, one should first take one's relatives into consideration. However, when giving them this zakaat, they should not be told that it is zakaat so that they do not feel offended. It is mentioned in the Hadith that by giving charity to one's relatives one receives a double reward - one reward for giving charity, and one for showing kindness to one's relatives. After giving the relatives, if there is any remainder, it should be given to outsiders.
21. It is makruh to send the zakaat of one place to another place. However, it will not be makruh to do so in the following instances: (1) if one's poor relatives live at another place, (2) the inhabitants of that place are more deserving than the inhabitants of this place, (3) the inhabitants of that place are more involved in deeni activities. There is great reward in sending zakaat to students of deen and pious ulama.

Miscellaneous Masa'il on Zakaat

1. If a person mixes his halaal wealth with haraam money, zakaat will have to be given on the total amount.
2. If a person passes away without paying the zakaat which was wajib on him, zakaat will not be taken from his wealth. But if he makes a bequest that his zakaat must be paid from his wealth, then this zakaat will be taken from one third of his wealth irrespective of whether this one third will be sufficient for the payment of his zakaat or not. If his inheritors agree to give from the balance of his wealth (i.e. more than the one third), it will be permissible to take from this balance according to the amount that the inheritors specify.
3. If the creditor forgives his debtor from paying his debt after the expiry of one year, the creditor will not have to pay zakaat on this money for that year. However, if the debtor is a rich person, the creditor's forgiving him will be regarded as if he is destroying his wealth. The creditor will therefore have to give zakaat on this wealth. This is because the destroying of zakaatable wealth does not absolve one from paying zakaat.
4. The giving of optional charities is only mustahab when one's wealth is over and above one's necessities and the necessities of one's family members. If it is not so, it will be makruh to give optional charities. Similarly, it is also makruh to give all one's wealth to charity. However, if the person has full conviction on his trust in Allawh Ta'ala and on his ability to exercise patience and there is no possibility of any harm befalling his family, it will not be makruh to do so. Instead, it will be better to give all his wealth in charity.

Wajib: Literally means "obligatory'. In Islamic jurisprudence it refers to that act which has not been established by an absolute proof. Leaving out a wajib without any valid reason makes one a faasiq and entails punishment.
Zikr: The remembrance of Allawh Ta'ala.
Zil Hijjah: The last month of the Islamic calendar.
Zil Qa'dah: The eleventh month of the Islamic calendar.

BOOK XI

SACRIFICE

Sadaqatul Fitr

1. Sadaqatul fitr is wajib on the following persons: (1) the person upon whom zakaat is wajib, (2) the person upon whom zakaat is not wajib but who has wealth equal to the nisaab of zakaat over and above his basic needs. This is irrespective of whether the wealth is for the purposes of trade or not and irrespective of whether he had it in his possession for a full year or not. This sadaqah has to be given on or before the day of eid ul-fitr.
2. A person has a massive house, very expensive clothing which does not have any gold or silver lace on it, he has a few servants, he has lots of furniture and other items but does not have any jewellery, and all these items are in use. Sadaqatul fitr is not wajib on such a person. Alternatively, he has certain items which are over and above his basic needs, some of his clothing has gold or silver lace on it, and he also has some jewellery. However, all these items do not reach the nisaab of zakaat. Sadaqatul fitr is also not wajib on such a person.
3. A person owns two houses. He lives in one, and the other is either empty or given out on rent. This house is over and above his basic need. Therefore, if its value is equal to the nisaab of zakaat, sadaqatul fitr will be wajib on him. It is also not permissible to give zakaat to such a person. However, if this person is dependent on this second house, it will be considered to be a basic necessity and sadaqatul fitr will not be wajib on him. It will be permissible for him to accept zakaat and to give zakaat to him as well. In short, sadaqatul fitr is not wajib on a person who is permitted to receive zakaat and other wajib forms of sadaqah. As for the one who is not permitted to receive such charities, sadaqatul fitr will be wajib on him.
4. A person has some wealth that is over and above his basic needs. However, he is also in debt. In such a case, his debts should be deducted from his wealth. If the balance of his wealth equals the nisaab of zakaat, sadaqatul fitr will be wajib on him. But if it falls short of the nisaab, sadaqatul fitr will not be wajib.
5. Sadaqatul fitr becomes wajib at the time of fajr on the day of eid ul-fitr. If a person passes away before the entry of fajr time, sadaqatul fitr will not be wajib on him nor will it be given from his wealth.
6. It is best to give the sadaqatul fitr before going to the eid -gah. If it is not given before, there will be no harm in giving it after the eid salaat.
7. If a person gives his sadaqatul fitr before the day of eid, i.e. in Ramadaan, it will be fulfilled. It is not necessary to give it a second time.
8. If a person does not give his sadaqatul fitr on or before the day of eid, he will not be absolved from this duty. He will have to fulfil it at some time or the other.
9. Sadaqatul fitr is wajib only on oneself and not on behalf of someone else: neither on one's children, one's parents, one's husband nor anyone else.
10. If a small child receives some wealth through inheritance or some other way, and this wealth equals the nisaab, sadaqatul fitr should be given from this wealth of his. But if the child is born on the day of eid after the time of fajr sets in (dawn), sadaqatul fitr will not be wajib on him.
11. Sadaqatul fitr is wajib on those who fast in Ramadaan and also on those who missed out some fasts due to some reason or the other. There is no difference in ruling between the two.
12. If a person wishes to give wheat, wheat flour or parched, grounded wheat as sadaqatul fitr, he should give approximately one and half to two kilos. It would be preferable to give a little more than this amount. But if he wishes to give barley or barley flour, he should give double this amount, i.e. between 3 to 4 kilos.
13. If a person wishes to give any other dry grocery such as gram or rice, he should give an amount that equals the value of the amount of wheat or barley that has been mentioned above.
14. It is best to give the value of the wheat or barley in cash instead of the actual wheat or barley.
15. The sadaqatul fitr of one person could be given to one poor person or distributed among several poor persons.
16. It is also permissible to give the sadaqatul fitr of several persons to one single poor person.
17. Those who are entitled to receive zakaat are also entitled to receive sadaqatul fitr.
18. If the marriage of an immature girl is performed and she is sent to her husband's house, sadaqatul fitr will be wajib on her if she is rich. But if she is poor, we will have to see if she is old enough to serve her husband and at the same time old enough to be in his company. If she is old enough for both these things, sadaqatul fitr will not be wajib on her, her husband nor her father. But if she is not capable to do both these things, sadaqatul fitr will be wajib on her father. If she is not sent to her husband's house as yet, sadaqatul fitr will be wajib on her father irrespective of whether she is old enough to do both the above or not.

QURBAANI - SACRIFICE

There is very great merit in qurbaani. Rasulullah sallAllawhu alayhi wa sallam said: "During the days of qurbaani, Allawh Ta'ala does not like any act more than qurbaani. In the days of qurbaani, the act of qurbaani surpasses all other acts of piety. At the time of sacrificing the animal, this noble act is accepted by Allawh Ta'ala before the blood of the animal can reach the ground. Therefore, make qurbaani happily and open-heartedly." Rasulullah sallAllawhu alayhi wa sallam also said: "For every hair that is on the sacrificial animal, one reward is recorded for the person making the qurbaani." Glory be to Allawh! Can there be a reward greater than this, that a person receives hundreds and thousands of rewards for just one single qurbaani! If a person had to count the strands of wool on a sheep from morning till evening he will not be able to complete the count. Just try and imagine the innumerable rewards for one single qurbaani. Piety demands that even if qurbaani is not wajib on a person, he should make it in order to receive such great rewards. When this day of qurbaani passes, when will one ever get an opportunity like this again, and how will he be able to receive such innumerable rewards so easily? If Allawh Ta'ala has blessed a person with wealth, then apart from making qurbaani for himself, he should also make qurbaani for his relatives such as his parents who have passed away so that their souls will also be amply rewarded. One should also try and make qurbaani on behalf of Rasulullah sallAllawhu alayhi wa sallam, his wives, on behalf of one's spiritual guides, etc. If all this is not possible, one should at least make on one's own behalf because qurbaani is wajib on the person who is wealthy. Qurbaani is wajib on the person who is wealthy and who has been blessed with everything. If he does not make qurbaani despite all this wealth, who can be more unfortunate than him? Apart from this, he will also be regarded as a sinner.

Once the sacrificial animal has been laid down towards the qiblah, the following dua should be recited:

!!!!!!!!!!!!!!!!!!!!!!!!!!!!!!!!

Thereafter he should say:

!!

and then slaughter the animal. After slaughtering the animal, the following dua should be recited:

!!!!!!!!!!!!!!!!!!!!!!!!!!!!!!!!

1. Qurbaani is wajib on the person upon whom sadaqatul fitr is wajib. If the person does not have wealth which equals the nisaab of sadaqatul fitr, qurbaani will not be wajib on him. But if he makes qurbaani despite it not being wajib on him, he will be greatly rewarded.
2. Qurbaani is not wajib on a musafir.
3. The time of qurbaani commences from the day of eid ul-ad'haa, i.e. the 10th of Zil Hijjah until the sunset of the 12th of Zil Hijjah. Qurbaani could be made on any of these three days. However, the best day for qurbaani is the day of eid ul-ad'haa, followed by the 11th and then the 12th of Zil Hijjah.
4. It is not permissible to make qurbaani prior to the eid salaat. Qurbaani should be made when the people complete offering their eid salaat. However, it is permissible for those who live in the villages and on farms to make their qurbaani from the commencement of fajr time. But the inhabitants of cities and towns should make their qurbaani after the eid salaat.
5. If a city dweller sends his sacrificial animal to the village or farm, it will be permissible for this qurbaani to be made before the eid salaat even if this person is still in the city. Once the sacrificial animal is sent to the village, it becomes permissible to sacrifice it before the eid salaat. Once it has been slaughtered, the person can bring it back and consume its meat.
6. It is permissible to make qurbaani on the 12th of Zil Hijjah provided this is done before sunset. It is not permissible to make the qurbaani once the sun has set.
7. Qurbaani could be made at any time between the 10th and 12th of Zil Hijjah. One has the choice of making it at night or during the day. However, it is not good to make the qurbaani at night as there is the danger of not cutting one of the veins and thereby making the qurbaani invalid.
8. A person was a musafir on the 10th, 11th, and 12th but returned before sunset on the 12th. Alternatively, he made the intention of stopping over at a place for more than 15 days. In both cases, qurbaani will be wajib on him. Similarly, qurbaani was not wajib on a person due to his not having the nisaab which makes qurbaani wajib. However, he received some money before sunset on the 12th. Qurbaani will therefore become wajib on him.
9. It is best to make one's qurbaani with one's own hands. However, if a person cannot slaughter an animal, he should appoint someone to do so and also present himself at the time when the animal is being slaughtered. But if a woman cannot be present there due to purdah, then there is no harm in her not being present when her animal is being slaughtered.
10. At the time of slaughtering the animal, it is not necessary to make a verbal intention or dua. If the person has the intention in his heart that he is making qurbaani and thereafter makes qurbaani after having said Bismillahi Allawhu Akbar, the qurbaani will be valid. But if the person remembers the dua that has been mentioned above, it will be best to recite it.
11. Qurbaani is only wajib on one's own behalf. It is not wajib on behalf of one's children. In fact, if one's immature children are rich, even then qurbaani is not wajib on their behalf - neither from one's own wealth nor from their wealth. If a person makes qurbaani on their behalf, it will be considered to be an optional (nafl) qurbaani. However, this qurbaani will have to be made from one's own wealth. Under no circumstances should it be made from their wealth.
12. Qurbaani is permissible with the following animals: goats, sheep, bulls, buffaloes, camels. The females of each could also be used for qurbaani. Apart from these, qurbaani is not permissible with any other animal.
13. It is permissible for seven people to take shares from one bull, buffalo or camel. However, the condition for this is that no person's share should be less than one seventh of the total. In addition to this, the intention of all of them should be that of qurbaani or aqeeqah and no one should have the intention of merely consuming the meat. If anyone's share is less than one seventh, the qurbaani of all seven persons will not be valid.
14. If less than seven persons share one bull, e.g. if six persons share one animal and none of their shares is less than one seventh, this qurbaani will be valid. But if eight persons share one animal, the entire qurbaani will be invalid and no one's share will be accepted.
15. A person purchased a bull for the purpose of qurbaani. At the time of purchasing the animal, he made the intention that if anyone wishes to share the animal with him he will allow them to do so. Later, a few people joined him in sharing the bull. This qurbaani will be valid. But if at the time of purchasing the animal, he did not intend sharing it with anyone else and decided to keep the entire animal for himself, then it will not be good to share the animal with anyone else. If this person does happen to share the animal with someone else, we will have to see if this person who originally purchased the animal for himself is a rich person or a poor person. If he is a rich person and qurbaani was wajib on him, it will be permissible to do so. But if he is a poor person and qurbaani was not wajib on him, it will not be permissible for him to share this animal with anyone else if he did not make the intention to do so at the time of purchasing the animal.
16. A qurbaani animal got lost. The person therefore purchased another animal. Thereafter, he found the first animal. If this happened to a rich person, the qurbaani of only one animal is wajib on him. But if this happened to a poor person, the qurbaani of both animals will be wajib on him.
17. If seven persons share one animal, the meat should be equally distributed by weighing it in the proper manner. It should not be distributed by mere estimation. If the meat is not properly weighed and there is a difference in the amount of shares, this will be regarded as interest and also a sin. However, if the head, hooves and skin are also shared, it will be permissible to give less meat to the one who received the head, feet or skin. If a person receives the same amount of meat as the others and also receives the head, feet or skin, this will also be regarded as interest and a sin.
18. A goat that is less than a year old is not permissible. When it completes a full year, qurbaani of it will be permissible. Bulls and buffaloes have to be at least two years old. Camels have to be at least five years old. Sheep that are fat and healthy and appear to be one year old and if kept with one year old sheep cannot be distinguished, then in such a case a sheep that is even six months old can be used for qurbaani. But if this is not the case, then the sheep will have to be at least one year old.
19. An animal that is blind or more than one third of it's eye sight is lost, or one third or more of it's ear is cut off, or one third or more of it's tail is cut off cannot be used for qurbaani.
20. An animal that is lame and only walks on three feet without placing the fourth foot on the ground or places it's fourth foot on the ground but does not walk with it cannot be used for qurbaani. But if it uses it's fourth foot as a support and walks in a lame fashion, it's qurbaani will be valid.

21. An animal that is extremely frail to such an extent that there is no meat on its bones cannot be used for qurbaani. But if an animal is not so frail and is merely thin by nature, then the qurbaani of such an animal will be valid. However, it is best to use an animal that is strong and healthy.
22. Qurbaani of an animal that has no teeth at all is not permissible. But if a few teeth have fallen off and a major portion of the teeth are still intact, then such an animal will be permissible.
23. Qurbaani of an animal that was born without ears is not permissible. However, if an animal has very small ears, it will be permissible to make qurbaani of it.
24. It is permissible to make qurbaani of an animal that was born without horns or an animal whose horns were broken off. However, if the horns are removed from their roots, such an animal cannot be used for qurbaani.
25. The qurbaani of castrated goats, sheep, etc. is permissible. An animal that is mangy (afflicted with a skin disease) can also be used for qurbaani. However, if this animal has become absolutely frail due to this manginess, then it cannot be used for qurbaani.
26. If an animal was purchased for qurbaani and later it developed a certain defect whereby qurbaani is not permissible, another animal should be purchased in place of this animal. However, if a poor person upon whom qurbaani was not wajib purchased such an animal, he does not have to purchase another animal. He could use the same animal that he had originally purchased.
27. The meat of qurbaani should be consumed by oneself, it should be given to one's friends and relatives, and also given to the poor and needy. It is best to give at least one third away as charity. One should not give less than one third. However, if a person gives even a very little amount to the poor, there will be no harm in this.
28. The skin of the animal could be given as it is, or one could sell the skin and give the money derived from it as charity. This money should be given to people who are entitled to receive zakaat. Furthermore, the same money that one received for the skin should be given. It is not good for a person to use that money for some other purpose even if he gives that same amount at a later time. However, if he does so, his obligation will be fulfilled.
29. The amount received for the skin cannot be used for the upkeep of a musjid or any other noble deed. It will have to be given in charity.
30.The qurbaani skin could be used for one's personal use, e.g. it could be used to make a water bag, leather socks, musAllawh, etc.
31. No meat, fat or scraps of meat should be given to those who help in the skinning and cutting of the animal as a form of payment. They should be paid separately for the work which they have done.
32. The strings, ropes, chains, etc. of qurbaani should be given in charity.
33. Qurbaani was not wajib on a person. However, he purchased an animal with the intention of qurbaani. Qurbaani now becomes wajib on him.
34. Qurbaani was wajib on a person. However, he did not make qurbaani so much so that the three days of qurbaani also expired. He should therefore give the value of one goat or sheep in charity. But if he bought a goat and did not sacrifice it within those three days, he should give that very goat as it is in charity. That is, he should give it without slaughtering it.
35. A person took an oath that if a certain work of his is fulfilled, he will make a qurbaani. If his work is fulfilled, qurbaani will become wajib on him irrespective of whether he is a poor or a rich person. The meat of such a qurbaani will have to be given to the poor. The person cannot consume it himself nor can he give it to any rich people. If he happens to consume some of that meat or gives some to any rich person, he will have to give that same amount in charity again.
36. If a person makes qurbaani on behalf of a dead person out of his own will in order to send the rewards to the deceased person, it will be permissible for this person to consume the meat himself, feed others, and also distribute it to whomsoever he wishes. In other words, he can use it as he would with his own qurbaani.
37. However, if a deceased person had made a bequest that qurbaani be made on his behalf from his wealth, and qurbaani was made according to this wish of his, it will be wajib to give all the meat in charity.
38. If a person is not present and someone makes qurbaani on his behalf without his orders, this qurbaani will not be valid. And if a share was included in an animal on behalf of a person without his orders, the qurbaani of all the other shares will also not be valid.
39. If a person gives his animal to someone to take care of it, this animal does not fall under the ownership of this person who is taking care of it. It remains under the ownership of the original person. Therefore, if a person purchases this animal from the person who is taking care of the animal, the qurbaani will not be valid. If one wishes to purchase such an animal, one should go to the original owner.
40. There are several persons sharing one animal and they do not wish to divide the animal among themselves. Instead, they decide to distribute the entire animal among the poor, friends, relatives, or wish to use it for cooking and feeding. It will be permissible for them to do so. However, if they wish to distribute it amongst themselves, they will have to do so justly and on an equal basis.
41. It is not permissible to give the value of the skin as a form of payment to anyone because it is necessary to give it in charity.
42. It is permissible to give the meat of qurbaani to non-Muslims on condition that it is not given as a form of payment.
43. The qurbaani of a pregnant animal is permissible. If it's young one comes out alive, it will be necessary to slaughter it as well.

Aqeeqah

1. When a boy or girl is born to a person, it is preferable to name the child on the seventh day and to make aqeeqah. By making aqeeqah, the child is safeguarded from all types of dangers and calamities.
2. The method of aqeeqah is that if a boy is born, two goats or two sheep should be slaughtered. If a girl is born, one goat or one sheep should be slaughtered. Alternatively, if one wishes to take a share in a bull that is being slaughtered for qurbaani, then two shares should be taken for a boy and one share for a girl. Furthermore, the child's head should be shaved, the hair should be weighed, and gold or silver equal to the weight of the hair should be given in charity. If one wishes, saffron could be applied to the child's head.
3. If one does not make the aqeeqah on the seventh day, one should bear in mind the seventh day (when making the aqeeqah in the future). The method of calculating the seventh day is that the day that the child is born, aqeeqah should be made the following week but one day before that. For example, if the child is born on a Friday, aqeeqah should be made on the following Thursday. If the child was born on a Thursday, aqeeqah should be made on the following Wednesday.
4. The custom of slaughtering the animal at the exact time when the barber places his shaving machine on the child's head is nothing but a useless custom. According to the Shariah, it is permissible to slaughter the animal either before shaving the head or after. It is not good to insist on following customs that have no basis in the Shariah.
5. The animal that cannot be used for qurbaani cannot be used for aqeeqah as well. If an animal is permissible for qurbaani, it will be permissible for aqeeqah as well.
6. The meat of aqeeqah could be distributed raw, cooked, or it could be prepared as a meal and people could be invited to join in the meal.
7. It is permissible for the parents, grand parents, etc. to consume the meat of aqeeqah.
8. A person does not have sufficient wealth. He therefore makes aqeeqah of only one animal on behalf of his son. There is no harm in doing so. If a person does not make aqeeqah at all, there is no harm in this as well.

The Method of Slaughtering an Animal

1. The method of slaughtering an animal is that the animal should be placed on the ground with the face towards the qiblah. The person should take a sharp knife, recite Bismillahi Allawhu Akbar and cut the neck of the animal in such a manner that four veins (or passage ways) are cut off. They are: the air passage, the gullet, and the two jugular veins which are on either side of the gullet and the air passage. If only three out of these four are cut, the slaughter will be valid and the animal will be halaal. If only two of the four are cut, the animal will be considered to be dead and it will not be permissible to consume the meat of such an animal.

2. At the time of slaughtering the person intentionally did not take the name of Allawh Ta'ala. The animal will be considered to be dead and it will be haraam to consume it. But if a person forgets to take the name of Allawh Ta'ala, the animal will be halaal.
3. It is makruh to slaughter an animal with a blunt knife as this causes much suffering to the animal. It is also makruh to begin skinning, cutting, breaking the hands and feet of the animal before it can become cold (meaning, before it can become lifeless). Similarly, it is makruh to continue cutting the animal's neck after having cut the four passage ways.
4. At the time of slaughtering a fowl, it's entire neck got cut off. It is permissible to eat such a fowl, and not makruh. However, it is makruh to slaughter the fowl in such a manner, although consuming it is not makruh.
5. Slaughtering of an animal by a Muslim is permissible under any condition. This is irrespective of whether the Muslim is a male, a female, in a state of purity or in a state of impurity. In all conditions, an animal slaughtered by a Muslim is halaal. An animal slaughtered by a non-Muslim is haraam.
6. It is permissible to slaughter an animal with any sharp object such as a sharp stone, a sharp cane, a sharp bamboo, etc.

BOOK XII

CHARITY

The Virtues of Charity

1. It is mentioned in a Hadith that generosity is a great attribute of Allawh Ta'ala. In other words, Allawh Ta'ala is extremely generous.
2. It is mentioned in a Hadith that the servant of Allawh gives a small piece of bread as charity. In the sight of Allawh Ta'ala that small piece increases to such an extent that it equals the size of Mt. Uhud. In other words, Allawh Ta'ala increases the reward that one would have received for the small piece of bread to such an extent that he receives the reward equal to Mt. Uhud. We should therefore not concern ourselves with how much we give. Instead, we should give in charity whatever we are capable of giving.
3. It is mentioned in a Hadith that you should save yourself from hell even if it means giving a few dry dates in charity. That is, even if you have very little, give it in charity. Do not be under the misconception that how will such a meagre amount be of any benefit. This meagre amount will also be a means of deliverance from hell.
4. It is mentioned in a Hadith that you should seek sustenance from Allawh Ta'ala by spending in His path. In other words, by your giving charity, Allawh Ta'ala will grant you barakah in your sustenance.
5. It is mentioned in a Hadith that charitable deeds save one from calamities, discreet and undisclosed charity cools the anger of Allawh Ta'ala, and having good relations with one's relatives and family members increases one's lifespan.

If a person feels that by doing good deeds openly and publicly, others will also be prompted to do the same, then in such a case it will be preferable for him to do such deeds publicly. But if this is not the case, then it will be preferable for him to do them secretly. In both cases, the pre-condition is that there must be no other reason for carrying them out publicly or privately.

6. It is mentioned in a Hadith that the beggar has a right over the person whom he asks even if he comes begging on a horse. In other words, if a beggar comes begging on a horse, even then he should be given something because it is apparent that he is most probably in some dire need for him to come begging. In such circumstances one should not think that how can this beggar be really in need if he can afford to come on a horse. However, if it has been established through some means that this person is not in need and that he has made begging his occupation, then it will be haraam to give anything to such a person. It is also haraam for such a person to go around begging. Understand this well.
7. It is mentioned in a Hadith that Allawh Ta'ala is noble and He loves nobility. He loves good character and good manners, and dislikes evil character and evil mannerisms. In other words, He loves the person who shows lofty character in doing good deeds (such as spending in charity, saving himself from degradation, enduring difficulties on account of others, etc.) and He dislikes despicable ethics and habits (such as lack of vigour and courage in matters of the Deen.)
8. It is mentioned in a Hadith that charity cools the heat of the grave and that the person who gives in charity will be granted shade on the day of judgement. In other words, through the barakah of charity, the heat of the grave will become cool and the person will be granted some shade on the day of judgement.
9. It is mentioned in a Hadith that Allawh Ta'ala has chosen special servants of His in order to fulfil the needs of other people. People are dependent on such special servants for the fulfilment of their needs. In other words, these people are in such dire need, that they are forced to go to these special servants and Allawh Ta'ala has chosen them for this purpose. These special servants who fulfil the needs of poor people will be saved from the punishment of Allawh Ta'ala.
10. It is mentioned in a Hadith that Rasulullah sallAllawhu alayhi wa sallam addressed Hadrat Bilaal radiAllawhu anhu saying: "Spend O Bilal, and don't ever have any fear of any decrease from the Master (Owner) of the arsh." That is, spend freely on appropriate occasions and do not fear poverty from Allawh Ta'ala. In the above Hadith, the arsh is attributed to the ownership of Allawh despite His being the sole owner of everything else as well. The arsh has been specifically mentioned because it is one of the great creations of Allawh Ta'ala and to illustrate to us that if such a great creation is under His control, we should not fear poverty and difficulty from Him. Can anyone ever imagine that such a powerful king as He will deny us even two pieces of bread? Such type of thinking is preposterous.

The above Hadith in no way means that a person should spend so lavishly that he is left bankrupt and in financial problems. The focus of this Hadith is that those who are strong-hearted and have the strength to exercise patience should spend as much as they wish in noble deeds. Such people are not troubled by difficulties. They understand very well that they will receive whatever has been written down for them. By their spending in charity they will not experience any decrease, instead they will experience barakah in their sustenance. Persons who are endowed with such fervour and zeal are permitted to spend as much as they wish in charity and other noble deeds on condition that they do not usurp the rights of anyone in doing so. However, those who are weak-hearted and do not have the strength to exercise patience and fear problems in the future and feel that their intention will be corrupted, such people should only spend on necessary occasions such as zakaat, sadaqatul fitr, and on humanitarian grounds.

Once Hadrat Abu Bakr radiAllawhu anhu presented his entire wealth to Rasulullah sallAllawhu alayhi wa sallam so that it could be utilised in the path of Allawh. Upon seeing all this wealth Rasulullah sallAllawhu alayhi wa sallam asked him if he left anything behind at home or not. Hadrat Abu Bakr radiAllawhu anhu replied that he left behind Allawh and His Rasul sallAllawhu alayhi wa sallam and nothing else. Rasulullah sallAllawhu alayhi wa sallam accepted all this wealth because he knew that Hadrat Abu Bakr radiAllawhu anhu was strong-hearted, full of fervour, and extremely desirous of spending in the path of Allawh Ta'ala. He did not fear any evil consequences. On the other hand, Rasulullah sallAllawhu alayhi wa sallam refused to accept a small amount of gold that was brought by another Sahabi radiAllawhu anhu because he knew that the latter was not as strong-hearted as Hadrat Abu Bakr radiAllawhu anhu.

11. It is mentioned in a Hadith that a beggar came begging to a woman. At that moment the woman only had a morsel of food which was already in her mouth. She took that morsel out of her mouth and gave it to the beggar. After some time, a child was born to this woman. When the child grew a little older, a wolf came and snatched the child away. The woman came out of her house running behind the wolf and at the same time shouting for help. Allawh Ta'ala sent an angel and ordered him to free the child from the wolf's mouth. Allawh Ta'ala added: "Also convey My salaams to that woman and inform her that I did this in return for the morsel of food which she had given to that beggar."

This is the barakah of charity that the child's life was saved and the woman was also rewarded. We should give charity abundantly so that we may live in this world and in the hereafter in peace and comfort.

12. It is mentioned in a Hadith that the person who directs someone towards a good deed will also receive the same reward as the person who carries out that good deed. In other words, if a person cannot be of assistance himself, but directs the needy person towards someone who could be of some help to him, then this person will also receive the same reward as those who helped that poor person.
13. It is mentioned in a Hadith that there were three persons. One of them had 10 dinars out of which he gave one dinar in charity. The second person had 10 awqiyahs out of which he gave one awqiyah in charity. The third person had 100 awqiyahs out of which he gave 10 awqiyahs in charity. All three will receive the same reward because each one of them gave 10% of whatever he possessed. In other words, although some of them apparently gave more than the others, Allawh Ta'ala will reward them according to their intentions. Since each one of them gave 10% of his wealth, they will all be rewarded equally.

14. It is mentioned in a Hadith that the reward for giving one dirham has exceeded the reward for giving 100 000 dirhams. An explanation of this is that a person had two dirhams out of which he gave one dirham in charity. On the other hand, there was another person who had a lot of wealth. From all this wealth of his, he gave 100 000 dirhams. The difference in reward between these two persons is that despite the first person possessing only two dirhams, he gave half of all his wealth in charity, i.e. one dirham. As for the second person, despite his giving 100 000 dirhams in charity, he received a lesser reward because this 100 000 dirhams which he gave were less than half his entire wealth. How merciful Allawh Ta'ala is! We should value this mercy of His at all times. Rasulullah sallAllawhu alayhi wa sallam never ever refused a beggar. When he had anything to give, he would give it without hesitation. If he did not have anything, he promised the person that he will give him when he receives something. He and his family never ate bread made of wheat for two days consecutively. How merciless we are that despite having the means we do not help our fellow Muslim brothers. Instead, we are prepared to horde for ourselves.

15. It is mentioned in a Hadith that a beggar at the door of a Mumin (believer) is actually a gift from Allawh Ta'ala. It is obvious that a gift has to be gladly accepted especially if that gift is from Allawh Ta'ala. Therefore, we should help the beggar as much as we can.

16. It is mentioned in a Hadith that you should give in charity and cure your sick through charity because charity repels sicknesses and diseases and it increases your life and your good deeds.

17. It is mentioned in a Hadith that no wali (close friend) of Allawh Ta'ala was born except through generosity and good habits. In other words, generosity and good habits are most definitely found in the auliyaa', i.e. the close friends of Allawh Ta'ala.

Zil Qa'dah: The eleventh month of the Islamic calendar.

BOOK XIII

ENDOWMENTS

1. There is great reward in endowing one's building, property, orchard, etc. in the name of Allawh Ta'ala. This is referred to as waqf. Such possessions should be made waqf for the benefit of the poor and needy. For example, a person could stipulate that all the income of a particular building should be distributed among the poor. Or all the fruit that is produced from a particular orchard should be given to the poor. He could also stipulate that a certain house of his be used by the poor. This act of endowing a particular property or building is such that the person will continue reaping the rewards as long as that property or building is in use. This could continue until qiyaamah. As long as the poor and needy are benefiting from it, the rewards for this act will continue to be written in this person's book of deeds.
2. When endowing anything, one should ensure that he appoints a pious and religious person to oversee all the affairs of that property or building. This person should ensure that all the income of that property or building is spent as stipulated by the person who had made it waqf. It should not be spent in the wrong avenues.
3. Once a particular thing has been made waqf, it no longer remains in the ownership of that person. Ownership of that thing is now transferred to Allawh Ta'ala. It cannot be sold nor given to anyone. No one can interfere with it. It will have to be used for the purpose for which it was made waqf and cannot be used in any other manner.
4. It is not permissible to use anything that belongs to the musjid for one's personal use. For example, one cannot use its bricks, clay, lime, timber, stones, etc. for one's personal use. This is irrespective of how old and valueless it may have become. However, it could be sold and the money could be used for the musjid.
5. When endowing anything, it is permissible to make the following condition: "As long as I am alive, I will use a portion of the income or the entire income for my personal use. After my death, it must be given in such and such good and noble cause." If a person makes a condition of this nature, it will be permissible and halaal for him to use the income of that thing for his personal purposes and needs. This is also a good method of securing oneself from any future difficulties or financial problems and at the same time receiving the reward for endowing his property. Similarly, a person could make the following condition: "Whatever income is derived from this property, a certain percentage of it should be given to my children first. Whatever remains, should be given in such and such good and noble cause." Such a condition is valid, and the children will receive whatever has been stipulated for them.

BOOK XIV PILGRIMAGE

If a person has wealth which is over and above his basic necessities and which will be sufficient for him to make the onward and return journey for hajj, then hajj becomes fard upon him. There are great virtues in performing hajj. Rasulullah sallAllawhu alayhi wa sallam said: "There is nothing in return for a hajj that is free of sins and evils except paradise." Similarly, great rewards have been mentioned for performing umrah. Rasulullah sallAllawhu alayhi wa sallam said: "Hajj and umrah wipe out sins just as a furnace removes the rust that has settled on steel."

Severe warnings have been mentioned with regard to the one who does not perform his hajj despite it being fard upon him. Rasulullah sallAllawhu alayhi wa sallam said: "The person who has food, drink, and the means of transportation in order to undertake the journey of hajj and still does not go - Allawh Ta'ala has no concern if the person dies as a Jew or a Christian." He has also said that the abandoning of hajj is not the way of Islam.

1. Hajj is fard at least once in a life time. If a person performs the hajj several times, the first one will be regarded as fard and the rest will be regarded as nafl hajj. There is also great reward in offering nafl hajj.

2. Hajj that is offered before one can reach the age of maturity is not considered. If a person is rich, hajj will become fard upon him once he reaches the age of maturity. The hajj that he performed before maturity will be regarded as nafl hajj.
3. Hajj is not fard on a blind person irrespective of how rich he may be.
4. Once hajj becomes fard on a person, it becomes wajib on him to go for hajj in that very year. It is not permissible to delay in performing the hajj without a valid reason. It is also not permissible for a person to think that he is still young and that there is still plenty of time to perform the hajj. If a person delays in performing his hajj and performs it after a few years, his fard duty will be fulfilled but he will still be regarded as a sinner.
5. If a woman is going on hajj, it is necessary for her to be accompanied by her husband or some other mahram. It is not permissible for her to go on hajj without a mahram. However, if a woman lives within 77 kilometres of Makkah, it is not necessary for her to go with her husband or a mahram.
6. If the mahram has not reached the age of maturity, or he is so irreligious that he cannot even be trusted with his mother, sister, etc. it will not be permissible to travel with such a mahram as well.
7. Once a woman finds a reliable mahram, her husband cannot prevent her from going on hajj. Even if he prevents her from going, she should not pay any heed to him and she should continue on her journey.
8. A girl who is on the verge of reaching the age of maturity cannot go for hajj without a shar'ee mahram. She cannot even go alone.
9. If a mahram takes a woman for her hajj, all his expenses will have to be borne by the woman. It is wajib upon her to pay him for all his expenses.
10. If a woman cannot find a suitable mahram throughout her life, she will not be sinful for not performing her hajj. However, at the time of her death it is wajib on her to make a bequest that hajj be performed on her behalf. After her death, her inheritors should find someone to perform the hajj on her behalf. The expenses for this hajj should be paid from the money that she left behind. In this way she will be absolved of the duty of performing hajj. This type of hajj is known as hajj-e-badal.
11. If hajj was fard on a person but he delayed performing it until such a time that he became blind or became so sick that he is unable to undertake the journey, then he will also have to make a bequest for hajj-e-badal.
12. If a person dies, leaving behind so much of wealth that after paying all his debts, there is sufficient money to pay for the hajj-e-badal from one third of his wealth, then it is wajib on the inheritors to fulfill his bequest for hajj-e-badal. But if the money is so little that hajj-e-badal cannot be made from one third of his wealth, then the person's relatives should not undertake to have the hajj performed. The inheritors could also take the entire one third for the purpose of hajj-e-badal and supply the balance of the money from their own side so that the hajj-e-badal could be made. In other words, they should not give more than one third from the wealth of the deceased person. However, if all the inheritors happily agree to give their share of the inheritance for the performance of hajj-e-badal, it will be permissible to use more than one third of the wealth of the deceased. However, the permission of immature inheritors is not considered in the Shariah. Therefore, no money should be taken from their share.
13. A person made a bequest for hajj-e-badal and thereafter passed away. However, the wealth that he left behind was very little and hajj-e-badal could not be made from the one third. In addition to this, the inheritors refused to forego their shares in order for the hajj-e-badal to be performed. Bearing all this in mind, if the hajj is not performed, there will be no sin on the deceased.
14. The same rule applies to all bequests. If a person had many fasts to keep, many salaats to make qada of or some zakaat to be given, he therefore made a bequest for all this and passed away, then all these payments will have to be made from the one third. It is not permissible to use more than one third without the permission of all the inheritors.
15. If a person did not make a bequest for hajj-e-badal, it will not be permissible to do so by using the money which he had left behind. But if all the inheritors agree to this, it will be permissible. Insha Allawh, the obligation of hajj will be fulfilled. But it should be borne in mind that the permission of an immature inheritor is not considered.
16. If a woman is in her iddah, she cannot go for hajj.
17. If a person has sufficient funds for the onward and return journey to Makkah but not sufficient enough to visit Madinah as well, hajj will still be fard upon him. Many are of the incorrect opinion that as long as you do not have sufficient funds to go to Madinah as well, hajj does not become fard. This notion is absolutely wrong.
18. When a woman is in her ihraam, she cannot cover her face in such a way that the piece of cloth touches her face. These days, a latticed screen or fan is available for this purpose. It should be tied to the face with the screen in line with the eyes and with the burqah worn loosely above it. This is permissible.
19. The rules and regulations of hajj cannot be understood and remembered without really going on hajj. On going for hajj, one is taught all the rites of hajj, etc. We therefore do not feel it necessary to enumerate these rules and regulations. Similarly, the method of performing umrah can be learnt by going to Makkah.

The Visit to Madinah

If it is possible, a person should go to Madinah and visit the blessed grave of Rasulullah sallAllawhu alayhi wa sallam and the Musjid-e-Nabawi. This could be done before or after performing hajj. With regard to visiting Madinah, Rasulullah sallAllawhu alayhi wa sallam has said: "The person who visits me after my demise will receive the same blessings as the person who visited me during my lifetime." Rasulullah sallAllawhu alayhi wa sallam also said: "The person who goes for hajj and does not visit me has demonstrated great impoliteness towards me." With regard to Musjid-e-Nabawi, Rasulullah sallAllawhu alayhi wa sallam has said: "The person who offers one salaat in it shall get the reward of offering 50 000 salaats." May Allawh Ta'ala bless us with this opportunity and may He grant us the success to carry out good and pious deeds. Aameen.

The Virtues of Hajj

1. It is mentioned in a Hadith that the angels shake the hands of those hajis who go for hajj by some means of transport, and they embrace those who go for hajj on foot.
2. It is mentioned in a Hadith that when a person goes for hajj on a camel, for every step that the camel takes the person will receive 70 rewards. And the person who goes for hajj on foot will receive 700 rewards for every step that he takes. Although the Hadith mentions "camel", the same will apply to other forms of transportation as well.
3. It is mentioned in a Hadith that the person who goes for hajj and the person who is waging jihad are actually the guests of Allawh Ta'ala. If they make any dua to Him, He accepts it. If they seek forgiveness from Him, He grants it.
4. It is mentioned in a Hadith that the person who performs his hajj will intercede on behalf of 400 family members on the day of judgement. Apart from this, he will be purified of all his sins just as he was pure of sins when his mother had given birth to him. This is on the condition that his hajj is accepted. It is therefore incumbent on a person to ensure that this great ibaadah be accomplished through halaal earnings and that all the rites are fulfilled in the best manner possible. O Allawh! Bless me with such a hajj as well. Aameen.

The forgiveness of sins as mentioned in the above Hadith does not apply to huquq (duties and obligations) such as those forms of ibaadah which one has to make qada of or debts which one has to fulfil. Ibaadaat which one has to make qada of or debts which one has to pay have to be fulfilled because these are not sins but huquq (rights).

5. It is mentioned in a Hadith that the person who goes on hajj with haraam wealth, and then recites the following dua:

!!!!!!!!!!!!!!!!!!!!!!!!!!!!!!!!

Translation: O Allawh! I have presented myself over here in obedience to Your command.

(which is among the duas that have to be recited during hajj) Allawh Ta'ala replies to this dua by saying:

!!!!!!!!!!!!!!!!!!!!!!!!!!!!!!!!

Translation: "I do not accept your labbayk nor your sa'dayk. And your hajj has been flung back onto your face."

In other words, you have not presented yourself over here in obedience to My command. For, if you had presented yourself in obedience to My command, you would have spent your halaal wealth and come. Your hajj is not accepted because you have come to this great and pure place of Mine with your filthy wealth. You will not be fully rewarded although you will be absolved of your fard duty.

6. It is mentioned in a Hadith that when you meet a haji, make salaam to him, shake his hands, and ask him to make dua for forgiveness on your behalf. You should do this before he can even enter his house, i.e. the moment he returns from his hajj. You should ask him to make this dua for you because his sins have been forgiven. The person who returns from hajj is an accepted person in the sight of Allawh Ta'ala. There is, therefore, great hope in his duas being accepted. Inform him of whatever dua you wish him to make on your behalf irrespective of whether it be for this world or for the hereafter. However, you should do this before he can reach his house.

BOOK XV

RECITING THE QUR'AN

Reciting the Quran with Correct Pronunciation

It is wâjib to make efforts in reciting the Quran with correct pronunciation (tajwîd). It is a sin to display complacency and laziness in this regard. There are many rules of tajwîd. However, we will mention those that are necessary and simple. You should take extreme care in differentiating the following letters and pronouncing them correctly:

!!!!!!!!!!!!!!!!!!!!!!

is not read with a full mouth, but is read with a full mouth. is soft, while is hard. is read with a full mouth. is pronounced with the side of the tongue touching the left side of the jaw-tooth. It is wrong to pronounce it with the front teeth. It is necessary to practice pronouncing this letter repeatedly. is soft, while is hard. is read with a full mouth.

1. The following letters are always read with a full mouth:

!!!!!!!!!!!!

2. When there is a tashdîd ( ) on a noon and mîm, you should read it with ghunnah. In other words, read the letter through your nose to the extent that it takes to read an 'alif.

3. If a letter has a fathah ( ), kasrah ( ), or dammah ( ) and there is no 'alif, wâw, or yâ after it; then do not read it by lengthening its pronunciation as is the habit of many girls. It is wrong to read it in this way. For example, it is wrong to read as , or as , or as . Wherever the 'alif, wâw, or yâ is written, do not shorten it. In short, you should be particularly careful in differentiating between shortening and lengthening.

4. The dammah ( ) should be pronounced with a slight tinge of wâw, while the kasrah ( ) should be pronounced with a slight tinge of yâ.

5. If there is a sukûn on the nûn and it is followed by one of the following letters, then you should read it with ghunnah. The letters are:

Examples:

!!!!!!!!!!!!!!!!!!!

6. Similarly, if any letter has two fathahs, two kasrahs, or two dammahs whereby they produce the sound of a noon, and this letter is followed by any of the above mentioned 15 letters, then you should also read it with ghunnah. Examples:

You can search for similar examples.

7. If a nûn has a sukûn and it is followed by a râ or lâm, then that nûn is not pronounced and it becomes completely joined into the râ and lâm. For example,

8. Similarly, if any letter has two fathahs, two kasrahs, or two dammahs whereby they produce the sound of a nûn, and this letter is followed by a râ, or lâm; even then that nûn is not pronounced and it becomes completely joined into the râ and lâm. For example,

9. If there is a sukûn on a nûn and it is followed by a bâ, then that nûn will be pronounced like a mîm and ghunnah will also be made. For example,
will be read as
Similarly, if any letter has two fathahs, two kasrahs, or two dammahs whereby they produce the sound of a nûn, and this letter is followed by a bâ, even then that nûn will be read as a mîm. For example,
will be read as
In some copies of the Quran, a small mîm is written above that letter, while other copies do not have it written. Whatever the case may be, this pronunciation will have to be followed wherever this is found.

10. If there is a sukûn on a mîm and it is followed by a bâ, then make ghunnah on that mîm. For example,

11. If a letter has two fathahs, two kasrahs, or two dammahs and the letter following it has a sukûn, then in place of reading the two fathahs, one fathah will be read and the 'alif that is written will not be read, instead, the person will read a nûn that has a kasrah and join it to the letter that has got a sukûn. For example,
will be read as
Similarly, instead of reading two kasrahs, he will read one kasrah and join it with a nûn. For example,
will be read as
Similarly, instead of reading two dammahs, he will read one dammah and join it with a nûn. For example,
will be read as
In some copies of the Quran, a small nûn is written in-between the two letters. But if it is not written in any particular copy, this rule should still be followed.

12. If there is a fathah or dammah on the râ, it should be pronounced with a full mouth. For example,

But if there is a kasrah below the râ, it should be pronounced lightly. For example,

If there is a sukûn on the râ, then look at the letter preceding it. If the preceding letter has a fathah or dammah, then pronounce that râ with a full mouth. For example,

But if the preceding letter has a kasrah, then pronounce that râ lightly. For example,

There are certain places where this rule does not apply, however, you will not understand them now. In most places, the above-mentioned rules apply, therefore read them as mentioned.

13. If the lâm in is preceded by a letter that has a fathah or dammah, then pronounce the lâm with a full mouth. For example,

But if it is preceded by a kasrah, then pronounce the lâm lightly. For example,

14. Wherever you find a tâ marbûta ( ) whether it is written separately or joined to another letter, ( ) and you wish to stop at that tâ marbûta, then it will be pronounced as a hâ. For example,

will be read as

Similarly,

will also be read according to the above rule.
15. If a letter has two fathahs and you wish to stop at that letter, then an 'alif will be recited after that letter. For example,
will be read as
16. Wherever you find this sign ( ) in the Quran, you should elongate that word. For example, in the following word you should read the 'alif by adding several other 'alifs to it:

You should read the wâw by adding several other wâws to it:

You should read the yâ by adding several other yâs to it:
17. If you see any of the following signs, you should stop.

If you see any of the following signs, you should pause without breaking your breath. Thereafter, continue with your recitation.

If you see the following dots ( ) written twice in one verse, you have the choice of stopping at any one of the two places. You can stop at the first place and do not stop at the second place, or vice versa.
Where you see a ( ) written, do not stop over there. If any other signs are written anywhere, you have the choice of either stopping or not stopping. If there are two signs written, one above the other, then act according to the sign that is written on top.
18. When a letter has a sukûn and it is followed by a tashdîd, the first letter will not be read. For example, in the following words, the dâl will not be read:

In the following words, the tâ will not be read:

In the following words, the tâ ( ) will not be read:

In the following words, the tâ will not be read:

In the following words, the qâf will not be read:

However, if this letter which has a sukûn is a nûn, or is pronounced as a nûn on account of two fathahs, two kasrahs, or two dammahs; and the following letter is a yâ or wâw which has a tashdîd; then in such a case, a tinge of the nûn will remain in the pronunciation and the sound of the nûn will be created from the nose. For example:

19. In Sûrah Hûd, verse 41, the kasrah on the letter râ in the following word will not be pronounced like other râs. Instead, it will be pronounced with 'imâlah. 'Imâlah means to pronounce an 'alif so that its sound resembles the sound of a yâ and to pronounce a fathah to resemble the sound of kasrah. The word is:

20. In Sûrah al-Hujurât, verse 11, the letter sîn in the following words is not joined to any letter and the lâm following it is joined to the next sîn. Based on this, is read as:

21. In Sûrah Âl 'Imrân, verse 1, the mîm is joined to the lâm and when pronounced will produce the sound "mîmal". It is wrong to pronounce it as "mîm mal". The words are:

22. There are certain places in the Quran, which are pronounced in a certain way and in other situations they are pronounced in another way. You should bear these places in mind. Extract these places from the Quran and teach them to the girls and womenfolk. They are:
(a) Wherever the word ( ) appears in the Quran, the 'alif that follows the nûn is not pronounced. Only the first 'alif and the nûn is pronounced. It is read in this way:
(b) In Sûrah al-Baqarah, verse 245, the word is written with a sâd but pronounced as a sîn. In most copies of the Quran, a small sîn is written above the sâd. Even if it is not written, the sîn should still be pronounced. Similarly, in Sûrah al-'A'râf, verse 69, the word is written with a sâd but pronounced as a sîn.
(c) In Sûrah Âl 'Imrân, verse 144, in the word an 'alif is written after the fâ, however, this 'alif is not pronounced. This word is read as:

(d) In Sûrah 'Âl 'Imrân, verse 158, in the words the 'alif after the first lâm is written, but only one 'alif is pronounced in the following way:

(e) In Sûrah al-Mâ'idah, verse 29, in the word the 'alif is written after the hamzah, but not read. Instead, it is read in the following way:

(f) In Sûrah al-'A'râf, verse 103, in the word an 'alif is written after the lâm. This 'alif is not read. Wherever else in the Quran this word may appear, it will not be read. Instead it will be read as:

(g) In Sûrah at-Taubah, verse 47, in the word an 'alif is written after the lâm 'alif ( ), however, this 'alif is not read. Instead it is read as:

(h) In Sûrah Hûd, verse 68, in the word an 'alif is written after the dâl, but it is not read. Instead, it is read as:

Similarly, in Sûrah an-Najm, verse 51, in the same word, an 'alif is written after the dâl but not read.
(i) In Sûrah ar-Ra'd, verse 30, in the word an 'alif is written after the wâw, but not read. Instead, it is read as:

(j) In Sûrah al-Kahf, verse 14, in the word an 'alif is written after the wâw, but not read.
Similarly, in Sûrah al-Kahf, verse 23, in the word an 'alif is not read. Instead, it is read as:

(k) In Sûrah al-Kahf, verse 38, in the word an 'alif is written after the nûn, but not read. Instead, it is read as:

(l) In Sûrah an-Naml, verse 21, in the word an 'alif is written after the lâm, but not read. Instead, it is read as:

(m) In Sûrah as-Sâffât, verse 68, in the word two 'alifs are written after the first lâm. However, only one of the two 'alifs is read. It is read as:

(n) In Sûrah Muhammad, verse 4, in the word an 'alif is written after the wâw, but not read.
Similarly, in verse 31 of the same sûrah, in the word an 'alif is written after the wâw, but not read.
(o) In Sûrah ad-Dahr, verse 4, in the word an 'alif is written after the second lâm, but not read. Instead, it is read as:

Similarly, in verse 15 and 16 of the same sûrah, the word has been mentioned twice and in both places an 'alif has been written after the second râ. Most of the people reading these words, stop at the first word and do not stop at the second word. When reading in this manner, the rule is that the 'alif should be pronounced when reading the first word, and should not be pronounced when reading the second word. If someone does not stop at the first place, but stops at the second place, then even in this second place he should not pronounce the 'alif. That is, irrespective of whether he stops at the second place or not, the 'alif will not be read. If he stops at the first place, he must pronounce the 'alif, if not, he must not pronounce it.
Note: At the beginning of Sûrah at-Taubah, Bismillâhir Rahmânir Rahîm is not written. The rule with regard to this is that if someone is reciting the verses before this sûrah and intends to continue reading, then upon reaching the beginning of this sûrah, he should not read Bismillâh. That is, he should commence this sûrah without reading Bismillâh. However, if a person commences his recitation at this sûrah, or recites a part of it, stops reciting and thereafter recommences with his recitation; then in both these cases he must read Bismillâh.
Special advice to the teacher: Teach all these rules one after the other, and teach them over several days by applying them in quarter juz or half juz at a time. Also ensure that the students practice on them.
things that are utilised in this world, there is nothing better than a pious woman. In other words, if a person is fortunate enough to get a pious wife, it will be a great blessing. It is also a mercy from Allawh Ta'âlâ that she is actually a comfort for the husband and a means for his success in this world and in the hereafter. A person enjoys comfort from such a woman for his worldly needs and she also assists him in fulfilling his religious duties.
2. It is mentioned in a Hadîth that Rasûlullâh sallallâhu 'alayhi wa sallam said: "Marriage is my way and my sunnah." "The one who does not act upon my sunnah is not of me." That is, there is no relationship between him and me. This is actually a warning and a threat to the one who does not practice on the sunnah and a mention of Rasûlullâh's sallallâhu 'alayhi wa sallam anger on such a person. It is therefore necessary to be extremely cautious in this regard. Furthermore, how can a Muslim bear to have Rasûlullâh sallallâhu 'alayhi wa sallam displeased with him for even a moment. May Allawh Ta'âlâ grant us death before that day comes when a Muslim is able to bear the displeasure of Allawh and His Rasûl sallallâhu 'alayhi wa sallam.
It is mentioned in a Hadîth that Rasûlullâh sallallâhu 'alayhi wa sallam said: "Marry so that I can be proud (of your numbers) on the day of judgement over the other nations." In other words, Rasûlullâh sallallâhu 'alayhi wa sallam likes his 'ummah to be in large numbers and more than the other nations. If this happens, his 'ummah will be carrying out more good deeds, and in so doing he will receive more rewards and gain closer proximity to Allawh Ta'âlâ. This is because whoever from his 'ummah does good deeds, does so through his teachings. Therefore, the more people who act on his teachings, the more reward he will receive for conveying those teachings. We also learn from this that whenever and however possible, we should undertake to carry out those tasks and actions that will take us closer to Allawh Ta'âlâ, and that we should not display any laziness in this regard.
It is mentioned in a Hadîth that on the day of judgement the people will be standing in 120 lines. Out of these, 40 lines of people will be from the other nations while 80 lines of people will be from the 'ummah of Rasûlullâh sallallâhu 'alayhi wa sallam. Glory be to Allawh! How beloved Rasûlullâh sallallâhu 'alayhi wa sallam is to Him.
The one who is able to (fulfil the rights of a wife) should marry. As for the one who does not have sufficient wealth (to fulfil the rights of a wife), he should fast. That is, he should fast so that there will be a decrease in his desires. Fasting is actually a means of curbing his desires. If a person does not have a very dire need for women, and instead has an average need, and he is able to pay for her basic necessities, then nikâh is sunnat-e-mu'akkadah for such a person. As for the person who has a very urgent need, nikâh will be fard upon him. This is because there is a fear that he will commit adultery and thereby get the sin of committing a harâm act. If a person has a very urgent need but is financially incapable of maintaining a wife, then such a person must fast abundantly. Later, when he has sufficient funds to maintain a wife, he must get married.
3. It is mentioned in a Hadith that children are the flowers of jannah. This means that the amount of joy and happiness one will experience on seeing the flowers of paradise, that same amount of joy and happiness is experienced when he looks at his children. And we know fully well that children can only be obtained through marriage.
4. It is mentioned in a Hadîth that when the status of a person is increased in jannah, he asks out of wonder: "How did I receive all this?" (That is, "How did I receive such a high status when I hadn't carried out so many good deeds to deserve such a status?") It will be said to this person that this high status is on account of your children asking for forgiveness on your behalf. In other words, your children had asked for forgiveness on your behalf. In return for that, you have been accorded this status.
5. It is mentioned that the child who is born out of a miscarriage (i.e. it is born before the due date) will "fight"(wrangle) with its Creator when its parents are entered into jahannam. In other words, this child will go to extremes in interceding on behalf of its parents and will ask Allawh Ta'âlâ to remove its parents from jahannam. Through His bounty, Allawh Ta'ala will accept the intercession of this child and He will be soft and lenient towards it. It will be said to this child: "O siqt (which means, miscarried foetus) who is quarrelling with its Lord! Enter your parents into jannah." So this child will draw its parents out of jahannam with its navel cord and enter both of them into jannah. We learn from this, that children of this sort, who are actually a by-product of marriage, will also be of help in the hereafter.
6. It is mentioned in a Hadith that when the husband and wife look at each other (with love), Allawh Ta'âlâ looks at both of them with mercy.
7. It is mentioned in a Hadith that Allawh Ta'âlâ has taken it upon Himself (i.e. out of His mercy, He as taken the responsibility) of helping the person who gets married in order to attain purity from that which Allawh has made harâm. In other words, the person who marries in order to save himself from adultery with the intention of obeying Allawh Ta'âlâ, Allawh will help and assist him in his expenses and other affairs.
8. It is mentioned in a Hadîth that two rak'ats of salât performed by a married person is better than 82 rak'ats performed by an unmarried person. In another Hadith, 70 rak'ats have been mentioned instead of 82 rak'ats. It is possible that this means that 70 rak'ats are written in favour of the person who fulfils the necessary rights of his wife and family, and that 82 rak'ats are in favour of the person who apart from fulfilling their necessary rights, serves them more with his life, wealth and good habits.
9. It is mentioned in a Hadîth that it is a major sin for a person to be neglectful with regard to those whom he is responsible for (and to have shortcomings in fulfilling their needs).
10. It is mentioned in a Hadîth that Rasûlullâh sallallâhu 'alayhi wa sallam said: "I have not left behind any test and tribulation on men more harmful than women." In other words, of all the things that are harmful for men, women are the most harmful. This is because, out of his love for a woman, a man loses all his senses, so much so that he does not even take the commands and orders of Allawh Ta'âlâ into consideration. Therefore, a person must not fall in love with a woman in such a way that he has to act contrary to the Sharî'ah. For example, her demands for her food and clothing are more than what the husband can afford. In such circumstances, never accept any bribes in order to supplement your present income. Instead, give her from the ḥalâl earnings which Allawh Ta'âlâ has blessed you with. You should continue teaching your womenfolk and inculcate respect and good manners in them. Do not allow them to become impudent and disrespectful. The intellect of women is deficient, it is therefore incumbent to take special measures in reforming them.

11. It is mentioned in a Hadîth that you should not propose to a girl when your fellow Muslim brother has already proposed to her until he gets married or gives up this proposal. In other words, when a person has sent a proposal to a particular family and there is a likelihood of their replying in the affirmative, another person should not send a proposal to that same family. However, if they reject this first person, or he himself changes his mind, or they are not too happy with him and are still hesitant in giving a reply, it will be permissible for another person to send a proposal for the same girl.

The same rule applies to the transactions of buying and selling. That is, if a person is busy buying or selling something, then as long as they do not separate or abandon the transaction, another person should not enter into their transaction and should not offer a price above or below that which has been already offered when there is an indication that they are about to come to an agreement. Understand this well, and know that a kâfir is also included in this rule.

12. It is mentioned in a Hadith that a woman is either married because of her Dîn, her wealth or her beauty. Choose the one with Dîn, may your hands become dusty. In other words, a man may prefer a woman who is religiously inclined. While another may prefer one who is wealthy. While yet another may prefer one who is beautiful. However, Rasûlullâh ṣallallâhu 'alayhi wa sallam says that one should choose a religiously inclined woman and that it is preferable to marry such a woman. However, if the circumstances are such that a woman is very pious but at the same time she is so ugly that one's nature does not find her acceptable and there is a fear that if he marries such a woman there will be no mutual understanding between them, and that he will be neglectful in fulfilling her rights, then in such a case he should not marry such a woman. "May your hands become dusty" is an Arabic mode of expression which is used on different occasions. In this context, it is meant to create a yearning and a desire for a pious woman.

13. It is mentioned in a Hadîth that the best wife is one whose mahr is very simple. That is, it is very easy for the man to fulfil her mahr. These days, there is the habit of specifying a very high mahr. People should abstain from this.

14. It is mentioned in a Hadîth that you should look for a good place for your sperms because a woman gives birth to children that resemble her brothers and sisters. In other words, marry a woman who comes from a pious and noble family because the children generally resemble the maternal relations. Although the father also has some influence over the child's resemblance, we learn from this Hadîth that the mother's influence is greater. If the wife is from a disreputable and irreligious family, the children who will be born will be similar to that family. But if this is not so, then the children who will be born will be pious and religious.

15. It is mentioned in a Hadîth that the greatest right that a woman has to fulfil is to her husband, and that the greatest right that he has to fulfil is to his mother. In other words, after the rights of Allawh and His Rasûl ṣallallâhu 'alayhi wa sallam the woman has a very great right to fulfil to her husband, so much so that the husband's rights supersede the rights of her parents. As for the man, after the rights of Allawh and His Rasûl ṣallallâhu 'alayhi wa sallam, the greatest right that he has to fulfil is to his mother. We learn from this that the right of the mother supersedes that of the father.

16. It is mentioned in a Hadîth that if anyone of you wishes to engage in sexual intercourse with his wife, he should recite the following du'â:

!!

The virtue of this du'â is that if a child is conceived through this intercourse, shayṭân will not be able to harm this child in any way.

17. There is a lengthy Hadîth in which Rasûlullâh ṣallallâhu 'alayhi wa sallam addressed 'Abdur Raḥmân bin 'Auf raḍiyallâhu 'anhu asking him to have a walîmah even if it is with one sheep. In other words, even if you possess very little, you should spend. It is preferable to have the walîmah after engaging in sexual intercourse with one's bride. However, many 'ulamâ have permitted it immediately after the nikâh as well. It is mustaḥab to have a walîmah.

The Detestation of Divorce

1. It is mentioned in a Hadîth that of all the permissible actions, divorce is the most detestable in the sight of Allawh Ta'âlâ. The meaning of this is that divorce has been permitted at times of necessity. However, when there is no need, it is extremely detestable. The reason for this is that the purpose of marriage is to foster mutual understanding, mutual love, and comfort for the husband and wife. Divorce wipes out all these factors, shows ingratitude to the favours of Allawh Ta'âlâ, the husband and wife become distressed, and it results in mutual enmity. Based on this, it also results in enmity towards the wife, her family and her relatives. As far as possible, one should never ever intend to divorce one's wife. In all their dealings, the husband and wife should try and accommodate each other and live with love for each other. However, if there is no way that they can live together, there will be no harm in divorce. Understand this well.

2. It is mentioned in a Hadîth: "Marry and do not divorce (unnecessarily) because Allawh Ta'âlâ does not love those men who go around 'tasting' and those women who go around 'tasting'." In other words, Allawh Ta'âlâ does not like divorce to take place unnecessarily thereby resulting in the man entering into a second marriage and the woman entering into a second marriage. However, if there is a dire need, there will be no harm in this.

3. It is mentioned in a Hadîth that women should not be divorced except on account of immorality. This is because Allawh Ta'âlâ does not love a man who goes around 'tasting' and a woman who goes around 'tasting'. We learn from this that if there is any shortcoming in her purity and chastity, it will be permissible to divorce her. If there is any other similar reason, there will be no harm in divorcing.

4. It is mentioned in a Hadith that you should marry but do not divorce because by divorcing, the ('arsh) throne of Allawh Ta'âlâ begins to tremble.

5. It is mentioned in a Hadîth that shayṭân places his throne on water and then sends out his armies in order to delude and distract people. From among all these armies of his, the closest to shayṭân in rank and status is the one who was the most successful in spreading the most amount of mischief. From among these, one of them will come to shayṭân and inform him: "I have caused so and so mischief". Shayṭân will reply: "You have done nothing." (i.e. you have not really caused much mischief). From among them, another one comes and says: "I went to a particular person and did not leave him until I caused a separation between him and his wife." Upon hearing this, shayṭân brings him close to him, embraces him and says: "You have indeed done a great job." In other words, shayṭân's happiness is when husband and wife are separated. Therefore, as far as possible Muslims should not make shayṭân happy.

6. It is mentioned in a Hadîth that the fragrance of jannah is ḥarâm upon a woman who asks for a divorce without any real need. That is, she is committing a major sin. However, if she dies with 'Imân, she will eventually be entered into jannah after being punished for all her evil actions.

7. It is mentioned in a Hadîth that the muntazi'ât and the mukhtali'ât are actually munâfiqât. The muntazi'ât are women who tear themselves away from the control of their husbands by committing actions which cause the husbands to be displeased with them and thereby divorce them. As for the mukhtali'ât, they are women who ask for khula' without any real need. The meaning of munafiqât is that this trait is normally found in the hypocrites who expose a particular fact when in their hearts they conceal something else. Outwardly, nikâh is supposed to be forever, and here she is asking for separation! Such a woman is a sinner although she is not regarded as a kâfir.

The Virtues of Reciting the Quran

1. It is mentioned in a Hadîth that when anyone of you wishes to converse with his Creator, he should recite the Quran. In other words, reciting the Quran is like conversing with Allawh Ta'âlâ. The wealthiest people are those who carry the Quran. That is, those in whose hearts Allawh Ta'âlâ has placed the Quran. This means that there is no one wealthier than the person who reads the Quran and thereafter practices upon it. Through the barakah of practising upon it, Allawh Ta'âlâ grants the person internal wealth and external prosperity. Ḥasan Baṣri raḥmatullâhi 'alayh relates that there was a person who used to constantly come to 'Umar raḍiyallâhu 'anhu for his worldly needs. So 'Umar raḍiyallâhu 'anhu ordered this person to go and read the book of Allawh (i.e. the Quran). This person went away and 'Umar raḍiyallâhu 'anhu did not see him again. Later, when he met him, 'Umar raḍiyallâhu 'anhu began complaining to him. (i.e. he complained to him saying: "I was searching for you, where did you disappear?" When a person frequently visits someone and then he suddenly stops visiting him, the latter becomes worried as to where he has disappeared or what is his condition) This person replied: "I have found in the book of Allawh that which has made me self sufficient and independent of 'Umar." In other words, I have found such a verse in the Quran through which my eyes have turned away from the creation and I have begun to place my complete trust in Allawh Ta'âlâ. I used to come to you for my worldly needs, now what is the need for me to come. When mentioning the verse which he had found, the person was most probably referring to the following verse and other verses which contain a similar subject matter:

"Your sustenance is in the sky, and that which you have been promised (also comes from the sky)."
In other words, your sustenance and all your other needs have been provided for from Our court, so what is the need to turn to others?
2. It is mentioned in a Hadîth that the most virtuous form of 'ibâdah is the recitation of the Quran. That is, after all the farḍ acts, the recitation of the Quran is the most virtuous of all the nafl acts.
3. It is mentioned in a Hadîth that you should honour those who have memorized the Quran. The person who honours them has in fact honoured Me. And it is obvious that it is wâjib to honour Him.
4. It is mentioned in a Hadîth that the best among you is the one who learns the Quran and teaches it.
5. It is mentioned in a Hadîth that on the day of judgement, the parents of the person who learns the Quran and practices on its injunctions shall be made to wear a crown, the light of which will be brighter than the sun which illuminates your homes in this world. In other words, the light of that crown will be brighter than the light of the sun through which it illuminates your homes in this world.
If the person's parents will be accorded such a high status, what do you think the status of that person will be who practices on the laws and injunctions of the Quran?
6. It is mentioned in a Hadîth that the person who recites the Quran and thereafter thinks to himself that someone else has been granted a bounty greater than this bounty (the bounty of being able to recite the Quran), then without doubt he has despised something that Allawh Ta'âlâ has elevated, and elevated something that Allawh Ta'âlâ regards as despicable and insignificant. It is not befitting of a person who knows the Quran to speak in harsh terms with one who addresses him harshly and disrespectfully. Nor should he speak ignorantly with one who addresses him ignorantly. Instead, he should forgive him and overlook his faults out of honour and respect for the Quran.
In other words, it is necessary for the 'ulamâ and those learned in the Quran to regard the knowledge of the Quran as the greatest and the most virtuous. If they attach more importance to any worldly thing other than the knowledge of the Quran, then they have in fact despised something that Allawh Ta'âlâ has elevated. And if you despise something that the ruler has elevated, it is regarded as a major crime. It is also necessary on those learned in the Quran to abstain from conversing with people in an ignorant and disrespectful manner because the honour and respect of the Quran demands this from them. If anyone behaves ignorantly with them, they should forgive him.
7. It is mentioned in a Hadîth that Rasûlullâh ṣallallâhu 'alayhi wa sallam said: "The Quran is more beloved to Allawh Ta'âlâ than the heavens, the earth and whatever is in between them." In other words, the status of the Quran is higher than the entire creation, and Allawh Ta'âlâ loves the Quran the most.
8. It is mentioned in a Hadîth that the person who teaches a single verse to anyone becomes his master. It is not befitting for the student to abstain from helping his master at the time of need. Nor should he give preference to anyone other than his teacher if the other person is not higher in status than his teacher. If the student commits any of these acts, he has in fact broken one of the circles of Islam. In other words, by his doing this, he has put into Islam a great evil and abstained from fulfilling a great order of the Sharî'ah. The consequences of this is that there is a fear that he will be punished in this world and in the hereafter.
9. It is mentioned in a Hadîth that Rasûlullâh ṣallallâhu 'alayhi wa sallam said: "The person who does not respect the elderly, does not show mercy to the young and does not fulfil the rights of the 'âlim is not from my 'ummah."
The person who recites the Quran and teaches it is also included in this Hadîth. The meaning of this Hadîth is that the person who has any of these qualities is out of the jamâ'ah of Rasûlullâh ṣallallâhu 'alayhi wa sallam and his 'Imân is very weak. It is therefore necessary to respect the old, be merciful towards the young, and to honour, respect and serve the 'ulamâ.
10. It is mentioned in a Hadîth that the person who reads the Quran, understands its meanings and commentary, and yet does not practice on it, has made his abode in hell. In other words it is a major sin to read the Quran and not to practice on it. However, ignorant people should not rejoice under the assumption that they have not studied the Quran so if they do not practice on it there is no harm. This is because an ignorant person will receive a double punishment: one for not seeking knowledge, and the other for not practising.
11. It is mentioned in a Hadîth that Rasûlullâh ṣallallâhu 'alayhi wa sallam was told: "A certain person recites the Quran the entire night but in the morning he goes around stealing." Rasûlullâh ṣallallâhu 'alayhi wa sallam replied: "Very soon, his recitation of the Quran will stop him from stealing." That is, through the barakah of this recitation, he will abandon this habit of stealing.
12. 'Alî raḍiyallâhu 'anhu narrates that Rasûlullâh ṣallallâhu 'alayhi wa sallam said: "The person who reads the Quran, memorizes it, considers its ḥalâl to be ḥalâl and its ḥarâm as ḥarâm - Allawh Ta'âlâ will enter him into jannah and accept his intercession on behalf of ten persons from his family who were originally condemned to hell and upon whom hell had become wâjib.
13. It is mentioned in a Hadith that the person who listens to a single letter of the Quran while he is in a state of wuḍû, 10 rewards will be written in his favour, 10 sins will be wiped out, and his status will be elevated by 10. The person who recites a single letter of the Quran while he is sitting down and offering his ṣalât, 50 rewards will be written in his favour, 50 sins will be wiped out, and his status will be elevated by 50. The person who recites a single letter of the Quran while standing shall have 100 rewards written in his favour, 100 sins wiped out, and his status elevated by 100. Allawh Ta'âlâ will write one du'â in favour of the person who recites the Quran and completes it. This du'â will be accepted immediately or after some time.
14. It is mentioned in a Hadîth that the person who recites the Quran, praises Allawh Ta'âlâ, sends salutations to Rasûlullâh ṣallallâhu 'alayhi wa sallam and asks forgiveness from Allawh Ta'âlâ has in fact asked for success from its appropriate place. In other words, he followed the appropriate method of making a du'â whereby it is hoped that it would be readily accepted. In this context, praising Allawh Ta'âlâ means that one should say "Alḥamdulillâh" or words that have a similar meaning. To make du'â in this way after having recited the Quran has a special effect in the acceptance of du'âs as is apparent from this Hadith.
15. It is mentioned in a Hadîth that you should teach Sûrah al-Wâqi'ah to your womenfolk because it is the sûrah of wealth. In other words, by reciting this sûrah, one becomes wealthy and all the necessary expenses can be paid easily. Apart from this, one is endowed with internal "wealth" as well. As mentioned in another Hadîth that the person who recites Sûrah al-Wâqi'ah every night will never experience any shortage in his sustenance. Since women are weak-hearted, they become extremely distressed at the slightest hardship. It is for this reason that they have been specifically mentioned. On the whole, this sûrah is beneficial to all those seeking wealth; whether they be male or female.
16. The best reciter of the Quran is that person whom when he is heard, you get the impression that he is fearing Allawh Ta'âlâ. This means, that he reads with attention and concentration similar to that of a frightened person speaking in the presence of a king or ruler, ever on-guard that he does not say or do anything out of place.
The best way of reciting the Quran is for the person to make wuḍu', sit in the direction of the qiblah with humility, and begin his recitation thinking that he is conversing with Allawh Ta'âlâ. If he understands the meaning of the words, he should ponder over the meanings. Wherever the words of mercy are mentioned, he should ask for Allawh's mercy. Wherever His punishment is mentioned, he should ask for refuge in Allawh from His punishment. On completing his recitation, he should praise Allawh Ta'âlâ, send salutations to Rasûlullâh ṣallallâhu 'alayhi wa sallam, ask for forgiveness, ask for any of his other needs, and then send salutations to Rasûlullâh ṣallallâhu 'alayhi wa sallam at the end. While reciting the Quran, as far as is possible, do not allow other thoughts to enter the mind. If you happen to think of something, do not worry about it, it will disappear on its own. When reciting the Quran, try and wear clean clothes.

A Few Masâ'il related to Divorce

1. When it becomes necessary to issue a divorce, there are three ways in doing so: (a) the most preferable method, (b) a good method, (c) a bid'ah and ḥarâm method.

The most preferable method: is that the husband issues one divorce to his wife while she is pure, i.e. not experiencing hayd or nifâs. A further condition is that he must not have engaged in sexual intercourse with her in this entire period of her purity. He must not issue any other divorce till the end of the expiry of her 'iddah. The moment her 'iddah expires, the nikâh will come to an end and there is no need to issue any further divorce. This is because divorce has only been permitted at the time of extreme need. Accordingly, there is no need to issue several divorces.

The good method: is that the husband issues three divorces over a span of three periods of her purity. In addition to this, he should not engage in sexual intercourse with her during these three periods.

The bid'ah and harâm method: is that which is contrary to the above two methods, e.g. he issues three divorces in one sitting, he issues a divorce while his wife is in her hayd, he issues a divorce in her period of purity but he had already engaged in sexual intercourse with her in that very period of purity. In all these cases, although divorce will take place, he will be committing a sin for adopting such methods.

Understand all this very well. All the above situations (i.e. all the three methods) apply when sexual intercourse with the wife has taken place or they have at least met in privacy and solitude (the details of which have been mentioned in the relevant chapters). If they did not engage in sexual intercourse or did not meet in privacy and solitude, the rules are mentioned in the next mas'ala.

2. Once nikâh has been performed with a woman but they did not engage in sexual intercourse as yet, it is permissible to divorce such a wife irrespective of whether she is in her hayd or not. However, he should issue only one divorce.

GLOSSARY

Explanation of Islamic Terms

'Âlim: One who has attained a considerable amount of Islamic knowledge. He could also be referred to as an Islamic scholar.

Ẓihâr: Likening one's wife to one's mother. It is a form of divorce. For further details, refer to the chapter on ẓihâr.

BOOK XVI

THE IMPORTANCE OF KNOWLEDGE

Allawh Ta'ala says: "Allawh raises in rank those who believe among you and those who have been given knowledge." That is, Allawh Ta'ala elevates the rank of those who have brought Iman among you. That is, they have completed their Iman by doing good deeds and following the Shariah. It should be noted that wherever the Quran and the Hadith mention any virtue of bringing Iman, they refer to complete Iman. He also elevates the rank of those who have been given knowledge over those who have not been given knowledge. Here, the lofty status of the knowledgeable has been established from the Holy Quran. First He praised those who have brought faith. Thereafter, He specifically mentions the people of knowledge and says that they have very high ranks. And when Allawh Ta'ala says that a particular person is of a high rank, how great that person must be! In another place Allawh Ta'ala says: "Say, (O Muhammad!), are those who know equal to those who know not?" Here the question is used for negation. That is, those who have attained knowledge are much higher than those who have not.

Ahadeeth Related to the Acquisition of Knowledge

1.There is a Sahih Hadith which has been narrated in the Jaami as-Sahih: "Seeking knowledge is compulsory (fard) on every Muslim." (irrespective of whether he is a male or a female). We know that to leave out a compulsory act is a major sin. It should be also known that it is compulsory to learn the method of doing an act which in itself is compulsory. And it is mustahab to learn the method of doing something that is mustahab. So if salaat is fard, then to learn the mas'alas in regard to it are also fard. The same applies to fasting and other acts of Ibadah. If a person is employed somewhere or starts a business, etc., it becomes incumbent upon him to learn and put into practice the rules of the Shariah that are connected to employment, business transactions, etc. All this that has been explained is in regard to that knowledge which is compulsory on every person. There are other branches of knowledge which, if acquired by a few people, absolve the rest of the community from acquiring them. For example, it is necessary to have at least one Aalim in every town and city who is well versed in the Quran, Hadith, jurisprudence, etc. He must be able to defend Islam against the onslaughts of the opposition, and if asked a mas'ala, he must be able to answer it with ease. To acquire knowledge of this type is not compulsory on every person. However, if someone has the time, the desire and the opportunity to acquire this type of knowledge despite it not being compulsory on him, then to acquire it will be mustahab and there is great reward in it. This was a brief explanation to show that the acquisition of knowledge is compulsory.

2. It is mentioned in a Hadith that Rasulullah sallAllawhu alayhi wa sallam said: "When Allawh desires good for a person, He gives him an understanding of the Deen. I am a distributor of knowledge and Allawh is the real giver." (Bukhari and Muslim)

3. It is also related in a Hadith that when a person dies, his deeds are cut off, except the reward of three deeds: (1) sadaqah-e-jaariyah (continuous charity - example endowing a property, building, well, or musjid in the name of Allawh), (2) knowledge which benefits the people (for example by teaching, writing books, etc.), (3) a pious child that makes duas for the deceased. (Muslim) The meaning of this Hadith is that the reward of all good deeds ceases once the person dies. This is so because a dead person cannot do any good, so why should he get any reward? However, these three deeds are such that their rewards continue after death as well. These deeds are such, that they continue even after death because in sadaqah-e-jaariyah the people continue benefitting from it. Similarly, the benefit of knowledge also continues. And pious children make duas for their parents, so this act also remains after one's death.

4. Kathir bin Qays (he is a taabi'ee - a taabi'ee is one who saw a Sahabi in a state of Islam and also died as a Muslim) relates: "I was sitting in the musjid of Damascus with Hadrat Abu Darda radiAllawhu anhu. A person came to Hadrat Abu Darda radiAllawhu anhu and said: "O Abu Darda, I have left Madinah and come to you so that I may learn a particular Hadith from you. I have been given to understand that you have heard this Hadith from Rasulullah sallAllawhu alayhi wa sallam. I have not come to you for any other purpose." Hadrat Abu Darda replied: "Without doubt, I have heard Rasulullah sallAllawhu alayhi wa sallam saying: "Whoever takes a path seeking knowledge therein, Allawh Ta'ala will make easy for him, a path to jannah. The angels, out of happiness, will place down their wings for the seeker of knowledge (laying down the wings is out of humility for the seeker of knowledge. Or it means that they have kindness and mercy for the seeker of knowledge, the result of which is making dua for his success. This is a sign that the person is accepted in the eyes of Allawh because angels are sinless and are the special servants of Allawh. To be accepted by the angels is like being accepted by Allawh Ta'ala because your friend's friend is also your friend) and whatever is in the heavens and the earth seek forgiveness for the seeker of knowledge (that is they seek forgiveness for his sins) and even the fish in the sea seek forgiveness for him. It is apparent that the disbelievers and the shayateen are not included among those who seek forgiveness, because they do not deserve this bounty. If they disobey the Creator, how can they have good relations with the friends of the Creator? This is something that is obvious, therefore it was not mentioned in the Hadith. The Ulama say that it refers to all animals and not only fish. Fish have been specifically mentioned because water comes into existence through the barakah of the ulama and it is also the source of life, and we also know that fish are dependent on water. The superiority of an aalim over an aabid (worshipper) is like the superiority of the fourteenth moon over all the stars. In other words, it is as if the aalim is the fourteenth moon and the worshipper is like the stars. The aalim is likened to the moon of the fourteenth night which illuminates the entire universe. Because the benefit of knowledge extends to others as well, and the entire universe is illuminated with this knowledge, he has therefore been likened to the moon of the fourteenth night. As for the worshipper, his benefit is restricted to himself. Others cannot benefit from him. He has therefore been compared to the stars. If someone argues that by looking at the aabid one also yearns to do Ibaadat and that through the blessings of his Ibaadat, the mercy of Allawh descends on the people. And in the same way, the land is also illuminated by the stars. Then the answer to all this is that all these benefits are nothing compared to the benefits of the aalim and the moon. In fact, they are not even worthy of consideration.

Aalim in this context refers to that person who knows more than the basic tenets (such as salaat, fasting, etc.) of Islam while an aabid refers to that worshipper who has a basic knowledge of Deen and occupies himself in Ibaadat and is not inclined towards intellectual pursuits. It does not refer to an ignorant worshipper because what Ibaadat can he make, and how can his Ibaadat be correct? It is therefore necessary for the aabid to have a basic knowledge of the Deen.

There is no doubt that the Ulama are the inheritors of the Prophets. We know that they did not leave behind any dinars or dirhams (i.e. they did not make anyone inheritors of worldly possessions). They did not leave behind any inheritance besides knowledge. So the one who acquires this knowledge has in fact acquired a lot of good. (This Hadith has been quoted from Mishkaat and narrated by Imam Ahmad, Tirmidhi, Ibn Majah, Abu Daud and Daarimi).

5.Hadrat Abdullah bin Abbas radiAllawhu anhu narrates that to acquire and transmit knowledge (by writing etc) for a portion of the night is better than making Ibaadat for the entire night. (Daarimi). One should understand that by mentioning all these virtues of knowledge, it does not mean that optional prayers should be discarded completely. Instead, some time should be kept aside for optional prayers. However, more time should be spent in intellectual pursuits because this is the greatest form of Ibaadat. Knowledge in the above context refers to Deeni knowledge.

6. It is mentioned in a Hadith: "Wayl is for the one who has no knowledge." (Wayl is the name of a pit in hell as has been mentioned in another Hadith. It also means destruction or terrible doom). In other words, the abode of a jaahil (ignorant person) is hell because very seldom does a jaahil die with Iman.

7. It is related in a Hadith that Rasulullah sallAllawhu alayhi wa sallam said: "I swear by Allawh that He will not put any of His beloved servants into hell." This Hadith has been narrated through a correct chain of narrators in Jaami as-Sagheer. It is obvious that only an aalim who practises on his knowledge can be the beloved and close one of Allawh. As for the jaahil, he can never be accepted by Allawh. In order to save one's self from the fearful punishment of Allawh Ta'ala and gain His pleasure, it is necessary for one to occupy oneself with knowledge and to practise on that knowledge. A poet says: "Whatever difficulties the friends of Allawh experience in this world, are in reality their punishment. And forgiveness for their sins is sufficient. By Allawh! hell will not punish them after this." But understand well that the friend of Allawh, for whom such great glad tidings have been given, can only be that person who seeks His pleasure and follows His commands all the time. If by chance a sin is committed, one should repent immediately.

8. It is mentioned in a Hadith that "You should make Allawh beloved in the eyes of the people and Allawh Ta'ala will make you His beloved." (Kanzul Ummaal) That is, address the people, and by reminding them of the favours and bounties of Allawh, make them turn towards Allawh. Educate them in such a way that they begin to yearn for Allawh Ta'ala. The result of this will be that Allawh Ta'ala will begin to love you. That is, He will shower you with the highest form of mercy. It is obvious that this work can only be carried out by an aalim who practises on his knowledge and no one else. What great glad-tidings are in this for the ulama and sufis! What bounty can be greater in this world and in the hereafter than becoming the beloved of the Real Master? (O Allawh! make me Your best servant as well - Aameen).

9. It is related in a Hadith that the one who will practise on his knowledge, Allawh will grant him knowledge which he does not know. (Hulyatul Awliyaa) That is, he will be given the knowledge of unknown things and thereby progress even further with his knowledge.

10. It is related in a Hadith that when an aalim intends to please his Creator with his knowledge, then everything else (in the world) will fear him. (i.e. he will have nothing to fear).

11. In another Hadith it is mentioned that if the ulama are not the friends of Allawh, then in the hereafter Allawh has no friend. Meaning that an aalim is in reality a wali. (Sakhaawi).

12. It is mentioned in a Hadith that to look at the face of an aalim is an act of Ibaadat. (Daylami - on the authority of Anas radiAllawhu anhu)

Rasulullah sallAllawhu alayhi wa sallam is reported to have said: "Allawh be pleased with that man (and woman) who hears something from me and then conveys it to others exactly as he heard it. The reason is that often, the person who receives the message is more knowledgeable than the one who conveys it." (Tirmidhi and Ibn Majah). How great a virtue has been attached to the knowledge of Deen that Rasulullah sallAllawhu alayhi wa sallam honoured the one who serves the Deen, especially the one who serves the science of Hadith by including him in his blessed dua. The Ulama have stated that through the learning and teaching of Hadith, if there was no other benefit apart from the blessings of this dua; even then one cannot afford to leave these blessings. In reality, great rewards apart from the blessings of this dua are found. O people! value this pious dua, seek knowledge of the Deen and there will be success in this world and in the hereafter.

13. It is mentioned in a Hadith that even if one person accepts Islam at the hands of someone, he will definitely get paradise. (Tabrani) In this Hadith there are glad tidings of dying in a state of Iman because if a person dies in a state of Iman, he will definitely enter paradise. To make someone a Muslim is actually the work of an aalim. What guidance will a jaahil who does not even know the rules himself be able to give to others? Here, aalim does not refer to a top ranking aalim. Instead, his virtue will be according to whatever knowledge he has.

14. It is related in a Sahih Hadith that Rasulullah sallAllawhu alayhi wa sallam said: "Whoever conveys forty Ahadeeth to my ummah, I will make a special intercession for him on the day of Qiyamat." (Jaami as-Sagheer) Here, "conveying" is general - it could be done through teaching, through writing, or by delivering lectures. In other words, convey it in any way as long as it is conveyed to the people. It is for this reason that the ulama have written many compilations of "Forty Ahadeeth".

15. It is mentioned in a Hadith: "Most certainly, Allawh does not like an aalim who is fat." (Bayhaqi) This means that the aalim who is a practising aalim can never be fat on account of his services to the Deen and fear of the Hereafter. Being fat is actually an indication of living a life of luxury and pleasure and falling into negligence. Such a person cannot be accepted. At times negligence, luxuries and pleasures are considered to be sins. Some of them are makruh, while others are below the stage of perfection. The dislike of Allawh will be according to the level of negligence. However, if a person is fat from birth or due to some illness, then this obesity will not be a cause of dislike on the part of Allawh Ta'ala.

16. It is mentioned in a Hadith that the most severely punished person on the day of Qiyamat will be that aalim who did not benefit from his knowledge. (Jaami as-Sagheer)

17. It is mentioned in a Hadith that there is a valley in hell which seeks refuge four hundred times daily. The proud and haughty ulama will be entered into it. (Mishkaat) This refers to that aalim who renders religious services in order to show people. He acquires and imparts knowledge so that people may regard him as an aalim, respect him, give him money and regard him as a pious person. To offer acts of worship in order to show anyone other than Allawh is a major sin and is also a form of shirk (ascribing partners to Allawh).

18. Hadrat Abdullah bin Mas'ud radiAllawhu anhu says that if the people of knowledge valued knowledge and placed it in the right hands (i.e. passed it on to those who have the capability of acquiring it and becoming leaders. To teach that which is compulsory, is necessary on every person, but more than the basic with which a person can lead others, should only be taught to those who have the capability); then without doubt, the Jews and the Christians would have become leaders of the time on account of their knowledge. However, they wasted their knowledge on the worldly people in order that they may gain some worldly benefit from them. As a result, they became wretched and disgraced in the eyes of the worldly people. (This happened because the right of knowledge was that through it the pleasure of Allawh should have been sought. By seeking the benefits of this world, they actually disgraced knowledge, the result of which was that they themselves became disgraced. If an aalim does not have any greed and fulfils the rights of the Deen, Allawh Ta'ala will automatically put respect in the hearts of the people for him. In the same way, the one who seeks the world through knowledge and does not fulfil the rights of knowledge, Allawh Ta'ala disgraces him. Such a person will suffer a loss in both the worlds). I have heard Rasulullah sallAllawhu alayhi wa sallam saying that the person who makes all his concerns and objects into one object alone, and that is the object of the hereafter (i.e. his aim and object is the hereafter and he continually tries to put this aim in order and leaves all his other aims and concerns to Allawh according to the rules of the Shariah), then Allawh Ta'ala will fulfil all his aims of this world. In other words, Allawh Ta'ala will fulfil all his worldly affairs in a way that will be most beneficial to him. As for the one who is in turmoil on account of sorrow and worldly aims and objectives, Allawh will not worry in which valley of this world he will be destroyed." (here, valley refers to difficulties and hardships). (Ibn Majah)

O Muslim brothers and sisters! Ponder a little and save yourselves and your children from the darkness of ignorance and confine yourselves to the commandments of Allawh Ta'ala all the time. When a person devotes himself totally to Allawh Ta'ala, then Allawh loves him and helps him in many ways. And when Allawh becomes a person's, then what can he be short of? Is there a shortfall of anything in the treasures of Allawh? But all these favours can only be attained by obeying Him. It is mentioned in a Hadith that whatever can be received from Allawh Ta'ala can only be got by obeying Him. These days, the ways of thinking have become so corrupt that religious education is regarded as a drawback and defect. And it is said that by acquiring religious education, what can one achieve besides poverty? Modern culture, modern ways of thinking, following the footsteps of the kuffaar (disbelievers) - all these things have become a source of pride and honour, and are regarded as progress. In actual fact, these are the very things which cause the wrath of Allawh to descend daily. At times there is a plague, at times there is a flood of poverty and anxieties, and at times there is a drought. These are only the difficulties of this world. As for the punishment of the hereafter, it will be multiplied manifold. May Allawh Ta'ala have mercy on the Muslims.

We do not say that, according to need, worldly knowledge should not be acquired, or that a profession or business be abandoned. What we are saying is that do not remain ignorant of the Deen. Do not destroy the Deen but do everything according to the Shariah. Following the Shariah without knowledge is impossible. It has been experienced that the one who follows the Deen completely also lives a life of honour and comfort. Even a single person will not be found who is extremely pious, and yet is in poverty and living a life of anxiety, contempt and wretchedness.

This world is a place of trials. The actual abode is the hereafter and it is there that one will live forever. It is necessary to make preparations for inhabiting that world, and as for this world, live in it as you would stay in a hotel or lodge.

Save yourself and your children from the darkness of modernism. This apparent light of modernism is actually very dark and would destroy one's Deen. When a person holds on tight to the Deen, he gets the world submissive to him, and he in turn does not even pay any attention to it - as has been mentioned in a Hadith. Hadrat Abdullah ibn Abbas radiAllawhu anhuma narrates that Allawh Ta'ala gave Hadrat Sulayman alayhis salaam to choose between knowledge and kingship. He chose knowledge. Allawh Ta'ala gave him knowledge and kingship as well. And He gave him such a kingdom that it became a proverb - when a person wants to exalt a kingdom, he refers to it as Mulk-e-Sulaymani (the Kingdom of Sulayman). No one will receive a kingdom like his right until the day of Qiyamat, and no one before Sulayman alayhis salaam received such a kingdom. It is obvious that the mastery of Sulayman alayhis salaam over the world was through the barakah of Deen - that he gave preference to knowledge over kingship.

Hadrat Saalim bin Abi al-Ja'd, a great tabi'ee, says: "When my master freed me (he was a slave), I pondered over what occupation I should choose with which I could pass my time. Until now I was fulfilling the orders of my master and all my time used to pass in that. Now that I am free, some other arrangement will have to be made. It came to my mind that I should acquire knowledge, so I did this. One year had not even passed, when the governor of Madinah wanted to meet me, but I did not allow him to come to me. What I mean is that because of a specific reason, I did not meet him even though to refuse to meet him without any special reason is contrary to the Deen and also amounts to disrespect. Anyhow, what I am trying to say is that in this short period my status increased to such an extent that governors began visiting me. And without realizing it, I could not meet them and clearly refused them." Really, this is the barakah of Deen. Fear of anyone except Allawh does not remain in the heart. Whoever fears Allawh alone, everything else fears him. Such people do not become disgraced out of greed nor do they become dependent on anyone. Read these themes with full concentration. Both these stories, i.e. the story of Hadrat Sulayman alayhis salaam and Hadrat Saalim, have both been extracted from the book Ihyaa ul-Uloom and its commentary.

19. It is mentioned in a Hadith that one should seek knowledge on Mondays. In doing so, there is ease in acquiring knowledge. (Kanzul Ummaal) A similar narration has come in regard to Thursdays. What this means is that it is better to commence a book on a Monday or Thursday. Similarly, it is better to commence any other intellectual pursuit on these days.

20. It is related in a Hadith that: "Whoever teaches someone even one verse of the Quran, then that teacher becomes a master over that student." (Tabrani) That is, the teacher has become a master, and the student, his slave. What this means is that the teacher has many rights. As far as possible, the teacher and spiritual guide should be obeyed and their pleasure sought. They are the ones who remove one from darkness into light, and lead one to the original beloved, that is Allawh Ta'ala. Can there be any kindness better than this? To be a slave does not mean that the teacher can sell the student. What it means is that he has to expound the truth in the best way possible. One should understand well that the rights of the teacher and spiritual guide are less than that of the parents.

21. It is related in a Hadith that if an aalim is asked a mas'ala, and he conceals it without any Shar'ee reason, then he will be made to wear a necklace of fire on the day of Resurrection. (Mishkaat) Here it refers to knowledge whose exposition is necessary. To be miserly with knowledge without any Shar'ee reason, irrespective of whether its exposition is fard or mustahab, is extremely disgraceful.

GLOSSARY

(Explanation of Islamic Terms)

Aabid: One who preoccupies himself with ibaadah and shows relatively less interest towards knowledge.

Aalim: One who has attained a considerable amount of Islamic knowledge. He could also be referred to as an Islamic scholar.

Allawh: Almighty God. The most well-known of His many names. Allawh refers to the one and only being who is worthy of worship.

Auliya: Plural of wali. Literally means friend. But in Islamic terminology it refers to the close friends of Allawh.

Baitul Maqdis: Also known as Masjidul Aqsa or the furthest musjid. It is situated in Jerusalem and is the third most sacred place in Islam. It is popularly referred to as Baitul Muqaddas.

Banu Isra'eel: Literally means the children of Isra'eel. It refers to the progeny of Hadrat Ya'qub alayhis salaam.

Barakah: Literally means "blessings". Also used to refer to the experiencing of abundance even in things which are little.

Bid'ah: Literally means an "innovation". In Islam it refers to introducing new things into religion which have no basis in the Quran or Sunnah. In addition to this, to regard these new things as acts of ibaadah. A bid'ah is a major sin in Islam.

Dajjal: Also known as the one-eyed Dajjal. He will be from among the Jews and will appear before Qiyamat. He will cause a lot of corruption in the world and will eventually be killed by Hadrat Isa alayhis salaam.

Deen: Literally means "religion". Here it refers to the religion of Islam.

Mu'aasharat: Literally means "society". In Islamic terminology it refers to one's social relationships and social dealings.
Muharram: The first month of the Islamic calendar.
Mu'jizah: Literally means a "miracle". In Islam it refers to miracles performed by prophets. Prophets do not perform miracles out of their own accord but through the direction and will of Allawh.
Musalli: One who is offering salaat.
Mushrikeen: Plural of mushrik. A polytheist or one who ascribes partners to Allawh.
Mustahab: Literally means "preferable or desirable".Refers to that act which was done by Rasulullah sallAllawhu alayhi wa sallam or the Sahabah very occasionally. Carrying out these actions entails reward and leaving them out does not entail any punishment.
Nafl: Literally means "optional". According to the jurists it has a similar ruling to that of mustahab.
Najaasat: Refers to impurity. Najaasat is of two types: najaasat-e-ghaleezah (heavy impurity) and najaasat-e-khafeefah (light impurity). The rules concerning najaasat have already been mentioned in the relevant chapters.
Najis: That which is impure.
Nifaas: Refers to the flowing of blood after child-birth.
Purdah: An Urdu word meaning "seclusion". It is an equivalent of the Arabic word "hijaab". Refers to the seclusion of women from strangers. There are different stages of purdah, the highest of which is that the woman should not come out of her home except for some valid Islamic reason.
Qada: Literally means "carrying out or fulfilling". In Islamic jurisprudence it refers to fulfilling or completing those duties that one may have missed due to some reason or other.

Qiblah: The direction in which one faces when offering salaat.
Qiyaamat: The day of resurrection.
Sahabah: The companions of Rasulullah sallAllawhu alayhi wa sallam. They are those who saw him while they were Muslims and also died in a state of Islam.
Sahabi: Singular of sahabah.
Sajdah: The act of prostrating.
Salaat: Literally means "prayer". In Islam it refers to a specific act in which one prays to Allawh. It is one of the five pillars of Islam.
Shariah: The Islamic Law.
Shayateen: Plural of shaytaan.
Shaytaan: The accursed devil, Iblis. He was from among the jinn.
Shirk: Polytheism or ascribing partners to Allawh.
Sunnat: Sunnat is that action which Rasulullah sallAllawhu alayhi wa sallam did or sanctioned. Sunnat is of two types: sunnat-e-mu'akkadah and sunnat-e-ghayr-mu'akkadah. Sunnat-e-mu'akkadah is that which Rasulullah sallAllawhu alayhi wa sallam continuously carried out. To leave out such a type of sunnat is a sin and one is punished for this. However, there is no harm if one leaves it out because of some valid excuse.
Sunnat-e-ghayr-mu'akkadah* is that which Rasulullah sallAllawhu alayhi wa sallam carried out, but also left out at times without any reason. To follow such a type of sunnat entails reward and to leave it out does not necessitate any punishment.
Tafsir: Literally means "commentary or explanation". In Islamic terminology it refers to the commentary or exegesis of the Quran.

Ta'wiz: An amulet which is generally suspended around the neck.
Tayammum: The act of purifying oneself with pure sand in the absence of water.
Ta'zias: Structures portraying the tomb of Hadrat Husayn (R.A) which are generally carried in processions during Muharram. This is an innovation and should be totally rejected.
Ulama: Plural of Aalim.
Ummat: Literally means "community or nation". Here it refers to the Muslim community or nation.
Umrah: Commonly referred to as the "lesser pilgrimage". It is similar to Hajj with the exception that many rites of Hajj are left out and that it could be performed throughout the year.
Wahi: Literally means "revelation". In Islam it refers to the revelations that were sent down to the different prophets from time to time.
Wajib: Literally means "obligatory". In Islamic jurisprudence it refers to that act which has not been established by an absolute proof. Leaving out a wajib without any valid reason makes one a fasiq and entails punishment.
Wali: Singular of auliya.
Waqf: Endowment. In Islamic law it refers to endowing a place or thing in the name of Allawh.
Wudu: Literally means "purity or cleanliness". In Islamic terminology it refers to the act of washing oneself before offering salaat.
Zakaat: Literally means "purity". In Islam it refers to alms-giving or charity of a stipulated amount. It is one of the five pillars of Islam.
Zam Zam: Name of a well in Makkah. The water that comes out from this well is called zam zam water. Drinking of zam zam water is included in the rites of Hajj.

BOOK XVII

THE EDUCATION OF WOMEN

After knowing the Hadith, "Seeking of knowledge is compulsory on every Muslim male and female", and other texts which make the acquisition of knowledge compulsory on both males and females, there remains no need to write a special article on this subject. Moreso because this subject was touched on in the journal "al-Qasim" volumes one and two. But because of a few incidents and peculiarities (which are connected more to the condition of Indian women) and which are witnessed quite often, it is necessary to write a special and detailed article on this subject, and is therefore being repeated.

It should be known in this introduction that as far as has been pursued, there are people who think in three different ways: (1) there are those who do not oppose nor support the education of women. At the same time they do not place any importance on it, (2) those who are completely opposed to it, and (3) those who support it totally. All three groups have different shortcomings. The fault of the first group, which is the greatest and severest fault, is that it does not regard any need whatsoever to educate women. This total disregard is both in their men and women. The proof of these people which has actually put them into confusion is the question whether women have to seek employment, because of which arrangements have to be made for their education? From this we can deduce that these people have not understood the object of education, they have not pondered over those verses and Ahaadith which have made the acquisition of knowledge compulsory on both male and female, nor have they understood the type of education which is fard. So it should be understood that the object of knowledge is not to get employment because knowledge which is compulsory to acquire is not knowledge for a livelihood but knowledge of the Deen, knowledge with which man's beliefs, actions, dealings, society, and character are put in order, and the fruit of which in this world is that he is blessed with the wealth of "they are the ones who are on guidance from their Lord", and in the hereafter he gets the glad tidings of "they are the one's who are successful". So the necessity of acquiring Deeni knowledge is obvious, both textually and logically. The textual proofs are as follows:

1) "The acquiring of knowledge is wajib on every Muslim." (Bayhaqi on the authority of Anas)
2) "The acquiring of knowledge is a faridah (compulsory duty) on every Muslim." (Daylami on the authority of Ali)
3) "The acquisition of fiqh (understanding of Deen) is wajib on every Muslim." (Hakim in his Tarikh on the authority of Anas)
4) "Acquire knowledge and pass it on to the people." (Darqutni on the authority of Abu Saeed, and Bayhaqi on the authority of Abu Bakr)
5) "Acquire knowledge before it is raised." (Daylami on the authority of Ibne Mas'ud on the authority of Abu Hurayrah)
6) "O people! hold on to knowledge before it is raised." (Tabrani and Khateeb on the authority of Abu Umamah)
7) "O people! seek knowledge before it is raised." (Ahmad and Daarmi, Tib and Abu al-Shaykh in his tafseer, and Ibne Mardawiyya on the authority of Abu Umamah)
8) "Destruction for the one who has no knowledge." (on the authority of Hudhayfah)

Apart from this, there are other proofs which refer to the acquisition of knowledge for both males and females.

As for a logical proof: for reformation, beliefs and good deeds are compulsory. And beliefs and good deeds are dependent on acquiring knowledge of them. This is something that is obvious. And that thing upon which a compulsory thing is dependent, is also compulsory. So to acquire knowledge is also compulsory. Nevertheless, that deeds are dependent on knowledge is something that is very obvious. But if we go a little further, then it even becomes seen or observed. Consequently, the state in which uneducated women are, can be seen by all: that they cannot distinguish between kufr and shirk, nor do they have any love for Iman and Islam. They blurt out whatever they want with regards to Allawh Ta'ala. They talk against the laws of Islam with arrogance. In order to bear children or to subdue the husband to their whims, they will try anything that they are shown, whether it be witchcraft, charms, magic or special incantations irrespective of whether these things are permissible or not. If this is the state of their beliefs, then what can be said of their salaat and fasting? So much so that apart from discarding these duties, some of them even mock at them, and go even further by taking ill-omens from them. In other words, some of them do not perform their salaat despite knowing that it is fard. Others do not respect it and do not regard it as compulsory, while others take ill omens from it and regard it as a cause of harm. The latter two reach the stage of absolute kufr, while the first is regarded as fisq and a major sin. If this is the condition of their salaat and fasting, wherein no money is spent, then what will the condition of their zakaat and hajj be? One should not even bother to ask about these things. And if this is the condition of their beliefs and Ibaadaat, then there is no possibility of putting right their business and social dealings (mu'aamalaat). This is so because salaat, fasting, etc. are regarded as Deeni activities. As for business dealings, the majority of people regard them as worldly activities. It is for this reason that it is only the very pious ones who try to set right their mu'aamalaat. What improvements can uneducated women make?

If this is the condition of their mu'aamalaat, then when will their minds ever go towards reforming society (mu'aasharat)? This is so because mu'aamalaat are regarded as huquq al-ibad (the rights of fellow beings), as opposed to mu'aasharat because this aspect of huquq al-ibad is not apparent in it. Therefore, giving importance to this is extremely minimal. If there is so much of complacency with regard to mu'aamalaat and mu'aasharat, when will any efforts be directed towards internal character, such as humility, sincerity, fear, love, patience, gratitude, etc.? We know that to a large extent the effects of mu'aamalaat, and to a less degree, the effects of mu'aasharat reach other people. Hence, at times they are even regarded as pious or disgraced, depending on their mu'aamalaat and mu'aasharat. But when it comes to one's internal character or condition, then even its overwhelming effect is restricted to ones self. As a result of it being concealed, others do not even come to know of it whereby a person could be addressed as a religious or irreligious person. It is for this reason that giving importance to it is very rare, so much so that this is even the case among the pious. Then what can be expected of the masses?

Be that as it may, the real cause and reason for this complacency in all religious matters is a paucity of knowledge of the Deen. So where there is no knowledge at all, and added to this where the intellect is naturally deficient (because women are naturally deficient intellectually, meaning that where there is no intellect and no knowledge) then there will be no limit to the shortcomings mentioned in the above matters. Both intellect and experiences bear testimony to the fact that without knowledge, actions cannot be put right. And to set right one's actions is wajib and fard. Consequently, the acquisition of Deeni knowledge being compulsory, as had been claimed above, has now also been proven logically. And prior to this, it was also proven textually (i.e. through Ahaadith). It has now been established both ways that to acquire knowledge of the Deen is compulsory.

Those who feel that there is no need for women to acquire knowledge because they do not have to seek employment, have been proven to be wrong. This is the answer to their assumption. However, there could be some doubt that by establishing that acquiring Deeni knowledge is compulsory, it does not necessarily mean that it becomes compulsory to acquire education in the normal way: that books should also be taught to women. Instead, it could be acquired by asking and questioning the ulama. The answer to this doubt is that this is correct, and we do not even say that education in the normal way is compulsory. However, at this point, three principles are worthy of noting:

(1) If something is compulsory, everything that will aid in fulfilling it will also be compulsory. For example, a person is unable to go for Hajj on foot. But in his time, trains and ships have been set aside to undertake that journey and he also has the money and ability to undertake that journey. It will therefore be compulsory on him to intend to undertake the journey, purchase the ticket and board the train or ship. To purchase the train or ship ticket and to board it in itself is not compulsory on him according to the Shariah, but because it is a means to fulfilling a fard act (i.e. hajj), it will also become compulsory on him. This is called fard bil-ghayr (i.e. compulsory because of another factor).

(2) Experience has shown that for knowledge to be well preserved in the minds, the study of books is nesessary. This happens to be the normal way of education. And to preserve Deeni knowledge is compulsory. So based on the first principle, it will also be compulsory to impart Deeni knowledge in the normal way. However, this is wajib alal-kifayah, i.e. in every place, there should be a few persons who have studied the Deen and who can answer the questions of those who need to know.

(3) It has also been established that to have ulama among the males is not sufficient to fulfil the Deeni requirements of women. There are two reasons for this: (1) Because of purdah (this is one of the most important of obligatory acts). It is almost impossible for all women to be able to go to the ulama. If the menfolk were to be used as a means, then some women do not even have anyone whom they could use. In some places, even the men give no importance to matters of Deen, so where will they take the responsibility of finding out for others? For such women it becomes extremely difficult to find out matters of the Deen. If by chance, access to someone is possible, or she has a father, son, brother, etc. in the house who is an aalim, then there are certain matters which women cannot ask them about. There may be such informality with the husband, but for all of them to have such husbands is generally impossible. In order to fulfil the general needs of women, there is no alternative but to have such women who are educated and from whom other women could get answers to all their questions. Based on this, it is established that to impart Deeni knowledge to women in the normal way, is wajib. So now, this doubt has also been cleared and it has been established that it is a necessity to have a system of education for women similar to that of men. This wrong notion that there is no need to educate women has been totally uprooted.

We will now deal with the second group which is opposed to the education of women and which regards it as extremely harmful. It is their claim that most educated women are liberal, fearless, shameless, cunning and immoral. Especially if she knows how to write, she becomes even more daring. She writes to whoever she wants and sends messages and greetings to whoever she wishes. Similarly, others also get the urge to express their desires by sending letters to her. When these messages reach her, she gets affected by them and also sends compassionate replies. This bond grows until whatever was bound to happen, happens. At times she does not reply, but keeps silent. Those who are ill at heart take this as a sign of acceptance and try to fill this void in the future by sending messages, greetings and letters. It is a general principle that, that which is written affects the ears. Furthermore, the ways of expression of some people are very enchanting and women are soft-hearted by nature. So for the web of shaytaan to spread is not surprising. If a woman to whom a letter was written was displeased, and she even expressed her displeasure, but fearing the consequences of what her husband or family members would say or do, she did not inform them about this. In this way, those who wrote the letter will be safe from any harm. They will get more bold and at the next opportunity, they will write again. All this happened because the women were educated. If they were uneducated, they would not have been able to write anything, nor would anyone come to know of them, and this whole chapter would have been closed.

This evil becomes even more conceivable when a particular woman's articles begin to appear in the newspapers. By reading these articles, those shayateen who are conversant with the language are able to gauge the complexion, nature, feelings and thoughts of the writer. The sparks of such a fire spread even wider, especially if what she has written is in the form of a poem. These days, the outrage is even greater, because out of boastfulness, the name and even address of the writer is clearly stated, that she is the wife of so and so, or the daughter of so and so, residing in a particular place. All these evils came about because of their being able to read and write. If all these secret liaisons were discovered by the husband or family members, then because educated people are quick-witted and good at making-up stories, she will come up with such explanations and excuses that no word will come against her. She will make excuses and pretentions and begin crying and say that she had said this and not that, etc.

She might even threaten to kill or drown herself until that poor person who had enquired about it will have to flatter her and he will not even dare uttering a word about it again.

Another evil prevalent in these educated women is that they read all sorts of books: love-stories, suspense, sexually explicit novels and poems that arouse one's desire. Due to this, one's nature becomes corrupted. At times, they read these poems aloud and their voices are heard by the neighbours and on the street. Someone becomes enchanted with her voice and falls onto her heels. Even if he is unsuccessful in his pursuits, she is bound to become a cause of disgrace and distress.

This is the crux of the beliefs of these people. I do not deny nor reject these incidents, but I will definitely say that these people have worked with short-sightedness. They have not pondered over the reality of these incidents. The reality is that education is not responsible for all these evils. The responsibility either lies on the system of education, or the syllabus, or the methodology, or poor planning. In other words, it could have happened that those books were not taught with which one could learn the rules of halaal and haraam, details of reward and punishment, the method of moulding one's character, and with which one could attain fear, reverence, understanding and respect for haqq (truth). They have just been taught to read the alphabets and left at that. Out of their own choice, they studied different booklets in Urdu and increased their mastery over reading and writing. By getting the title of "educated person", they have given education a bad name. So it is obvious that merely learning the alphabets cannot be called education, nor can it take the responsibility of reforming their actions and conditions.

Alternatively, it could have happened that despite the syllabus being beneficial and adequate, no effort was made to embed the themes of that syllabus into their hearts and nothing was done to ensure that they were put into practice. For example, if a girl who has been taught that gheebah (back-biting) is a sin does indeed make gheebah, she should be reminded immediately that what she is doing is contrary to what she learnt. Or she was taught the necessity of hijaab (seclusion) or of speaking in a low tone, and thereafter a shortcoming or negligence was noticed in this respect, then she should be immediately reprimanded. Or she was taught to regard the greed for wealth and jewellery with contempt and later she expressed the desire for expensive clothing or unnecessary jewellery, then she should be immediately made mindful of this. In this way there is a hope that noble characteristics and good deeds will be inculcated in her.

Alternatively, it could have happened that her very nature and disposition did not have that capability and potential. Then in such a case, the idiom "imparting knowledge to the one who does not have the potential is like placing a ball on a dome" and the poem "how can a good sword be made from inferior steel?" Without good education, a person cannot become an insaan (total human)" will both apply. This discussion was connected to their very circumstances and actions. And as for those actions that were enumerated in regard to other corrupt persons, this is due to poor planning. The best way of combating this is to exercise sternness by employing the men-folk as intermediaries. They should be clearly informed that these are the causes of such evils.

If these are the causes, then why are the women singled-out? If men had to face these same causes, they would also become like this. So on what grounds are women being stopped from education and men given full freedom in this respect? In fact, given full importance? After pondering on the reason for this difference, we find no answer except that evils committed by women or attributed to them are regarded as a cause of disgrace and distress. And if the same evils are committed by men or attributed to them, then society does not regard them as a cause of disgrace and distress. It is for this reason that when it applies to women, these evils have been regarded as barriers to their education, and not when it applies to men. Apart from this, it is obvious from the Shariah point of view, that when it comes to education, men and women are equal. If sinning is evil and worthy of condemnation for women, then so is the case for men. And if it is a cause of chastity and honour for men, then in the same way it is also for women. So, if both are equal according to the Shariah, but unequal according to custom (urf), and this discrimination is actually practised, then it clearly shows that custom is being given preference over the Shariah. This is a very big branch of ignorance the cause of which is pride and self-glorification and nothing else. This is not my claim alone; the opposition also acknowledge this. Accordingly, very often we hear them saying that a man is like a utensil: if it gets dirty ten times, and thereafter you wash it, it gets absolutely clean. A woman, however, is like the lustre of a pearl: if it comes off even once, it cannot come on again. In other words, this clearly means that when it comes to men, they regard sinning very lightly. And for women, they regard it very seriously. Apart from pride, there is a very great possibility of passing a fatwa (religious verdict) of istikhfaaf (belittling the rules of the Shariah).

Now, just the third group is left. These people support and defend the education of women but have erred in determining or laying down a system for it. Some of their mistakes have already been incorporated when discussing the second group above. For example, teaching the women to read the alphabets only and thereafter leaving them to read the different booklets and magazines of their choice. Or, for example, not ensuring that they put into practice what they learn - different examples in this respect were also mentioned. We will now mention some other mistakes of theirs. For example, instead of teaching them Deeni knowledge, some of the women are taught History, Geography and English. Worse than this, they also teach them the Bible. This is due to just blind following of the Europeans. In other words, they feel that the worth and credibility of their syllabus is dependent on this. But they do not think that even if there was no difference between the two of us in regard to customs, habits, natural inclinations and peculiarities, the greatest distinction of religion still exists. That we follow the religion of Islam and they either follow no religion (which is the case with a majority of them), or they follow a religion opposed to our religion. Therefore, they will either have no religious education, or if they do have, it will be superficial, or it will be worldly education, or education of some other religion. In any case, this system of education of theirs has a specific basis. But if we had to choose their system of education, on what basis is it going to be? If the purpose of their education is different, as has just been mentioned, and our goal is different, as had been briefly explained when rectifying the mistakes of the first group, i.e. rectifying the beliefs, actions, transactions, social dealings, and morals; and this goal is dependent on Deeni knowledge - then it is obvious that for us to adopt their system of education is unsuitable or incompatible. However, if one also feels the need to earn a livelihood as well, then there will be no harm if one learns those sciences after having acquired Deeni knowledge. Those sciences refer to those things upon which one's livelihood is dependent, such as English, History, Geography, etc. Apart from these things, such a person will have no need to study the Bible.

It is obvious that the need to earn a livelihood is only experienced by men and not women, the reason being that the responsibility for supporting and providing for them is on the men. Secondly, Islam has emphasized purdah for women, and those specific ways whereby a livelihood could be earned are dependent on specific branches of knowledge. And these branches cannot be learnt while in purdah. Therefore, to teach them these things is fruitless and a waste of time. In fact, apart from being fruitless, it will also be harmful, as will be explained later. In any case, these sciences which are known as "modern education" are in no way proper for women. However, it would be good to have sufficient knowledge of certain worldly aspects such as writing, Mathematics, some sort of handicrafts, etc., so that if at any time there is no one to see to their needs, they could earn a living.

As for learning good manners, then whoever wishes, he could check and see for himself that no other system or education can teach good manners and character the way Deen can. Hence, take a person who has been totally influenced by Deeni knowledge and another person who has been totally influenced by modern civilization. Thereafter, compare their character, social dealings and transactions, and you will find that there is a world of difference between the two. However, if someone regards pretention and deception as culture, then his mistake will be that he has misunderstood the meaning of a particular concept. At this very moment, if some religious person comes to mind who has some short-coming in real character, then the reason for this will be that he did not take full benefit from Deeni knowledge. In other words, Deen has many aspects: beliefs, actions, mu'aamalaat (transactions), mu'aasharat (social relations), and self-purification. Some people regard only salaat and fasting as knowledge of the Deen and only people who fulfil these duties as religious people. This is a mistake in itself. To have sufficient knowledge of all the aspects of Deen mentioned above is called Deeni knowledge. And those who abide by the rules of all these aspects are called religious people. So that person who was called a religious person but was found to be wanting in his character, is in reality not fulfilling all the aspects of the Deen. And the discussion is on that person who is influenced by all the aspects. Now the doubt has been cleared. The author has written a booklet entitled "The Rights of Knowledge" which clears similar doubts and is worth reading.

In short, culture and good manners cannot be learnt from any system of education the way it can be learnt from Deeni education. It is this very Deeni knowledge which brought about that character and good manners in our ancestors, and which was not only acknowledged by Europe but also adopted by it. However, we are totally unaware of the "wealth" that is in our homes and begging from others. How beautiful the words of Maulana Rumi are! He says: "There is a basket full of bread on your head, and yet you are going door to door searching for a crumb. You are standing in knee-deep water, and yet you are distressed out of hunger and thirst."

Some people get their daughters educated at the hands of liberal and shameless women. Experience has shown that the company one keeps has a definite effect on one's character and emotions. This is more so when the person in whose company one is, is followed and respected. Obviously, who can be more worthy of following and respect than one's teacher? So in this case, that liberalism and shamelessness will also come into these girls. In my opinion, the best woman is the one in whom hayaa'(shame and self-restraint) is natural. This is the key to all good. When this is not found, then no good can be expected, nor can any evil be discounted. The rule, "when hayaa' goes away from you, then do whatever you wish", is general. But in my opinion, the generality in "whatever you wish" is applicable more to women than men. This is so because men still have aql (intellect) as a deterrent, while women have a shortfall of this as well. Therefore, they will not have anything to stop them.

Similarly, if the female teachers are not like this, but the class mates and school mates are like this (i.e. liberal and shameless), then being close to them will also cause many harms.

After this discussion, the condition of two evils, which are presently widespread, may also have come to the fore. One is the construction of girl's schools, and like normal madrasahs, to allow girls of different communities, classes, and thoughts, to come there daily. Even if the teacher is a Muslim, even if they come in cars, and even if they come here and stay in secluded places; incidents have shown and experience has proven that here such causes are combined, that they have a detrimental effect on their morals. This company has proven to be destructive to their chastity. And if the teacher is also like this, then it is like having a double dose of a bitter pill.

The second evil is that if a girl mixes with a teacher of a mission school by going to her daily or weekly for tuition in something or some craft, then both her chastity and Iman will be in danger. It is extremely distressing that some people regard these evils as a means of honour and call these teachers into their very homes. In my opinion, let alone these great evils which a girl gets trapped in on account of being a child and blindly following someone; even if an elderly Muslim woman follows this teacher and gets into a conversation with her even once, then too it will be dangerous. Some of those harms which we had promised to enumerate are these which have just been mentioned. And some of them have been mentioned when discussing the opinions of the second group.

The best method for girls is the one that came down to us from generation to generation. That two or three girls get together according to their relations and then study. As far as possible, they should try and get a female teacher who does not charge any fees because experience has shown that this type of education is more blessed and more effective. But if there is no alternative, there is no harm in paying. Where no female teacher is available, then the menfolk of the house should undertake to teach them. This is in regard to the system of education. As for the syllabus, then as far as possible, they should be taught to read the Quran correctly. Thereafter, Deeni books which have been written in simple language and in which all aspects of the Deen have been dealt with completely (in my opinion, the ten parts of Bahishti Zewar are sufficient to fulfil this need). If the men of the house are imparting the education, then those matters that are "shameful" should be left out and taught through their wives. If this is not possible, then these matters should be marked off so that they can remember them and once they get more mature, they will automatically understand them. Alternatively, if her husband is an aalim, she could ask him, or her husband could inquire from an aalim on her behalf.

At the end of Bahishti Zewar, there is a list of some beneficial books, the reading and studying of which will be very beneficial for women. If all cannot be studied, then a necessary number should be studied and the balance be kept for reading. Together with education, practising on the knowledge should also be seen to. It should also be ensured that the desire to teach be inculcated in them so that they have some contact with knowledge throughout their lives. In this way, there will be a constant revival and yearning for ilm and amal (knowledge and practicing on it). They should also be urged that at no time should they be negligent in reading beneficial books. After completing their necessary syllabus, if it is found that they have the potential, they should be directed towards learning Arabic so that they are able to understand the Quran, Hadith, and Fiqh (jurisprudence) in the original language. In my opinion, those girls who read the translation of the Quran only, make many errors in understanding it. Therefore, for most of them this is not good.

All this was in regard to reading. As for writing, if there are indications that there is no shamelessness or boldness in her nature, there will be no harm in learning to write. In order to carry out household necessities, there is also a need to know how to write. But if one foresees harm, then instead of trying to learn unnecessary (not wajib) things, it would be better to save one's self from evils. In such circumstances, she should not be taught to write, nor should she learn by herself. This is the verdict of the wise on the issue of women learning to write.

I now end this article and perhaps there will be no need to repeat it.

Zam zam: Name of a well in Makkah. The water that comes out from this well is called zam zam water. Drinking of zam zam water is included in the rites of Hajj.

BOOK IIXX

LAWFUL AND UNLAWFUL

1. It is not permissible to eat animals and birds that hunt their prey or those animals and birds that eat filthy things. For example, it is haraam to eat lions, wolves, jackals, cats, dogs, monkeys, hawks, falcons, vultures, etc. Those animals that do not fall under this category are halaal. For example, it is halaal to eat parrots, mynahs, doves, sparrows, quails, wild ducks, pigeons, antelopes, buck, ducks, rabbits, etc.
2. It is not permissible to eat badgers, lizards, tortoises, turtles, wasps, mules, donkeys, etc. It is not permissible to eat the meat of a female ass nor is it permissible to drink her milk. It is permissible to eat the meat of horses, but preferable to abstain from it. Among the sea animals, only fish are permissible. All other animals of the sea are haraam.
3. It is permissible to eat fish and locusts without slaughtering them. Apart from these two animals, it is not permissible to eat any animal that has not been slaughtered in the Islamic way. It is haraam to eat an animal that has died a natural death.
4. It is not be permissible to eat a fish if it dies naturally and begins to float on the surface of the water.
5. It is permissible to eat the tripe of halaal animals. It is not haraam to do so, nor makruh.
6. If a few small ants or worms die in anything, it will not be permissible to eat that thing without first removing those dead ants or worms. If one or two ants or worms go down the throat, one will get the sin of eating a dead animal. Some people eat wild figs together with the little worms that are found inside thinking that by eating these wild figs they will not be afflicted by evil eyes or evil gazes. This is haraam. They will get the sin of eating a dead animal.
7. It is not permissible to purchase and eat meat that is sold by a non-Muslim even if he claims that he had it slaughtered by a Muslim. However, if the Muslim who slaughtered it remains in the presence of the non-Muslim all the time until all the meat is sold, it will be permissible to consume such meat. Alternatively, the person who slaughtered the meat could call another Muslim to keep watch over it until all the meat is sold. At no time should any Muslim absent himself from that meat.
8. A fowl or chicken that eats a lot of filthy things should be encaged for three days and only after that should it be slaughtered and eaten. It is makruh to eat such a fowl without encaging it for three days.

INTOXICANTS

1. All alcoholic drinks are haraam and impure. The same rule applies to toddy (a drink that is made by adding hot water and sugar to whisky, rum, or brandy). It is not permissible to consume these alcoholic drinks even as a source of medication. In fact, it is not even permissible to apply medicines that contain alcohol.
2. Apart from alcohol, it is permissible to consume all other intoxicants on the condition that they are consumed only for medication. Furthermore, only that amount will be permissible which does not intoxicate the person. If a person consumes an amount that intoxicates him, it will become haraam upon him. It is also permissible to apply medicines that contain such intoxicants. Such intoxicants are: opium, nutmeg, saffron, etc.
3. It is permissible to consume toddy and alcohol that has turned into vinegar.
4. Some women give opium to their children in an effort to stop them crying and putting them off to sleep. This is haraam.

GOLD AND SILVER UTENSILS

It is not permissible to eat or drink from gold and silver utensils. In fact, it is not permissible to for any purpose items that are made of gold or silver. For example, it is not permissible to:
(a) eat and drink from gold or silver utensils,
(b) clean the teeth with a toothpick made of gold or silver,
(c) sprinkle rose water with a gold or silver utensil which has been made for such a purpose,
(d) to keep surmah in a gold or silver utensil which has been made for such a purpose,
(e) to keep betel-leaves in a container made of gold or silver,
(f) apply oil that is kept in a gold or silver utensil,
(g) lie or sleep on a bed whose legs are made of gold or silver,
(h) look in a mirror that is framed in gold or silver.
All these things are haraam. If a mirror has been framed in this way solely for decoration, it will be permissible to display such a mirror. However, at no time should one look into such a mirror. In short, it is not permissible to use anything that is made of gold or silver.

MISCELLANEOUS MASA'IL

1. It is mustahab to remove the hair of the pubic region and the armpits once a week. If one does not remove these hairs weekly, one should at least remove them every fortnight. If one cannot even do this, one should remove them before forty days. If a person leaves these hairs for more than forty days, he will be sinning.

2. It is makruh for women to call their husbands and parents by name as this shows disrespect. However, certain occasions may demand that they be called by name. In such circumstances it will be permissible to call both the husband and parents by name. Under all conditions and in all circumstances, one should always be mindful of being respectful to one's husband and parents.
3. It is not permissible to burn any living creature, e.g. it is not permissible to smoke bees in order to get rid of them. It is also not permissible to catch bugs, flies, mosquitoes, etc. and to throw them into a fire. However, if there is no other way of getting rid of them, it will be permissible to do so, e.g. at times it is difficult to get rid of bees. In such a case, it will be permissible to smoke them. It will also be permissible to get rid of bed-bugs by pouring boiling water on the bed if there is no other way of getting rid of them.
4. It is not permissible to take bets, e.g. a person says: "If you eat a full kilo of sweets, I will give you R1. But if you cannot do that, you will have to give me R1." In other words, it is not permissible to take two-sided bets. However, one-sided bets are permissible.
5. When two persons are talking in privacy, one should not go and sit near them. It is a major sin to try and listen to their conversation. It is mentioned in a Hadith that on the day of judgement, boiling lead will be poured into the ears of the person who tries to listen to the private conversation of others despite their disapproval. We learn from this that it is a major sin to spy on the bride and bride groom or to try and listen to their private conversation.
6. It is not permissible for the wife to discuss or announce the private affairs and conversations that transpired between herself and her husband. It is mentioned in a Hadith that Allawh Ta'ala becomes extremely angry when a person discusses or mentions all that transpired between him and his wife.
7. It is not permissible to joke with a person to such an extent that he feels insulted or angered by the joke. One should only joke to the extent that the other person laughs and is amused.
8. It is not permissible to wish for death or to curse oneself when afflicted by any problem or calamity.
9. It is not permissible to play dice games, cards, etc. If these are played for money, they will be regarded as gambling and will therefore be absolutely haraam.
10. Once boys reach the age of ten, they should not be allowed to sleep or lie down next to their sisters, brothers or mothers. Once girls reach the age of ten, they should not be allowed to sleep or lie down next to their brothers and fathers. However, the son can sleep next to his father and the daughter can sleep next to her mother.
11. When a person sneezes, he should say Alhamdolillah. It will be wajib on the person who hears him saying Alhamdolillah to say Yarhamu kumullah. If the latter person does not say this, he will be sinful. Upon hearing this reply, the person who sneezed should say Yaghfirullahu lanaa wa lakum. However, it is not wajib, but mustahab on the person who sneezed to give this reply.
12. After sneezing, a person said Alhamdolillah which was heard by several persons. It will not be wajib on all of them to give a reply to it. If one of them gives a reply, it will be sufficient. However, if none of them gives a reply, all will be sinful.
13. If a person sneezes continuously, it will be wajib to say Yarhamu kumullah up to three times and not more.
14. When a person mentions the name of Rasulullah sallAllawhu alayhi wa sallam, hears it or reads it, it becomes wajib upon him to send salutations to Rasulullah sallAllawhu alayhi wa sallam. The person will be sinning if he does not do so. But if his name is mentioned several times, it will not be wajib to recite the durood each time. It will be sufficient to recite it once. But if a person moves from his place and takes his name or hears it again, it will be wajib to recite the durood again.
15. It is not permissible to shave the head of a child in such a way that a certain portion is entirely bald and another portion is left long. Either shave the entire head bald or leave all the hair unshaven.
16. It is not permissible for women to apply perfumes or any other fragrant creams, lotions, etc. in such a way that ghayr mahrams get the smell of the fragrance.
17. It is not permissible to give clothing which is not permissible to wear, e.g. it is not permissible for the husband to purchase clothing that is not permissible for his wife to wear. Similarly, it is not permissible for a tailor or dressmaker to sew clothing which is not permissible for Muslims to wear.
18. It is not permissible to read short stories, novels, novels based on love and beauty which are of a fictitious nature. It is also not permissible to look at books and magazines that have pictures of men and women in shameless clothing or no clothing at all. Books containing love poems should also be abstained from. Books and magazines of this sort should not even be purchased. If they are found in the possession of one's children, they should be burnt.
19. The custom of making salaam, shaking hands, embracing each other is also sunnah for women. Women should adopt these Islamic customs among themselves.
20. If a person is a guest at someone's house, he should not give any food or anything else to a beggar from his host's house without the permission of the latter.

LOST ITEMS THAT ARE FOUND

1. If a person finds an item on the road, pathway or a public gathering, it is haraam for him to pick it up and keep it for himself. Similarly, if he invites some guests to his house for a meal or some other reason and one of the guests leaves some of his personal possessions behind, it is haraam for him to pick it up and keep it for himself. If he decides to pick it up, he should do so with the intention of looking for it's owner and returning it.
2. If a person finds something and does not pick it up, there will be no sin on him. However, if he finds it at a place where there is the fear that if he does not pick it up, someone else will pick it up and will not return it to it's owner, then it becomes wajib on this person to pick it up and return it to it's owner.
3. Once a person finds a lost item and picks it up, it becomes his responsibility to search for it's owner and to return it to him. If he picks it up and replaces it from where he found it or takes it away with him without looking for it's owner, he will be committing a sin. This is irrespective of whether he found it at a safe place where he did not fear it getting lost or he found it at an unsafe place. That is, irrespective of whether it was wajib upon him to pick it up or not. The same rule will apply in both cases. That is, once he picks it up, it becomes wajib upon him to search for it's owner. It is not permissible for him to replace it at the place where he found it.
4. When a person finds an article, he must search for it's owner and announce the lost item in all the public places that are frequented by men and women. If a woman cannot go to a gathering in which there are men, she should send her husband or another male to go and announce the item that has been found. The person should clearly announce that he has found a particular item and that the owner should come and claim it. However, he should not mention exactly what he has found so that a cheat does not come and claim it falsely. Instead, he should merely give a vague description of it. For example, he must say that he has found some jewellery, clothing or a wallet. Once the claimant comes and gives a clear description of that jewellery, clothing or wallet, it should be given to him.
5. If the person searches extensively for the owner or advertises it properly and still does not find it's owner to such an extent that he has no hope of finding it's owner, he should give that item in charity. If the person is poor himself, he can keep it for his personal use. If the owner comes and claims his item after the person had given it in charity, he (i.e. the owner) can demand the value of the lost item as compensation. If he sanctions giving it in charity, he will receive the reward for that.
6. If a domesticated pigeon or parrot falls in one's yard or house, it will be wajib on the person to search for it's owner. It is haraam to keep it for himself.
7. If mangoes, guavas or any other fruit is lying fallen in someone's yard or orchard, it is haraam to pick it up and eat it. However, if an item is of so little value that no one really searches for it, nor does anyone feel offended if it is taken and eaten, it will be permissible to pick up such an item and keep it for oneself. For example, if a person finds some fruit or a handful of dholl, there will be no harm in picking up such items.
8. If buried treasure is found in a house or in a jungle, the same rules as those mentioned above will apply. That is, the person cannot keep it for himself. He will have to search for it's owner. If the owner is not found, it will have to be given in charity. If he himself is poor, he can keep it for himself.

Zil Hijjah: The last month of the Islamic calendar.
Zil Qa'dah: The eleventh month of the Islamic calendar.

BOOK XIX

HEALTH MATTERS

Health is a thing which causes a person's heart to remain satisfied. The result of this is that the person is greatly motivated in fulfilling acts of ibaadah and other good deeds. When he experiences the benefit of eating and drinking, he expresses his gratitude to Allawh Ta'ala. When his body is strong, he is able to do good work and be of service to others. Furthermore, he is able to fulfil the rights of those who have rights over him. Taking the necessary steps to acquire a healthy body with the above-mentioned goals in mind is therefore an act of ibaadah and considered to be a religious act. It is more important for women to have knowledge of these things because their children are brought up under their care and supervision. Children do not have any knowledge about things that would benefit them or cause harm to them. When women do not have any knowledge of these (health) matters, their children fall ill on account of their (the mothers) carelessness. Even if the children are able to study and learn, their knowledge is affected (on account of ill health). Furthermore, the sickness of the children or of the wife places the men under great stress. It is their money that is spent for the doctor's fees and medication. In short, there is nothing but harm. Rasulullah sallAllawhu alayhi wa sallam has urged us to seek a cure and to take care of our bodies. We are therefore writing a few necessary facts in this regard.

Air

1. The easterly wind is harmful to injuries and wounds. It causes further weakness and debility to a weak person. One should protect oneself from this wind when one is injured, has any wounds, or is in a purgative situation. One should wear double (or thick) clothing when this wind blows.
2. The southerly wind is generally hot. It loosens or opens the pores. Those who have recovered from a sickness should protect themselves from this wind. If not, there is the possibility of that sickness returning to them.
3. Do not allow dust and mud to accumulate in the house. This also causes the air to become harmful. As far as possible, try and keep the toilet, bathroom and scullery far from the places in which you spend most of your time (i.e. try and keep them far from the bedroom, lounge, dining-room, etc.). Some women are in the habit of allowing their children to urinate or relieve themselves anywhere and everywhere. If they display any caution, then the most they do is cover that place. This is a very uncivil and harmful act. The best thing to do would be to set aside a place for this (for example, a toilet). If not, set aside a utensil for this and make sure that it is cleaned immediately after the child has relieved himself.
4. Occasionally light some fragrant substance such as incense sticks, camphor, etc. in the house. During an epidemic, light sulphur or incense in every room of the house. Shut the windows properly so that these fragrances are more effective.
5. Ensure that you switch off the lights before going to bed. Be extra cautious if you have paraffin lamps because the harm of this is much greater. It (paraffin) causes the air to become dry and causes damage to the brains and eyes. In certain cases this has also caused death.
6. Don't ever sit in front of a fire after having closed the house. In some instances this has resulted in the person being left breathless and being unable to open the window, thereby causing his death.
7. Keep away from the cold in winter. If you have to have a bath, ensure that you dry your hair immediately. If a person is "cold" by nature, he should drink tea, or eat some honey and black-seed.
8. Just as it is important to safeguard yourself from the cold winds, it is also necessary to do so from the hot winds. Wear thick coarse clothing at such times. Wash your head with purified sulphur in summer.

Food

1. Always eat less than the extent of your hunger. If a person takes this into consideration, he will be saved from hundreds of sicknesses.
2. Eat less in spring. Try and fast occasionally as well.
3. Try and eat more "cold" foods such as cucumbers in summer. If you think it good enough, then obtain some medicine that is "cold" in nature and give it to the old and young according to their needs, eg. water-lily juice, lotus juice, or grape juice. Faluda is also very beneficial. By eating it, one is not affected by the "heat" of fresh grain. Popping a few sweet basil flower seeds would also have the same effect. Eat very little "hot" and dry foods such as potatoes, etc.
4. In autumn abstain from foods which cause an increase in black bile. Such foods include: oil, brinjal, beef, etc.
5. If possible, in winter one should eat foods and medicines that give strength so that one may be saved from many sicknesses throughout the year. Such foods include: half-boiled eggs and gaajar halwa (a sweetmeat made with carrots). A half-boiled egg is prepared in the following manner: wrap the egg in a thin cloth and dip it 100 times in boiling water. Alternatively, place it in boiling water for three minutes. Thereafter, place it in cold water for three minutes. Only the yolk of the egg should be eaten. Egg-white does not have much nutritional value.
6. As long as there is no real need, do not be in the habit of taking too many medicines. Try and manage minor sicknesses and ailments by reducing the consumption of food or by changing your diet.
7. These days many changes and lack of caution has crept into the different foods. This has led to many harms. We will therefore list a few beneficial and harmful foods:

Beneficial foods: half-boiled eggs, the meat of young pigeons, the meat of calves, mutton, lamb, quails, partridges, chicken, most wild birds, deer, white antelope, the meat of other hunted animals, fish, wheat bread, grapes, olives, pomegranates, apples, turnips, spinach, parsley, milk, jalebi, head (of animals), trotters. However, it should be noted that head and trotters cause the blood to thicken.

Harmful foods: Brinjal, radish, herbs of black-leaved mustard, the beef of an old cow, carrots, dried meat (biltong will also be included in this), the meat of a duck, beans (this refers to thin and long green beans), black pulse (masoor), oil, molasses or treacle, sour foods.

When we say that such foods are harmful, it does not mean that one should abstain from them totally. If a person is ill, he should abstain from them completely. If he is not sick, he can eat a little depending on his natural inclinations and temperament. There is no harm in eating them if the person is strong and is used to such foods. In certain places it is the habit of giving various types of foods to a woman who is in her confinement. At times they give her a type of pulse, at other times they give her beef, while at times they give her esculent vegetables which are very heavy on the system. This is a bad habit. One has to be extremely cautious during such times (i.e. while in confinement or while ill, etc.). It is for this reason that we have listed the harmful foods.

We will now explain the characteristic of each of the above-mentioned harmful foods:

Brinjal: It has hot and dry properties. It has very little nourishment. It is extremely harmful to people suffering from piles and those who have a melancholic temperament. If a lot of ghee is added to it and it is eaten with vinegar, a balance could be reached.

Radish: It has hot and dry properties. Its leaves have hotter properties. It is harmful to the head, throat and teeth. It takes long to digest. However, other foods are digested through it. It has a certain amount of benefit for those suffering from piles. It has hot properties. However, if a cumin seed marinated in vinegar is added to it, its harms are decreased. It is beneficial to the spleen especially if it has been marinated in vinegar.

Black leaves of the mustard plant: It has hot properties. It is extremely harmful to those who have kidney problems. If it is eaten in pregnancy, there is the possibility of the baby dying.

Water chestnut: It also has hot properties.

Beef of an old cow: It has hot and dry properties. It causes the blood to thicken and results in the formation of weak blood. It causes the formation of black bile. It is harmful to those suffering from scabies, piles, hysteria, spleen problems, and those who have a melancholic temperament. If it is cooked with the peel of musk-melons and black pepper, its harms are reduced. However, it does not cause great harm to those who are very active. In fact, it makes one healthier than what goat meat would do. However, caution is necessary when one is ill.
Duck meat: It has hot and dry properties and takes long to digest. However, its harms are reduced when mint is added to it. Aquatic ducks are not as harmful as domesticated ducks.
Carrots: It has hot and wet properties and takes long to digest. However, it prevents a light fever and provides cheerfulness. It is for this reason that some people say that it has cold properties. By cooking it in meat its harms are reduced. Its jam is very beneficial. It gives strength to the womb. Pregnant women should be extremely cautious in eating it because it causes bleeding.
Beans: They have hot and wet properties. They take very long to digest thereby causing one to have bad dreams. By having them with vinegar and cinnamon, their harms are reduced. However, pregnant women should never eat them.
Black pulse (masoor): It has dry properties. It is harmful to those who suffer from piles, those who have weak stomachs, and those who have a melancholic temperament. Its harms are reduced by adding extra ghee to it or by mixing it with vinegar.
Oil: It has hot properties. It causes an increase in black bile. It is harmful to those who have a melancholic temperament. Its harms are reduced when it is mixed with esculent vegetables that have cold properties.
Molasses: It has hot properties. It causes an increase in black bile.
Sour foods: Eating excessive sour foods causes harm to the sinews and tendons. They speed up the process of old age. Women should be extremely cautious. This is especially so during pregnancy, confinement and the common cold. If anything sweet is added to sour foods, the harms are decreased.
8. Certain foods are such that if they are eaten individually, there is no harm in them. However, when they are eaten with other foods, they are harmful. In other words, as long as there is only one type of food in the stomach, it will not be harmful. The hakeems (doctors specialising in herbal medicines) say that it is sufficient to allow a gap of three hours (between one food and another). They also say that anything sour or acidic should not be eaten with milk. Similarly, betel leaves should not be eaten after drinking milk. If one does this, the water that is present in the milk separates itself from the milk in the stomach. Milk and fish should not be consumed together as there is the fear of being stricken by paralysis and leprosy. Do not consume milk and rice together with sattoo (finely crushed wheat or barley dish). Water should not be drunk with oily or fatty substances. Do not keep oil or ghee in a non-tinplated utensil. Do not eat food that has been cooked in a bell-metal utensil (aluminium utensils are also not recommended). Food that has been cooked in clay pots is the best. Do not drink water after having eaten guavas, cucumbers, musk-melons, water-melons and other green fruit. Do not eat head and trotters with grapes.
9. Do not eat food that is very hot. Drinking cold water after having eaten hot food is very harmful to the teeth.
10. Un-sifted flour is better than sifted white flour. Food should be thoroughly chewed. At the same time, one should eat quickly. Eating very slowly causes harm to the process of digestion.
11. Do not sleep while you are very hungry. At the same time, do not sleep immediately after eating. Allow at least two hours between eating and sleeping.
12. As long as the food is not digested, do not eat again. If at least two hours pass and you find that you are feeling a bit "light", there will be no harm in eating after this.
Points to remember:
1. If you are constipated at any time, make sure that you treat it. The simplest treatment is that you should not eat any bread. Instead, eat some soup that has been prepared with meat fat. If this does not work, you will have to obtain some medication.
2. If you pass stool that is softer than usual, make sure that you treat this as well. Reduce the consumption of meat fat (and other fatty foods) and eat grilled meat. However, if you experience diarrhoea or severe constipation, make sure that you visit the doctor.
3. Do not go to pass stool immediately after eating. But if there is an urgent need to do so, there will be no harm in this.
4. Don't ever hold yourself when there is a need to relieve yourself. Holding back oneself at such times results in various sicknesses.

Water

1. Do not drink water immediately after waking up from your sleep, nor should you go outside into the open immediately after waking up. If you are very thirsty, then the best way to drink would be by holding your nose. Take one sip at a time and once you have finished drinking, continue holding your nose for a little while and do not breathe in through your nose. In the same way, do not drink water immediately after having walked in the heat. This is more so for the person who has suffered a heat stroke. If he drinks a lot of water, he can die immediately. In the same way, water should not be drunk on an empty stomach, nor should one drink water immediately after having passed stool.
2. Do not drink salty or hot water. Rain water is the best. However, the person who has a cough or suffers from asthma should not drink rain water. At times you may notice that certain water has been mixed with some oily substance. Such water is extremely harmful. If you wish to improve the purity of harmful water, boil it till three quarters of the total is left, allow it to cool, strain it (or filter it) and then drink it.
3. Always cover the utensil which is used to store water. In fact, try and cover the tumbler with a fine cloth so that whenever you drink from it, you will be drinking strained water.
4. Ice is harmful to the kidney. Women should be particularly cautious in this regard and try not to make a habit of eating ice. Water that has been cooled in saltpetre is much better.
5. Don't ever laugh while eating and drinking. At times this can cause death.

Work and Relaxation

1. Do not relax so much that it causes you to gain weight and laziness overtakes you. Don't let it happen that you are found in bed most of the time while leaving your domestic tasks to others. This is because too much of relaxation affects the fulfilment of domestic tasks and at times also causes sicknesses. At the same time, do not overwork to the extent that you fall ill. Instead, you should use your hands, feet, and the rest of your body in a moderate way. The method for this is that you should do all your work quickly. Abandon the habit of laziness. Adopt the habit of walking in the house for a little while. If there is no fear of anyone seeing you outside, walk around outside. Alternatively, if you live in a double-storey house, go upstairs and come down a few times. Also try to use the spinning wheel and millstone or grinding stone. We are not saying that you should start earning money through this (i.e. grinding wheat and other products), although there is nothing wrong with that. However, it is necessary for you to take care of your health. In undertaking such manual tasks, one remains healthy. Look at those women who work hard in such manual tasks and see how strong and healthy they are. As for those who seek relaxation all the time, they are constantly under some medication or the other. Such work is also known as exercise. Do not engage in any exercise for about three hours after a meal. When you commence exercising, continue until you begin perspiring or you begin gasping for breath. Once this happens, stop exercising.
2. Swinging small children on a swing is a good form of exercise for them.
3. Make it a habit of waking up early in the morning. In fact, you should try and offer the tahajjud salaat daily. In doing so, one remains very healthy.
4. Do not sleep unnecessarily in the afternoon. However, if you feel tired or sleepy, there is no harm in this.
5. It is also necessary to engage in some sort of mental work. If one does not take any work from one's brain, this causes an increase in moisture in the brain and one becomes dim-witted. And the person who over taxes his brain and is always in deep thought, causes dryness to his brain which leads to weakness. It is therefore preferable to estimate the amount of work prior to undertaking it. Be in the habit of reading and teaching. Recite the Quran daily. Try and read some book or the other. Always think over matters. Do not become so angry that you lose control over yourself. At the same time do not be so tolerant that you are unable to maintain any discipline. Do not become so happy to the extent that you feel that you are not in need of Allawh, or to the extent that you forget His power.

If He wishes, He can destroy all your happiness in a single moment. At the same time do not become so sorrowful that you forget the mercy of Allawh. If anything afflicts you, turn your attention towards something else - occupy yourself in some other task. All these things can cause sicknesses, if not death. If you have to inform someone of something that would cause him extreme happiness and this person happens to be weak-hearted, then do not inform him all at once. First ask him as to how he would feel if a certain wish or task of his is fulfilled. Thereafter inform him that you are trying to ensure that it is fulfilled and there is hope of it being fulfilled. Thereafter inform him there and then or after a few hours that his task has been fulfilled. In the same way, do not give any sad news all at once. If you have to inform anyone of the death of a certain person, commence by saying that so-and-so person was ill, his condition was quite critical and death will approach everyone at some time or the other and that he passed away through the decree of Allawh.

Note: When a woman is ill, or once life is given to the baby that is in her womb, it is harmful for her to have relations with her husband.

Medical treatment and Tawakkul

Allawh Ta'ala has created a cure for every sickness. It is through Him that the medicine has an effect. If He wishes, the medicine will be beneficial. And if He does not wish, the medicine will not help in any way. Thousands of different medicines may be used but they will not help (if Allawh does not wish so). Therefore, one should not have this belief that a certain medicine cures and another does not. It is Allawh who cures. If He wishes you to be cured immediately, He will place the cure in that medicine. If not, the medicine will not help. We have been ordered to seek the cure. We do this by placing full trust in Him. It is for this reason that we make dua to Him alone. As for that person who has complete trust in Allawh and does not seek any medical treatment, no evil thoughts will enter his mind. He will express gratitude to Allawh all the time. It is permissible for such a person not to seek any medical treatment. However, Rasulullah sallAllawhu alayhi wa sallam had sought medical treatment and also showed us the benefits of certain medicines. It is therefore preferable to seek medical treatment but at the same time the person should exercise patience and express gratitude to Allawh. Furthermore, the person should have full conviction that Allawh Ta'ala loves us more than what our own mothers love us. Whatever He does is solely for our benefit. When we are afflicted by any sickness, our sins are wiped out. When we exercise patience, our stages are increased and calamities are withheld from us. Whatever pride and arrogance that we may have is decreased and we realize our dependence on Allawh Ta'ala. Previously, a person may have been very independent. When he falls ill, he realizes his dependence on others for every little thing. When he was healthy and strong he may have not valued his health. Once he falls ill, he realizes the importance of health, appreciates it and later expresses his gratitude. In short, illness is a source of mercy for us Muslims. In fact, it is a great bounty from Allawh Ta'ala. At the same time, it is a great test and trial from Allawh Ta'ala. We have to exercise patience, express our gratitude and consider everything to be the decree of Allawh. We should not express evil words against Allawh Ta'ala and whatever He has decreed. At times such words could cause us to become devoid of Imaan. Just think, that here is the person who has borne so many difficulties (for which he would have been rewarded) but has allowed all the rewards to be snatched away from him. He has spent some money (on medication), but because of the evil words that he has uttered, he lost his Imaan, lost the world, and lost his Deen. If, Allawh forbid, he does not repent and passes away in this state, he has lost his entire life earnings of Imaan on account of a little suffering. May Allawh save us from this.

On the other hand, if we muster some courage and say to ourselves that if Allawh wishes this (sickness) for us, we are prepared to lose this life of ours and we do not utter a single word. If death overtakes us in such a state, what great rewards we will receive from that Being who gave us so much without even asking. How much more He will reward us (on account of our patience)! And if we recover from that sickness, we would regain our health, maintain the rewards that we received (for exercising patience) and also receive great stages (in jannah) - there will be no decrease in all these rewards. At the same time, we will still have our Deen and dunya with us.

When we feel perplexed, why should we not make dua to Allawh? He is the one who will inspire the doctor to be attentive towards us. He is the one who will cause the medicine to be effective. And if He wishes, He is the one who can cure us without any medication whatsoever. In short, sickness is a bounty from Allawh. However, because there is a great test and trial in it, and because there is the fear of one even losing one's Imaan on account of it, it is not permissible to hope or to make dua for a sickness to afflict us.

Factors to be taken into consideration when seeking medical treatment

1. Medication should not be taken for trivial sicknesses. Such sicknesses could be treated by changing one's diet, walking about, change in environment, etc. For example, if you have a headache on account of being in hot air, sit in a place where there is a cool breeze. If your stomach is feeling heavy on account of eating, skip one or two meals. If your head is paining on account of lack of sleep, then sleep. If you are feeling lazy on account of excessive sleep, then sleep less. If you engaged in excessive mental work and this resulted in dryness in your brain, reduce your work load and give the brain a rest. When such measures do not help, opt for medication.
2. Do not be distraught irrespective of how serious the sickness may be. By becoming distraught, the entire treatment is affected. Treatment should be sought with great tranquillity and peace of mind.
3. Do not get into the habit of taking laxatives, vomiting, and in cupping the blood. In other words, do not get into the habit of doing these things every year without any real need to do so. If you are in the habit of taking laxatives, try stopping this habit in the following way: when the time of taking the laxatives approaches, reduce your food intake and engage in more exercises. Take some medication that would loosen your stool slightly (provided it is not a laxative). Even if you do not feel good during the days when you normally take the laxatives, do not worry about it and delay in taking the laxative. In this way, you will abandon this habit.
4. Do not take very strong medication without any real need to do so. The disadvantage of such medicines is that if they are not suited to you, they will cause great harm as well. Do not take haraam and impure medicines, nor should you apply them to your body.
5. If you have to take a particular medicine over a period of time, then occasionally try and skip taking it for one-two days. Alternatively, change it for some other medicine. This is because once you get into the habit of taking a particular medicine, it will no longer have any effect on you.
6. As long as a certain type of food is sufficient, do not opt for any medication.
7. Be extremely cautious when taking any medicine. Ensure that you take it exactly as it has been prescribed. Do not increase or decrease the dose on your own.
8. If you purchase any medicine, show it to the doctor first. If he says that it would be harmful for you, exchange it.
9. When it comes to medication for the heart, kidneys, brain, lungs, eyes, and other delicate organs, do not use medicines that are very strong, that have cold properties, which are assimilated very quickly, or which are poisonous. However, if there is a dire need to use such medicines, there is no alternative but to use them.
10. When seeking treatment, ensure that you go to a doctor who is knowledgeable, experienced, makes a thorough examination, and does not prescribe any medicine without pondering and thinking over the matter. Furthermore, he does not rush into prescribing laxatives. Do not be deluded into going to a particular doctor merely because he is very famous.
11. When ill, consider prevention (or abstinence) to be better than medication. However, if you are absolutely healthy, do not be abstinent. Eat whatever you wish in accordance with the season. However, do not eat more than you can. If your stomach feels "heavy", skip a few meals.
12. Seeking medical treatment is necessary for every sickness. However, there are certain sicknesses which need special care. This is specifically so with children. Such sicknesses are: colds, coughs, pain in the eyes, pleurisy, indigestion, diarrhoea, colic pains, hernia, a lack or increase of menstruation, a fever that is continuous or which is experienced after a meal, being bitten by an animal or human, consuming a poisonous substance, palpitation of the heart, dizziness, palpitation of the body in different places, paralysis or numbness of the entire body, feeling extremely hungry very often, not feeling any hunger at all, feeling very sleepy very often, insomnia, perspiring profusely, not perspiring at all, or the occurrence of any other thing which is contrary to one's normal life. When this happens, the person should immediately understand that some sickness or the other is approaching. He should therefore go to the doctor and seek the necessary treatment. He should not allow any disorder in his diet.
13. When getting your pulse checked, ensure that your stomach is not too full nor too empty. When the stomach is empty, one feels restless (thereby causing a change in the pulse rate). Furthermore, one should not be very sad nor very happy. One should not check one's pulse immediately after waking up from one's sleep, after being awake for a very long period, after engaging in physical work or after having walked a long distance. Have your pulse checked while being in any of the following postures: in the squatting position, while lying down, sitting on a stool, or sitting on the edge of a bed with your legs dangling. Do not sit in such a position whereby you put a strain on a certain part of your body. Do not support yourself on any of your hands, nor should you place a pillow under you. Do not hold anything with the hand that you have offered to be checked. Do not extend that hand completely, nor fold it completely. Instead, the hand should touch your ribs and be slightly loose (not stiff). Do not hold your breath. Do not fear the doctor as this causes a difference in the pulse rate. If you wish to have your pulse checked while lying down, do not lie on your side. Instead, lie flat on your back.

14. When having your urine tested, bear the following factors in mind: it must be tested when you have slept and awoken according to your norm and that you have not eaten or drunk anything as yet. By eating green esculent vegetables, one's urine becomes greenish. By eating saffron, it becomes yellowish. By applying henna, it becomes reddish. It becomes yellowish or reddish due to the following factors: fasting, lack of sleep, exhaustion, extreme hunger and holding back one's urine. At times it turns white on account of remaining awake for long hours. By drinking excessive water, it becomes light in colour. A urine test is of no use after having taken purgatives or laxatives. A urine test will be most effective if it is taken twelve hours after a meal. If the urine is to be tested in the morning, do not eat to your stomach's full the previous night. The urine test of a woman who has recently given birth is of no use. If a person has passed urine several times at night, a urine test the following morning is of no use. If a person urinates and keeps that urine for more than six hours before it can be tested, it will be of no use. At times, such urine is rendered useless even before six hours. In other words, once you notice a change in its colour or smell, there is no use in having it checked.

15. Do not change doctors unnecessarily. Keep the doctor happy by carrying out whatever he orders. If you do not gain any benefit from him, do not accuse him. If you give him anything in return for his treatment (either in cash or kind), do not consider yourself to have done him a great favour.

16. Do not be too strict on the sick person. Accommodate his harshness and hot temper. Do not mention things that would cause him to lose hope irrespective of how serious his condition may be. Continue consoling him.

SUPPLEMENT TO BAHISHTI ZEWAR

(Part Eight)

The Islamic Responsibility of the Sick and those tending to the Sick

It is the opinion of some people that there is no need to find out what is permissible and what is prohibited when seeking medical treatment. It is as if the sick person is not answerable for any of his actions. Based on this, they also feel that the sick person's doctor also has full liberty to do whatever he pleases. This is incorrect. Such people should understand that a sick person does not go out of the boundaries of Allawh's power. Allawh Ta'ala has the right of possession over every person's life and wealth. It is in this light that Allawh Ta'ala has said: "If We were to ordain for them: 'Lay down your lives', or, 'forsake your homelands', only a very few of them would do it - although if they did what they are admonished to do, it would indeed be for their own good." (Surah an-Nisaa', verse 66)

We learn from this that Allawh Ta'ala also has the right to order us to intentionally kill ourselves (i.e. commit suicide). It is only because of the kindness of Allawh Ta'ala, that despite being able to order us to do this, He did not ask us to bear such difficulties. At the same time, He did not leave us completely free. Instead, He laid down certain rules and regulations when seeking medical treatment. These rules and regulations are such that if we had to ponder over them with an open mind, we will find that there are certain concessions and leeways. They are not as restrictive as the laws of a government. As a form of appreciation for this kindness on the part of Allawh Ta'ala, man should be prepared to sacrifice his wealth and life in order to safeguard himself from sins. He should never ever seek illegal and prohibited forms of medical treatment. When a person is sick, he should never ever act contrary to the fataawaa (legal verdicts) of the ulama. A sick person is in need of this more than a normal healthy person because the latter has some hope of being granted a respite, whereas sickness is the stepping stone to death. Outwardly too, one can see that death is approaching. What sort of intelligence is it that a person dies a sinner? (by seeking prohibited forms of medical treatment). Some servants of Allawh were such that while they were in the throes of death and undergoing severe difficulties, even at such a time they did not leave out acts that are mustahab. A few friends of theirs told them that when in difficulty, mustahab acts are automatically dropped off. They replied: "The difficulty is for a little while more. What is the need to lose the reward of a mustahab act at the time of death?" A sick person experiences many difficulties and is in the hands of others. It is therefore necessary for all those who are taking care of him to take due consideration of his salaat and all the other necessary aspects of Deen. Even if the sick person presents excuses, they should give him confidence and save him from sins. If the person caring for the sick is religiously minded and prepared (to do everything according to the Shariah for the sick person) there is great hope for the sick person to be in control of himself at the time of death (and to die on Imaan). If this is not the case, the sin will not be borne on the sick person alone. Instead, all those who were taking care of him will also be sinning. In fact, greater punishment will be inflicted on those caring for him because the sick person was under their control (they could have ordered him to do whatever they wished). It is therefore necessary for everyone - the sick and those caring for the sick - to find out the necessary masa'il with regard to medical treatment just as they find out the other masa'il with regard to salaat, fasting, zakaat, etc. If they have any doubt, they should consult the ulama.

Substances that are used for medical treatment

It should be known that substances which are used for medical treatment fall under four categories: (1) inorganic bodies, (2) plants, (3) animals, (4) compounds of the first three categories. There are two ways of using these things and the Shar'ee ruling concerning each is different. The two ways are either external or internal. Internal usage refers to substances that go down the throat and reach the stomach. In other words, it refers to the things which are either eaten or drunk. All other forms of usage are regarded as external. So much so, all the following forms of medication are also considered to be external: sniffing some liquid into the nostrils, instilling medicine into the nostrils (for example, by means of a dropper), drawing medicine into the nostrils, rubbing the teeth with tooth-powder (or brushing with a toothpaste), smelling a solid or liquid medicine, taking in snuff, chewing, rinsing the mouth. All this is on the condition that the medicine does not reach the throat. In fact, apart from smelling, there is a great danger in all the above-mentioned forms of consumption that the medicine will reach the throat. In fact, in most cases the medicine reaches the throat and thereafter goes down into the stomach. Therefore, all these forms of consumption should also be considered to be internal. Caution is necessary in that substances which cannot be consumed internally should also be refrained from when adopting any of the above-mentioned external methods of usage. Even if an iota of haraam substance goes down the throat, one will be committing the sin of consuming haraam.

The rule concerning internal and external usage

If anything is impure in itself, such as excreta, urine, alcohol, an animal that has died a natural death, pork, etc. then it is not permissible to use such items internally or externally. As for things which have become impure on account of their being mixed with other impure substances, the ruling is that they cannot be used internally. However, it is permissible to use them externally. Such substances are: impure water (pure water which became impure on account of an impure substance falling into it), liquid of the bladder that is added in surmah (as long as this liquid is not more than the other ingredients), medicines that contain alcohol as long as the alcohol content is less than the other substances. However, it should be borne in mind that it is necessary to wash off these substances and purify oneself prior to offering salaat. Although it is permissible to use such substances externally, it is preferable to abstain from using them. The reason for this is that when a person is very sick he is not very mindful. There is a great possibility of such substances falling onto his clothing. Furthermore, if the person did not wash his hands after applying such substances, and his hands come into contact with water in a utensil, then the utensil and the water will be rendered impure. In this way, this impurity will affect the entire house and many persons' salaat will be ruined.

When we say that a substance becomes impure on account of it being mixed with an impure substance, we mean that the impure substance is not more than the other substance. If it is more, it would be considered as if the entire mixture comprises of the impure substance. For example, if a handful of water is poured into a large utensil containing urine, we cannot say that this is water. By the water being mixed with the urine, it has now become impure. In fact, this entire mixture will be considered to be urine (and the rules that normally apply to urine will apply over here as well). But if the opposite takes place (i.e. if a handful of urine is poured into a large utensil containing water), then the opposite ruling will also be given (i.e. the entire mixture will be considered to be water - although the water itself will be regarded as impure). It should be also known that in our pure Shariah, prohibition in using a particular thing or substance is based on four reasons: (i) on account of the thing being najis (impure), e.g. urine, excreta, etc. (ii) on account of the thing being harmful, e.g. poisonous substances, (iii) on the basis of istikhbaath, i.e. things that are abhorred and disliked by a normal person possessing a sound mind, e.g. worms, certain insects, etc., (iv) on account of the thing causing intoxication.

Inorganic bodies

Inorganic bodies refers to things that are other than plant life, animals, droppings of animals, parts of animals, etc. Inorganic bodies include the following: sand, gold, silver, sulphurate of arsenic, copper, bezoar, agate, etc. All inorganic bodies are pure and halaal unless they are harmful or intoxicating. The quality of istikhbaath is not found in any of the inorganic bodies. If the harm in an inorganic body is removed, or if the quality of intoxication is no longer found in an inorganic body, then the prohibition of using such a thing will also be removed (i.e. it will now become permissible). From this we can deduce the ruling with regard to eating sand, adding limestone in betel leaves, eating Armenian bole, red chalk, agate, etc. - i.e. if they are harmful, they will be prohibited and if they are not harmful, they will be permissible. For example, if excessive limestone is added to betel leaves to the extent that it causes harm to one's teeth or causes some other harm, it will not be permissible. But if it is used according to one's need and it proves to be beneficial, it will be permissible. Another harm of excessive limestone is that it forms a crust on one's teeth thereby preventing water from reaching the gums when making ghusl. If this happens, the ghusl will not be complete. We can also deduce the ruling with regard to poisonous substances - i.e. one cannot use them without the prescription of a qualified and reliable doctor. If such a doctor prescribes such substances, it will be permissible for you to use them because he will not prescribe them unnecessarily.

Although external usage is permissible on all the parts of the body except for the throat and stomach, it should be borne in mind that there is a difference in status among the different parts. Some of the parts are more sacred than the others. Those that are more sacred therefore have more right in that no impure or detestable thing should touch them. The more sacred or more honourable parts of the body are those that are above the neck, especially inside the mouth. As far as possible one should therefore not gargle one's mouth with anything that has an evil smell or with anything that is detestable by nature. There will be no harm in resorting to such substances if there is no alternative. The sanctity of the parts above the neck has been mentioned in a Hadith wherein it is stated that the angels take an active part in the formation of the entire foetus except for the head, which is created by Allawh Ta'ala with His very hands. The sanctity of the head can also be gauged from a Hadith wherein we are prohibited from striking anyone on his face. Furthermore, Rasulullah sallAllawhu alayhi wa sallam said: "Cleanse your mouths because it is through them that you recite the Quran."

It is a common belief of the masses that it is haraam to eat sand. This is incorrect. If there is no harm in eating it, it will be permissible. But if it proves to be harmful, it will be prohibited. For example, some pregnant women like to eat sand and they have no other alternative in fulfilling this craving of theirs. In such a case they can eat, but not to the extent that it causes them harm. Many people have certain beliefs with regard to the ash that becomes attached to rotis or with regards to rotis that become burnt. They go to great pains in removing this ash or the slightly burnt off sections of the roti. This is not necessary. A little bit of ash is not harmful. In fact, if a roti is not completely burnt and has only become slightly black, it will not be permissible to throw such a roti away. This is because it is still regarded as roti (which is food and therefore should not be thrown).

Masa'il

1. Gold and silver are also inorganic bodies but they should not be compared to other inorganic bodies. Other inorganic bodies are mostly used as sources of medication while gold and silver are also used as items of luxury and beautification. The Shariah has prohibited us from wearing gold and silver except in the form of jewellery. It is obvious that jewellery is for women. It is therefore permissible for them to use gold and silver jewellery and this is not permissible for anyone else. However, it is not permissible to soak medicine in a gold or silver container, or to keep any sort of ointment or medicine in a gold or silver container. This prohibition is applicable to both men and women. Based on this, it is not permissible to wear spectacles that have gold or silver frames, to wear watches that have gold or silver bands, to keep watches that have gold or silver chains, to use mirrors that have been framed in gold or silver. It is for this reason that it is prohibited to wear an aarsi (a thumb ring with a mirror set in gold or silver). Wearing this ring as a form of jewellery is permissible but to look into it's mirror will not be permissible.
2. It is permissible to eat gold and silver foil, to add this into surmah, to soak pieces of silver in a medicine (this is done to strengthen the heart) and to disinfect medicine containing steel. It is permissible to fasten the teeth with gold or silver when necessary. This is because if any other metal is used, it causes swelling of the gums. Based on this, it is permissible to make a gold nose or to use gold to make any tube in any other part of the body. This is because no metal besides gold can fulfil this purpose. The same rule applies to silk. The only exception is that women can wear silk at all times while men cannot use it as a form of dressing. Men can use silk if it is not as a form of dress (e.g. they can use it for medical reasons).
3. It is permissible for men to use silk if it forms the hem of a garment as long as the silk is not more than approximately six centimetres in width.
4. If there are any sores on the body and silk is worn as a form of treatment, it will be permissible to do so. It is also permissible to wear silk when in war because a sword cannot cut through silk.

Question: If any medication contains gold or silver, will it be permissible to engage in transactions (such as buying and selling) of such medication? Similarly, if any prescription contains the name of a medicine which has gold or silver in it, will it be permissible to have such a prescription made out, purchased, etc.? Similarly, if any surmah contains such foil which has become completely mixed into it to the extent that it cannot be separated, will it be permissible to engage in transactions of such surmah? If this is not permissible, then what is the difference between this and jewellery that is gold or silver plated because it is extremely difficult to separate the pure gold or silver from that which is not pure. In fact, it is even more difficult to separate gold and silver which is found in medicines and surmah. Similarly, is it permissible to sell sweetmeats and meat which are covered by gold or silver foil on credit? Is zakaat wajib on such medicines and surmah which contain gold and silver?

Answer: If gold or silver is added in medicines in such a way that these metals become completely assimilated with the medicines, then in such a case they will be similar to gold or silver-plated jewellery and therefore not even considered (for zakaat and other associated questions that are mentioned above). If these metals are not completely assimilated into the medicines, they will be similar to clothing which has a gold or silver hem. In other words, these medicines are not called gold or silver medicines. Instead, they are named according to the major ingredients that are found in them. If any medicine contains more gold or silver, such as gold or silver being added in pure honey, then such a medicine will be known as gold honey or silver honey. The normal rules in dealing with gold and silver will apply and zakaat will also become wajib. As for the previous two examples, the normal rules when dealing with gold and silver will not apply, nor will zakaat be wajib. As regards gold and silver foil that is used to cover sweetmeats and meat, the ruling with regard to gold or silver hems in clothing will be applicable here as well. The difference is that in this instance it is not necessary for the gold or silver to be equal to or less than approximately six centimetres in width. This is because this limit of six centimetres is only applicable to clothing.

Intoxicants

The rule concerning intoxicants is that if they are dry, they are considered to be pure. In extreme situations and at the time of dire need, for example, on the advice of a pious, reliable and qualified doctor, it will be permissible to consume such dry intoxicants as long as the amount is such that it does not cause any intoxication whatsoever. It is definitely not permissible to consume an amount that would cause intoxication. Despite all this, as far as possible, it is preferable to abstain from such intoxicants and to exercise extreme caution. The reason for this is that in most cases one's consumption definitely increases and very soon one is unable to differentiate between a dire need and no need. It is for this reason that Allamah Shaami rahmatullahi alayh says: "If dry intoxicants are taken in very small quantities (i.e. an amount that does not cause intoxication) merely for pleasure (i.e. without any valid medical reason), then such consumption will be absolutely haraam." Here, dry intoxicants includes those that are pure (unadulterated) and also those that are mixed with some other substance or added into some other substance. Based on this, dry intoxicants include the following: opium, hemp leaves (a herbaceous plant from which cannabis is produced), dagga, marijuana, etc. Such intoxicants will be permissible only if one has a valid medical reason and provided that the amount is such that it does not cause any intoxication. If they are consumed without any valid reason and merely for pleasure, they will be absolutely haraam (irrespective of whether they cause intoxication or not). It is permissible to use opium as an ointment, to inhale hemp leaves in the form of steam or vapour, and to take hemp leaves in the form of tablets. It is permissible to eat opium in order to prevent oneself from catching a cold on condition that the amount consumed does not lead to intoxication. It is also permissible to consume hemp leaves in order to delay emission (provided that the intercourse is halaal, i.e. with one's Shar'ee wife), but on the condition that the amount consumed does not lead to intoxication.

As regards intoxicants that are in a liquid form, which we commonly refer to as alcohol, it is a well known fact among all Muslims that alcohol, pork, dead animals, interest, etc. are things which Islam is totally against. The Shariah does not even consider such things to be wealth or items of value. If a Muslim possesses such items and someone else destroys them, the latter does not have to pay any compensation. Transactions which comprise these things are not even considered to be valid. This is not the place to go into great details because these things require very lengthy explanations. At the same time, we do not wish to close off this topic completely. We will therefore try to suffice with what is necessary.

It should be known that there are four types of drinks which are considered to be impure and haraam according to all the ulama. These four are: (1) Grape juice which is left in its crude form until fermentation takes place - popularly known as alcohol. (2) Grape juice which has been burnt until slightly less than two thirds of it evaporates. (3) Juice that is obtained from raisins that have been soaked in water. (4) Juice that is obtained from dates that have been soaked in water. The rule concerning these four is that it is not permissible to drink even a single drop. One cannot even keep them in one's house (or anywhere else). One cannot use them in any way. One cannot even buy or sell them (nor can one engage in any transactions which involve any of them).

As regards all other drinks, there are many details concerning them. This is not the place to go into details. However, we will explain the ruling concerning another drink which, in our times, has become extremely difficult to avoid. This refers to spirit (which is largely used for industrial purposes). This substance is used in practically all modern day medicines. Apart from medicines, it is also used in various other items such as pens, inks, colourants, carpets, chairs, duvets, mattresses, etc. It has some usage or the other in almost all items that need colourants, polishing, or the actual item itself. It is a well known fact that according to one Hadith, this is also impure and haraam. According to another Hadith it is pure and could be used for medical purposes internally as well, provided that the amount consumed does not cause any intoxication. However, one cannot overlook the fact that the temperament of a normal Muslim cannot accept such a substance in which there is difference of opinion concerning its purity and permissibility. This is similar to a utensil in which there is water. Someone informs you that the utensil contains water while another person comes and informs you that it is not water but urine. Upon hearing this, any normal Muslim will definitely have an aversion to it. However, when it becomes extremely difficult to avoid a particular thing, then in such circumstances, we get a certain amount of leeway or concession from the fatwa (legal) point of view. Therefore, one should not be too strict in such matters and those who can, should exercise caution. From this principle, we can deduce the ruling concerning modern day medicines, particularly tinctures. Spirit has a definite influence in most modern day medicines. As regards tinctures, the process of this is that the medicine is soaked in spirit and thereby cleansed. In doing so, the medicine is very quickly absorbed. The following is mentioned in the malfoozaat (sayings) of Hadrat Thanwi rahmatullahi alayh: "In my opinion, it is not good to write the name of Allawh or Muhammad sallAllawhu alayhi wa sallam with red powder. This is because there is the possibility of this red powder containing spirit. Although certain types of spirits are pure according to Imam Abu Hanifah and Imam Yusuf rahmatullahi alayhima, they are definitely not pure according to Imam Muhammad rahmatullahi alayh. And we know that as far as possible it is preferable to abstain from those things in which there is difference of opinion. This is more so when the fatwa of the majority of the ulama is based on the opinion of Imam Muhammad rahmatullahi alayh." In another place, Hadrat Thanwi rahmatullahi alayh has the following to say: "Every spirit is not made from the above-mentioned four intoxicants (which are absolutely haraam according to all the ulama). Spirit that is not made from these four intoxicants is permissible according to Imam Abu Hanifah and Imam Yusuf rahmatullahi alayhima. However, the fatwa is based on the opinion of Imam Muhammad rahmatullahi alayh so that the masses do not develop any lack of caution in this regard. Since this fatwa has been issued as a precaution, at the time of extreme necessity we can make a concession. However, the pious should abstain from using tinctures and they should not adopt any strictness on the masses who have no alternative. If spirit is added in vinegar and it changes its form thereafter, it will now be considered to be vinegar. The substance in which it has been mixed and the spirit together will now be permissible."

The following question and its answer appears in Imdaadul Fataawa:

Question: Modern day medicines generally contain spirit. This spirit is the highest quality of alcohol. In fact, it could be referred to as the essence of alcohol. Since this is an accepted and well known fact, is it permissible to take such medicines or not?

Answer: "If the spirit is not made from grapes, raisins, dry or fresh dates, a concession in its permissibility can be given (because of the difference of opinion). If it is made from the above-mentioned fruit, it will not be permissible because all ulama are unanimous in this regard."

Medical books state that spirit is a very strong form of alcohol which is prepared by further distillation of alcohol. It is also stated that low quality alcohol is manufactured by using potatoes, jujube, barley, wheat, etc. High quality alcohol which generally comes from Europe is manufactured by using grapes, apples, pomegranates, raisins, etc. Spirit is of three types: methylated spirits, proof spirits, and rectified spirits. That which is used in medicines is of the higher quality and is known as rectified spirits. It is much more expensive than the other spirits. Since the majority of alcohol that comes from Europe is of a high quality, it is therefore highly possible that the spirit that comes from Europe is also made from grapes, raisins, or dates. If this is the case, it would be considered to be impure and haraam. The medicines in which it is used will also be considered to be impure and haraam. Despite this, we cannot issue a fatwa with regard to the impermissibility of all medicines. However, what we can definitely say is that it is preferable not to use such medicines except when really necessary. From this we can also deduce the ruling concerning homeopathic medicines. That is, they should not be used except when really necessary because the intrinsic ingredient of these medicines is spirit and all other ingredients are just by the way.

Mas'ala: It is permissible to administer chloroform to a patient as an anaesthetic in order to operate on him.

Plant life

All plants are pure and halaal unless they are harmful or intoxicating. We have already explained the ruling concerning intoxicants. The prohibition with regard to harmful plants is based only on their harm. Once the harm is removed, there will be nothing wrong in using them. For example, based on the opinion of doctors it is permissible to eat purgative and vomic nuts.

Animal life

Animals, man, parts of animals, offal of animals, and other things that are connected to animals will all be explained in this chapter.

All the parts of man are sacred irrespective of whether he is a Muslim or a kaafir. Based on this, all the following acts are not permissible: burning a person irrespective of whether he is dead or alive, buying and selling of a corpse, keeping the skeleton of a human for medical (or other) reasons, removing an infant from the womb of a woman as long as it is alive, the drinking of breast milk for anyone other than the child during the period of breastfeeding, using breast milk externally such as in the eyes or ears. It is permissible to have forms of the human body made with wax or rubber for explanatory purposes provided that each limb is separate so that it does not fall within the confines of being a picture. It is permissible to look at the internal organs of a living person through x-rays.

Masa'il

1. It is not permissible to burn an animal that is alive. It is also not permissible to cause it unnecessary harm. For example, it is not permissible to burn a live animal by immersing it in hot oil or to fill a utensil with worms and boil them with water or any other substance in order to produce oil from them. One could kill the worms first and then place them in the oil. This would make no difference in the oil. Some people are in the habit of keeping scarlet flies in a glass container for a few days so that they may die. This is also considered to be cruel. If there is any other method of killing them immediately, that should be adopted. For example, one could place them in oil. But if there is no alternative, it will be permissible to kill them through the above-mentioned methods just as the jurists have permitted the killing of silkworms by placing them in the sun because there is no other way of killing them. Live earthworms threaded onto a fish-hook for catching fish is also considered cruel. The bait should be killed and then used for fishing.

2. Any part of a live animal which has the sense of perception cannot be cut and used for any purpose. In other words, that part which has been severed from a live animal is considered to be a maytah. For example, severing the ear of a live goat or the hard fat that is found near the knees of a horse and using such parts.

(This is not permissible). If the part of a live animal has no sense of perception, and is cut off, it is regarded as pure. Such parts include the tusks of an elephant and the hair of a goat. If such a part is obtained from a halaal animal, it will be permissible to eat that part as well. But if such a part is obtained from an animal that is not eaten, it will only be permissibe to use that part externally.

3. Apart from pigs, the buying and selling of all animals is permissible if it is for some benefit. This is irrespective of whether they are marine animals or land animals, large animals or small animals. Such transactions are even permissible with regard to dogs, cheetahs, snakes, etc. Transactions with regard to dead animals are permissible on condition that they are considered to be pure, e.g. animals of the sea, worms and insects that do not have flowing blood, or animals that have flowing blood but have been slaughtered in the Islamic way. This is because all animals are considered to be pure once they have been slaughtered, except for pigs. Transactions with the meat and other parts of such animals (except pigs) will therefore be permissible if it is for external usage.

4. All marine animals are pure irrespective of whether they are large or small and irrespective of whether they have been slaughtered or not. However, according to the Hanafi mazhab, it is not permissible to eat any of the marine animals except fish. External usage of all marine animals and the products thereof will be permissible. But it should be borne in mind that it is makruh to kill frogs. However, if a frog is found dead, it will be permissible to use it externally. This refers to frogs that live in water. As for those that live on land, they have flowing blood and are therefore considered to be najis. Therefore, if a land frog is found dead, it will fall under the category of maytah. If a land frog is slaughtered, it will be considered to be pure. If it is very tiny, it will not be considered to possess flowing blood. Water frogs have webbed feet similar to that of ducks. According to the Shaafi'ee mazhab, all marine animals except the following are halaal: shells, crabs, frogs, alligators, snakes, and turtles. According to the Maliki mazhab all sea animals are halaal. Crabs retain their medicinal value even after they are burnt to ashes. Therefore, homoeopathic doctors wishing to use crabs in their medicines should use burnt crabs (or crab ash). Dried testicles of an otter (used as a drug) cannot be used internally according to all the mazhabs. The Hanafis say that it is not permissible because of two reasons: first of all it is the part of a marine animal. The second reason is that it is actually the testicles of the animal. The Hadith clearly prohibits the consumption of testicles. The other mazhabs prohibit it on account of the latter reason. Therefore, it could be used externally because it is pure according to them. It is permissible to add it in perfumes.

5. Since there is no need to slaughter a fish, it is therefore permissible to eat a fish that has been caught by a kaafir. The same applies to locusts.

6. Worms and insects and all other land animals that do not have flowing blood are considered to be pure, e.g. most of the insects such as scorpions, butterflies, small lizards which do not have flowing blood, small snakes that do not have flowing blood, etc. All such animals could be used externally in whichever way one wishes but it is haraam to use them internally. Only locusts can be consumed internally. It is not permissible for patients afflicted with small-pox to eat flies. It is not permissible to eat earthworms for the purposes of sexual potency. In order to gain benefit from such things, one should rather feed them to small chicks and thereafter eat these very chicks.

7. If substances are produced from the saliva of insects that do not have the quality of istiqzaar (natural dislike) in them, then such substances will be halaal. Such substances include: silk cocoons, etc. This is based on the permissibility of honey (which is also the product of the saliva of bees).

8. It is not permissible to eat insects that are found inside wild figs. Similarly, it is not permissible to consume vinegar or any other mixture together with any insects that may have fallen into it. Sweetmeats that contain flies cannot be eaten together with the flies. Once the flies (and other insects) are removed, they may be consumed. While filtering honey, if any young of the bees which are not born as yet, become mixed with the honey, there will be no harm in eating such honey because they (the young unborn bees) are not regarded as maytah (animals that have died a natural death), nor are they considered to be animals as yet. The same will apply to web-like substances that form in flour which have not developed into live insects as yet. Such flour together with these web-like substances can be eaten. When filtering vinegar, one should not have any doubt or misgiving that some insect or the other may have got mixed into it and become completely absorbed by it. (In other words, there is no harm in consuming such vinegar).

9. The buying and selling of maytah is invalid. Maytah is considered to be najis. It is therefore not permissible to use it internally or externally. Leeches, earthworms, and all other insects that do not have flowing blood are not regarded as najis even after they die. Engaging in transactions with them is therefore valid and it is also permissible to use them externally.

10. Apart from pigs, all animals that have flowing blood become purified once they are slaughtered in the Islamic way. This is irrespective of whether these animals are normally halaal or not. In other words, all parts of such animals that are slaughtered in the Islamic way are pure. Such parts include: the meat, fat, intestines, tripe, gizzard, bladder, nerves, etc. All these parts except for the flowing blood will be pure. Based on this, these parts can be used externally, e.g. bandaging a particular part around the head. Obviously, it will not be permissible to eat such animals except those that are permitted to be eaten. The doctors can benefit tremendously from this mas'ala. The intestines, tripe, gizzard and bladder will have to be thoroughly washed from external impurity.

11. A maytah is najis except for the following parts: hair, bones which have no meat or stickiness whatsoever on them, and the skin once it is tanned. Certain parts also fall under the purview of the skin and can therefore be purified through tanning. Such parts are: the bladder, the stomach, the gall bladder, the rind, the gizzard, the intestines and the membrane in which the foetus is enveloped. All these parts can be purified through tanning. Nerves and tendons that have been tanned, nails, hooves, horns, feathers, and the parts of a maytah which (according to our view) can be purified; means that salaat with such parts is valid, one can engage in transactions with them (buying and selling), and one can use them externally. However, it is not permissible to eat any part of a maytah irrespective of whether such an animal is halaal to eat (such as goats, bulls, camels, etc.) or whether such an animal is not halaal to eat (such as lions, dogs, etc.). As regards pigs, even all the above-mentioned parts are najis. Some jurists have stated that it is permissible to use the hair of pigs for stitching. This permissibility was based on the need of that time and no longer applies. Tanning in the above context refers to protecting those parts from decomposing and offensive odour.

12. Ivory is pure irrespective of whether it was obtained from a dead elephant or a live one. However, it is not permissible to use it internally. It can be used externally.

13. The milk of the animals whose meat is haraam is also najis and haraam. And the milk of the animals whose meat is halaal is also pure and halaal. Even if a halaal animal dies, it is permissible to extract the milk from its udders. This milk is also pure and halaal. Drinking the milk of a donkey for treating tuberculosis and ulceration of the lungs is considered to be haraam medical treatment. The milk of a horse is halaal and pure because a horse is halaal. It is only prohibited because of expediency.

14. The rule concerning the eggs of animals is the same as the meat of that animal. However, there is a difference between eggs and milk (which is still regarded as pure and halaal after the death of the animal) in that if a halaal animal dies and its eggs are removed from within, the stickiness and wetness that is found on the eggs will have to be removed.

15. Although the meat and other parts of a haraam animal become pure after it has been slaughtered, the eggs do not become pure.

16. When the rotten egg of a halaal animal turns to blood, that egg will be considered to be najis and haraam. But once the blood forms into an offspring, the latter is regarded as halaal and pure. If the offspring has already formed but life has not entered it as yet, then even in such a case it will be considered to be pure and it will be permissible to eat it because it has now formed into meat. The egg of a haraam animal is haraam and najis in the first and third cases (mentioned above). In the second case if the offspring has life, it will be pure but haraam.

17. Flowing blood is impure. Flowing blood refers to blood which has the capacity to flow. Such blood or any part thereof is najis. It is not permissible to use it internally or externally. The blood that is found at that spot on the neck where an animal is slaughtered is also flowing blood. That area cannot be regarded as pure until that blood is washed off and completely removed. The blood that remains in the veins or the skin is not regarded as flowing blood because it would lead to many complications and problems. There is also no harm in eating it. Apart from this, all other blood does not fall under the category of flowing blood and is certainly pure. But it should be borne in mind that such blood cannot be used internally, e.g. it is not permissible to drink the blood of a bug. It is not permissible to apply the blood of a pigeon on a paralysed portion of the body because it is flowing blood. However, the blood of a bug can be used for the same purpose because it is not flowing blood. Insects are considered to have blood that does not flow. All marine animals, whether large or small, are considered to have blood that does not flow. Lizards and snakes that are less than a span in length are also considered to have blood that does not flow. Pus, matter, and other liquids that flow from wounds and which break wudu fall under the category of blood. Such substances cannot be used in any way. So much so, it is not even permissible to make a dog lick off the yoghurt that is applied on a wound. There are two reasons for this prohibition: (i) The saliva of a dog is najis and we know that when something is categorized as najis, it cannot be used externally as well. (ii) The pus, blood, and other substances that are emitted from a wound are najis and it is not permissible to feed anything that is najis even to dogs.

18. Blood that has been consumed by a leech is considered to be flowing and therefore impure. However, once that blood becomes part and parcel of that leech, it will be considered to be pure on the basis of tabdeel-e-maahiyat (changing of the intrinsic nature of a substance). The means of differentiating this is that it (blood that is not flowing and therefore pure) will not come off the leech by merely rubbing it. All the waste matter of halaal birds is pure with the exception of blood. However, none of this waste matter can be used internally because of istikhbaath (natural aversion). The gizzards of halaal birds are pure but can only be eaten when their stool has been washed off. The stool of a fowl, duck and wild duck is also najis.

19. If the liquid from the bladder of a halaal bird falls in the surmah, it is considered to be pure and will be permissible to use. However, the bladder of a fowl, duck and wild duck is najis just as their dung is najis. The liquid from the bladder of haraam birds and other animals that have flowing blood is impure. The liquid from the bladder (wherever we have mentioned that it is permissible) will only be permissible if this liquid is less than the content of the other medicines. However, it will be necessary to wash the eyes thoroughly prior to offering salaat if this medicine has flowed out of the eyes. If the content of the medicines is less than that of the liquid of the bladder, it will not be permissible because it is considered to be najis just as urine is najis.

20. It is permissible to apply the bladder of a goat and its liquid onto a pimple or sore. This is based on the opinion of Imam Muhammad rahmatullahi alayh who regards the urine of a halaal animal (that can be eaten) as pure.

21. The excreta of all animals apart from halaal birds is impure. That which cannot be avoided will be overlooked, e.g. the droppings of flies and silkworms. No matter how much you try, some of the droppings will definitely remain behind on the silk. On account of general necessity, the excreta of bats is considered to be pure, i.e. it can be overlooked. In fact, some jurists have gone to the extent of saying that if the urine of cats falls on the clothes, it can be overlooked. But if their urine falls in water, the water will become najis. The excreta of snakes and leeches is najis. Shayaaf-e-magsi (a medication for eyes which contains the excreta of flies) is najis because the principle of general necessity does not apply to the eyes. However, it will be permissible to apply it to the eyes because it is mixed with other medicines which are more than it in content and which are not najis. However, if the medicine flows out of the eyes, it will be necessary to wash it off prior to offering salaat.

22. The excreta of haraam birds is also najis but it is najaasat-e-khafeefah. However, with regard to crows the ruling has been given that it can be overlooked on the principle of general necessity. When any impurity is categorized as najaasat-e-khafeefah, it does not have any influence on the prohibition of its usage. In this regard, najaasat-e-khafeefah and najaasat-e-ghaleezah are equal. Only in salaat there is a difference in that the amount that can be overlooked is the extent of a coin that is approximately 3 centimetres in diameter in respect of najaasat-e-ghaleezah, and one-quarter of a part of a garment in respect of najaasat-e-khafeefah. Water that becomes najis through a najaasat-e-khafeefah is also considered to be khafeefah. And that which becomes najis through a najaasat-e-ghaleezah is also considered to be ghaleezah.

23. The urine of a bat is considered to be pure on the basis of general necessity while others have stated that it is pure on the basis that this animal is in itself halaal.

24. Apart from birds, the saliva and perspiration of halaal animals is pure. The urine of such animals is najaasat-e-khafeefah. All the other fudalaat, such as that which is in the stomach, intestines, excreta, sperm, etc. are najis, i.e. najaasat-e-ghaleezah.

25. The rule concerning haraam animals other than birds is the following: their saliva, offal, excreta, urine, sperm, perspiration, etc. are all regarded as najaasat-e-ghaleezah. Based on this, the filth that is found in the ears of an elephant is also najis. This can only be used externally provided that it is mixed with another substance and its quantity is less than this latter substance. If this filth is used on its own, or mixed with another substance but it is more than the latter substance, then it will not be permissible to use it even for external purposes. The perspiration of an ass and a donkey is pure. Based on this, its filth is also pure. It can therefore be used externally.

26. The urine of rats is najis. However, on account of necessity, it can be overlooked. Similarly, its excreta is also najis. However, it can be overlooked provided its usage is confined to times of necessity. For example, if some of its excreta falls into some medication, one can still use that medication provided that the excreta does not integrate and get mixed up with the medicine. And provided that its quantity is not too much. It will not be permissible to use it intentionally, e.g. bandaging it around the stomach or applying it to a wound caused by a dog. But if there is no other medicine, it can be used because it has been proved to be beneficial.

27. The perspiration, filth, tears, mucus and saliva of man is pure. The saliva can be applied to herpes and to the eyes. The dirt that is emitted from the ears can be used externally. This cannot be used internally on the basis of istikhbaath. Apart from this, all the other fudalaat of man is najis and therefore cannot be used internally or externally. A small amount of vomit (i.e. an amount which does not invalidate wudu) falls under the category of blood that does not flow. In other words, it is not impure. However, it cannot be used internally on the basis of istikhbaath.

Miscellaneous Masa'il

This topic deals with things that together comprise of animal life, plant life, and inorganic bodies. Other miscellaneous masa'il will also be mentioned.

It has already been mentioned previously that in the Islamic Shariah, the basis for the prohibition of a particular thing could be one or all of the following four reasons: (i) impurity, (ii) harm, (iii) istikhbaath, i.e. things that are abhorred and disliked by a normal person possessing a sound mind, e.g. worms, certain insects, etc.(iv) intoxication.

When anything that is najis is mixed with a substance that is not najis, the entire mixture is regarded as najis. If that which is najis is more than the other substance, then the entire substance is regarded as najisul 'ayn. In other words, such a substance can neither be used internally nor externally, e.g. if a person fills a container with urine, thereafter adds a handful of water to it and wishes to use it externally; this will not be permissible. If the other substance is more than the najis substance, then although the entire substance is still najis, it can be used externally. But it should be borne in mind that purity when offering salaat is essential and that caution in using such substances is preferable. When a pure substance is mixed with an impure substance and thereafter this mixture is purified through one of the acceptable forms of Islamic purification, then we would give the ruling that this entire substance is pure once again. If not, it will remain impure. Tabdeel-e-maahiyat is also a means of purification.

If a harmful substance is mixed with a harmless substance thereby causing the entire substance to be harmless, then this substance will no longer be prohibited, e.g. if arsenic is mixed with an antidote, or some other poison has been treated in such a way that its harmful effects are removed.

If a detestable (khabeeth) substance is mixed with something that is not detestable and the resulting substance does not have the quality of istikhbaath, it will be permissible to use such a substance. If not, it will be haraam. For example, a fly falls in a pot of curry. If the fly remains intact, it will be haraam to eat it. But if it becomes completely absorbed and mixed with the curry (to the extent that it cannot be identified), then generally, (depending on the society we live in), this will not be considered to be detestable. This curry will therefore be halaal despite the fact that we have full conviction that parts of the fly are in that curry.

Tabdeel-e-maahiyat

Rules and laws are also changed on the basis of tabdeel-e-maahiyat. For example, grape juice is pure. However, once it forms into another substance, i.e. alcohol, it becomes impure. When this alcohol forms into another substance, i.e. vinegar, it becomes pure once again. Tabdeel-e-maahiyat refers to the changing of a particular substance to another substance, the ruling regarding which is the complete opposite of the first substance. For example, an impure substance transforms itself into another substance which is regarded as pure. This impure substance (which transformed itself) will therefore be pure, e.g. manure is impure. However, when it turns into soil, (and we know that soil is pure), it will therefore be pure. Another example: an egg is pure. However, this egg turned into blood. Since blood is impure, this egg will now be considered to be impure. When a clot of this blood forms into meat, it will be considered to be pure because we know that meat is pure. If the change takes place in a thing in such a way that the ruling with regard to it is the same as that when it was prior to the change, then the same rule will apply to that thing (even though a change has taken place). If it was pure, it will be regarded as such. And if it was impure, it will be regarded as such. For example, a bone was burnt and it turned to ash. A bone is pure and ash is also pure. Therefore, despite a change taking place, it will still be pure. If sperm turns into blood, then although a change has taken place, it will still be impure because both sperm and blood are impure. And if a clot of blood turns into a piece of meat, it will become pure because a piece of meat is pure. If the change is not complete, i.e. the second substance was not formed from the first and just a partial change took place, then the rules will not change. For example, bread was made from impure wheat. Although the impure wheat changed its form and turned into bread, this is not regarded as the formation of a new substance.

Masa'il

1. If insects are sealed in a container and turned into oil through a heating process, it will not be permissible to consume this oil. This ruse is similar to that of removing the starch from impure wheat or removing the essence of impure water.

2. The smoke of all substances is pure. Smoke is actually the minute and extremely light particles of burnt items which rises on account of extreme heat. Alternatively, it could be minute pieces of coal. It is obvious that coal only forms after burning and burning is actually a form of tabdeel-e-maahiyat. As for steam or vapour, it is najis if it is emitted from something that is najis. This is because the quality of burning is not found in steam or vapour. It is that very water (or whatever liquid that is being burnt) which rises on account of it being heated. It is as if someone is throwing the water. If steam and smoke mix with each other, this mixture will be najis because something that is not najis has mixed with something that is najis. The method of identifying a mixture of steam and smoke is that if this mixture forms or collects on anything and begins dripping, it will be regarded as steam. If black steam rises from a moist object, this steam will be considered to be a mixture of steam and smoke.

3. If juice has been extracted from flesh (i.e. if soup is made from meat) and some blood or any other impure substance falls into it, then this extract will be najis and haraam. And if earthworms or other pure but not consumed substances are added to this soup, it will be haraam to drink it. In both cases tabdeel-e-maahiyat has not taken place.

4. The dry dung of a rabbit was added into a smoking pipe. It will be permissible to smoke this pipe if it is smoked in order to prevent the excessive passing of wind. This is because the smoke is pure even though it may have passed through water and because it was pure before it could pass through the water. If moist dung was filled into the pipe or dry dung was mixed in a syrup and then filled into the pipe, it will be najis on account of it being adulterated with steam. The entire pipe including its mouth will now be najis. Smoking such a pipe will now be haraam.

5. If any najis substance is added to water and thereafter put to boil in order to apply the steam to one's body or clothing, this will be similar to plastering or anointing the body with something that is pure. This means that the act in itself is permissible but the body or clothing will become impure. It will become impure on the condition that the steam collects at a certain place (of the body or clothing) and begins to drip. The mere steaming of the body or clothing (without any dripping of the steam) does not make it impure.

6. Sal-ammoniac was mixed with the urine of a donkey (or any other najis substance) and poured into a container. Another utensil was kept on top of this in such a manner that it sealed the bottom container (in order to prevent the steam from escaping). Thereafter, this was heated in such a way that the essence of the bottom container began accumulating on the top utensil. This substance that accumulated on the top utensil is not pure because it is actually the steam of that najis sal-ammoniac and we know that tabdeel-e-maahiyat does not take place in steam.

7. The ash of everything is pure because tabdeel-e-maahiyat has taken place. Based on this, the ash of man's bones and those of a pig is pure and halaal and could be used internally and externally. However, it should be borne in mind that it is not permissible for a Muslim to burn the bones of a human. If there is a need for such ash, it could be purchased from a mortuary.

8. If insects are added into oil, burnt thereafter, and then formed into coal, it will be permissible to consume that oil and coal and to apply it as well. This is because the quality of istikhbaath is no more found on account of tabdeel-e-maahiyat. If cow-dung or any other najis substance is added to oil and burnt, the dung or najis substance will become pure and halaal on account of tabdeel-e-maahiyat. However the oil will have to be cleaned thoroughly prior to using it. The oil will be najis because a najis substance has been added to it and it has not been purified through any other means. It could be used externally but not internally. When offering salaat, it should be washed off.

9. A fish that is in impure water is pure and halaal. The reason for this is that whatever water it may have consumed has become a part of it and tabdeel-e-maahiyat has taken place. Obviously, the water that is on its body will have to be washed off. If the offensive odour of the impure water is found in the fish, it will be makruh to consume it. Instead, this fish should be kept in pure water (while it is still alive) for three days and thereafter consumed. However, even in this case it will still be makruh to consume it. But it should be borne in mind that the karaahat (detestability) in eating this fish is less than the karaahat in eating a jallaalah. (For an explanation of a jallaalah, refer to the next mas'ala).

10. A fowl was given sand lizards, earthworms, the fat of a lion or any other najis substance in order to fatten it. It will be permissible to eat such a fowl. However, if the smell of that substance appears in the fowl itself, it will be preferable to encage it and feed it with pure substances for at least three days. Thereafter, one may slaughter and consume it. Such an animal is known as a jallaalah in Islamic jurisprudence. Eating a jallaalah animal is makruh-e-tahrimi. But this refers to that animal which only eats najaasah and which thereby results in the odour of that najaasah being found in its meat. If it does not confine itself to najaasah only (but eats other pure substances as well) then it will not be makruh-e-tahrimi to consume such an animal. However, it is preferable to encage such an animal as well for three days, feed it with pure substances only and thereafter consume it.

One of the methods of feeding a najis substance to an animal is that you should not feed it directly with your hands. Instead, go and keep that substance at a certain place (not in the presence of the animal) and drive the animal towards it. It will then eat on its own accord. Similarly, if you wish to make vinegar from alcohol, take the vinegar to the alcohol and add it into it. Do not take the alcohol to the vinegar.

11. If the steam of impure water gets onto the body, we will only say that the body has become impure if the steam accumulates on the body and begins to drip. The mere heat of the steam getting onto the body will not render it impure. Just as we will not give a ruling of impurity by the mere entry of an impure odour to the brain, in the same way, if the evil odour of smoke or steam from a najis substance gets into one's clothing or body, then we will not say that the clothing or body is now najis.

12. A certain substance was filled in a clay pot. Thereafter this pot was buried in horse-dung or any other najis substance. Two months later, this pot was removed. If the pot became wet on account of the najis substance, or if one perceives the foul odour of that najis substance emanating from the original substance or from the pot itself, then the original substance will be impure. If not, it will be pure. It would be preferable to smear the top of the pot with coal tar, resin or any other similar substance whereby the impurity will not be able to penetrate the pot. The reason is that burying the pot in horse-dung was not done in order for the dung to penetrate the pot. The purpose of burying it in the horse-dung was to obtain the special heat of the dung. Even if a steel pot is buried in sand, the required heat could be obtained.

13. The bones that occasionally come out from the excreta of sheep are pure. The impurity that surrounds them should be washed three times and thereafter dried. However, it will not be permissible to consume these bones because we do not know whether they belong to halaal or haraam animals.

14. The milk that curdles in the stomach of the young of an animal is pure and halaal. This is irrespective of whether it is from that of a camel or any other animal whose meat is consumed. The method of obtaining this milk is that a suckling animal is made to drink milk and slaughtered immediately thereafter. The milk (which it had drank a short while ago) is removed from its stomach. This milk is now slightly coagulated. The effect of this milk is that it can now thicken liquids and also soften things that are in a solid form. It also has other characteristics. It is from this that cheese is manufactured. Contrary to the normal ruling, this milk is regarded as halaal. It should be remembered that the normal rule is that whatever is in the stomach has the same rule as that of the excreta of that animal.

However, the purity and permissibility of cheese is something that is established and agreed upon. It is for this reason that this milk is also considered to be pure and halaal. However, one cannot draw an analogy with this in order to make cud permissible. (Cud is haraam).

15. Question: Can a Muslim doctor prescribe najis medicines to non-Muslim patients? If he can, does this include maytah and alcohol as well? Answer: This is permissible on the condition that the non-Muslim patient does not consider such medication to be najis or prohibited from his religious point of view. If he is informed later (regarding the permissibility or prohibition of such medication in his religion) but still chooses to consume such medication, it will be permissible for the Muslim doctor to prescribe such medication irrespective of whether the non-Muslim patient considers it to be permissible or not. Alcohol is also included in this permissibility on the condition that the Muslim doctor merely writes out a prescription or asks the patient verbally to obtain it. It will not be permissible for the doctor to keep such alcohol or any other najisul 'ayn medication and personally give it to his patients. It is not permissible for a Muslim to take any money for anything that is najis. For example, some traders sell alcohol and foreign meat. It is not permissible for them to take any money for such products even from non-Muslims. In this context, alcohol refers to the four types of alcohol that were mentioned in the beginning.

16. Question: Is it permissible to consume phosphorus? Answer: It is permissible because phosphorus is actually obtained from the ash of bones. And the ash of all bones is pure on the basis of tabdeel-e-maahiyat.

Conclusion

Prior to this, we had mentioned all those substances that are used for medical purposes and that fall under the categories of inorganic bodies, plant life and animal life. It would be appropriate to mention certain practices that are prevalent at the time of seeking medical treatment but are prohibited in the Shariah. The most frequent practice concerns the exposure of the aurah of the patient, especially the female patient. Maulana Thanwi rahmatullahi alayh has the following to say in this regard:

"People display lack of caution with regard to covering the aurah of the patient. They do not even bother whether the knees or thighs are exposed. If, during a medical examination, there is a need to expose any part of the body, they are not cautious. It should be borne in mind that only that which is necessary to expose should be exposed. Moreover, the body should only be exposed to those who have something to do with the medical examination and not to others. At times, it is exposed to others who are present including other patients. This they do on the assumption that others will be a source of consolation to them. In short, it is not permissible to expose the body to others, nor is it permissible to expose more than what is necessary. The seriousness of this can be gauged from the fact that if a woman is about to deliver her child, it will be permissible for the doctor to look at the place of birth only if is it necessary. But because a kaafir woman (assuming that the doctor is a kaafir woman) falls under the category of a ghayr mahram, it will be haraam for this woman who is in labour to keep her head uncovered in the presence of this kaafir woman doctor. The reason for it being haraam to uncover her head is that there is no need to uncover the head. Similarly, if a woman's blood has to be cupped, the person performing this surgery can only look at the place where the surgery is going to be performed. It will be wajib for others who are present to leave, close their eyes or turn away. It is not permissible for others to look at the exposed part of this woman's hand. Similarly, if a boy is being circumcised, it will be permissible for the person performing the operation to look at only what is necessary. It will not be permissible for others to look at the exposed parts of the boy. Similarly, if a boil or sore has to be split open, the doctor or whoever else is undertaking the task can look at that exposed place. Others cannot look."

Presently, something more serious is in vogue. This has to be rejected with more emphasis. This has been initiated by the so-called educated persons. We refer to the custom of going to male doctors for the delivery of a child instead of going to mid-wives. When it is not permissible for a woman to look at the aurah of another woman except when necessary, how can it be permissible for a man to look at the aurah of a woman? It should be borne in mind that the further away a man is (in relation) to a woman, the more serious the sin and the more intense the prohibition will be. When a Muslim woman is in dire need of medical examination, the most rightful person will be another Muslim woman who is close to her. Thereafter it is a kaafir woman, who is equal to a ghayr mahram in status. Thereafter a Muslim male doctor. And thereafter, a non-Muslim male doctor. One should not go to a non-Muslim male doctor first (but choose him as the last alternative). This is a sign of great immorality, a major sin, and an improper following of the above-mentioned sequence. The excuse of necessity (or there being no alternative) is totally unacceptable. When this practice was not prevalent, babies were still being born. Even today, families that have a sense of shame and morality have babies born to them and the mid-wives are fulfilling all the necessary tasks. Once a new practice is initiated, a person will definitely experience problems and complications if he tries to do something contrary to what he has now become accustomed to. Take the case of Europeans who normally do not resort to indigenous or home-made medical preparations when it is a well-known, established fact that some of these modern medicines do not help in any way while the home-made preparations are much more beneficial. Based on certain worldly reasons, they do not wish to get into the practice of using home-made preparations. Is this stopping them from carrying on with whatever they want to? No. If, for Shar'ee reasons, we do not opt to go to male doctors for the delivery of our children, will this cause the birth of babies to cease? Definitely not!

Maulana Thanwi rahmatullahi alayh has mentioned the word "ghayr mahram" above. This word has to be clearly understood as well. Many people err in this regard. A Shar'ee mahram is one with whom there is no possibility of marriage being permissible or valid for one's entire life. Such persons are: one's father, son, brother, step-brother (irrespective of whether the father is one and they have two mothers, or whether the mother is one and they have two fathers), sons of these brothers and sons of sisters (i.e. nephews). The person with whom there is the possibility of marriage at any stage of one's life is not a Shar'ee mahram. Instead, he is a ghayr mahram. All the rules pertaining to a stranger will apply to this person as well even if there is some sort of relationship between them. Such persons include: paternal and maternal cousins, husband's brother, sister's husband, husband of the husband's sister, etc. These are all ghayr mahrams. The precautions that are accorded to strangers will have to be accorded to them as well. In fact, since the possibility of falling into sin with such persons is greater, stricter precautions will have to be taken when dealing with them.

It is haraam even for a Shar'ee mahram to look at or touch a woman from her navel till below her knees, her belly and her back. If the head, face, hands, arms, calves become exposed out of necessity, there will be no sin. But it is inappropriate to expose the arms and calves unnecessarily. As for a ghayr mahram (i.e. a strange person and also all those relatives whom we have mentioned above and included among strangers), it is not permissible for him to look at any part of the body. If there is a great necessity, the hands up to the wrists and the feet up to the ankles could be exposed. We have written all this because doctors display no caution whatsoever when examining female patients. They fearlessly examine the belly and other parts.

BOOK XX

DEEDS

Etiquette in 'Ibâdât

Wudû* and Purity

1. Perform your wudû in a proper manner even if you do not feel like doing so.
2. There is greater reward in performing a fresh wudû.
3. When relieving yourself, do not face the qiblah nor turn your back towards the qiblah.
4. You must be cautious with regard to urine splashing on you. By being unmindful in this regard, one is punished in the grave.
5. Do not urinate in a hole as there is the possibility of a snake, scorpion or any other dangerous animal emerging from it.
6. Do not urinate in the place where you have a bath.
7. Do not engage in any conversation when relieving yourself.
8. When you wake up, do not insert your hand in a utensil containing water until you have thoroughly washed your hands.
9. Do not use water that has been warmed in the sun as there is the possibility of being infected with white liver whereby the body is tainted with white marks.

Salât

1. Offer your salât at the appropriate time. Carry out the rukus and sajdahs in the proper manner and offer your salât with concentration.
2. When a child reaches the age of seven, emphasize the importance of salât to him. When he reaches the age of ten, beat him if necessary, in order to get him to offer his salât.
3. It is not good to offer salât in such clothes or at such a place whereby you become distracted and begin to concentrate on the flowers and leaves that are depicted on such clothes or at such a place (e.g. prayer mats - musallas - on which such designs are depicted).
4. There should be a barrier in front of the person offering salât. If there isn't anything, a stick should be placed or any other raised object should be placed. Such an object should be placed to the right or left of the person offering salât.
5. On completing the fard salât, it is preferable to move away from that place and offer the sunnah, nafl salât.
6. While offering salât, do not look around you nor upwards. As far as possible, prevent yourself from sneezing.
7. When you have an urgent need to relieve yourself, go and relieve yourself first and then offer your salât.
8. When commencing with nafl salâat or the different forms of dhikr, commence with an amount which you can undertake and keep up with. (Do not commence with something that is beyond your capacity).

At the time of a funeral or calamity

1. When you remember any previous calamity, recite
!!!!!!!!!!!!!!!!!!!!!!!!!!!!
In doing so, you will receive the same reward that you had received previously.
2. Irrespective of how trivial a saddening or distressing matter may be, recite
!!!!!!!!!!!!!!!!!!!!!!!!!!!!
You will be rewarded in doing so.

Zakât and Charity

1. As far as possible, give zakât to those who do not go around begging - who remain in their homes out of self-respect and self-honour.
2. Do not be ashamed of giving very little in charity. Give whatever you are able to irrespective of the amount.
3. Do not think: "What is the need of giving zakât or charity?" Whenever the occasion arises, make a resolution and give in charity.
4. By giving charity to your relatives, you receive a double reward - one for giving in charity, and another for being kind and considerate toward your relatives.
5. Always bear in mind your poor neighbours.
6. Do not spend too much in charity from your husband's wealth to the extent that he is displeased.

Fasting

1. It is extremely detestable to engage in foolish and shameless conversations while fasting. It is even more detestable to make ghîbah.
2. When intending to keep a nafl fast, seek the husband's permission if he is present at home.
3. Increase your 'ibâdah in the last ten days of Ramadân.

Recitation of the Quran

1. If you are not fluent in your recitation of the Quran, do not abandon its recitation out of despair. Continue with your recitation. Such a person is rewarded twofold.
2. When you have learnt the Quran, do not forget it. Instead, continue reciting it. If not, you will be committing a major sin.
3. Recite the Quran with full concentration and with fear for Allawh.

Du'â* and *Dhikr

1. When making du'â, bear the following factors in mind:
(a) Make du'â with full zeal and fervour.
(b) Do not make du'â for anything sinful.
(c) If there is any delay in the acceptance of your du'â, do not give it up out of despair. Instead, have full conviction of its acceptance.
2. Do not curse your children, wealth and life out of anger because it is highly possible that it is the time of acceptance of such a curse.
3. Make a concerted effort to remember Allawh and His Rasûl sallallâhu 'alayhi wa sallam at the place at which you sit and discuss worldly affairs or engage in worldly matters. If not, all these matters and affairs will go to waste.
4. Make istighfâr abundantly. In doing so, your difficulties are made easy and there is barakah in your sustenance.
5. If, perchance, you commit any sin, do not delay in making taubah. If you commit a sin again, make taubah again and do not think that since you have acted contrary to your first taubah there is no benefit in making taubah a second time.
6. There are certain du'âs which are recited at specific times. They are as follows:
(a) Recite the following du'â at the time of sleeping:

(b) When awakening, recite the following du'â:

(c) Recite the following du'â in the morning:

(d) Recite the following du'â after eating:

(e) Recite the following du'â seven times each after the fajr and maghrib salâts:

(f) Recite the following du'â three times each after the fajr and maghrib salâts:

(g) When sitting in a vehicle (or on an animal) recite the following du'â:

(h) When you have partaken of a meal at someone's house, add the following du'â as well:

(i) When sighting the moon, recite the following du'â:

(j) When you see anyone experiencing any calamity, recite the following du'â. Inshâ Allawh, you will be saved from such a calamity:

(k) When someone takes leave of you (in order to embark on a journey or go somewhere), recite the following du'â:

(l) When congratulating the bride and bridegroom on the occasion of their marriage, recite the following du'â:

(m) When any calamity befalls you, recite the following du'â:

(n) Read the following du'âs after the five daily salâts and also at the time of sleeping:

The above du'â should be recited three times.
Thereafter, recite the following du'â once:

Thereafter recite "Sub'hânallâh" 33 times, "Alhamdulillâh" 33 times, and "Allâhu Akbar" 34 times.
Thereafter recite Sûrah al-Falaq (chapter 113), Sûrah an-Nâs (chapter 114), and Âyatul Kursi one time each.
(o) Recite Sûrah Yâsîn (chapter 36) every morning, Sûrah al-Wâqi'ah (chapter 56) after maghrib, Sûrah al-Mulk (chapter 67) after îshâ, and Sûrah al-Kahf (chapter 18) on Fridays. Also recite "âmanar rasûlu" till the end of the sûrah (Sûrah al-Baqarah, verses 285-286) when going to sleep.
(p) Recite the Quran daily as much as you can. Remember that by reciting all the above, one is rewarded. And by abstaining from reading them, one is not committing a sin.

Oaths and Vows

1. Do not take oaths in the name of anyone other than Allawh. For example, do not take oaths in the name of your children, your health, your eyes, etc. It is a sin to take such oaths. If you mistakenly utter such oaths, you should immediately recite the kalimah.
2. Similarly, do not take oaths of this nature: "If I am lying, may I lose my îmân", even if what you are saying is the truth.
3. If, out of anger, you take an oath which is sinful to fulfil, then breach such an oath and pay kaffârah, e.g. you take an oath that you will not speak to your father or your mother, or any similar oath.

Etiquette in Mu'âmalât

Transactions

1. Do not be so greedy for wealth that you forget to distinguish between halâl and harâm. Furthermore, do not waste the halâl wealth that Allawh has blessed you with. Instead, spend it sparingly and on occasions of true necessity.
2. If a person who has been afflicted with a certain calamity decides to sell something of his because he is forced to do so (i.e. because he is desperately in need of the cash), then do not oppress him thinking him to be in extreme need. Nor should you ask him to reduce the price of the item. You should either help him or purchase that item from him at an appropriate price.
3. If your debtor is poor, do not distress him further. Instead, grant him a respite. Waive a certain amount of the debt, or better still, waive the entire debt.
4. If you owe money to a person and you have that amount to pay him, then it is extremely sinful and oppressive for you to delay in fulfilling this debt of yours.
5. As far as possible, do not take up any debt upon yourself. If there is no alternative, then always be concerned about paying it back. Do not become neglectful in this regard. If your creditor tells you something (with regard to your debt), keep quiet and listen. Do not counter-attack him nor become angry.
6. It is a very evil habit to conceal something that belongs to someone jokingly and which thereby causes him great distress.
7. Once a labourer has fulfilled his task, do not display any shortfall in paying him.
8. At the time of famine, some people sell their children. It is harâm to turn these children into slaves.
9. If you provide fire-wood (or anything else such as a stove, coal, etc.) to someone in order that he may prepare a meal, or you provide salt to the person in order that she may use it to prepare a meal, it is as if you have provided them with the entire meal.
10. There is great reward in providing drinking water. If you provide drinking water in a place where water is easily obtainable, it is as if you have freed a slave. And if you provide this water in a place where water is scarce, it is as if you have given life to a dead person.
11. If you have to give or receive something from someone or you have someone's amânah in your possession, then mention this to several persons. Alternatively, have this written down so that if you pass away, (all this will be paid) and you will not be owing anything to anyone.

Marriage

1. As regards the marriage of your children, always try and ensure that it is with a religious-minded person. Do not be concerned about wealth and status. These days, many of those who are highly educated from western institutions utter things which amount to kufr. It is not permissible to marry such persons whereby the rest of one's life is spent in immorality.
2. It is the habit of the majority of women to describe other women to their husbands. This is extremely evil. When the husband is attracted to one of these women (who has been described by his wife), this wife will then sit down and cry and regret her action.
3. If a proposal has been sent to a certain family and it is known that they might respond favourably, do not send a proposal on behalf of any of your children. However, if the person abandons his proposal or they respond in the negative; it will be permissible for you to send a proposal there.
4. Allawh detests it when the private affairs of the husband and wife are discussed with one's friends and relatives. Many brides and bridegrooms are not cautious in this regard.
5. If a person consults you with regard to a certain person (whom he intends to marry or get married) and asks you for advice, then do not conceal any faults of that person if you have knowledge of them. In such a case, this ghîbah will not be harâm. However, do not unnecessarily find faults with a person.
6. If the husband is in a good financial position and yet he does not give his wife even the basic expenses, it will be permissible for the wife to take his money secretly. However, it is not permissible to take money in this manner in order to purchase something unnecessary or merely to fulfil and uphold worldly customs and habits.

Causing harm to someone

1. If a person is not a qualified doctor, it is not permissible for him to prescribe medicines in which there is a fear of harm. If he does so, he will be committing a sin.
2. It is not permissible to scare anyone with any weapon or dangerous object even if this is done jokingly as there is the possibility of the object slipping out of one's hand (and thereby injuring the person).
3. Do not give a pocket knife to a person while it is open. Either close it and give it to him, or keep it down so that he may pick it up himself.
4. It is a major sin to enclose a dog, cat or any other living creature in such a way that it remains hungry.
5. It is an evil practice to ridicule or taunt a sinful person. However, there is no harm in advising him.
6. It is not permissible to stare or fix one's gaze at an innocent person in such a way that he gets frightened. Note, if this is not permissible, how serious a crime it is to scare someone all of a sudden or "out of the blue".
7. If you wish to slaughter an animal, ensure that the knife is extremely sharp. Do not cause unnecessary harm to the animal.
8. When travelling (on an animal), do not burden the animal excessively. You should not overload it nor should you impose it to run excessively. Once you reach your destination (or rest-place), you should first make arrangements for the animal's fodder, grass, feed, etc.

Day to day Manners

Eating and Drinking

1. Commence eating by reciting Bismillah. Eat with the right hand. Eat the food that is in front of you. However, if there are several things on a platter, such as different types of fruit or different types of sweetmeats, then take whatever you wish and from whichever side you wish.
2. Always lick your fingers. If there is any gravy left over on the plate, clean it as well.
3. If a morsel of food falls from your hand, pick it up, clean it, and eat it. Do not be boastful (by abstaining from picking it up).

4. There are slices of water-melon, grapes and dates or pieces of sweetmeats on the table. In such a case, take one at a time, do not take two-three slices or two-three pieces at a time.
5. If you have eaten anything that is foul-smelling, such as raw onions or garlic, then wash your mouth thoroughly if you intend sitting or being in the company of others.
6. When preparing your daily meals, ensure that you measure all the ingredients such as rice, flour, etc. properly. Do not cook by mere estimation.
7. When you have completed your meal, express your gratitude to Allawh.
8. Wash your hands before and after eating. Gargle your mouth as well.
9. Do not eat food that is too hot.
10. Always take the needs of your guests into consideration. If you go somewhere as a guest, do not remain there for so long that you become a burden on your hosts.
11. There are a lot of blessings in eating together.
12. Once you have completed eating, remove the dishes, utensils, food, etc. first and then get up. It is a sign of disrespect to get up before the table has been cleared. If you have completed eating before your companion, you should give him company. Continue eating little by little so that he does not get up hungry out of shyness. If there is any reason for you to get up before him, excuse yourself.
13. It is sunnah to bid your guest farewell till the door.
14. Do not drink water in one gulp. Instead, take it in three sips. When breathing in or out, do not do so in the tumbler. Instead, move your mouth away from the tumbler. Say Bismillâh when drinking and Alḥamdulillâh upon completing.
15. Do not drink water from a utensil (or bottle) from which there is a fear that too much of water will flow out. Nor should you drink from a utensil (or bottle) which you do not know what is inside. (e.g. a bottle that is very dark in colour). There is a fear of there being insects, worms, thorns, etc. in such bottles.
16. Do not stand and drink water unnecessarily.
17. If you have to give water to others after you have drunk from it, then give it to the person who is on your right-hand side. This person will then give it to the person who is on his right-hand side. The same rule will apply if you have to distribute anything else, such as betel leaves, perfume, sweetmeats, etc.
18. Do not drink from the side of a utensil which is cracked.
19. Do not allow children to go outside in the evening. At night, close the doors after saying Bismillah. Cover all utensils after saying Bismillah. Switch off all the lights when going to sleep and extinguish all fires as well.
20. If you have to send any food or drink to anyone, cover it and send it.

Clothing

1. Do not walk around with just one shoe or sandal. Do not cover yourself with a blanket, shawl, etc. in such a way that it is difficult for you to walk or take out your hands (from underneath).
2. Commence wearing your clothes from the right-side. For example, the right sleeve, the right leg, the right shoe, etc. When removing your clothes, commence from the left-side.
3. Upon wearing your clothes, recite the following du'â. In doing so, your sins will be forgiven.

4. Do not wear clothes which reveal the aurah. (In which there is no purdah or which show the shape of your body).
5. Do not sit in the company of rich women who wear extravagant clothes and jewellery. In doing so, you will unnecessarily begin to attach importance to this world.
6. Do not consider it disgraceful to wear patched clothes.
7. Clothes should not be worn with too much of formalities and care, nor should they be dirty and untidy. Wear average clothes and keep them clean.
8. Apply oil to your head and comb your hair regularly. However, do not spend too much time in this. Apply henna to your hands.
9. Apply surmah to your eyes three times each.
10. Keep your house clean and tidy.

Sickness and Tending to the Sick

1. Do not compel a sick person to eat and drink.
2. Do not indulge yourself when you are sick (by overstepping the prescribed diet of the sickness).
3. Never use amulets (ta'wîdh) that are contrary to the Sharî'ah, nor should you use charms, superstitious remedies, etc.
4. If someone has come under the influence of an evil eye (naẓr) and you suspect that the cause of this is a particular person, then ask the person (whom you suspect) to do the following: he should wash his face, both hands up to and including the elbows, both the feet, thighs, and private parts. When this person washes all these parts, the water that falls from his body should be collected. This water should then be poured on the head of the person who has come under the influence of this evil eye. Inshâ Allawh, the person will be cured.
5. A person who has been afflicted by sicknesses and diseases which are repulsive to others, such as scabies and white liver, should seclude himself from others so that he does not cause any harm or discomfort to them.

Dreams

1. If you experience a fearful dream, blow on your left three times in such a way that a few droplets of saliva come out each time. Thereafter read A'ûdhubillâhi minash shayṭânir rajîm three times. Also change your position of sleeping. Do not mention this dream to anyone. Inshâ Allawh, no harm will afflict you.
2. If you wish to mention your dream to anyone, choose a person who is intelligent or who has your interests in mind. This is so that he does not give you any evil interpretations.
3. It is a major sin to concoct dreams.

Salâm* or Greetings

1. Inculcate the habit of greeting each other by saying "As salâmu 'alaykum" and reply by saying "Wa 'alaykumus salâm". All other methods of greeting are nonsensical.
2. The person who greets first receives more reward.
3. When a person conveys someone's salâm to you, reply by saying "'Alayhim wa 'alaykumus salâm".
4. If one person from a group of people makes salâm, it will suffice on behalf of the rest. Similarly, if one person in a group replies, it will suffice on behalf of the rest.

Additional notes: It is prohibited to bow when greeting by hand. If you are at a distance and you greet someone or that person greets you, it will be permissible to use your hand. However, you should also make a verbal salâm or reply. Muslim children who study in government schools should not greet in methods that are adopted by the west and non-Muslims. Instead, they should greet the teachers according to the Islamic method (i.e. if the teachers are Muslims). If the teacher is not a Muslim, one should merely say "salâm" or "As salâmu 'alâ manit taba'al huda". The words "As salâmu 'alaykum" should not be used for the kuffâr. These rules apply to all Muslims.

Sitting, Lying down and Walking

1. Do not walk around in a flirtatious manner.
2. Do not lie down on your stomach.

3. Do not sleep on a roof which does not have any barrier as there is the possibility of rolling off the roof.
4. Do not sit half in the shade and half in the sun.
5. If you have to go out of the house due to necessity, walk on the side of the road. It is a sign of shamelessness for women to walk in the centre of the road.

Sitting in a gathering

1. Do not remove someone from their sitting place so that you may sit there yourself.
2. In a gathering, a woman got up from her place and went for some work and you deduced that she will return soon. In such a case, you should not allow anyone else to sit there as it is her right to sit there.
3. If two women decide to sit together in a gathering, do not go and sit in-between them. However, there is no harm if they happily allow you to sit there.
4. If a woman comes to meet you, then upon seeing her you should move a bit whereby she will feel appreciated and honoured.
5. Do not sit in a gathering like a "queen". Wherever there is a place, sit there with humility.
6. If you wish to sneeze, cover your mouth with a cloth or your hand and try to stifle your sneeze.
7. As far as possible, prevent yourself from yawning. If you are unable to do so, cover your mouth.
8. Do not laugh too loudly.
9. Do not sit in a gathering in a proud manner. Sit with humility like a poor person. If there is any relevant thing to say, say it. However, do not speak anything that is sinful.
10. Do not stretch out your feet when sitting in a gathering.

Safeguarding the Tongue

1. Do not speak without thinking. You should only speak once you have pondered over what you wish to say and you are convinced that it will not be badly received.
2. It is a sin to address a person or speak of him in the following terms: "he has no îmân", "may Allawh's punishment, curse, or anger descend on a certain person", "may he enter hell", etc. It is a sin to speak in this manner irrespective of whether one is addressing a human or an animal. If the person who has been addressed in this manner does not deserve such remarks, all these curses will actually descend on the person who uttered them.
3. If anyone addresses you in this useless manner, you have the right to reply in the same way. However, you cannot exceed what that person says. If you exceed, you will be committing a sin.
4. Do not be two-faced whereby you "play according to the tune" of one person when you are in his company, and according to the "tune" of another person when in the latter's company.
5. Don't ever back-bite nor should you listen to such back-biting and tale-bearing.
6. Never ever speak a lie.
7. Do not praise a person directly nor should you exaggerate in praising him in his absence.
8. Don't ever involve yourself in ghîbah. Ghîbah means speaking in the absence of a person in such a way that if he were to hear it, he would be grieved. This is irrespective of whether what you say is the truth or not. If what you say is false, it is regarded as slander or defamation. This is even more sinful.
9. Do not argue with a person. Do not try to give precedence to what you have to say.
10. Do not laugh excessively as this causes the illumination of the heart (and countenance) to disappear.
11. If you have made ghîbah of a person, seek his forgiveness. If you are unable to do so, make du'â-e-maghfirah on his behalf. In doing this, there is hope that you will be forgiven on the day of judgement.
12. Do not make false promises.
13. Do not laugh in such a way that the other person feels insulted or offended.
14. Do not be boastful of something that you own or a quality which you possess.
15. Do not occupy yourself with poems and poetry. However, if the subject matter is not contrary to the Sharî'ah and you occasionally quote a few lines when making du'â or when advising someone, there is no harm in this.
16. Do not mention things that you hear from here and there because the majority of such things are false.

Miscellaneous etiquette

1. After writing a letter sprinkle some dust onto it so that the purpose for which the letter was written is fulfilled.
2. Do not speak evil of time (complaining about the weather, climate, etc. is also included in this prohibition).
3. Do not speak too concisely nor should you speak in a very detailed manner, nor should you exaggerate. Speak according to what is necessary.
4. Do not turn your ear towards the singing of anyone.
5. Do not imitate anyone's ugly features nor should you imitate their evil ways.
6. If you see any fault or shortcoming in anyone, conceal it. Do not mention it to others.
7. When you intend doing something, think over it carefully taking the end-result into consideration and then execute it calmly. By rushing, most tasks end up in failure.
8. If anyone seeks advice from you, advise them with that which is best in your opinion.
9. As far as possible, control your anger.
10. If you have said or spoken anything with regard to anyone, seek forgiveness from them. If not, you will be in great distress on the day of judgement.
11. Direct others towards good and prevent them from evil. However, if you have no hope of their accepting your advice or you feel that they will cause you harm if you do so, it will be permissible to maintain silence. However, continue regarding the evil act to be evil and do not associate with them unless there is a need to do so.

REFORMATION OF THE HEART

The harms of over-eating and its cure

Many sins are committed on account of over-filling the stomach. There are several factors which have to be taken into consideration:
(a) Do not become too accustomed to eating sumptuous meals.
(b) Safeguard yourself from harâm sustenance.
(c) Do not fill your stomach beyond its limit. Instead, set aside a bit of hunger which equals a few morsels. There are many benefits in this:
(i) One of them is that the person's heart remains pure whereby he recognizes the bounties of Allawh. This results in his developing a love for Allawh.
(ii) Tenderness and softness remains in his heart whereby he perceives pleasure in his du'âs and dhikr.
(iii) His soul is not allowed to consider itself to be great.
(iv) When the soul is harmed even slightly, the person immediately remembers the punishment of Allawh. In this way, the soul safeguards him from sinning.
(v) He is not inclined towards sinning.
(vi) He remains light-headed, he is able to sleep less, and does not feel lazy in offering tahajjud and other forms of 'ibâdah.
(vii) He has mercy for those who are weak and starving. In fact, he develops kind-heartedness towards everyone.

The harms of speaking excessively and its cure

The soul takes great delight in speaking excessively, and in so doing, the person plunges himself into many sins. A person can only save himself from the following sins if he safeguards his tongue. These sins are: lying, back-biting, cursing, accusing someone, boasting and bragging about oneself, arguing and debating with someone unnecessarily, submitting to the rich and laughing in such a way that the person who is laughed at feels humiliated and disgraced.

The method of safeguarding the tongue is that one should not blurt out anything and everything that comes to one's mind. Instead, one should ponder carefully and check whether what one wishes to say entails a reward or a sin, or does not constitute a reward nor a sin. If it is such that it entails a lot of sin or a little sin, then one should keep silent. If the soul prompts one to speak from within, one should explain to it that it is easy to break one's desires for a little while now while the punishment of the hereafter is extremely severe. If it entails reward, utter it. If it does not entail any reward nor any sin, even then he should not utter it. However, if the soul insists, then utter a little of it and thereafter remain silent. A person should ponder in this manner in all his conversations. In a few days, the soul will develop a natural dislike for excessive speech. Another method of safeguarding the tongue is not to associate with others unnecessarily. When one is alone, the tongue will automatically remain silent.

The harms of anger and its cure

When a person is angry, his intellect does not function properly and he loses the perception to consider the consequences of this anger. It is for this reason that he utters anything and everything. At times, he even goes beyond the limit by using his hands (physical force). It is therefore necessary to control and curb this anger.

The method of controlling one's anger is that the person should immediately remove the person upon whom his anger has descended from his sight. If he does not move away, the person who is angry should leave that place himself. He should then think and ponder that just as this person is at fault (or blameworthy), I am much more blameworthy in the sight of Allawh. And just as I would like Allawh to forgive me for my mistakes and sins, in the same way I should also forgive him for his mistakes. Thereafter the person should recite "A'ûdhu billâh" several times, drink water or make wud̲û. In this way his anger will subside.

Once he comes back to his senses and still feels that the person deserves to be punished for his mistake or fault, he should first try and establish the method of punishment by ascertaining how a person is punished for such a mistake. Once he has established the method and is satisfied that it is according to the Sharî'ah, he should mete it out. Example, if the punishment being meted out is for the benefit and welfare of the person at fault as in the case of punishing one's children in order to mend their wrong ways, or if by meting out punishment, there is benefit for a third person as in the case of punishing the oppressor to help the oppressed.

If a person curbs his anger in this way, he will be able to bring it under his control within a few days. He will no longer be hot-tempered.

Malice and hatred is also born from anger. Once a person has complete control over his anger, malice and hatred will also disappear from his heart.

The harms of jealousy and its cure

When you see a person living comfortably, eating and drinking well, living with honour and respect, and upon seeing all this you begin to "burn" within you, begin to have hatred for him or become happy when he experiences any lapse - then this is known as h̲asad (jealousy or envy). This is a very evil characteristic and is also sinful. Such a person passes his entire life in bitterness. In other words, his worldly life and his Dînî life are both abhorrent and unpleasant. Great efforts therefore have to be made in order to come out from this great calamity.

The first cure for this is that the person should think to himself that "by my envying him, I am causing harm to myself and no harm whatsoever is befalling him. The harm that it is causing me and my loss is that all my good deeds are being wiped out." This has been deduced from a Hadith in which it is mentioned that h̲asad devours good deeds just as fire devours dry wood. The reason for this is that this person is indirectly forwarding an objection to Allawh by saying (indirectly): "so-and-so person does not deserve those bounties. Why did You give him these bounties?" If someone raises an objection to Allawh in such a manner, how serious a sin it will be?

It is obvious that such a person will always live with malice and sorrow in his heart. As for the person who has been envied, he has suffered no loss whatsoever. By your envying him, the bounty which he possesses will not disappear. Instead, the person whom you have envied will benefit in the sense that all your good deeds will go to him.

Once you have thought over all these factors in your mind, praise this person (whom you are jealous of) and say good things about him to others. You should also add by saying: "All thanks are due to Allawh in that he has all these bounties. May Allawh give him all these bounties two-fold." If you happen to meet this person, meet him with respect and humble yourself. In the beginning, your soul will be greatly burdened in doing this. However, h̲asad will gradually disappear from your heart.

The harms of love for wealth and its cure

The love for wealth is such an evil characteristic that once it enters the heart, the love and remembrance of Allawh disappears. This is because such a person is in constant perplexity as to how can I accumulate more wealth, what type of jewellery and clothing must I purchase, what type of goods must I have, how many utensils must I possess, how much household effects must I have, what type of house must I build, what orchard must I possess and what property must I purchase...and so on. If one thinks in this manner day and night, when will one have the time to remember Allawh?

One of the harms of this is that once the love for all this enters the heart, such a person does not wish to die and present himself to Allawh. He thinks that once he dies, all these comforts and luxuries will also go. At times, the person does not even wish to leave this world while he is about to die. Once he learns that it is Allawh who has caused him to leave this world, he develops enmity towards Allawh and thereby leaves this world in a state of kufr.

Another harm of this is that once the person becomes infatuated with this world and the accumulation of wealth, he does not differentiate between h̲alâl and h̲arâm. He does not consider the rights of others nor does he worry about lies, deception, fraud, etc. His only goal is that he has to accumulate irrespective of how or from where. It is for this reason that it is mentioned in the Hadith that love for this world is the root of all evil. If this is such a great evil, every Muslim should endeavour to save himself from this calamity and remove the love for this world from his heart.

One of the cures for this is that the person should remember death abundantly and he should constantly think that he will have to leave all this wealth one day. What is the benefit, then, in attaching so much of importance to it? In fact, the more importance you attach to it, the more remorse you will experience when leaving it.

Another cure is that one should not establish too many associates and contacts. That is, he should not engage in too many dealings with too many people. He should not acquire goods, household effects, houses, properties more than what is necessary. He should not expand his business beyond the limits. He should limit these things to necessity and comfort. In short, he should restrict himself to the basic necessities.

The third cure is that he should not involve himself in unnecessary expenses. This is because when a person has unnecessary expenses, his greed for additional income increases; and this greed is the cause of all other evils.

The fourth cure is that he should develop the habit of eating simple food, and wearing coarse clothing.

The fifth cure is that he should sit more in the company of poor persons and sit very little in the company of the rich. This is because by sitting in the company of the rich, one develops a desire and lust for everything.

The sixth cure is that he should read and study the lives of those pious servants who abandoned this world.

The seventh cure is that he should give away or sell that item for which he has great attachment.

By adopting these means, Inshâ Allawh the love of this world will disappear from the heart and all those far-fetched ambitions with regard to accumulating wealth, purchasing goods, leaving behind a house for the children, etc. will be automatically repulsed.

The harms of miserliness and its cure

Many far̲d and wâjib obligations and duties such as zakât, qurbâni, helping a needy person, assisting one's poor relatives, etc. are not fulfilled on account of miserliness and stinginess. When these are not fulfilled, one is actually committing a sin. This is the harm that is caused to one's Dîn. A stingy person is regarded as despicable and useless in the eyes of everyone. This is the worldly harm. Is there anything worse than this?

One of the cures of this is that love for this world and love for wealth should be removed from the heart. Once this love has been removed, there is no way that miserliness can remain.
Another cure is that the person should impose on his nafs and give away that item which is beyond his needs. Although this will be difficult on the nafs, one should endeavour in this regard and try and bear this difficulty.
As long as traces of stinginess have not been uprooted from the heart, continue adopting the above measures.

The harms of desiring fame and honour and its cure

When a person desires fame and honour for himself, he envies and resents the fame and popularity of another person. The harms of this (envy and jealousy) have been mentioned previously. Upon hearing about someone's disgrace and degradation, the person becomes happy. It is a very evil characteristic to wish evil for someone. A further harm of this is that the person tries to acquire fame through prohibited means, e.g. a person spends a lot of money and goes into unnecessary expenses in weddings merely for fame. At times he acquires this wealth through bribery and at times by taking interest loans. All these sins were committed merely for name and fame.
The worldly harm of this is that such a person has many enemies and many who are jealous of him. Such persons continuously try to disgrace him, defame him, cause him harm and try to put him into difficulties.
One of the cures for this is that he should think to himself that all those who will think great of me or praise me will not live forever nor will I live forever. After a few days, no one will even bother to ask about me. If this is the case, it is a sign of great immaturity to feel happy about this baseless thing.
Another cure is that this person should do something which will cause him great disgrace and defamation. However, this thing should be such that it is not contrary to the Sharî'ah. For example, the person should sell the stale, left-over bread to the poor people at a cheap price. This will be a source of great disgrace.

The harms of pride and haughtiness and its cure

The meaning of pride and haughtiness is that a person considers himself greater than others as regards knowledge, 'ibâdah, religiousness, status, lineage, wealth and possessions, honour, respect, intelligence or in anything else. To consider yourself to be greater than others and to regard them inferior to you is a major sin. It is mentioned in a Hadith that the person who has pride equal to a mustard seed will not enter jannah. As for this world, people hate such a person and become his enemies even though they may be courteous towards him outwardly. Another harm of this is that such a person does not follow or accept the advice of anyone. He is not prepared to accept the truth. Instead, he takes it badly and decides to cause harm to the person who has given him the advice.
The cure for this is that he should ponder over his origins - that he has been created from clay and an impure sperm. All the bounties that he has been blessed with have been given to him by Allawh. If He wishes, He can take back all of them. On what basis, then, should he feel proud? He should also ponder over and remember the greatness of Allawh. When he does this, he will no longer consider himself to be great. In addition to this, he should meet the person whom he had looked down upon with deference and in a humble manner. In this way, pride will come out of his heart. If the person does not have the capacity to do this, he should at least make it his duty that whenever he meets anyone of a lower class or standard, he should be first in greeting him. In so doing, Inshâ Allawh his nafs will develop humility.

The harms of boastfulness and its cure

If a person considers oneself to be great and distinguished or wears beautiful clothing and jewellery and begins to boast and brag, then this characteristic is considered to be extremely evil even if one does not consider others to be deficient. It is mentioned in a Hadith that this characteristic destroys one's Dîn. Furthermore, this person does not make any effort to reform himself because if he regards himself to be distinguished, he will not look at his own faults.
The cure for this is that one should constantly look at one's own faults and ponder over them. The person should think to himself that the qualities and characteristics that are within me have all been granted to me by Allawh and there is no excellence in me. After pondering over all this, he should express his gratitude to Allawh and make du'â to Him that these bounties are not taken away from him.

The harms of doing good deeds merely for name and fame and its cure

This boasting and bragging is of several types. At times a person may clearly speak about how much Quran he read or that he remained awake at night (busy in 'ibâdah). At times, he will subtly include this in a conversation, e.g. a few people were speaking about the Bedouin Arabs. So this person entered into the conversation and said: "Whatever you are saying is wrong. I experienced so-and-so thing with these persons." Although the conversation delved on something else, by this person mentioning these things, everyone came to know that he performed hajj as well. At times, this boasting is executed practically, e.g. with the intention of "showing off", the person sits down with a tasbîh in front of everyone. At times this "showing off" takes the form of caution and carefulness, e.g. a woman has the habit of reciting the Quran all the time. However, on a certain occasion, because a few women were sitting near her, she began reading the Quran carefully and in the proper manner (paying full attention to the rules of tajwîd). At times this boasting takes the form of one's posture and expression, e.g. a person sits down closing her eyes and lowering her head whereby the person looking at her will think that she is a very pious person, she always engages in the dhikr of Allawh, she remained awake last night and therefore she is feeling sleepy now. There are many other ways of "showing off" one's good deeds. Whichever form this may take, they are all detestable. All good deeds which have been executed merely for show will be transformed from rewards into punishment in jahannam.
The cure for this is the same as that which was mentioned above because boasting and "showing off" is done for the reason that one wishes to acquire name, fame and earn the praises of people.

An important note on the different cures

The cures that we have mentioned for the different evils cannot be acquired by carrying them out a few times. For example, if a person is able to control his anger 2-3 times, it does not mean that this evil has been uprooted. If one does not experience anger on one or two occasions, he should not be deluded by the fact that his nafs has now been reformed. Instead, the person should practice these cures for a long period of time. If he becomes neglectful in this regard, he should express his remorse and sorrow, and be on his guard in the future. Inshâ Allawh, after a very long time all these evils will be uprooted.
An easy cure for all the evils that are within the nafs and for all the sins that are committed by the different parts of the body is that when any evil or sin is committed, some sort of punishment should be meted out to the nafs. There are two types of punishments which could be easily meted out by everyone. One is that the person should specify a certain amount of money (according to his financial position). When he commits any sin, he must distribute that amount of money (which will be his fine) to the poor. If he repeats that sin, he will have to pay the fine again. Another punishment is that he should skip one or two meals. If the person makes an all out endeavour in meting out these punishments, Inshâ Allawh, all evils and sins will disappear. We will now mention the good acts and deeds which reform the heart.

The Method of Taubah

Taubah is such a great thing that one can have all one's sins forgiven through it. If a person always ponders over his condition and knows that at some time or the other one definitely commits a sin, then he will consider taubah to be necessary all the time.
The method of obtaining this quality is that one should ponder over all the warnings and punishments for the different sins and evils that have been mentioned in the Quran and Hadith. He should think of them and ponder over them. In doing this, his heart will be disinclined to commit any sin. At such a time, the person should also make a verbal taubah. He should also complete all the salâts, fasts, etc. that he has missed. If he has displayed any shortcoming in fulfilling the rights of certain persons, he should seek their forgiveness or fulfil them. As for the sins that he has committed in passing, he should express remorse over them, adopt the expression of a crying person and earnestly seek the forgiveness of Allawh.

The Method of Fearing Allawh

Allawh says: "Fear Me." Fear is such a great thing that one saves oneself from sinning through it. The method of acquiring this quality is the same as that for taubah. That is, the person should always think and ponder over the punishment of Allawh.

The Method of Hoping for the Mercy of Allawh

Allawh says: "Do not despair of the mercy of Allawh." Hope is such a great thing that through it one is inclined towards good deeds and also has the courage to make taubah. The method of acquiring this quality is to remember and ponder over the mercy of Allawh.

The Method of Patience

Constricting the nafs to act according to the Sharî'ah and preventing it from going beyond the confines of the Sharî'ah is known as sabr or patience. There are several instances for this.

One of them is that a person is experiencing peace of mind and comfort. Allawh has blessed him with good health, wealth, honour, respect, servants, wife and children, a house, goods and possessions. Patience at such a time is that he should not allow himself to lose his mind. He should not forget Allawh and he should not look down upon the poor. Instead, he should be kind to them and assist them.

Another instance is at the time of 'ibâdah. At such a time, the nafs begins to feel lazy, e.g. when one has to go and offer one's salât. Alternatively, the nafs becomes miserly, such as, when one has to pay one's zakât and give in charity. At such a time, three types of sabr are required: (a) The person must correct his intention even before he can commence with the 'ibâdah. That act must be carried out solely for Allawh and the nafs must have no object in carrying out this act. (b) At the time of the 'ibâdah, one must not lose courage or any inclination. That act must be executed as it ought to be executed. (c) On completing the act, one should not mention it to anyone.

The third instance is at the time of committing a sin. Patience at such a time is that the person should stop his nafs from committing the sin.

The fourth instance is when a person is being harmed or troubled by someone. The patience at such a time is that he should not take any revenge. Instead, he should remain silent.

The fifth instance is at the time of a calamity, sickness, loss of wealth or the death of someone close. Patience at such a time is that the person should not utter anything that is contrary to the Sharî'ah nor should he cry out aloud.

The method of sabr for all these occasions and instances is that the person should remember and ponder over the rewards and understand well that all these trials and tribulations are for his own benefit. He should understand that a lack of patience will not stop or prevent his taqdeer, so why should he allow these rewards to go to waste?

The Method of Expressing Gratitude

Expressing gratitude and thankfulness to Allawh comprises the following: to be happy with the bounties and favours of Allawh and thereby develop a love for Him, through this love one must have this yearning and desire in one's heart that since He has blessed me with so many bounties, I will render 'ibâdah to Him in the best way possible, and that it is extremely shameful to disobey the one who has blessed me with such bounties.

It is obvious that Allawh has blessed His servants with thousands of bounties and favours. Even if a calamity befalls a person, there is some benefit or the other for him. Therefore this should also be regarded as a bounty. Since one experiences these bounties all the time, this happiness and love will have to remain in the heart - that at no time will he display any shortcoming in fulfilling the commands of Allawh.

The method of attaining this quality is that one should remember and ponder over the numerous bounties and favours of Allawh.

The Method of Placing Trust in Allawh

Every Muslim knows that no one can attain any benefit nor can any harm befall anyone without the will of Allawh. It is therefore necessary that a person does not rely on his own plans when undertaking any task. He should look up to Allawh and he should not expect too much from anyone. Nor should he fear anyone. He should understand well that no one can do anything without the will of Allawh. This is known as tawakkul or placing trust in Allawh.

The method of acquiring this quality is that one should remember and ponder over the power and wisdom of Allawh, and the powerlessness of the creation.

The Method of Love for Allawh

Love for Allawh comprises of the heart being attracted to Allawh, and the heart taking delight in listening to things about Him and upon looking at His system at work.

The method of acquiring this quality is that one should read His name abundantly, remember all His noble characteristics and ponder over the love that He has for His servants.

The Method of being pleased with the commands of Allawh

When a Muslim knows that there is a benefit and reward in everything that Allawh does for His servants, he should therefore be pleased with everything that He has commanded. He should not be scared nor should he complain.

The method of acquiring this quality is to ponder over the fact that there is good in everything that occurs.

The Method of Acquiring a True Intention

When executing any act of the Dîn, there should be no worldly reason in it whatsoever. There should neither be any show in it nor any other reason for carrying it out, e.g. a person is suffering from indigestion. He therefore says to himself: "I better keep a fast. In so doing, I will receive the reward for fasting and my stomach will also be relieved." Alternatively, it is the time of salât and the person has wudû. However, because it is very hot, he feels he'd rather make a fresh wudû so that he will be rewarded for making wudû and at the same time his limbs will also be cooled and refreshed. Alternatively, he gives some money to a beggar so that in so doing he may save himself (from being harassed) and also defer this misfortune (of being harassed). All these things are contrary to a true intention.

The method of acquiring a true intention is that before one can execute any act, one should thoroughly ponder over it. If a person finds that his intention has been tainted or blemished by any such motive, he should cleanse his heart by removing it.

The Method of Murâqabah

A person should always remember that Allawh is aware of all his states and conditions - the external and the internal. If he commits an evil act, it is possible that Allawh will punish him in this world or in the hereafter. When executing a good act, he should think that Allawh is watching him. He should therefore execute it in the proper manner. This is the method of acquiring this quality. In a few days, his mind will get settled on these thoughts. Thereafter, Inshâ Allawh he will not do anything that is contrary to the pleasure of Allawh.

The Method of Concentration when Reciting the Quran

It is a normal practice that when a person is asked to recite the Quran, he will recite it very beautifully. As far as possible, he will recite with full concentration, a good tune and bear in mind all the necessary rules. Based on this, when you wish to recite the Quran, think to yourself that Allawh Himself has said: "Let Me listen to you, I want to see how you read." You should bear in mind that Allawh is listening carefully to what you are reading. You should also think to yourself that if you read with caution when someone else is listening to you, then how much more caution you will have to exercise when reciting to Allawh. Once you have taken all these factors into consideration, commence reciting. As long as you are reciting, try and maintain these thoughts in your mind. If your recitation begins to falter and your concentration begins to drift, stop your recitation for a little while and bring the above-mentioned factors back to mind. In so doing, Inshâ Allawh, your recitation will become correct and clear and your concentration will also be maintained. If you practice this over a period of time, you will be able to concentrate with ease.

The Method of Concentration in Salât

As regards salât, it should be remembered that no act or recitation should be without any motive or meaning. Instead, everything should be executed with a motive and after pondering. For example, upon saying Allâhu Akbar, then for every word you should think that "I am now reciting 'Sub'hânakallâhummah', thereafter think "I am now reciting 'wa bi hamdika'", thereafter think "I am now reciting 'wa tabârakasmuka'." In this way, continue thinking and concentrating on each word separately. Continue doing this when reciting Sûrah Fâtihah and another sûrah. Do the same for your rukû' and think in the same manner each time you say "Sub'hâna rabbiyal 'azîm". In short, the moment you utter something, direct your attention towards it as well. Maintain this in your entire salât. In doing this, Inshâ Allawh your concentration in your salât will not be diverted. In a short period of time you will acquire concentration and you will enjoy offering your salât.

THE SHAYKH AND THE MURÎD

(Spiritual guide and Disciple)

The Benefits of becoming a Murîd

There are several benefits in becoming a murîd:

1. At times a person errs in the different methods of reforming the heart that were mentioned previously. The shaykh shows the correct path in this regard.
2. At times the effect and benefit that one derives from a book is not as great as that which one would have obtained from the guidance of a shaykh. One gains the barakah of the shaykh. Furthermore, if the murîd displays any shortcoming in carrying out a good act or commits an evil act, he will be ashamed of this in front of the shaykh.
3. The person develops confidence and love for the shaykh. Based on this, he is inclined to follow and emulate the ways of the shaykh.
4. If the shaykh is strict in giving his advice or displays his anger, the person does not feel offended and endeavours to act upon his advice.

There are many other benefits which are acquired by those whom Allawh has favoured. These can only be known by acquiring and experiencing them.

Qualities of the Shaykh

If a person wishes to become a murîd, he should first consider the following factors in the shaykh. If the latter does not possess these qualities, do not become his murîd.

1. The shaykh must know the masâ'il of Dîn. He should not be ignorant of the Sharî'ah.
2. He must not possess any quality that is contrary to the Sharî'ah. His 'aqâ'id (beliefs) must be the same as those that have been mentioned in Part One of Bahishti Zewar. He should not possess any quality that is contrary to all the masâ'il and all those things connected to reformation of the heart that have been mentioned in this book.
3. He must not be carrying out this programme (of shaykh and murîd) as a means of sustenance. (That is, he must not be doing it for financial gain).
4. Become the murîd of a person who is regarded as a pious person by the majority of good people.
5. Become the murîd of a person who is spoken highly of by good people.
6. His programme of instruction must be such that one develops a love and inclination for Dîn. This can be gauged by looking at the condition of his murîds. Even if fifty-sixty percent of his murîds are good, consider such a shaykh to be effective. Do not have doubts on him by looking at the condition of a few murîds. You may have heard that the pious persons have a lot of effect. This (looking at the condition of his murîds) is the criterion whereby one gauges the effect and power of a shaykh. Do not gauge the effect and power of a shaykh through other means, such as something occurring exactly as he mentioned it to you, someone getting cured by his mere touch, that a ta'wîdh worked according to the reason for which he gave it to you or that if he fixes his gaze on a person he becomes completely entranced and at a loss. Never be deluded by these effects and powers.
7. The shaykh must be such that he does not take into consideration the status of his murîds when giving them advice of the Dîn. (That is, he does not favour his murîds when it comes to reprimanding them in matters of the Dîn). He stops them from useless and foolish things.

Once you have found such a shaykh, seek permission from your parents (if you are unmarried) or from your husband (if you are married), and become a murîd of such a shaykh solely for the purpose of putting your Dîn in order. If your parents or husband do not permit you to become a murîd, do not become one as it is not fard to become a murîd. However, it is fard to tread the path of the Dîn. You should therefore continue treading this path even if you are not a murîd of a shaykh.

Rules connected to the shaykh and murîd

1. Be respectful to your shaykh. Remember the name of Allawh in exactly the way shown to you by your shaykh. Have the following belief with regard to your shaykh: "The spiritual benefits that I can gain from this shaykh cannot be gained from any other shaykh."
2. If the murîd's heart has not been reformed properly as yet and the shaykh passes away, he must become a murîd of another shaykh in whom the above-mentioned qualities are found.
3. When you come across any wazîfah in any book or read about the frugal life of someone, do not act upon it on your own accord. Ask your shaykh about it first. If any good or evil thought enters your heart or you decide to do something, first consult your shaykh.
4. Do not remove your purdah in the presence of your shaykh. At the time of becoming a murîd, do not shake his hands. It is permissible to take the oath of allegiance (bay'ah) by holding one end of a handkerchief or piece of cloth while he holds the other end. A verbal bay'ah is also sufficient.
5. If you mistakenly become a murîd of a person who acts contrary to the Sharî'ah, or if he was good in the beginning and later changed, then sever your contact with him and become a murîd of some other pious person. However, if your shaykh commits a sin which could be overlooked, then think to yourself that he is also human and that he is not an angel. He has made a mistake which could be forgiven by his making taubah. Do not allow your conviction in him to dwindle over trivial matters. However, if the shaykh persists on such acts, sever your contact with him.
6. It is a sin to believe that your shaykh has full knowledge of everything you do.
7. Never read books which have stories of the dervishes which appear to be contrary to the Sharî'ah. Similarly, you should not read poems that are contrary to the Sharî'ah.
8. Some dervishes say that the path of the Sharî'ah is different from the path of the dervishes. Such dervishes are astray. It is fard to consider them to be liars.
9. If the shaykh asks you to do anything that is contrary to the Sharî'ah, it is not permissible to act upon it. If he insists on you to carry it out, sever your contact with him.
10. If, due to the barakah of taking the name of Allawh, you experience a good state in your heart, you have a good dream or upon waking up you hear a voice or see some light, then do not mention this to anyone other than your shaykh nor inform anyone of the wazîfahs that you read or the 'ibâdah that you make, because by doing so, this good fortune will go away.
11. If your shaykh asks you to recite a particular wazîfah or engage in a particular form of dhikr and after some time you still do not experience any delight in this, do not be disheartened, nor should you lose your confidence in your shaykh. Instead, think to yourself that the greatest effect is that your heart is making an intention of remembering Allawh and that you are being given the opportunity to do good. Never think that you should be blessed with the opportunity of pious persons appearing in your dreams, that you should begin to have knowledge of things that are still going to occur, that you should be able to cry profusely or that you should become so engrossed in your 'ibâdah that you are unaware of other things. These things occur at times and at times they do not. If they do, express your gratitude to Allawh. If they do not occur, decrease after having occurred frequently or cease to occur altogether, then do not be saddened. However, if, Allawh forbid, you display any shortcoming in following the Sharî'ah or commit any sin, then this is definitely something to be distressed about. You should immediately make an effort to put your condition in order, inform your shaykh about it and act upon his advice.
12. Do not be disrespectful of other shaykhs or other sûfi orders. Nor should you address the murîds of other shaykhs or other sûfi orders by telling them that your shaykh is greater than his or that your sûfi order is greater than his. By engaging in such unnecessary and foolish conversations the heart begins to darken.
13. If your shaykh pays more attention to a fellow murîd, or if a fellow murîd gains more benefit from his wazîfahs and dhikrs, do not be jealous of him.

Guidelines on how a Murîd and every other Muslim should spend his night and day

1. Acquire knowledge of the Dîn according to your needs. You could acquire this knowledge either by reading a book or by asking the 'ulamâ.
2. Abstain from all sins.
3. If you commit any sin, repent immediately.
4. Do not hold back in fulfilling anyone's right. Do not cause anyone physical or verbal harm. Do not speak ill of anyone.
5. Do not have any love for wealth nor any desire for name and fame. Do not concern yourself with extravagant food and clothing.
6. If someone rebukes you for your mistake or error, do not try to justify your action. Admit your fault and repent.

7. Do not embark on a journey without any dire necessity. This is because many unconscious and unintended acts are committed while on a journey. Many good deeds are missed out, there is a shortcoming in the different forms of dhikr (remembrance of Allawh), and you are unable to accomplish your tasks on time.
8. Do not laugh excessively nor talk excessively. You should take special precaution in not talking with ghayr maḥrams (those with whom the observance of purdah is incumbent) in an informal way.
9. Do not go about repeating or mentioning an argument that may have taken place between two persons.
10. Always be mindful of the rules of the Sharî'ah in everything that you do.
11. Do not display laziness in executing any act of 'ibâdah.
12. Try and spend most of your time in seclusion.
13. If you have to meet and converse with others, meet them with humility and do not display your greatness.
14. Associate very little with rulers and those who hold high positions.
15. Stay very far from irreligious people.
16. Do not search for the faults of others. Do not have evil thoughts about anyone. Instead, look at your own faults and try to put them in order.
17. You should be very particular in offering your ṣalât in the proper manner, at the proper time and with great concentration.
18. Always occupy yourself in the remembrance of Allawh either with your heart or tongue. Do not be neglectful in this regard at any time.
19. If you experience any satisfaction in taking the name of Allawh and your heart feels happy over this, then express your gratitude to Allawh.
20. Speak in a nice, humble way.
21. Set aside specific times for all your different tasks and abide strictly to these times.
22. Consider whatever regret, sorrow or loss you may experience to be from Allawh. Do not be despondent. Instead, think that you will be rewarded for this.
23. Do not think about worldly matters, calculations, profits and losses, etc. all the time. Instead, think about Allawh.
24. As far as possible, try to help and benefit others irrespective of whether it be in worldly affairs or Dînî matters.
25. Do not eat and drink too little to the extent that you become weak and fall ill. Nor should you eat and drink too much to the extent that you feel lazy in carrying out the different acts of 'ibâdah.
26. Do not have any desire or greed for anything from anyone except Allawh. Do not allow your mind to wander towards any place thinking that you will be able to gain certain benefit or profit from there.
27. Be restless in your quest for Allawh.
28. Be grateful for the favours that are bestowed upon you irrespective of whether they are plenty or few. Do not be depressed with poverty and destitution.
29. Overlook the faults and mistakes of those who are under your control.
30. If you learn of any fault of someone, conceal it. However, if the person plans to cause harm to someone else and you learn of it, then warn the other person beforehand.
31. Be in the service of guests, travellers, strangers, 'ulamâ, and the pious servants of Allawh.
32. Choose the company of the pious.
33. Fear Allawh all the time.
34. Remember death.
35. Set aside a certain time daily wherein you should think about all your actions for that day. When you remember any good action, express gratitude. When you remember any evil action, repent.
36. Don't ever speak a lie.
37. Don't ever attend gatherings that are contrary to the Sharî'ah.
38. Live with bashfulness, modesty and forbearance.
39. Do not be conceited by thinking to yourself that "I have such-and-such qualities in me."
40. Continue making du'â to Allawh to keep you steadfast on the straight path.

THE AḤÂDÎTH OF RASÛLULLÂH ṣallallâhu 'alayhi wa sallam concerning the rewards for good deeds and the punishment for evil deeds

Sincerity of Intention

1. A person asked: "O Rasûlullâh! What is îmân?" He replied: "To maintain a sincere intention."
This means that whatever you do should be done solely for Allawh.
2. Rasûlullâh ṣallallâhu 'alayhi wa sallam said: "Actions are judged by intentions."
This means that if a person has a good intention, he will be rewarded for doing a good act. If not, he will not be rewarded.

Doing something for show

3. Rasûlullâh ṣallallâhu 'alayhi wa sallam said: "If a person does something in order that he may be heard, Allawh will announce (i.e. make others hear) his shortcoming on the day of judgement. And the person who does something for show, Allawh will display his shortcoming on the day of judgement."
4. Rasûlullâh ṣallallâhu 'alayhi wa sallam said: "Even an iota of showing off is a form of shirk."

Acting according to the Quran and Ḥadîth

5. Rasûlullâh ṣallallâhu 'alayhi wa sallam said: "The person who revives my sunnah at a time when there is a religious degeneration in my ummah will receive the reward of 100 martyrs."
6. Rasûlullâh ṣallallâhu 'alayhi wa sallam said: "I am leaving behind a thing which if you hold on to, you will never go astray. One is the book of Allawh and the other is my sunnah." That is, the Quran and Ḥadîth.

Initiating a good or evil act

7. Rasûlullâh ṣallallâhu 'alayhi wa sallam said: "The person who initiates a good act will receive the reward for it and also the reward of all those who follow him in this good act. There will be no decrease in their reward. And the person who initiates an evil act will receive the sin for it and also the sin of all those who follow him in this evil act. There will be no decrease in their sin."
For example, a woman gave up all customs in the marriage of her children or a widow got herself married. When other women saw this, they also decided to follow suit. This woman or this widow who initiated this practice will continue receiving the rewards for this.

Searching for Dînî knowledge

8. Rasûlullâh ṣallallâhu 'alayhi wa sallam said: "When Allawh desires good for a person, He grants him understanding of the Dîn."
That is, this person is induced with the desire to learn the different masâ'il of Dîn.

Concealing a Dînî mas'ala

9. Rasûlullâh ṣallallâhu 'alayhi wa sallam said: "The person who is asked a Dînî mas'ala and he conceals it (despite knowing the answer) will be made to wear a bridle of fire."
If anyone asks you a mas'ala and you know the answer, then do not display any laziness in giving the answer. Nor should you refuse him. Instead, explain the mas'ala to the person in a proper manner.

Having knowledge of a mas'ala but acting contrary to it

10. Rasûlullâh ṣallallâhu 'alayhi wa sallam said: "The more knowledge a person has, the greater the burden he has to bear except for the one who acts according to his knowledge."

Don't ever act contrary to a mas'ala that you know merely to satisfy your family or on account of following your desires.

Carelessness when urinating

11. Rasûlullâh sallallâhu 'alayhi wa sallam said: "Be extremely cautious when urinating as this (being careless) is a major cause of punishment in the grave."

Making sure that water reaches the relevant places when making wudû or ghusl

12. Rasûlullâh sallallâhu 'alayhi wa sallam said: "When wudû is made thoroughly at times when it is extremely difficult on the nafs to do so, one's sins are washed away."

This difficulty is either experienced on account of laziness or in winter.

Using the miswâk

13. Rasûlullâh sallallâhu 'alayhi wa sallam said: "Two raka'ât of salât which are offered after using miswâk are better than 70 raka'ât of salât without miswâk."

Carelessness when making wudû

14. Rasûlullâh sallallâhu 'alayhi wa sallam noticed that the heels of a few persons where dry despite their having completed their wudû. Upon seeing this, he said: "There is great punishment for these heels on the day of judgement."

When making wudu, ensure that water reaches beneath the rings, bangles, etc. In winter, the feet generally become dry. Ensure that you pour sufficient water on them so that they are completely wet. Some women merely wash the front of their faces without washing up to their ears. Be mindful of all these factors.

Women emerging from their homes for salât

15. Rasûlullâh sallallâhu 'alayhi wa sallam said: "The best salât of women is that which they offer within the confines of their homes."

We learn from this that it is not good for women to go to the musjid in order to offer their salât. We know that there is nothing more virtuous than salât. If it is not good for them to emerge from their homes for salât, how detestable it will be for them to emerge from their homes for useless social visits or to attend customary functions!

Steadfastness in salât

16. Rasûlullâh sallallâhu 'alayhi wa sallam said: "The five daily salawât are similar to a deep, flowing stream in front of a person's house wherein he takes a bath five times a day."

The meaning of this is that just as no speck of dirt will remain on such a person's body (after having bathed five times in the day), in the same way the sins of a person who offers his five times salât with steadfastness will also be washed away.

17. Rasûlullâh sallallâhu 'alayhi wa sallam said: "The first thing to be accounted for on the day of judgement will be salât."

Offering salât at the beginning of its time

18. Rasûlullâh sallallâhu 'alayhi wa sallam said: "Allawh is extremely pleased when salât is offered at the beginning of its time."

Women! You do not have to go and offer salât with congregation, so why do you delay in offering your salât?

Offering salât in a haphazard manner

19. Rasûlullâh sallallâhu 'alayhi wa sallam said: "The person who does not offer his salât at its appointed time, does not make his wudû properly, does not read with concentration, and does not make his rukû' and sajdahs in the appropriate manner causes his salât to become devoid of any light. Salât addresses him saying: "May Allawh destroy you as you destroyed me. When his salât goes up to where Allawh wishes it, it is folded just as an old rag is folded and flung onto his face."

Women! Salât is offered so that you may be rewarded. Why, then, do you read it in such a manner that instead of being rewarded, you are committing a sin?

Looking around when offering salât

20. Rasûlullâh sallallâhu 'alayhi wa sallam said: "Do not look up when offering your salât. It is possible that your eye-sight will be snatched away from you."

21. Rasûlullâh sallallâhu 'alayhi wa sallam said: "Allawh overturns the salât of the person who looks around when offering his salât." That is, he does not receive the full reward.

Walking in front of a person offering salât

22. Rasûlullâh sallallâhu 'alayhi wa sallam said: "If the person who walks in front of someone who is offering salât only knew the seriousness of this sin, he would prefer standing and waiting for the person to complete his salât even if it meant waiting 40 years for him to complete it."

However, if there is anything that is placed at a distance of one arm's length or more in front of the person offering salât, it will be permissible to walk in front of him (provided he walks beyond the object that is placed and not within it).

Missing a salât intentionally

23. Rasûlullâh sallallâhu 'alayhi wa sallam said: "When a person misses a salât and thereafter goes in the presence of Allawh, Allawh will be extremely angry with him."

Giving loans

24. Rasûlullâh sallallâhu 'alayhi wa sallam said: "On the night of me'râj I saw an inscription on the door of jannah which stated that the person who gives in charity will receive 10 rewards and that the person who gives loans will receive 18 rewards."

Granting respite to a poor debtor

25. Rasûlullâh sallallâhu 'alayhi wa sallam said: "As long as the day when a debt has to be fulfilled does not arrive, if a person grants respite to a poor debtor, then for each day he (the creditor) will receive the reward of charity equal to that of the debt. Once the due date expires and the person grants a respite, then for each day he will receive the reward of charity that is double the amount of the debt."

Recitation of the Quran

26. Rasûlullâh sallallâhu 'alayhi wa sallam said: "The person who recites a single letter of the Quran will receive one reward. And the basic principle with regard to rewards is that they are multiplied ten fold. I do not say that Alif Lâm Mîm is one letter. Instead, Alif is one letter, Lâm is one letter, and Mîm is one letter. Based on this, one will receive 30 rewards."

Cursing oneself or one's children

27. Rasûlullâh sallallâhu 'alayhi wa sallam said: "Do not curse yourself, your children, your workers nor your wealth and possessions. May it not occur that the time in which you curse them is the time of acceptance, whereby whatever you ask from Allawh will be accepted."

Earning harâm wealth and utilising it

28. Rasûlullâh sallallâhu 'alayhi wa sallam said: "The meat and blood that has been nourished with harâm wealth will not enter jannah. It is only suitable for jahannam."

29. Rasûlullâh sallallâhu 'alayhi wa sallam said: "The person who purchases a garment for 10 dirhams out of which even one dirham is harâm, then as long as that person does not remove that garment from his body, his salât will not be accepted."

Cheating or Deceiving

30. Rasûlullâh sallallâhu 'alayhi wa sallam said: "The person who cheats and deceives is not from amongst us."

All acts of deception are evil irrespective of whether they be in business or in any other transaction.

Taking of loans and debts

31. Rasûlullâh sallallâhu 'alayhi wa sallam said: "If a person passes away and he is still owing any dirham or dinâr to someone, then this debt of his will be fulfilled with his good deeds where there will be no dirham nor any dinâr (i.e. on the day of judgement)."

32. Rasûlullâh sallallâhu 'alayhi wa sallam said: "Debts are of two kinds: (a) A person passes away while he had the intention of fulfilling his debts. In such a case, Allawh says: 'I will assist him in fulfilling them.' (b) A person passes away but had no intention of fulfilling his debts. Such a person's good deeds will be taken in order to fulfil his debts. And on that day there will be no payments with dirhams nor dinârs."
The meaning of assisting is that Allawh will grant a compensation (to the creditor).

Delaying in fulfilling debts despite being able to pay

33. Rasûlullâh sallallâhu 'alayhi wa sallam said: "It is zulm (oppression) for a person to delay despite being able to fulfil (his debts)."
It is the habit of some people who are owing money or still have to pay the labourer for his work to make them "run around" for their money. They make false promises by asking the person to come tomorrow or the next day, etc. They have the money to pay for all their personal expenses but they pay no attention to fulfilling the rights of others.

Giving and receiving interest

34. Rasûlullâh sallallâhu 'alayhi wa sallam cursed the giver and receiver of interest.

Confiscating a property

35. Rasûlullâh sallallâhu 'alayhi wa sallam said: "The person who occupies even a span of land unjustly will be made to wear a collar-chain comprising of the seven earths."

Paying the labourer immediately

36. Rasûlullâh sallallâhu 'alayhi wa sallam said: "Pay the labourer for his work even before his perspiration can dry."
37. Allawh says: "I Myself will demand the rights on behalf of three persons." One of these three persons is the labourer who has been given a particular task, who fulfils it and yet is not paid for this task which he completed."

The death of children

38. Rasûlullâh sallallâhu 'alayhi wa sallam said: "If three children of a Muslim couple pass away, Allawh will enter this couple into jannah through His favour and mercy." Someone asked: "O Rasûlullâh! What if two children pass away?" He replied: "This reward will be granted for two children as well." Thereafter he was asked with regard to one child and he gave the same reply. Thereafter said: "I take an oath in the name of that being in whose hands is my life that even if a woman miscarries, that foetus will draw its mother to jannah with its umbilical cord if the mother has made the intention of reward." That is, she exercised patience with the intention of being rewarded.

Women applying perfume in the presence of men

39. Rasûlullâh sallallâhu 'alayhi wa sallam said: "A woman who applies perfume and goes in the presence of strange men is like this and like that, i.e. she is immoral."
A woman should not apply perfume in the presence of even the following relatives: husband's younger brother, husband's elder brother, sister's husband, and all one's cousins.

Women wearing flimsy clothing

40. Rasûlullâh sallallâhu 'alayhi wa sallam said: "There are certain women who are apparently clothed but in reality they are naked. Such women will not enter jannah nor will they be able to smell its fragrance."

Women adopting the dress and appearance of men

41. Rasûlullâh sallallâhu 'alayhi wa sallam cursed the woman who adopts the dress and appearance of men.

Dressing in order to display one's status

42. Rasûlullâh sallallâhu 'alayhi wa sallam said: "Allawh will make the person who wears clothes for name and fame in this world to wear the clothes of disgrace and dishonour in the hereafter. He will then set him alight with the fire of jahannam."
This refers to the person who wears clothing with the intention that his status will increase and that everyone will set their eyes on him. This sickness is found to a large extent in women.

Oppression

43. Rasûlullâh sallallâhu 'alayhi wa sallam addressed those who were sitting near him and asked: "Do you know who is a poor person?" They replied: "A poor person amongst us is one who neither has any wealth nor possessions." He replied: "A very poor person in my ummah is he who will come on the day of judgement with his salât, zakât, fasting, etc. In addition to this he was vulgar to a certain person, he wrongfully accused a certain person, he devoured the wealth of a certain person, he shed the blood of a certain person, and he had hit a certain person. All his good deeds will be distributed among these persons whom he had wronged in some way or the other. If his good deeds expire before he can fulfil their rights, then their evil deeds will be placed onto his shoulders and he will be flung into jahannam."

Mercy and Kindness

44. Rasûlullâh sallallâhu 'alayhi wa sallam said: "Allawh does not have mercy on the person who does not show mercy to others."

Commanding the good and forbidding the evil

45. Rasûlullâh sallallâhu 'alayhi wa sallam said: "Whoever from among you sees a wrong being committed should change it with his hands. If he is unable to do this, he should prevent it with his tongue. If he is unable to do even this, he should consider it evil with his heart. And this is the lowest stage of îmân."
Women! You have full control over your children and your servants. Ensure that they offer their salât. If they have any pictures of animate objects on paper, on material or animate objects in the form of dolls, useless or immoral books, etc. then tear them apart immediately. Do not give them money to purchase such things. Nor should you give them money to purchase fireworks, kites or sweetmeats that are prepared for diwali (a Hindu festival).

Concealing the shortcomings of a fellow Muslim

46. Rasûlullâh sallallâhu 'alayhi wa sallam said: "The person who conceals the shortcomings of his fellow Muslim, Allawh will conceal his shortcomings on the day of judgement. The person who exposes the shortcomings of his fellow Muslim, Allawh will expose his sins so much so that He will disgrace him while he is sitting in his house."

Becoming happy over the disgrace or loss that befalls someone

47. Rasûlullâh sallallâhu 'alayhi wa sallam said: "Do not become happy over the calamity that afflicts your fellow Muslim or else Allawh will have mercy on him and afflict you with a similar calamity."

Criticising and censuring someone over a sin that the latter may have committed

48. Rasûlullâh sallallâhu 'alayhi wa sallam said: "The person who criticizes his fellow Muslim over a sin that the latter may have committed will not die until he himself commits a similar sin."
This refers to the sin for which a person has already repented. It is extremely detestable to remind a person of a sin for which he has already repented. If the person has not repented, it will be permissible to advise him. However, it is detestable to do so if one considers oneself to be pure or if one intends to disgrace him.

Committing minor sins

49. Rasûlullâh sallallâhu 'alayhi wa sallam said: "O 'Â'ishah! safeguard yourself from committing minor sins as well because Allawh has those who will take a retribution for it as well."
Those who will take a retribution refers to the angels who write down such minor sins as well. On the day of judgement, these will have to be accounted for and there is the fear of being punished for them.

Pleasing one's parents

50. Rasûlullâh sallallâhu 'alayhi wa sallam said: "The happiness of Allawh is in the happiness of the parents and the displeasure of Allawh is in the displeasure of the parents."

Severing ties with one's relatives

51. Rasûlullâh sallallâhu 'alayhi wa sallam said: "The actions and 'ibâdât of all the people are presented to Allawh every Friday night. The good deeds of a person who severs his ties with his relatives (or does not maintain good relations with them) are not accepted."

The upbringing of orphans

52. Rasûlullâh sallallâhu 'alayhi wa sallam said: "I and the person who undertakes the task of taking care of orphans will be together in jannah like this"...he indicated this with his index finger and middle finger and left a small gap between them.

53. Rasûlullâh sallallâhu 'alayhi wa sallam said: "The person who passes his hand over the head of an orphan solely for the pleasure of Allawh will receive a reward for each hair that his hand touches. And the person who is kind towards a female or male orphan and I will be together in jannah just as the index finger and the middle finger are next to each other."

Causing harm to one's neighbours

54. Rasûlullâh sallallâhu 'alayhi wa sallam said: "The person who harms his neighbour has in fact harmed me and the person who harms me has in fact harmed Allawh. The person who fights with his neighbour has in fact fought with me and the person who fights with me has in fact fought with Allawh."

The meaning of this is that it is detestable to fight and argue with one's neighbour unnecessarily or over trivial matters.

Assisting a Muslim

55. Rasûlullâh sallallâhu 'alayhi wa sallam said: "Allawh comes to the aid of the person who comes to the aid of a fellow Muslim."

Modesty and Immodesty

56. Rasûlullâh sallallâhu 'alayhi wa sallam said: "Modesty is part of Imaan and it leads one to jannah. Shamelessness is an evil trait and it leads one to jahannam."

However, you should never feel shy in Dînî matters, e.g. most women do not offer their salât when there is a wedding or when on a journey. Such shyness is worse than immodesty.

Good and evil character

57. Rasûlullâh sallallâhu 'alayhi wa sallam said: "Good character dissolves the sins away just as water dissolves salt, and evil character destroys the different acts of 'ibâdah just as vinegar spoils honey."

58. Rasûlullâh sallallâhu 'alayhi wa sallam said: "In my sight, the most beloved amongst you and the one who will be the closest to me in the hereafter is the person who possesses good manners. The most disliked in my sight and the one who will be furthest away from me in the hereafter is the person who has bad manners."

Soft-heartedness and Hard-heartedness

59. Rasûlullâh sallallâhu 'alayhi wa sallam said: "Allawh is kind and He loves soft-heartedness. The bounties and favours that He gives on account of soft-heartedness, He does not give for hard-heartedness."

60. Rasûlullâh sallallâhu 'alayhi wa sallam said: "The person who has been deprived of soft-heartedness has been deprived of a lot of good."

Peeping into someone's house

61. Rasûlullâh sallallâhu 'alayhi wa sallam said: "As long as you are not permitted to do so, do not peep into someone's house. If you do this, it is as if you have entered that house without permission."

Some women have this evil habit of peeping at the bride and bridegroom when they are together in seclusion. This is a shameless act. In reality, there is no difference between peeping and merely barging in without permission. It is a great sin to do so.

Listening to the private conversation of others

62. Rasûlullâh sallallâhu 'alayhi wa sallam said: "On the day of judgement, lead will be poured into the ears of the person who listens to the private conversation of others while they disapprove of this."

Anger

63. A person came to Rasûlullâh sallallâhu 'alayhi wa sallam and said: "Show me an act which will grant me entry into jannah." He replied: "Do not become angry and you will be rewarded with jannah."

Severing ties

64. Rasûlullâh sallallâhu 'alayhi wa sallam said: "It is not permissible for a Muslim to stop talking with his fellow Muslim for more than three days. The person who stops talking for more than three days and passes away in such a state (i.e. before he can reconcile) will enter jahannam."

Referring to someone as a kâfir or cursing him

65. Rasûlullâh sallallâhu 'alayhi wa sallam said: "The person who addresses his fellow Muslim as "O kâfir!" is as if he has killed him."

66. Rasûlullâh sallallâhu 'alayhi wa sallam said: "Cursing a fellow Muslim is just like killing him."

67. Rasûlullâh sallallâhu 'alayhi wa sallam said: "When a person curses someone, the curse ascends towards the skies. The doors of the skies are closed and that curse descends towards earth. The doors of earth are also shut closed. This curse then begins moving to its right and left (searching for an opening). When it does not find any opening, it goes to the person who was cursed. If the person was entitled to the curse, well and good. If not, it descends on the person who issued the curse."

It is the habit of some women to curse anyone and everyone by saying: "May Allawh destroy you, may Allawh punish you." At times they refer to a person as being devoid of îmân. This is a major sin irrespective of whether it is said to humans or animals.

Frightening a Muslim

68. Rasûlullâh sallallâhu 'alayhi wa sallam said: "It is not permissible for a Muslim to frighten a fellow Muslim."

69. Rasûlullâh sallallâhu 'alayhi wa sallam said: "The person who unjustly fixes his gaze towards a fellow Muslim in such a way that the latter gets frightened, Allawh will frighten him on the day of judgement."

If someone does this because it was the latter's fault or mistake, it will be permissible if it is done according to the need.

Accepting the excuse of a Muslim

70. Rasûlullâh sallallâhu 'alayhi wa sallam said: "The person who does not accept the excuse of his fellow Muslim will not come near me at the Haud-e-kauthar."

That is, if someone harms you in any way and thereafter seeks your forgiveness, you should forgive him (and overlook his fault).

Tale-bearing

71. Rasûlullâh sallallâhu 'alayhi wa sallam said: "The one who carries tales will not enter jannah."

Backbiting

72. Rasûlullâh sallallâhu 'alayhi wa sallam said: "The person who eats the flesh (i.e. makes ghîbah) of his fellow Muslim in this world, then on the day of judgement Allawh will present the flesh of a dead person and tell him: "Just as you had eaten the flesh of a living person, eat that of a dead person as well. This person will eat it with a frown and continue yelling."

Slander

73. Rasûlullâh sallallâhu 'alayhi wa sallam said: "Allawh will make the person who accuses his fellow Muslim of something that is not to be found in him, stay in the place where the blood and pus of the dwellers of hell gathers. He will remain in this place until he gives up this accusation and makes taubah."

Speaking less

74. Rasûlullâh sallallâhu 'alayhi wa sallam said: "The person who remains silent saves himself from many problems."

75. Rasûlullâh sallallâhu 'alayhi wa sallam said: "Apart from the dhikr of Allawh, do not speak excessively because speaking excessively hardens the heart. And the person who is furthest away from Allawh is the one who is hard-hearted."

Humbling or lowering yourself

76. Rasûlullâh sallallâhu 'alayhi wa sallam said: "The one who humbles himself for the sake of Allawh, Allawh raises his stages. The one who is proud, Allawh breaks his neck." That is, Allawh disgraces him.

Considering yourself to be great

77. Rasûlullâh sallallâhu 'alayhi wa sallam said: "The person who has pride which is equal to even a mustard seed will not enter jannah."

Truth and Lies

78. Rasûlullâh sallallâhu 'alayhi wa sallam said: "Always speak the truth because it directs one towards good deeds. Good deeds and truth lead one to jannah. Safeguard yourself from speaking lies because it leads one towards evil deeds. Evil deeds and lies lead one to jahannam.

Hypocrisy

79. Rasûlullâh sallallâhu 'alayhi wa sallam said: "The person who is two-faced will have two tongues of fire on the day of judgement."

Being two-faced means to "play according to the tune" of whoever you are with.

Taking of oaths

80. Rasûlullâh sallallâhu 'alayhi wa sallam said: "The person who takes an oath in the name of anyone other than Allawh has committed an act of kufr." Or he said: "He has committed an act of shirk."

Some people are in the habit of taking oaths in the following manner: "I swear on your life", "I swear by my eyes", "I swear on my children", etc. All this is prohibited. It is mentioned in a Hadith that if a person mistakenly utters such oaths, he must immediately recite the kalimah.

81. Rasûlullâh sallallâhu 'alayhi wa sallam said: "If a person takes an oath in the following manner: "May I not have any îmân"; and he is speaking a lie in whatever he is saying then his oath will be fulfilled (i.e. he will be bereft of îmân). And if he is speaking the truth, even then his îmân will not remain complete."

It is also prohibited to take the following oaths: "May I not be blessed with the kalimah (at the time of death)", "May I enter into jahannam", etc. One should abandon this evil habit of taking such oaths.

Removing harmful objects from the road

82. Rasûlullâh sallallâhu 'alayhi wa sallam said: "There was a person who was walking on a road. He came across a thorny branch in his path, so he removed it from the road. Allawh liked this act of his and therefore forgave him."

We learn from this that it is an evil habit to throw such things on the road. Some women are in the habit of sitting on a stool in the courtyard. When they get up, they leave the stool behind. At times, someone who happens to walk there trips and falls over the stool and thereby injures himself. In the same way, it is an evil habit to leave one's utensils, a sofa, a stick, a grinding-stone, etc. in the way.

Fulfilling promises and trusts

83. Rasûlullâh sallallâhu 'alayhi wa sallam said: "The person who has no amânah has no îmân, and the person who does not fulfil his promises has no Dîn."

Going to pundits, fortune-tellers, palm-readers, etc.

84. Rasûlullâh sallallâhu 'alayhi wa sallam said: "The person who goes to one who gives information of the unseen and asks him certain things and thereafter believes in what he says, then forty days salât of such a person will not be accepted."

When someone has control over a jinn, some women go to that person and ask the jinn regarding the unseen. For example, they ask: "When will my husband find employment?" When will my son return home?" These are all sinful acts.

Keeping dogs or pictures

85. Rasûlullâh sallallâhu 'alayhi wa sallam said: "The angels do not enter a house in which there is a dog or a picture."

That is, the angels of mercy do not enter such a house. The toys of children which have pictures are also prohibited.

Lying on one's stomach unnecessarily

86. Rasûlullâh sallallâhu 'alayhi wa sallam passed by a person lying down on his stomach. So he pointed with his leg and informed him that Allawh does not like this posture in lying down.

Sitting or lying partly in the shade and partly in the sun

87. Rasûlullâh sallallâhu 'alayhi wa sallam prohibited from sitting partly in the shade and partly in the sun.

Ill-omens and spells

88. Rasûlullâh sallallâhu 'alayhi wa sallam said: "Taking ill-omens is shirk."

89. Rasûlullâh sallallâhu 'alayhi wa sallam said: "Casting of spells is shirk."

Absence of worldly greed

90. Rasûlullâh sallallâhu 'alayhi wa sallam said: "When there is no greed for this world, the heart is at peace and the body is also at rest."

91. Rasûlullâh sallallâhu 'alayhi wa sallam said: "If two hungry wolves are left in a flock of sheep and they begin devouring and tearing the sheep apart, then the harm that they cause will not be as great as the harm that will be caused to a person who desires wealth and fame."

Remembrance of death

92. Rasûlullâh sallallâhu 'alayhi wa sallam said: "Remember that thing which cuts off all pleasures, i.e. death."

93. Rasûlullâh sallallâhu 'alayhi wa sallam said: "When you wake up in the morning, do not begin planning for the evening. When evening comes, do not begin planning for the morning. Take benefit from your health before sickness overtakes you. And take benefit from your life before death overtakes you."

This means that you should regard your health and life as being very valuable and occupy yourself in doing good deeds because once sickness or death overtakes you, you will not be able to do any good.

Exercising patience at the time of difficulties

94. Rasûlullâh sallallâhu 'alayhi wa sallam said: "If any harm, difficulty, sickness, sorrow, etc. afflicts a Muslim to the extent that even if he becomes a bit distressed on account of worrying over something, then in all these instances Allawh forgives his sins."

Visiting the sick

95. Rasûlullâh sallallâhu 'alayhi wa sallam said: "When a Muslim visits his fellow Muslim who is sick in the morning, 70 000 angels make du'â for him till the evening. And when he visits him in the evening, 70 000 angels make du'â for him till the morning."

Bathing and enshrouding the deceased and consoling his family

96. Rasûlullâh sallallâhu 'alayhi wa sallam said: "The person who gives ghusl to the deceased, he (the former) becomes pure from sins just as when his mother had given birth to him. The person who enshrouds the deceased, Allawh will make him wear the shoes of jannah. The person who consoles one who is in sorrow, Allawh will make him wear the clothes of piety and send mercy to his soul. The person who consoles one who is in difficulty, Allawh will make him wear the shoes of jannah the value of which will be more than the value of the entire world."

Crying in a wailing manner

97. Rasûlullâh sallallâhu 'alayhi wa sallam has cursed the woman who cries in a wailing manner and the person who listens (with attention) to such a woman. Women! Please abandon this habit for the sake of Allawh.

Devouring the wealth of an orphan

98. Rasûlullâh sallallâhu 'alayhi wa sallam said: "Certain people will be raised on the day of judgement in such a manner that flames of fire will be coming out from their mouths." Someone asked him: "O Rasûlullâh! Who will these persons be?" He replied: "Haven't you read in the Quran where Allawh says that those who devour the wealth of orphans unjustly are in fact filling their bellies with fire?"

In this context, "unjustly" refers to using the wealth of orphans or spending it when in fact the Sharî'ah has given them no right to use it. O women! Beware! There is an evil custom in India that the moment the husband passes away and leaves behind small children, his wife takes complete control over his wealth. From this very wealth, she hosts all the guests, lights the musjid (with oil lamps), and feeds those who come to offer salât. When in fact the children have a right in that wealth. And here she is spending it all together (without differentiating between her share and their share of the wealth). Furthermore, she uses this money for her daily expenses and later for the marriage of these children - she does this as she pleases without taking any consideration to what the Sharî'ah has to say in this regard. It is a major sin to use this money in which others have a right or others are partners. Separate their wealth and spend it only when it is solely for their expenses and you have no alternative but to spend it on them. As for the other expenses of hosting your guests and giving in charity - use your own share of the wealth. And this too should only be done if this spending is not contrary to the Sharî'ah. If it is contrary to the Sharî'ah, it will not be permissible for you to even spend your own wealth. Bear all this in mind. If not, the moment you pass away you will be punished.

NECESSARY QUALITIES FOR THE COMPLETION OF IMAAN

Rasulullah (sallAllawhu alayhi wa sallam) said: " There are over 70 things which are connected with imaan, the highest of which is the Kalimah " la ilaha illAllawhu muhammadur Rasulullah" and the lowest is the removal of a harmful object from the road. Modesty and hayaa is also a major part of imaan." We will therefore mention these qualities.

75. Not to cause harm to anyone unjustly.
76. To abstain from games and amusements that are contrary to the shariah.
77. To remove pebbles, stones, thorns, sticks etc. from the road.

THE HARMS OF ONE'S NAFS AND THE HARMS OF OTHERS

All the rewards and punishments for good and evil deeds that have been mentioned previously are influenced by two things. One of them is the person's nafs. It presents various ideas and thoughts to the person. It tries to distract him from good deeds and tries to show him the need to do evil deeds. I f a person becomes afraid of the punishment of ALLAWH, it informs him that ALLAWH Ta'ala is all forgiving and merciful. To make matters worse, shaytaan also helps and prompts the nafs.

THE METHOD OF DEALING WITH THE NAFS

Set aside a short period of time in the morning and the evening or at the time of going to bed. During this time, sit in seclusion and as far as possible free your heart from all thoughts. Thereafter. address yourself and your nafs in the following manner: O nafs ! Understand well that you are similar to a merchant in this world. Your capital is your life and its profits is that it should attain salvation in the hereafter. If you have attained this wealth, your business will be considered to be profitable. If you have wasted this life and did not attain salvation in the hereafter, you will suffer a great loss in that you would have lost your capital and made no profit as well..

THE METHOD OF DEALING WITH PEOPLE

If you happen to meet and converse with one whom you do not know then bear in mind that you should not pay attention to those things which are considered to be rumours. If he speaks nonsense or uses foul language. make yourself absolutely deaf to whatever he says. Do not associate too much with him. Nor should you rely on him for anything

SUPPLEMENT TO BAHISHTI ZEWAR

Hadrat Abu Hurayrah (radiAllawhu anhu) narrates that Rasulullah (sallAllawhu alayhi wa sallam) said: " ALLAWH Ta'ala does not look at your bodies and your appearances. Instead, he looks at your hearts. " This means that ALLAWH Ta'ala does not accept actions that merely appear to be good externally while they are devoid of sincerity and attention from the heart. For example, a person may be occupied in a certain act of ibaadah. Apparently, he may be engaged in an act of ibaadah while in his heart he is oblivious to what he is doing. The heart cannot even discern whether he is standing in front of ALLAWH Ta'ala or busy doing something else.

ADVICE TO WOMEN IN GENERAL

1. Do not even approach anything which amounts to shirk (polytheism)
2. Do not involve yourself in witch-craft and superstitious remedies in order to conceive children or to keep them alive.
3. do not hold faatihah and niyaaz ceremonies for walis.
4. Do not take oaths in the name of pious people.
5. Do not do anything for name and fame.
6. Be obedient to your husband
7. Do NOT listen to music.

ADVICE TO THOSE WHO ARE MUREEDS

Check the above mentioned advices
Make it a duty to follow Rasulullah (sallAllawhu alayhi wasallam) in everything. In doing so the heart will be very brightly illuminated.
Don't even consider yourself to be perfect
Don't even talk ill of an evil person do not involve yourself excessively in worldly affairs.

BOOK XXI SINS

A few major sins regarding which severe warnings have been mentioned

1. To ascribe partners to Allawh.
2. To shed the blood of someone unjustly.
3. To practise witchcraft and charms by childless women during the confinement of another woman so that the child of that woman may die and she may have a child. This also amounts to murder.
4. To taunt or torment one's parents.
5. To commit adultery.
6. To devour the wealth of orphans, eg. many women usurp the wealth and belongings of the deceased husband and deprive the children of their share.
7. To deprive the daughters of their share in the inheritance.
8. To accuse a woman of adultery even on the slightest doubt.
9. To oppress or persecute someone.
10. To backbite or slander someone.
11. To despair of the mercy of Allawh Ta'ala.
12. To act contrary to one's promise.
13. To betray a trust (amaanah).
14. To discard any fard (compulsory duty) enjoined by Allawh Ta'ala, eg. salaat, fasting, hajj, zakaat, etc.
15. To forget the Holy Quran after having memorized it.
16. To speak lies. Especially to take false oaths.
17. To swear by the name of anyone other than Allawh.
18. To take an oath with such words that the person is deprived of the kalimah at the time of death, or may die without Imaan.
19. To prostrate before anyone other than Allawh Ta'ala.
20. To miss salaat without a valid excuse.
21. To call any Muslim a kafir, or non-believer, or to invoke the wrath or punishment of Allawh on him, or to call him an enemy of Allawh.
22. To complain against someone, or to hear such a complaint.

23. Removal of Allawh Ta'ala's anger.

BOOK XXII

APOSTASY

1. If a woman renounces Islam, she will be given a respite of three days in which all her doubts regarding Islam may be cleared. If she returns to Islam within the three days, well and good. If not, she will be imprisoned forever. If she repents, she will be freed.
2. Once a person utters the words of kufr, imaan will no longer remain with him. All the pious deeds and forms of ibaadah which he may have fulfilled while he was a Muslim will be rendered null and void. His marriage will be null and void. If he had performed the fard hajj, it will also be rendered null and void. If he repents and returns to Islam, he will have to renew his marriage and also repeat his hajj.
3. Similarly, if a woman's husband becomes a kaafir, their marriage will be annulled. As long as he does not repent and renew his marriage, the woman cannot have any contact with him. If they continue with their marital and sexual relationships, the woman will also be sinful. If the man imposes upon her to have sexual relationships with her, she should expose him to the public and she should not shy away from this. There is no shame in matters of religion.
4. Once the words of kufr are uttered, imaan will leave the person. If these words are uttered jokingly and one does not have kufr in one's heart, even then the same rule will apply. For example, if a person asks: "Hasn't Allawh the power to do such and such thing?" And the person who is being addressed replies: "No!" then in such a case this person will become devoid of imaan.
5. A person says: "Come, let us offer our salaat." And the person replies: "Why should I waste my time going up and down?" Or, a person tells you to fast and you reply saying: "Why should I kill myself staying hungry?" or you tell him: "Only the person who does not have any food in his house should fast." All this is regarded as kufr.
6. A person saw another person committing a sin, so he asked him: "Don't you fear Allawh?" The person replied: "No, I don't fear Him." He will become a kaafir by replying in this way.
7. A person saw another person committing a sin, so he asked him: "Aren't you a Muslim that you are committing such a sin?" The person replied: "No, I'm not a Muslim." He will become a kaafir irrespective of whether he was serious or he said it jokingly.
8. A person commenced offering salaat. Coincidentally, he was afflicted by a calamity. So he said: "All this is because of offering salaat." He will become a kaafir.
9. A person saw something good with a kaafir. On seeing this, he remarked: "It would have been nice if I was also a kaafir so that I could also do the same thing." He will become a kaafir.
10. A person's son or beloved one passed away, so he said: "O Allawh! Why did You oppress me in this way? Why are You torturing me?" By saying this, the person will become a kaafir.
11. A person says: "Even if Allawh asks me to do this work I will not do it." or: "Even if the angel Jibra'eel comes down, I will not listen to him." He will become a kaafir.
12. A person says: "I do such work that even Allawh does not know about it." He will become a kaafir.
13. If a person derides Allawh Ta'ala or any of His prophets, finds fault with the Shariah or is attracted to certain acts of kufr, his imaan will leave him. All those acts which cause one's imaan to leave a person have been mentioned in Part One of Bahishti Zewar. For further details, refer to the relevant chapters of Part One. One should be very cautious in preserving one's imaan. May Allawh Ta'ala protect our imaan, and may we leave this world with imaan. Aameen.

GLOSSARY

Explanation of Islamic Terms

Arsh: The throne of Allawh Ta'ala.

Banu Isra'eel: Literally means the children of Isra'eel. It refers to the progeny of Hadrat Ya'qub alayhis salaam.

Shirk: Polytheism or ascribing partners to Allawh Ta'ala.
Subah saadiq: Literally means "true dawn". It refers to the time when whiteness (brightness) can be noticed on the breadth of the horizon. It is at this time that the time of fajr salaat commences.
Sub'haanAllawh: Means "glory to Allawh".
Sufis: A term used to refer to mystics or saints. Such persons are also known as the auliyaa of Allawh, i.e. the close friends of Allawh. These are the persons who have dedicated their entire lives in the ibaadah of Allawh Ta'ala.
Surmah: Antimony. A black powdery substance that is applied to the eyes. It is sunnah to apply surmah.
Tasbeeh: Saying "sub'haanAllawh". A rosary that is used to glorify Allawh Ta'ala is also called a tasbeeh.
Umrah: Commonly referred to as the lesser pilgrimage. It is similar to hajj with the exception that many of the rites of hajj are left out and that it could be performed throughout the year.
Wajib: Literally means "obligatory'. In Islamic jurisprudence it refers to that act which has not been established by an absolute proof. Leaving out a wajib without any valid reason makes one a faasiq and entails punishment.
Zikr: The remembrance of Allawh Ta'ala.
Zil Hijjah: The last month of the Islamic calendar.
Zil Qa'dah: The eleventh month of the Islamic calendar.

BOOK XXIII

OATHS

1. It is an evil habit to take an oath over trivial matters unnecessarily. In doing this, great disrespect is shown to the name of Allawh Ta'ala. As far as possible, an oath should not even be taken on things that are true.
2. If a person takes an oath in the name of Allawh by saying: "I swear by Allawh", "I swear by God", "I swear by the power of Allawh", or "I swear by the greatness of Allawh", the oath will be considered. It will not be permissible to go contrary to the oath. If the name of Allawh Ta'ala is not taken, and one merely says: "I take an oath that I will not do such and such work", the oath will still be considered.
3. The oath will also be considered if the person says: "Allawh is a witness", "I am making Allawh a witness and saying this", or "I am saying this bearing in mind that Allawh Ta'ala is present and listening to what I am saying".
4. An oath will also be considered if a person says: "I swear on the Quran", "I swear by the word of Allawh", or "I swear by the kalaam-e-majeed". If the person takes the Quran in his hand or places his hand on the Quran and says something but does not take an oath, an oath will not be considered.
5. A person says: "If I carry out a certain act, I will die without Imaan", or "at the time of death I will not be blessed with Imaan". Alternatively, he says: "If I carry out a certain act, I am not a Muslim." In all these cases, the oath will be considered. If he does anything contrary to the oath, he will have to give kaffarah. However, he will not lose his Imaan.
6. The following oaths are not considered, nor is kaffarah necessary. For example, a person says: "If I carry out a certain act, my hands must break", "my eyes must burst", "I must be afflicted by leprosy", "my entire body must disintegrate", "the anger of Allawh Ta'ala must descend", "the skies must be rendered asunder",

"I must become an absolute pauper", "the punishment of Allawh must descend", "the curse of Allawh must fall on me", "If I carry out a certain act, I will eat pork", "at the time of death, I will not be able to recite the kalimah", "on the day of judgement, I will be ashamed in the presence of Allawh and His Rasul sallAllawhu alayhi wa sallam".

7. An oath that is taken in the name of anyone other than Allawh Ta'ala is not considered. For example, taking an oath in the name of Rasulullah sallAllawhu alayhi wa sallam, in the name of the Ka'bah, one's eyes, one's youth, one's limbs, one's father, one's children, one's beloved ones, one's head, one's life, taking an oath in the name of the person who is being addressed, an oath in one's own name. Oaths of this sort are not considered. Acting contrary to them does not make kaffarah necessary. However, it is a major sin to take an oath in the name of anyone other than Allawh Ta'ala. Many prohibitions are mentioned in this regard in the Hadith. To take an oath in the name of anyone other than Allawh Ta'ala is an act of shirk. One should abstain from taking oaths in the name of anyone other than Allawh Ta'ala.

8. A person says: "The food of your house is haraam upon me" or "I have made a certain thing haraam upon myself". By his saying this, that thing will not become haraam upon him. However, this oath is considered. If he eats that thing, he will have to give kaffarah.

9. By someone else taking an oath on you, the oath is not considered. For example, a person tells you: "I swear by Allawh that you have to do this work!" This oath is not considered and one can act contrary to it.

10. An oath is not considered if "Insha Allawh" is said together with the oath, e.g. a person says: "I swear by Allawh that Insha Allawh I will not do that work." This oath will not be considered.

11. It is a major sin to take a false oath on something that has already been done or passed. For example, a person did not offer his salaat but when he was asked about it, he said: "I swear by Allawh that I have offered my salaat." Or, a person broke a tumbler and when asked about it he swears by Allawh that he did not break it. There is no limit to the punishment that one will receive for taking a false oath intentionally. Nor is there any kaffarah for such a false oath. The only thing that a person can do is to continuously repent to Allawh Ta'ala and seek His forgiveness. If a person takes a false oath mistakenly or due to some misunderstanding, it will be forgiven. There will be no kaffarah on such a false oath. For example, a person says: "I swear by Allawh that so and so person has not arrived as yet", and in his heart this person had the full conviction that this oath which he is taking is a true oath. Only later did he learn that at the time of taking the oath, that person had already arrived. Such a false oath will be forgiven and there is no kaffarah.

12. If an oath is taken for something that has not occurred as yet and would take place in the future, then if something contrary to this oath occurs, kaffarah will have to be given. For example, a person says: "I swear by Allawh that it will rain today" or "that my brother will arrive today". If it does not rain today or his brother does not arrive today, kaffarah will have to be paid.

13. A person says: "I swear by Allawh that I will recite the Quran today." It now becomes wajib on the person to recite the Quran. If he does not do so, he will be sinning and he will also have to pay kaffarah. A person says: "I swear by Allawh that I will not do such and such work today." It will not be permissible for him to do that work. If he does it, he will have to pay kaffarah.

14. A person takes an oath of committing a sin. For example, he says: "I swear by Allawh that I will steal a certain item from a certain person", "I swear by Allawh that I will not offer my salaat today" or "I swear by Allawh that I will never speak to my parents". If a person takes oaths of this nature, it will be wajib upon him to break them and thereafter to pay kaffarah as well. If he does not do so, he will be sinning.

15. A person takes an oath that he will not eat a certain thing today. Thereafter, he forgetfully ate that thing and did not remember that he had taken an oath not to eat it. Alternatively, someone forced that thing into his mouth and forced him to eat it. In both cases, he will have to pay kaffarah.

16. In anger, a person takes an oath and says: "I will not give you a single thing." Thereafter, he gives the person one cent or one rand. Even then the oath will be broken and kaffarah will have to be paid.

Paying Kaffarah on Breaking an Oath

1. If a person breaks his oath, he will have to pay a kaffarah which comprises feeding 10 persons with two meals each. Alternatively, he could give dry groceries to each poor person. When giving wheat, he should give approximately one and half to two kilos. When giving barley, he should give approximately three to four kilos. For the rest of the details connected to feeding the poor refer to the chapter on kaffarah for fasting. This has been mentioned previously.

Alternatively, he could give some clothing to 10 poor persons. The clothing must be such that it can cover a major portion of the poor person's body. For example, if he gives a sheet or a long kurta, the kaffarah will be fulfilled. However, this clothing that he gives should not be very old. If each poor person is given a lungi or a pants, the kaffarah will not be fulfilled. But if he gives a kurtah with it as well, the kaffarah will be fulfilled.

A person has the choice of either giving food or clothing. The kaffarah will be fulfilled with any one of the two. The above-mentioned rule regarding clothing is only applicable if the clothing is given to a man. If clothing is given to a poor woman, it must be such that her entire body is covered and she is able to offer salaat with that clothing. If the clothing is less than this, the kaffarah will not be fulfilled.

2. If a person is poor and is therefore unable to feed or clothe 10 poor people, he will have to fast for three days consecutively. If he does not fast consecutively for three days, and instead misses a fast or two in between, the kaffarah will not be fulfilled. If a person fasts for two days, and misses a fast on the third day for some reason or the other, he will have to recommence fasting. The first two fasts will not be considered.

3. Prior to breaking his oath, a person gave the kaffarah. After giving the kaffarah, he broke his oath. The kaffarah which he had given will not be valid. After breaking his oath, he will have to give kaffarah again. Whatever he had given to the poor persons prior to breaking his oath cannot be taken back from them.

4. A person took an oath several times. For example, he said: "I swear by Allawh that I will not do that work." Later, he repeats the same oath irrespective of whether he repeats it on the same day, the next day or even on the third day. Alternatively, he says: "I swear by God, I swear by Allawh, I swear by the Quran that I will definitely do that work." Thereafter, this person breaks this oath of his. He will only have to give one kaffarah for all these oaths.

5. A person had taken several oaths and therefore had to give several kaffarahs. According to the preferred opinion, he will have to give a separate kaffarah for each oath that he had taken. If the person does not give it during his lifetime, it will be wajib upon him to make a bequest in this regard before he leaves this world.

6. The food or clothing that is given as kaffarah will have to be given to those poor persons who are eligible to receive zakaat.

Oaths Related to Entering a House

1. A person took an oath that he will never enter your house. Thereafter, he stood on the porch or below the balcony of your house without actually entering the house. His oath will not be broken. However, the moment he enters through the door, his oath will break.

2. A person took an oath that he will not enter a particular house. Thereafter, when that house became completely delapidated and ruined, he entered it. His oath will break. But if that house was completely flattened to such an extent that there are no traces of it, or it has been turned into an orchard, or a musjid has been constructed in its place, or it has been turned into a farm and thereafter he entered it, his oath will not be broken.

3. A person took an oath that he will not enter a particular house. Thereafter, it was ruined and reconstructed. If he enters the house, his oath will break.

4. A person took an oath that he will not enter your house. He then landed onto your roof by jumping from the upper storey of the house next door. By him standing on your roof, his oath will break. This is even if he does not come down into your house.

5. While a person was sitting in a house, he said: "Now I will never come to this house." After taking this oath, he continued sitting there for a little while. His oath will not break irrespective of how many days he may remain in that house. But the moment he goes outside and then enters the house, his oath will break. If a person takes an oath that he will not wear these clothes (i.e. the clothes that he is presently wearing) and immediately thereafter he removes them, his oath will not break. But if he does not remove them immediately and continues wearing them for some time, his oath will break.

6. A person takes an oath that he will not live in this house any longer. Immediately thereafter, he begins with preparations to leave that house. His oath will not break. But if he waits for a little while and does not commence with his preparations immediately, his oath will break.

7. A person takes an oath that he will not set foot in your house. This means that he will not enter your house. If he enters your house while being carried in a carriage and remains sitting in it and does not place his foot onto the ground, even then his oath will break.
8. A person took an oath and said that he will definitely come to your house at some time or the other. However, he never got the opportunity of coming to your house. As long as he is alive, his oath will not break. The moment he is about to die, his oath will break. He should therefore make a bequest that the kaffarah for breaking an oath should be given from his wealth.
9. A person says that he will not go to the house of a certain person. This person should not go to the house in which that person is living irrespective of whether it is that person's own house, whether he has taken it on rent or whether he has borrowed it from someone.
10. A person takes an oath that he will never come to you. Thereafter, he asks someone to carry him and take him to you. Even in such a case his oath will break. However, if someone carries him and brings him to you without his asking that person to carry him, his oath will not break. Similarly, if a person takes an oath that he will never leave this house, and thereafter he orders someone to carry him out of the house, his oath will break. But if someone carries him outside without his ordering him to do so, his oath will not break.

Oaths Related to Eating and Drinking

1. A person took an oath that he will not drink this milk. Thereafter that milk turned into yoghurt and he consumed it. His oath will not break.
2. A person had a kid goat and took an oath that he will not consume the meat of that kid. After that kid grew into a fully grown adult goat, he consumed its meat. His oath will break.
3. A person took an oath that he will not consume any meat. Thereafter, he consumed some fish, liver or the tripe of an animal. His oath will not break.
4. A person took an oath that he will not eat this wheat. Thereafter, this wheat was ground and made into bread or a dish made of crushed wheat. If he consumes any of these, his oath will not break. But if he boils or roasts the wheat and consumes it, his oath will break. However, if at the time of taking the oath, the person intended that he will not consume anything made from it, then his oath will break with anything that is made from it.
5. A person took an oath that he will not eat this flour. If he eats bread that is made from this flour, his oath will break. If any pudding, sweetmeat or anything else is made from this flour, even then his oath will break. If he eats a mouthful of this raw flour, his oath will not break.
6. A person took an oath that he will not eat bread. If he eats any bread, his oath will break irrespective of how it is made or what ingredients are used. As long as it is referred to as bread in that area, his oath will break if he consumes it.
7. A person took an oath that he will not eat the head of any animal. If he eats the head of a bird, quail or fowl, his oath will not break. But if he eats the head of a goat or bull, his oath will break.
8. A person took an oath that he will not eat fruit. If he eats pomegranates, apples, grapes, dried dates, almonds, walnuts, currants, raisins, dates, etc. his oath will break. But if he eats water melons, sweet melons, cucumbers, mangoes, etc. his oath will not break.

Oaths Related to Not Speaking

1. A person takes an oath that he will not speak to a certain person. While that person was asleep, he spoke to him. Upon hearing his voice, that person awoke. His oath will break.
2. A person takes an oath that he will not speak to a certain person without the permission of his (the former's) mother. Thereafter, his mother gave him permission to speak but her permission had not reached him as yet. If he spoke to the person and only learnt later that permission was granted to him, his oath will break.
3. A person takes an oath that he will never speak to this girl. Later when she became mature or grew old, he spoke to her. His oath will break.
4. A person takes an oath that he will never look at you or he will never look at your face. This means that he will not meet you, mix with you or stay in your company. If he looks at you from a distance, his oath will not break.

Oaths Related to Buying and Selling

1. A person took an oath that he will not purchase a certain item. Thereafter he asked someone to purchase it for him. If that person purchases it, his oath will not break. Similarly, a person took an oath that he will not sell a certain item of his. Thereafter, he asked someone to sell it for him. If that person sells it, his oath will not break. The same rule will apply to rental transactions. If he took an oath that he will not rent a particular house, and thereafter took it on rent through someone else, his oath will not break.

However, if he intended that he will not do these things himself nor will he ask someone else, then by someone else doing these things on his behalf, his oath will break. In other words, the rules will apply according to the intention that he makes. However, if the person is one who does not carry out such transactions himself, or if a woman is in purdah and does not carry out such transactions herself and they are used to relegating such tasks to orders, then in such a case even if someone else does the buying and selling on their behalf, their oaths will break.

2. A person took an oath that he will not beat his child. Thereafter, he ordered someone else to beat him. His oath will not break.

Oaths Related to Salaat and Fasting

1. A person took an oath that he will not fast. Thereafter, he made the intention to fast. If he fasts for even a second, his oath will break. By his taking an oath not to fast does not mean that he has to fast the entire day. By breaking his fast even after a little while, he will have to give kaffarah for breaking his oath. If the person says: "I will not even keep one fast", his oath will break at the time of the end of the fast. As long as the time of fasting does not come to an end, his oath will not break. If the person breaks his fast before the end of the day, his oath will not break.
2. A person took an oath that he will not offer his salaat. Thereafter, he regretted this and stood up to offer his salaat. The moment he makes the sajdah for the first rakaat, his oath will break. His oath will not break prior to making the first sajdah. If he breaks his salaat after the first rakaat, even then his oath will break. It should be remembered that it is a major sin to take oaths of this nature. If a person takes such oaths, he should immediately break them and pay the kaffarah for them.

Oaths Related to Clothing and Other Matters

1. A person took an oath that he will not lie down on this mat. Thereafter he spread a sheet onto this mat and lied down. His oath will break. And if he placed some other mat or carpet onto the first mat and then lied down, his oath will not break.
2. A person took an oath that he will not sit on the ground. Thereafter, he laid a mat, carpet, straw mat, a cloth, etc. on the ground and then sat onto it. His oath will not break. But if he spread a part of the clothing that he is wearing, or if a woman spread a part of her head covering while she is wearing it, and then sat down; the oath will break. If the clothing or head covering was removed completely from one’s body, placed onto the ground and then the person sat down, the oath will not break.
3. A person took an oath that he will not sit on this bed or couch. Thereafter, he laid a mat or a piece of carpet onto that bed or couch. His oath will break. But if another bed or another couch is placed onto the first bed or couch, his oath will not break by sitting on the top bed or couch.
4. A person took an oath that he will never bathe a certain person or child. However, on the death of that person or child, he gave ghusl to him. His oath will break.
5. The husband took an oath that he will never beat his wife. Thereafter, he pulled her hair, throttled her or bit her out of anger. His oath will break. But if he bit her out of love, his oath will not break.
6. A person took an oath that he will definitely beat a certain person. But that person had passed away prior to this person's oath. If this person did not know that he had already passed away and had therefore taken this oath, his oath will not break. But if he took this oath knowing fully that the person had already passed away, his oath will break the moment he takes it.
7. A person took an oath of doing something. By doing that thing even once in his entire lifetime he will absolve himself from his oath. For example, a person takes an oath that he will definitely eat a pomegranate. By his eating it just once in his lifetime, he will absolve himself from his oath. And if he takes an oath of not doing something, he will have to abstain from doing it for the rest of his life. For example, he says that he will never eat a pomegranate. He will have to abstain from eating it forever. If he eats it at any time, his oath will break. However, if he had taken such an oath with regard to a particular pomegranate or any other particular fruit, his oath will only break if he eats those which he had specified. If he buys some other pomegranates or any other fruit and eats them, his oath will not break.

Surmah: Antimony. A black powdery substance that is applied to the eyes. It is sunnah to apply surmah.
Tasbeeh: Saying "sub'haanAllawh". A rosary that is used to glorify Allawh Ta'ala is also called a tasbeeh.
Umrah: Commonly referred to as the lesser pilgrimage. It is similar to hajj with the exception that many of the rites of hajj are left out and that it could be performed throughout the year.
Wajib: Literally means "obligatory'. In Islamic jurisprudence it refers to that act which has not been established by an absolute proof. Leaving out a wajib without any valid reason makes one a faasiq and entails punishment.
Zikr: The remembrance of Allawh Ta'ala.
Zil Hijjah: The last month of the Islamic calendar.
Zil Qa'dah: The eleventh month of the Islamic calendar.

BOOK XXIV

RIGHTS

The Rights of the Husband

Allawh Ta'âlâ has given great rights to the husband and has attached a lot of virtue to him. Pleasing the husband and keeping him happy is a great act of 'ibâdah and displeasing him or keeping him unhappy is a major sin.

1. Rasûlullâh sallallâhu 'alayhi wa sallam said: "The woman who offers her five times salât, fasts in the month of Ramadân, protects her honour and respect, and obeys her husband has the choice of entering jannah from whichever door she wishes to enter from." This means that from the eight doors of jannah she can enter through whichever door she wishes without even having to knock on that door.
2. Rasûlullâh sallallâhu 'alayhi wa sallam said: "The woman who passes away in such a state that her husband is pleased with her will enter jannah."
3. Rasûlullâh sallallâhu 'alayhi wa sallam said: "Were I to command anyone to prostrate to anyone other than Allawh, I would have commanded the woman to prostrate to her husband. If the husband orders his wife to carry the boulders of one mountain to the next mountain, and the boulders of the next mountain to a third mountain, she will have to do this."
4. Rasûlullâh sallallâhu 'alayhi wa sallam said: "When the husband calls his wife, she should go immediately to him even if she is busy at her stove." In other words, no matter how important a task she may be busy with, she should leave it and go to him.
5. Rasûlullâh sallallâhu 'alayhi wa sallam said: "When a man calls his wife to engage in sexual intercourse with him and she does not go and because of this he sleeps away angrily, the angels continue cursing this woman till the morning."
6. Rasûlullâh sallallâhu 'alayhi wa sallam said: "When a woman troubles or displeases her husband in this world, the hûr of jannah that has been set aside for him says: "May Allawh curse you! Do not trouble him. He is your guest for a few days. Soon he will leave you and come to me."
7. Rasûlullâh sallallâhu 'alayhi wa sallam said: "There are three types of people whose salât is not accepted, nor is any other good act of theirs accepted. One is a slave who runs away from his master. The second is a woman whose husband is displeased with her. The third is a person who is in a state of intoxication."
8. A person asked: "Who is the best woman?" Rasûlullâh sallallâhu 'alayhi wa sallam replied: "The best woman is one who pleases her husband when he looks at her, when he asks her to do something she obeys him, and she does not do anything that may displease him with regard to his wealth and honour."

One of the rights of the husband is that the wife should not keep any optional fasts nor offer any optional salât in his presence without his permission. Among the rights of the husband is that she should not remain in an untidy, dishevelled state. Instead, she should always remain clean and beautiful for her husband. In fact, if she remains untidy and dishevelled despite her husband ordering her to remain clean, he has the right of beating her (lightly) in order that she may obey him. Another right of the husband is that she should not leave the house without his permission irrespective of whether it be the house of a friend, relative or anyone else.

The Rights of Parents

1. You should not cause them any harm even if they commit any excesses.
2. Respect and honour them in your speech and dealings with them.
3. Obey them in permissible acts.
4. If they are in need of money, assist them even if they are kâfirs.
5. The following rights are due to parents after their death:

(a) Continue making du'âs of forgiveness and mercy for them. Continue sending rewards to them in the form of optional acts of worship and charity on their behalf.
(b) Meet their friends and relatives in a friendly way and also assist them wherever possible.
(c) If you have the finances, fulfil their unpaid debts and the permissible bequests that they have made.
(d) When they pass away, abstain from crying and wailing aloud or else their souls will be troubled.

6. According to the Sharî'ah, the rights of the paternal and maternal grandparents are similar to those of the parents and they should be regarded as such.
7. Similarly, the rights of the maternal and paternal uncles and aunts are similar to those of the parents. This has been deduced from certain 'Ahâdîth. (Rasûlullâh sallallâhu 'alayhi wa sallam said: "The maternal aunt has the status of one's mother." - Tirmidhî)

The wet-nurse

Meet her with respect. If she is in need of money and you are able to help her, then help her.

The Step-mother

Since she is an associate of your father, and we have been commanded to be kind and friendly to our parents' associates, the step-mother, therefore, also has certain rights over you as mentioned previously.

The elder brother

In the light of the Hadith, the elder brother is similar to one's father. From this we can deduce that the younger brother is similar to one's children. Based on this, they will have rights similar to those of parents and children. The elder sister and the younger sister should also be treated in the same manner.

Relatives

If any of your blood relatives is in need and is unable to earn, help him out with his expenses according to your financial position. Go and meet them occasionally. Do not cut-off relations with them. In fact, even if they cause you harm, it will be best for you to exercise patience.

The In-laws

In the Quran, Allawh Ta'âlâ has mentioned the in-laws together with one's lineage. We learn from this that the father-in-law, mother-in-law, wife's brother, sister's husband, son-in-law, daughter-in-law, the previous children of the wife, the previous children of the husband - all of these have certain rights. Therefore, you have to be more considerate to them as opposed to others.

The Rights of Muslims

1. Overlook the faults of a Muslim.
2. When he cries, have mercy on him.

3. Conceal his shortcomings.
4. Accept his excuses.
5. Remove his difficulties.
6. Always be good to him.
7. Gaining his love is an accomplishment.
8. Fulfil his promises.
9. When he falls ill, visit him.
10. When he passes away, make du'â for him.
11. Accept his invitation.
12. Accept his gifts.
13. When he shows kindness to you, show kindness to him in return.
14. Be grateful for his favours upon you.
15. Help and assist him at the time of need.
16. Safeguard his family and children.
17. Assist him in his work.
18. Listen to his advice.
19. Accept his intercession.
20. Do not make him feel despondent over his ambitions.
21. When he sneezes and says "Alḥamdulillâh", say "YarhamukAllawh" in reply.
22. If you find a lost item of his, return it to him.
23. Reply to his greeting.
24. When you converse with him, speak with humility and in a good manner.
25. Be kind and friendly to him.
26. When he takes an oath with regard to you, confident that you will fulfil it, then you must fulfil it. (For example, Zayd takes an oath that 'Amr never goes to the bazaar and he is confident that 'Amr will fulfil this oath of his, then 'Amr must ensure that he does not act contrary to it.)
27. If anyone oppresses him, go to his assistance. If he oppresses someone, prevent him.
28. Be friendly to him and do not antagonize him.
29. Do not disgrace him.
30. Whatever you like for yourself, like for him as well.
31. When you meet him, make salâm to him. If a man shakes the hand of a man, and a woman shakes the hand of a woman, it will be even better.
32. If a quarrel takes place between the two of you, do not cut-off speaking to him for more than three days.
33. Do not have evil thoughts of him.
34. Do not be jealous of him nor should you hate him.
35. Direct him towards good deeds and stop him from evil deeds.
36. Have mercy on the young and respect the elderly.
37. If there is a conflict between two Muslims, try and reconcile them.
38. Do not speak ill of him.
39. Do not cause him any loss; neither in his wealth nor in his honour.
40. If he is sitting, do not make him get up and take his place.

Rights of the Neighbour

1. Deal with him in a nice and friendly manner.
2. Protect the honour of his wife and children.
3. Occasionally you should send gifts to his house. Especially if he is poor. In such a case you should definitely send some food to him.
4. Do not cause him any harm. Do not quarrel with him over trivial matters.

Rights of the Travelling Companion

1. Just as a person has a neighbour at home, he also has a neighbour when travelling. That is, a travelling companion with whom you embark on a journey or coincidentally joins you during the course of the journey. The rights of such a person are similar to those of a neighbour.
2. His rights can be summed up as follows: give preference to his comfort over your own comfort. Some people display a lot of selfishness with regard to other travellers when travelling by train or other modes of public transportation. This is a very evil habit.

Rights of the Weak and Old

Those people who are in need, such as orphans, widows, the weak, the poor, the sick, the cripple, travellers, beggars, etc. have additional rights. They are:

1. You should help them financially.
2. You should undertake their tasks with your own hands and legs.
3. You should console and comfort them.
4. You should not refuse to fulfil their needs and wants.

Rights of Human beings

1. Do not cause financial or physical harm to innocent people.
2. Do not argue with anyone without any valid Shar'î reason.
3. If you find someone in problem, in poverty, or sick, help him, feed him, treat his sickness.
4. When meting out punishment, do not transgress the limits in the different methods of punishment that have been laid down in the Sharî'ah.

Rights of Animals

1. Do not encage an animal which you will not be taking any benefit from. Removing nestlings from their nests, causing harm to their parents, etc. is a sign of extreme mercilessness.
2. An animal that is suitable for consumption should not be killed merely for amusement.
3. You should make proper arrangements with regard to food, drink, providing rest, and taking care for the animal that you utilise for your work. Do not impose any work on it that is beyond its capacity, nor should you beat it more than necessary.
4. The animal that is to be slaughtered or killed on account of it being harmful should be slaughtered or killed quickly. Do not cause it any agitation. Do not take its life after having starved it.

Additional points

If there is any shortcoming in fulfilling the rights of a person, fulfil that which can be fulfilled or else, ask for forgiveness. For example, you are still owing someone some money or you cheated someone, etc. (In such a case you should try and pay the debt, but if you cannot do so, then seek forgiveness from the person). As for the right which can only be forgiven, seek forgiveness for it, e.g. you spoke ill of a person or beat him (In such a case, it is obvious that you cannot pay him anything. Instead, you will have to seek his forgiveness).

If, due to some reason, you cannot fulfil their rights nor can you seek their forgiveness, then you should continue making du'â for these people. It is possible that on the day of judgement Allawh Ta'âlâ will try and influence them to forgive you. However, later if you are in a position to fulfil their rights or seek their forgiveness, then do not hesitate in doing so.
As for the rights that are due to you and there is a hope of their being fulfilled, then be lenient when asking for them. As for those where there is no hope of their being fulfilled or, they are such that they cannot be fulfilled, such as ghîbah, then although there is the hope of your receiving rewards in return for them on the day of judgement, however, more reward has been mentioned with regard to forgiving them in this world. It will be much better if you forgive them completely or absolve them completely. This is especially when the person earnestly seeks forgiveness from you.

The Virtues and Rights of Marriage

1. It is mentioned in a Hadîth that this world has been created to be utilised and that of all the things that are utilised in this world, there is nothing better than a pious woman. In other words, if a person is fortunate enough to get a pious wife, it will be a great blessing. It is also a mercy from Allawh Ta'âlâ that she is actually a comfort for the husband and a means for his success in this world and in the hereafter. A person enjoys comfort from such a woman for his worldly needs and she also assists him in fulfilling his religious duties.
2. It is mentioned in a Hadîth that Rasûlullâh sallallâhu 'alayhi wa sallam said: "Marriage is my way and my sunnah." "The one who does not act upon my sunnah is not of me." That is, there is no relationship between him and me. This is actually a warning and a threat to the one who does not practice on the sunnah and a mention of Rasûlullâh's sallallâhu 'alayhi wa sallam anger on such a person. It is therefore necessary to be extremely cautious in this regard. Furthermore, how can a Muslim bear to have Rasûlullâh sallallâhu 'alayhi wa sallam displeased with him for even a moment. May Allawh Ta'âlâ grant us death before that day comes when a Muslim is able to bear the displeasure of Allawh and His Rasûl sallallâhu 'alayhi wa sallam.
It is mentioned in a Hadîth that Rasûlullâh sallallâhu 'alayhi wa sallam said: "Marry so that I can be proud (of your numbers) on the day of judgement over the other nations." In other words, Rasûlullâh sallallâhu 'alayhi wa sallam likes his 'ummah to be in large numbers and more than the other nations. If this happens, his 'ummah will be carrying out more good deeds, and in so doing he will receive more rewards and gain closer proximity to Allawh Ta'âlâ. This is because whoever from his 'ummah does good deeds, does so through his teachings. Therefore, the more people who act on his teachings, the more reward he will receive for conveying those teachings. We also learn from this that whenever and however possible, we should undertake to carry out those tasks and actions that will take us closer to Allawh Ta'âlâ, and that we should not display any laziness in this regard.
It is mentioned in a Hadîth that on the day of judgement the people will be standing in 120 lines. Out of these, 40 lines of people will be from the other nations while 80 lines of people will be from the 'ummah of Rasûlullâh sallallâhu 'alayhi wa sallam. Glory be to Allawh! How beloved Rasûlullâh sallallâhu 'alayhi wa sallam is to Him.
The one who is able to (fulfil the rights of a wife) should marry. As for the one who does not have sufficient wealth (to fulfil the rights of a wife), he should fast. That is, he should fast so that there will be a decrease in his desires. Fasting is actually a means of curbing his desires. If a person does not have a very dire need for women, and instead has an average need, and he is able to pay for her basic necessities, then nikâh is sunnat-e-mu'akkadah for such a person. As for the person who has a very urgent need, nikâh will be farḍ upon him. This is because there is a fear that he will commit adultery and thereby get the sin of committing a ḥarâm act. If a person has a very urgent need but is financially incapable of maintaining a wife, then such a person must fast abundantly. Later, when he has sufficient funds to maintain a wife, he must get married.
3. It is mentioned in a Hadith that children are the flowers of jannah. This means that the amount of joy and happiness one will experience on seeing the flowers of paradise, that same amount of joy and happiness is experienced when he looks at his children. And we know fully well that children can only be obtained through marriage.
4. It is mentioned in a Hadîth that when the status of a person is increased in jannah, he asks out of wonder: "How did I receive all this?" (That is, "How did I receive such a high status when I hadn't carried out so many good deeds to deserve such a status?") It will be said to this person that this high status is on account of your children asking for forgiveness on your behalf. In other words, your children had asked for forgiveness on your behalf. In return for that, you have been accorded this status.
5. It is mentioned that the child who is born out of a miscarriage (i.e. it is born before the due date) will "fight"(wrangle) with its Creator when its parents are entered into jahannam. In other words, this child will go to extremes in interceding on behalf of its parents and will ask Allawh Ta'âlâ to remove its parents from jahannam. Through His bounty, Allawh Ta'ala will accept the intercession of this child and He will be soft and lenient towards it. It will be said to this child: "O siqṭ (which means, miscarried foetus) who is quarrelling with its Lord! Enter your parents into jannah." So this child will draw its parents out of jahannam with its navel cord and enter both of them into jannah. We learn from this, that children of this sort, who are actually a by-product of marriage, will also be of help in the hereafter.
6. It is mentioned in a Hadith that when the husband and wife look at each other (with love), Allawh Ta'âlâ looks at both of them with mercy.
7. It is mentioned in a Hadith that Allawh Ta'âlâ has taken it upon Himself (i.e. out of His mercy, He as taken the responsibility) of helping the person who gets married in order to attain purity from that which Allawh has made ḥarâm. In other words, the person who marries in order to save himself from adultery with the intention of obeying Allawh Ta'âlâ, Allawh will help and assist him in his expenses and other affairs.
8. It is mentioned in a Hadîth that two rak'ats of salât performed by a married person is better than 82 rak'ats performed by an unmarried person. In another Hadith, 70 rak'ats have been mentioned instead of 82 rak'ats. It is possible that this means that 70 rak'ats are written in favour of the person who fulfils the necessary rights of his wife and family, and that 82 rak'ats are in favour of the person who apart from fulfilling their necessary rights, serves them more with his life, wealth and good habits.
9. It is mentioned in a Hadîth that it is a major sin for a person to be neglectful with regard to those whom he is responsible for (and to have shortcomings in fulfilling their needs).
10. It is mentioned in a Hadîth that Rasûlullâh sallallâhu 'alayhi wa sallam said: "I have not left behind any test and tribulation on men more harmful than women." In other words, of all the things that are harmful for men, women are the most harmful. This is because, out of his love for a woman, a man loses all his senses, so much so that he does not even take the commands and orders of Allawh Ta'âlâ into consideration. Therefore, a person must not fall in love with a woman in such a way that he has to act contrary to the Sharî'ah. For example, her demands for her food and clothing are more than what the husband can afford. In such circumstances, never accept any bribes in order to supplement your present income. Instead, give her from the ḥalâl earnings which Allawh Ta'âlâ has blessed you with. You should continue teaching your womenfolk and inculcate respect and good manners in them. Do not allow them to become impudent and disrespectful. The intellect of women is deficient, it is therefore incumbent to take special measures in reforming them.
11. It is mentioned in a Hadîth that you should not propose to a girl when your fellow Muslim brother has already proposed to her until he gets married or gives up this proposal. In other words, when a person has sent a proposal to a particular family and there is a likelihood of their replying in the affirmative, another person should not send a proposal to that same family. However, if they reject this first person, or he himself changes his mind, or they are not too happy with him and are still hesitant in giving a reply, it will be permissible for another person to send a proposal for the same girl.
The same rule applies to the transactions of buying and selling. That is, if a person is busy buying or selling something, then as long as they do not separate or abandon the transaction, another person should not enter into their transaction and should not offer a price above or below that which has been already offered when there is an indication that they are about to come to an agreement. Understand this well, and know that a kâfir is also included in this rule.

12. It is mentioned in a Hadith that a woman is either married because of her Dîn, her wealth or her beauty. Choose the one with Dîn, may your hands become dusty. In other words, a man may prefer a woman who is religiously inclined. While another may prefer one who is wealthy. While yet another may prefer one who is beautiful. However, Rasûlullâh sallallâhu 'alayhi wa sallam says that one should choose a religiously inclined woman and that it is preferable to marry such a woman. However, if the circumstances are such that a woman is very pious but at the same time she is so ugly that one's nature does not find her acceptable and there is a fear that if he marries such a woman there will be no mutual understanding between them, and that he will be neglectful in fulfilling her rights, then in such a case he should not marry such a woman. "May your hands become dusty" is an Arabic mode of expression which is used on different occasions. In this context, it is meant to create a yearning and a desire for a pious woman.
13. It is mentioned in a Hadîth that the best wife is one whose mahr is very simple. That is, it is very easy for the man to fulfil her mahr. These days, there is the habit of specifying a very high mahr. People should abstain from this.
14. It is mentioned in a Hadîth that you should look for a good place for your sperms because a woman gives birth to children that resemble her brothers and sisters. In other words, marry a woman who comes from a pious and noble family because the children generally resemble the maternal relations. Although the father also has some influence over the child's resemblance, we learn from this Hadîth that the mother's influence is greater. If the wife is from a disreputable and irreligious family, the children who will be born will be similar to that family. But if this is not so, then the children who will be born will be pious and religious.
15. It is mentioned in a Hadîth that the greatest right that a woman has to fulfil is to her husband, and that the greatest right that he has to fulfil is to his mother. In other words, after the rights of Allawh and His Rasûl sallallâhu 'alayhi wa sallam the woman has a very great right to fulfil to her husband, so much so that the husband's rights supersede the rights of her parents. As for the man, after the rights of Allawh and His Rasûl sallallâhu 'alayhi wa sallam, the greatest right that he has to fulfil is to his mother. We learn from this that the right of the mother supersedes that of the father.
16. It is mentioned in a Hadîth that if anyone of you wishes to engage in sexual intercourse with his wife, he should recite the following du'â:
!!
The virtue of this du'â is that if a child is conceived through this intercourse, shaytân will not be able to harm this child in any way.
17. There is a lengthy Hadîth in which Rasûlullâh sallallâhu 'alayhi wa sallam addressed 'Abdur Rahmân bin 'Auf radiyallâhu 'anhu asking him to have a walîmah even if it is with one sheep. In other words, even if you possess very little, you should spend. It is preferable to have the walîmah after engaging in sexual intercourse with one's bride. However, many 'ulamâ have permitted it immediately after the nikâh as well. It is mustahab to have a walîmah.

GLOSSARY

Zihâr: Likening one's wife to one's mother. It is a form of divorce. For further details, refer to the chapter on zihâr.

BOOK XXV

VOWS

1. A person takes a vow that if a certain wish or work of his is fulfilled, he will undertake to carry out a certain act of ibaadah. Once this wish or work of his is fulfilled, it will be wajib upon him to carry out the act of ibaadah which he had vowed to carry out. If he does not fulfil this vow, he will be committing a great sin. However, if a person takes a useless vow which has no basis in the Shariah, it will not be wajib on him to fulfil such a vow. Vows of this sort will be mentioned later.
2. A person says: "O Allawh! If a certain task is fulfilled, I will keep five fasts for Your pleasure." Once this task of his is fulfilled, he will have to keep these five fasts. But if the task is not fulfilled, he will not have to keep these fasts. If the person merely said that he will keep five fasts, he has the choice of keeping them continuously one after the other, or of keeping them separately. But if he said that he will keep five fasts continuously or had this intention in his heart, he will have to keep them one after the other. If he misses out one or two fasts in between, he will have to start all over again.
3. If the person says that he will fast on Friday or that he will fast from the 1st till the 10th of Muharram, then it is not necessary for him to fast specifically on a Friday or specifically on those days of Muharram. He could keep these 10 fasts whenever he wishes irrespective of whether he keeps them in Muharram or in any other month. The only condition is that he should keep them continuously. Similarly, if he says: "If this work of mine is fulfilled today, I will fast tomorrow", he has the choice of fasting whenever he wishes.
4. While taking a vow, a person said: "I will keep the fasts of the month of Muharram." He will now have to keep fasting continuously in the entire month of Muharram. If he misses a few fasts in between, he will have to keep them after the month of Muharram. He does not have to keep all the fasts all over again. He also has the choice of fasting in any other month. It is not necessary for him to fast in Muharram. The only condition is that he has to keep these fasts continuously without missing any.
5. A person takes a vow that if he finds a certain item which he lost, he will offer eight rakaats of salaat. Upon finding his lost item, he will have to offer eight rakaats of salaat. He has the choice of making the intention of offering all eight rakaats at once, offering four rakaats at a time or offering two rakaats at a time. And if he took a vow of offering four rakaats, then he will have to offer all four with one salaam. If he offers two rakaats at a time, his vow will not be fulfilled.
6. A person took a vow of offering one rakaat. He will have to offer two rakaats. And if he took a vow of offering three rakaats, he will have to offer four rakaats of salaat. And if he took a vow of offering five rakaats, he will have to offer six rakaats. In this way, he will have to continue adding one more rakaat if he vows to offer an odd number of rakaats.
7. A person takes a vow that he will give R10 in charity. He will therefore have to give whatever he has vowed to give. If a person took a vow of giving R50 in charity, and at that time he only had R10, he will only have to give R10. However, if he has some other possessions apart from the R10, we will have to establish the value of the other possessions. For example, a person has R10 in cash and the value of the other possessions equals R15. His total wealth now adds up to R25. He will therefore have to give R25 in charity. It is not wajib on him to give more than this.
8. A person takes a vow that he will feed 10 poor persons. If he had it in his mind that he will feed them one meal or two meals, he will have to feed them according to what he had intended. But if he did not have anything in his mind, he will have to feed them two meals. If he had taken a vow that he will give them some dry groceries, the same rule as above will apply. That is, if he had it in his mind that he will give each person a certain amount, then he will have to give them that amount. But if he did not specify any amount or did not even have it in his mind, then he will have to give each person the amount that one is required to give as sadaqatul fitr.

9. If a person takes a vow that he will give bread to the value of R1, he has the choice of giving the bread, some other food to the value of R1 or he could give R1 in cash.
10. A person took a vow of giving R10 in charity on the basis that he will give 10 poor persons R1 each. However, instead of giving the charity in this manner, he gave R10 to one poor person. This is also permissible. It is not wajib upon him to give R1 to each poor person. It will also be permissible for him to distribute R10 among 20 poor persons. If he takes a vow that he will give R10 to 10 poor persons, he still has the choice of giving 10 persons, less than 10 persons or more than 10 persons.
11. If a person takes a vow that he will feed 10 persons who are regular with their salaat or 10 persons who have memorized the Quran, he can feed 10 poor persons irrespective of whether they are regular with their salaat or not, and irrespective of whether they have memorized the Quran or not.
12. A person takes a vow that he will give R10 as charity in Makkah. It is not wajib on him to give this charity in Makkah, he can give it wherever he wishes. If a person takes a vow that he will give charity on Friday to a particular poor person, it is not necessary for him to give it on Friday or to that particular poor person whom he had in mind. Similarly, if he sets aside some money and vows to give that very money as charity, it is not necessary that he gives exactly that money which he had set aside. He could give some other money as long as the amount is the same.
13. Similarly, if a person takes a vow that he will offer salaat in the jumu'ah musjid or in Makkah, he has the choice of offering his salaat wherever he wishes.
14. A person takes a vow that if his brother is cured, he will slaughter a goat or give the meat of a goat in charity. In such a case, the vow will be valid. If he takes a vow that he will make a qurbaani, he will have to slaughter the goat during the days of qurbaani. In all these cases, the meat will have to be given to the poor. He cannot consume it himself nor can he give it to any rich persons. If he does this, he will have to repeat the charity.
15. A person had taken a vow of making qurbaani of one bull. However, he could not obtain a bull. In such a case, he should slaughter seven goats.
16. A person took a vow that once his brother arrives he will give R10 in charity. However, the moment he heard that his brother is about to arrive (but had not arrived as yet), this person gave R10 in charity. In this case, his vow will not be fulfilled. Once his brother actually arrives, he will have to give R10 again in charity.
17. A person takes a vow for the fulfilment of a certain hope or wish. For example, he says: "If I am cured from this sickness, I will do such and such a thing", "If my brother reaches home safely, I will do such and such a thing", "If my father wins the court case or obtains employment, I will do such and such a thing". Once this hope or wish of his is fulfilled, he must fulfil his vow.
A person says: "If I speak to you, I will fast for two days", or, "If I do not offer my salaat today, I will give R1 in charity." Thereafter, this person either spoke or did not offer his salaat. In such a case, the person has the choice of either paying the kaffarah for breaking the vow, fasting for two days or giving R1 in charity.
18. A person takes a vow that he will recite durood shareef 1000 times or the kalimah 1000 times. Once his vow is fulfilled, it will be wajib upon him to recite the durood or the kalimah. But if a person takes a vow of reciting Sub'haanAllawh 1000 times or reciting La hawla wa la quwwata 1000 times, this vow will not be valid and it will not be wajib on him to recite these forms of zikr.
19. A person takes a vow that he will complete 10 recitations of the Quran or complete the recitation of one chapter of the Quran. In both cases the vow will be valid.
20. A person takes a vow that if a certain task of his is fulfilled, he will hold a "meelad" celebration, or that he will go and spread a sheet on the grave of a certain pious person. In both cases, the vow will not be valid. Similarly, if a person vows to make an offering at the grave of a certain saint, to make an offering of sweetmeats in the musjid, to place a lighted lamp in the musjid as an offering or to hold a "giyarweeh" celebration of a certain saint, etc. then in all these cases the vow will not be valid and it will not be wajib to fulfil such vows.
21. Fasting in reverence of Maula Mushkil Kusha or to vow to implement the rituals of Konda are all baseless customs. Fasting in reverence of Maula Mushkil Kusha amounts to shirk.
22. A person takes a vow of renovating a certain musjid or building a certain bridge. Vows of this nature are not valid and it is not wajib to fulfil them.
23. A person takes a vow that if his brother recovers from his sickness, he will organize a dance or a music show. Taking a vow of this sort is sinful and it will not be permissible to fulfil it once his brother recovers from his sickness.
24. It is not permissible to take a vow in the name of anyone other than Allawh Ta'ala. For example, a person says to his spiritual guide: "If a certain task of mine is fulfilled, I will do such and such a thing for you", or a person goes to graves, or places that are inhabited by jinns and makes certain requests over there. All these acts are haraam and constitute shirk. In fact, it is even haraam to consume the food that has been prepared for such acts. As regards women visiting graves, strict prohibitions in this regard have been mentioned in the Hadith. Rasulullah sallAllawhu alayhi wa sallam has cursed such women.

MISCELLANEOUS MASA'IL

1. It is mustahab to remove the hair of the pubic region and the armpits once a week. If one does not remove these hairs weekly, one should at least remove them every fortnight. If one cannot even do this, one should remove them before forty days. If a person leaves these hairs for more than forty days, he will be sinning.
2. It is makruh for women to call their husbands and parents by name as this shows disrespect. However, certain occasions may demand that they be called by name. In such circumstances it will be permissible to call both the husband and parents by name. Under all conditions and in all circumstances, one should always be mindful of being respectful to one's husband and parents.
3. It is not permissible to burn any living creature, e.g. it is not permissible to smoke bees in order to get rid of them. It is also not permissible to catch bugs, flies, mosquitoes, etc. and to throw them into a fire. However, if there is no other way of getting rid of them, it will be permissible to do so, e.g. at times it is difficult to get rid of bees. In such a case, it will be permissible to smoke them. It will also be permissible to get rid of bed-bugs by pouring boiling water on the bed if there is no other way of getting rid of them.
4. It is not permissible to take bets, e.g. a person says: "If you eat a full kilo of sweets, I will give you R1. But if you cannot do that, you will have to give me R1." In other words, it is not permissible to take two-sided bets. However, one-sided bets are permissible.
5. When two persons are talking in privacy, one should not go and sit near them. It is a major sin to try and listen to their conversation. It is mentioned in a Hadith that on the day of judgement, boiling lead will be poured into the ears of the person who tries to listen to the private conversation of others despite their disapproval. We learn from this that it is a major sin to spy on the bride and bride groom or to try and listen to their private conversation.
6. It is not permissible for the wife to discuss or announce the private affairs and conversations that transpired between herself and her husband. It is mentioned in a Hadith that Allawh Ta'ala becomes extremely angry when a person discusses or mentions all that transpired between him and his wife.
7. It is not permissible to joke with a person to such an extent that he feels insulted or angered by the joke. One should only joke to the extent that the other person laughs and is amused.
8. It is not permissible to wish for death or to curse oneself when afflicted by any problem or calamity.
9. It is not permissible to play dice games, cards, etc. If these are played for money, they will be regarded as gambling and will therefore be absolutely haraam.
10. Once boys reach the age of ten, they should not be allowed to sleep or lie down next to their sisters, brothers or mothers. Once girls reach the age of ten, they should not be allowed to sleep or lie down next to their brothers and fathers. However, the son can sleep next to his father and the daughter can sleep next to her mother.
11. When a person sneezes, he should say Alhamdolillah. It will be wajib on the person who hears him saying Alhamdolillah to say Yarhamu kumullah. If the latter person does not say this, he will be sinful. Upon hearing this reply, the person who sneezed should say Yaghfirullahu lanaa wa lakum. However, it is not wajib, but mustahab on the person who sneezed to give this reply.
12. After sneezing, a person said Alhamdolillah which was heard by several persons. It will not be wajib on all of them to give a reply to it. If one of them gives a reply, it will be sufficient. However, if none of them gives a reply, all will be sinful.
13. If a person sneezes continuously, it will be wajib to say Yarhamu kumullah up to three times and not more.

14. When a person mentions the name of Rasulullah sallAllawhu alayhi wa sallam, hears it or reads it, it becomes wajib upon him to send salutations to Rasulullah sallAllawhu alayhi wa sallam. The person will be sinning if he does not do so. But if his name is mentioned several times, it will not be wajib to recite the durood each time. It will be sufficient to recite it once. But if a person moves from his place and takes his name or hears it again, it will be wajib to recite the durood again.
15. It is not permissible to shave the head of a child in such a way that a certain portion is entirely bald and another portion is left long. Either shave the entire head bald or leave all the hair unshaven.
16. It is not permissible for women to apply perfumes or any other fragrant creams, lotions, etc. in such a way that ghayr mahrams get the smell of the fragrance.
17. It is not permissible to give clothing which is not permissible to wear, e.g. it is not permissible for the husband to purchase clothing that is not permissible for his wife to wear. Similarly, it is not permissible for a tailor or dressmaker to sew clothing which is not permissible for Muslims to wear.
18. It is not permissible to read short stories, novels, novels based on love and beauty which are of a fictitious nature. It is also not permissible to look at books and magazines that have pictures of men and women in shameless clothing or no clothing at all. Books containing love poems should also be abstained from. Books and magazines of this sort should not even be purchased. If they are found in the possession of one's children, they should be burnt.
19. The custom of making salaam, shaking hands, embracing each other is also sunnah for women. Women should adopt these Islamic customs among themselves.
20. If a person is a guest at someone's house, he should not give any food or anything else to a beggar from his host's house without the permission of the latter.

BOOK XXVI

THE PRINCIPLES OF BUSINESS

BUYING AND SELLING

1. When a person says: "I have sold this item for so much" and another person says: "I have bought it", that item will be sold and the person who purchased it will be its owner. If the seller decides not to sell or the purchaser decides not to buy it, they will not be able to do so. The former will have to hand it over and the latter will have to accept it. This act of selling an item is known as a sale.
2. A person says: "I have sold this item to you for R2." The other person replies: "I accept", "I am happy with that price" or "Okay, I've taken it." By replying in any of these ways, the item will be sold. Now, neither does the seller have the choice of not handing over the item nor does the buyer have the choice of not purchasing it. However, this rule will only apply when this conversation takes place between both parties in one place or in one sitting. If one of them says: "I have sold this item to you for R4" and the other person remains silent on hearing this price, stands up from his place, goes away to buy the item from someone else or goes away for some other reason, and in carrying out all these actions he changed his place and then he replies: "Okay, I'll buy it for R4", in such a case that item will not be considered to be sold. However, if thereafter, the seller, grocer, etc. says: "Okay, I give it to you" or "Okay, take it", in such a case it will be sold.
Similarly, if the seller, grocer, etc. stands up or goes away for some other work, and the buyer says: "Okay, I've taken it", even then it will not be regarded as sold. In short, if both the parties reach an agreement in one place, only then will the item be considered to be sold.
3. A person says: "Give me this item for R1." The other person replies: "I've given it." In saying this, the sale will not take place. However, if thereafter, the buyer again says: "I've taken it", it will be sold.
4. A person says: "I am taking this item for R1" and the other person replies: "Take it"; the sale will take place.
5. After checking the price of an item, a person handed the money to the seller and took the item away. The seller accepted the money happily. The seller did not say anything verbally as to how much he is selling the item nor did the buyer say that he is buying it. In such a case, by merely taking an item and handing over the money for it, the item is considered to be sold and the sale is valid.
6. A hawker came selling guavas. Without asking him anything, the person took out four big guavas from his basket and placed R1 in the hawker's hand. The hawker accepted this money happily. This sale is valid irrespective of whether they uttered any words or not.
7. A person said: "I am selling this string of pearls for R10." The buyer replied: "I've taken five from the string of pearls" or "I've taken half the string of pearls." As long as the seller does not agree, the sale will not take place. This is because, he offered the entire string of pearls for sale and as long as he does not agree, the buyer does not have the right to buy a part of it and leave out the other part. If she wishes to purchase it, she will have to buy the entire string. However, if the seller says: "I am selling each pearl for R1", and the person says that he has taken five pearls, then five pearls will be considered to be sold.
8. A person is selling four different items and says that he is selling the lot for R4. Without obtaining his agreement, the buyer cannot purchase one or two items and leave out the others because he wishes to sell all the items together. But if the seller gives the price of each item individually, it will be permissible for the buyer to purchase one or two items and leave out the rest.
